GUIDE TO THE FA28 MOSSI FILE

[The Mossi file consists of twelve sources, five of which are translations from the French. The main sources are 1: Delobsom, 2: Mangin, and 6: Tauxier, all French translations, and 11: Skinner. 1: Delobsom is a general, fairly superficial survey of many aspects of Mossi life, with an emphasis on the political structure. 2: Mangin is a well-rounded, competent sketch of Mossi culture, emphasizing the material aspects. 3: Tauxier is largely a reconstruction of Mossi history. 4: Skinner discusses Mossi political organization from several viewpoints. 5: Hammond evaluates changes in the culture of those Mossi resettled in the Niger Irrigation Project. 6: Tauxier, a section from a long general work, describes occupations, family and political life, and religion. 7: Tauxier describes much the same material although with a different emphasis. 8: Skinner studies the effects of Christian and Moslem missionary work on Mossi religion. 9: Skinner analyzes patterns of succession to political office; 10: Hammond discusses the implications of Mossi joking relationships. 11: Skinner is an intensive study of Mossi political development, and 12: Skinner discusses Mossi trade and markets.

Of the authors, Tauxier was a colonial administrator with ethnological training, Mangin a Roman Catholic missionary, Dim Delobsom an educated native Mossi. Skinner and Hammond are American-trained cultural anthropologists.

In general, this file is adequate for cross-cultural purposes. There is material, superficial in many respects, on nearly every aspect of Mossi culture. Especially strong is the coverage on political organization, the family, religion and agriculture. Reliable information on kinship, physical anthropology and language is scanty. Information on clientage, the attaching of one's self to a richer household, has been placed in Category 566. The file was processed between 1959 and 1968.]

114 today; if it provides ethnography with new materials; if it makes the native better known to missionaries, administrators, officers, colonists, and merchants, and thus better understood; and if cordial relations between the native and ourselves are thereby facilitated. Railroads will soon open up and profoundly modify the country. While there is still time, let us hasten to record the mentality of this people in its primitive form. We were able to gather data which we believe reflect the truth quite closely, thanks to the circumstances of our stay in Mossi country: ten consecutive years among its people, of which seven were spent in Koupéla; a knowledge of the language sufficient to maintain a running conversation on any subject whatever with the natives; and the close contact into which our ministry brought us with the village inhabitants. We shall be the first to acknowledge, however, that errors may have crept in here and there. It is very difficult to obtain a precise piece of information, and several natives questioned on the same subject often gave different answers. We were forced to make choices, and although we always tended to adopt the story which appeared to offer the greatest number of safeguards, we may have been wrong at times.

It must not be forgotten that our goal is not to provide a complete record of Mossi manners and customs. This was not possible, it would have been onerous, and we did not feel that it was necessary in order to present what we consider to be a generally accurate over-all picture of these people. Truthfulness compels us to point out that these materials were gathered for the most part in the province of Koupéla and, therefore, bear the impress of that locality. Our fellow-workers in Ouagadougou were kind enough to provide us with some information, but we were unable to obtain any data on the Yatenga region. God permitting, we shall round out these notes in a more comprehensive work.

101 Before we broach our subject, one remark is in order. It has be-
104 come usual to speak of the Mossi, of a Mossi, of the Mossi language, as though the word did not vary. We shall follow this custom and always write "Mossi" in the singular and in the plural, although the true name of this people is Moara, plural Mosé. Likewise, we have spelled geographical names in accordance with the practice of the Administration, so as to avoid the appearance of wishing to reform everything.

000 May we thank here all those from far and near who have helped us with this work, and especially those who have contributed the interesting photographs that illustrate it.

5: Hammond E-5 (1954-1956) 1959
FA28 Mossi FA28

PETER B. HAMMOND

13. Economic Change and Mossi Acculturation

121 Some five thousand Mossi from the kingdom of Yatenga in the Upper 178 Volta have been resettled on the newly developed lands of the Niger [177] Irrigation Project in the French Sudan. Removed from a cultural setting which has been relatively undisturbed by the influence of European [166] civilization, they are required to adapt themselves rapidly to an economic situation structured and directed by Europeans. Economic organization being the variable involved, a study of their adjustment provides an opportunity to examine some of the cultural problems and processes related to economic development in underdeveloped areas.

131 Yatenga is the northernmost of four Mossi kingdoms located in the 101 Upper Volta. It is a sub-Saharan savanna land of red earth, low rainfall, gently rolling plains, and low hills. Ouahigouya, the capital, gives its name to the French administrative unit, the Cercle de Ouahigouya, which has governed the kingdom from its headquarters in this ancient city since its conquest in 1895.[1]

To distinguish themselves from the people of the neighboring king-101 doms of Ouagadougou, Fada-N'Gourma, and Tenkodogo, the Mossi of 173 the Yatenga sometimes speak of themselves as "Yadise" (those of Yadiga). This name refers to the fact that they regard themselves as being descended, as a nation, from Naba Yadiga, the half-mythical warrior-prince from Oaugadougou who broke away from his father's dynasty to form the separate political entity, Yatenga, which bears his name (ya for "Yadiga" and tenga for "country"). The Mossi have not always been numerically and culturally dominant in the Yatenga, as they are today. They recognize that their ancestors came from the south, from Mamprusi and Dagomba in the northern territories of Ghana.

171 Highly organized politico-religious states representing the cultural amalgamation of native and foreign populations and institutions are characteristic of the Voltaic region of West Africa. Acknowledging that we "owe to Rattray the discovery that these central Voltaic tribes are

[1] Capitaine Noire, Monographie du Cercle de Ouahigouya (Ouahigouya, 1904), p. 15.

/451/ Book Four

Black Warriors and Conquerors

Chapter I

The Mossi -- Occupations

101 The Mossi are settled between the twelfth and fourteenth de-
131 grees of north latitude, and between the second and fifth degrees of west longitude. To the south, they extend slightly beyond the twelfth degree of latitude. They are indeed to be found in Saraboutenga, Rakaye, Béré, and Tenkodogo, but this does not bring them too far south of the twelfth degree. To the north, on the other hand, they do not quite reach the fourteenth degree.

161 The Mossi form a rather large group which occupies, in the 563 center of the area, the circle /an administrative division/ of Ouagadougou; to the northwest, the circle of Ouahigouya; to the southeast, the residency /administrative center/ of Tenkodogo; and to the east of the latter, the circle of Fada N'Gourma. Of course, the Mossi do not make up the total population of these four districts. In the Ouahigouya circle, there are the Habé /Habe/ and Houmbébé /Humbe/ to the northwest, and the Samoro /Samo/ to the south. In the Ouagadougou circle, which may be regarded as the center of Mossi territory, there are the Kipirsi to the east. In the Tenkodogo residency there are the Boussansé /Busansi/ to the south and in the circle of Fada N'Gourma the Gourmantché or Gourmanké /Gurma/ to the east. The Mossi, however, make up 161 the /452/ greater part of the total population in all four areas. In the circle of Ouagadougou, they number 750,000, in the residency of Tenkodogo, 122,000, in the residency of Leo, 1,000. This adds up to 873,000 for the circle of Ouagadougou as a whole. Assuming that there are 200,000 Mossi in the circles of Ouahigouya and Fada N'Gourma (a very approximate figure), a total of 1,073,000 Mossi is obtained. This makes them by far the most numerous group in all of French West Africa. The whole of our Dahomey, for example,

10:Hammond E-5 (1954-1956) 1964 FA28 Mossi FA28
Yatenga

121 vented by the "playful antagonism of teasing," and he argued that the regular repetition of joking serves as a reminder of the social "disjunction" of the relation, while "conjunction" is simultaneously maintained by friendliness.

Such an analysis is insightful but inadequate. The social structural sources of the need for reliance on joking and the social and psychological processes which joking involves are more complex than Radcliffe-Brown recognized. More occurs in joking than the symbolic reification of "separateness" and the concurrent assertion of intergroup amity.

The Structural Context of Joking

In support of this contention I would like first to consider the characteristics of the structural contexts in which joking tends to be institutionalized. For it is from the nature of certain social structural situations that joking derives its reason for being.

I suggest that wherever joking is institutionalized, the relations between the participants will tend to be characterized by five interrelated factors:

(1) separation: either social or spatial or both;
(2) reciprocity: a traditionally sanctioned exchange of economic, social, or ceremonial goods and/or services;
(3) ambivalence: an equivocal mélange of amity and hostility;
(4) equality: analogous individual or group status;
(5) independence: the absence of relevant allegiance to a single authority.

Obviously the comparative weight of these several factors will vary with the relationships of which they are a part. Where, for example, spatial separation is great, and/or the reciprocal tie is weak, joking is likely to be mild. Where ambivalence is strong, joking may be relied on more frequently and may be more hostile in content. Where the status of the participants is unequal, joking may tend to be asymmetrical. And so on.

I further suggest that as an adjustive mechanism joking derives its significance from the manner in which it provides concurrently for the operation of three interrelated but analytically separable processes: communication, control, and catharsis. These will be considered later.

Joking Among the Mossi

101 The points in the argument just outlined may be illustrated by a brief discussion of the varieties of joking found among the Mossi living in Yatenga, an indigenous kingdom in the Voltaic Republic of West Africa. 571 Among the Mossi, joking is institutionalized as an adjustive mechanism in the following relationships: (1) between Ego and his mother's agnatic kin, particularly his mother's elder brother; (2) between Ego and his mother's brother's wife; (3) between siblings-in-law; (4) between sibs; (5) between age-sets in the same age-grade; (6) between certain villages; and (7) be-

10:Hammond E-5 (1954-1956) 1964 FA28 Mossi FA28
Yatenga

ship itself and the contract of interlineage co-operation and solidarity which every marriage serves to establish or reinforce.[4]

Although this joking interchange is seen in its full implications when there is an immediate source of dissension between marriage partners, it may also occur in the absence of any specific difficulty. Then it is apparently indulged in simply because it is expected, and for the pleasure which the Mossi, like all people, derive from an occasion to exercise their wit. It is this relatively disinterested joking which has been most frequently described in the literature, and this may account for the failure of many scholars to perceive more fully the important social and psychological functions which joking may fulfill.

Conclusion

This paper has been written as a tentative step toward a reformulation of the various and disparate observations on joking contained in the anthropological literature. I have contended that an analysis of this literature indicates that wherever joking is institutionalized the structural relationship between the participants tends to be characterized by five significantly interrelated structural attributes: separation, reciprocity, ambivalence, equality, and independence. I have also indicated that such joking may serve as an adjustive mechanism by providing for the concurrent maintenance of communication, control, and the culturally harmless catharsis of potentially disruptive emotions.

A variety of forms of institutionalized joking found among the Mossi of Yatenga have been cited to illustrate these points. However, I suggest that the factors which cluster with this reliance on joking as an adjustive mechanism are not unique to the Mossi. Institutionalized joking reported for other parts of Africa appears to be structurally and processually similar.

NOTES

1. A shorter version of this paper was read at the annual meeting of the American Anthropological Association held in San Francisco in November, 1963. It is based on field research conducted among the Mossi from 1954 to 1956 with the assistance of a Ford Foundation Fellowship.

2. Marriage between the members of descent groups united by a joking alliance is regarded by the Mossi as highly desirable, apparently in recognition of the useful role of joking as an adjustive mechanism. Once such a marriage is contracted, however, Ego and his wife must take care that their joking insults are directed only at the younger kinsmen of the other and that the insulting remarks are personal. It would, for example, be acceptable for Ego to call his wife's younger sister a disreputable shrew but dangerous to call her a slave (a term of disrespect used frequently in joking between sibs). To refer to her as a slave would cast unflattering aspersions on her entire kin group, including her mother and father, with whom, in their new status as parents-in-law, Ego may no longer joke.

3. I believe that joking is also institutionalized between the Mossi and the Yarse, a highly acculturated ethnic minority of Mande origin who live throughout Yatenga. There is also joking between the Mossi and the indigenous blacksmith caste. Unfortunately my data on these two instances of joking are inadequate.

121 [174] functioning of early Sudanese societies. It will also attempt to demonstrate how European conquest affected the political organization of the Mossi and contributed to its ultimate decline.

The kingdom of Ouagadougou was selected as the main object of study, primarily because it emerged as the most important Mossi polity and retained this position through the greater part of Mossi history. Attention will be given to the other Mossi polities and the three other Mossi kingdoms—Yatenga, Tenkodogo, and the more remote Fada-N'Gourma, all of which resemble Ouagadougou—only insofar as they affect the history of Ouagadougou or highlight the basic nature of Mossi government.

101 The Mossi are a Sudanese Negroid population in the new Republic of 161 the Upper Volta.[2] They number about 2,200,000, or approximately half of the country's total population. Their ancestral territory, which they call 131 Mogho (land of the Mossi), covers some 30,000 square miles in the southern 133 part of the Republic. It is a huge plateau, lying from 1,000 to 1,600 feet above sea level, and broken by three low mountain ranges and numerous small hills. The Kipirsi range in the northeast has an average height of about 2,000 feet and includes the sacred mountain of the Mossi, known as Plimpikou. The Boussouma range to the east reaches a height of some 1,500 feet, and the Naouri range in the southeast is almost as high.

132 The climate of Mossi country is typical of the Sudanic zone. There are two main seasons, one cold and dry, the other hot and wet. The first begins in November with the coming of the harmattan and ends in January, the coolest month, when the average temperature is about 70° F. and the humidity about 12 per cent. The hot season extends from March to October. In July, the warmest month, the temperature reaches a high of 88° F. and the humidity 78 per cent. Violent dust storms herald the rains, which begin late in May and end in September. The rain falls almost entirely in heavy showers and thunderstorms, and the average annual fall is between 30 and 40 inches. In those years when the rainfall is about 40 inches and is regularly spaced, the Mossi can look forward to a good harvest. When the rainfall is below 30 inches and is spaced irregularly during the planting season, the threat of famine is serious. So narrow is the margin of rainfall for agriculture that in 1956 the people of one Mossi district anxiously awaited "two rains" (two showers), without which they feared that in 1957 there would be a difficult "hungry period" (the time between the exhaustion of one year's crops and the maturing of the next).

133 Mossi country is drained by only three rivers: the Black Volta with its two chief tributaries, the Sourou and the Debere, and the Red and White Voltas with their numerous small tributaries. Only the Black Volta flows homesteads, where they also cultivate their most important cash crops, cotton and indigo, which are used in the manufacture and dyeing of cotton cloth.

The Mossi grow tobacco in fields around their

The wild fauna of Mossi country include several species of antelope, deer, monkeys, rabbits, snakes, and wild pigs. Elephants roam the beds of rivers and streams and often destroy cultivated fields, while lions and hyenas distress the people by attacking livestock. The pools and rivers of Mossi country are inhabited by turtles, crocodiles, and various species of scaled and scaleless fish. Chickens, muscovy ducks, and half-domesticated guinea fowl are the most valuable species of birds.

The Mossi have long been famous for their splendid donkeys and horses. Donkeys are sometimes ridden, but they are used primarily as beasts of burden. Horses are important for military and ceremonial purposes and for export to the tsetse-fly zones to the south. The Mossi raise two main types of cattle: a zebu-like animal in the northern regions and a dwarf variety in the south. These animals are raised primarily for their milk and for export, and are seldom killed for meat until they are fairly old. Goats and sheep provide the main source of meat. Hog-raising is not widespread, and seems to be declining in importance with the increased observance of Islamic food taboos, which is on the uprise even among people who are still pagans.

The subsoil of Mossi country is not well known, but so far there have been no major discoveries of mineral deposits. The only known gold field remained unworked in aboriginal times. The Mossi do not like to wear gold ornaments, preferring jewelry worked from imported copper and silver. The northern Mossi worked their local iron in aboriginal times, but those in the south obtained this metal from caravan traders.

The nineteenth-century reports of Barth and other European travelers indicate that the Mossi conducted a rather extensive foreign trade. At least six caravan routes passed through their territory, and traders such as the Hausa and Mandingo visited the important Mossi trading centers at Yako, Pouitenga, and Ouagadougou, where they exchanged Saharan and forest products for Mossi livestock and cloth.[8]

The Mossi belong to the Voltaic culture area, a name given by Delafosse to the regions drained by the Black, Red, and White Voltas and their tributaries. The area embraces parts of Mali, the Ivory Coast, Dahomey, the Upper Volta, and northern Ghana.[4] It includes a vast congeries of peoples such as the Dagomba, Mamprusi, Dagari, Birifo, Senufo, Gurmanche, Gurunsi, Lobi, Bobo, Tallensi, Konkomba, Dogon, Somba, Fulse, and Ninisi, all of whom speak languages belonging to the Gur or Moshi-Grunshi group of

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

the Niger-Congo family of African languages.[5] Like the Mossi, these groups are primarily horticultural; cereals are their main crops, and they cultivate yams where conditions permit. Their social organization takes both patrilineal and matrilineal forms. The veneration of ancestors lies at the core of their religious beliefs, but the existence of an otiose high god whose name contains the root We (Ouennam, Win, Wene, etc.) is also recognized. There are also tutelary spirits, the chief one being a female earth deity associated with We and called Tenga (also occurring as Teng, Tena, and Ten). The Tengsobadamba, who are priests or custodians of the earth shrines, are found among all the groups in the Voltaic family, and they often share leadership with more secular chiefs called Naba, Na, or Nab. Most of the ruling clans of the Voltaic groups claim common ancestry and acknowledge the same totems.[6]

The only glaring dissimilarity between these Voltaic peoples, and the one with which this study is primarily concerned, lies in the realm of political organization. Some are united into large kingdoms, while others form small acephalous groups. Delafosse makes the following generalizations about the smaller groups:

> It may be said of these people that, as a whole, they have remained quite primitive. With a few exceptions, they have not reached any significant level of political development; as a rule, they have not progressed beyond family unity. Although they neighbor on well-organized and powerful states such as the Mossi empires and the kingdoms of the Gourma and Bergo, which are inhabited by populations of the same ethnic group, they have derived little benefit from this proximity; some of them have been absorbed as subjects or vassals by these states, while others have remained on the outside, and seem to have but one purpose, the forceful preservation of their fierce but sterile independence. . . . Attachment to the land seems to be the only solid and fecund institution in their chaotic society.[7]

Rattray believes that the development of such highly organized political systems as those of the Mossi, Dagomba, and Mamprusi may be traced to "small bands of strangers." He thinks that the outsiders were better armed, better clothed, and familiar with the rudiments of Islam, and that since they knew about the institution of kingship, they were able to "superimpose upon the primitive tribes among whom they settled a new and unheard-of political conception, namely the idea of territorial and secular leadership in place of the immemorial institution of a ruler who was the high priest of a totemic clan and dealt only in spiritual sanctions." Nevertheless, Rattray is not certain that the Voltaic groups would not have evolved complex political systems if they had been left to themselves. He makes the significant statement that if the subjugation by the bands of strangers had not

The Mossi were probably brought to the attention of modern Europe [17] by T. E. Bowdich, an Englishman who went to Ashanti in 1817 to sign a 114 trade agreement with the Asantehene. While at Kumasi, Bowdich diligently sought information about the lands in the interior, but was relatively unsuccessful because his hosts pleaded ignorance. Nevertheless, he did find out that "five journies [days] from Yngwa [Yendi] is Mosee, a warlike but less visited kingdom: it consists of many states, but the superior monarch is named Billa, and the capital Kookoopella."[4] This misinformation is interesting because it shows that Bowdich's respondent had precise information only about Koupela, a town located near the great caravan center of Poitenga. Similarly, the linguistic data reported by Bowdich are for Dagomba rather than Mossi.

*195 Another Englishman, Joseph Dupuis, led a trade mission to Kumasi in 199 1819, and obtained data on the Mossi that are surprisingly accurate given the reluctance of middlemen traders to reveal commercial information. He reports that Ashanti traders "sometimes travel as far as Aughoa, the Magho, and to the east of Kasogho. Aughoa is distant from Coomassie twenty-five journies by the Salgha and Yandy Roads, which would give a distance of 360 British miles. Their object in frequenting this place is to collect that vegetable substance by the name of shea butter."[5] There is no doubt that "Aughoa" is really "Ouagha," the term often used by the Mossi to refer to their capital, and the distance between Kumasi and Ouagadougou as reported by Dupuis is approximately the same as the road mileage [101] today. The name "Magho," which appears from time to time in these early documents, seems to be none other than "Mogho," the traditional name of Mossi country. "Kasogho" probably refers to the section of Ouagadougou that was controlled by the Kamsaogho Naba.

The Hausa merchants knew a great deal about the Mossi and the resources of their territory, but only with difficulty did the English trader Hugh Clapperton persuade Sultan Mohammed Bello of Sokoto to give him the following information:

> The country of Mouchier or Mouchi is situated to the west of Ghurma. It is vast and possesses a gold mine, rivers, forests, and mountains. It is inhabited by tribes of the Sudan who possess many fast horses and large donkeys. Their king is called Wagadougou; their asses are sent down to the Gondja to carry the drums of the Army.[6]

[114] Either Clapperton or his informant obviously confused the capital of the Mossi with their king, and included parts of Dagomba in their territory.

Barth, who traveled extensively in the Sudan between 1849 and 1855, did not enter Mossi territory. Nevertheless, he obtained rather precise information on the important caravan routes leading from Timbuktu through the Mossi trade centers of Ouagadougou, Kaya, Yako, and Koupela, down to Salaga and other towns in Ghana, and even across to Sansane Mango in Togoland. His data on the Mossi are invaluable:

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

> The whole triangle interposed between the Niger toward the north, and the country of the Eastern Mandingoes or Wangarawa toward the south, appears to be inhabited by a single race of people whose language, although they are divided into several states and nations, nevertheless appears originally to have been the same stock. It is very probable that this race in ancient times occupied the whole upper course of the Niger, and that this tract may have been wrested from it in later times by the Songhai and the Mandingoes, especially that section of the latter which is generally called Bambara. These are the Gourma toward the N.E., the Tombo toward the N.W., and between them the Mossi. . . . The strongest among these pagan kingdoms five centuries ago, and even at the present moment, is that of the Mossi, although the country is split into a number of small principalities, almost totally independent of each other, and paying only some slight homage to the ruler of the principality of Woghodogo.[7]

Europe learned more about the Mossi from Sigismund Koelle, who visited Sierra Leone in 1854. His informant was one Andrew Dixon, who had lived in Koupela before being captured and sold into slavery. He furnished information on the location of the Mossi, their wars with the Busansi, and their important commercial and political relations with the Ashanti.[8] Koelle's report, taken in conjunction with the reports of Dupuis, Bowdich, Clapperton, and Barth, shows that the Ashanti, like the Hausa and other coastal peoples, were protecting their trade when they attempted to isolate the peoples of the interior from the Europeans. But as soon as the British defeated the Ashanti in the war of 1873–74, the Sudan was opened and adventurers poured in. In 1877 and 1878, two missionaries of the Basel Mission visited the northern regions of Ghana, and subsequently gave a good description of Mossi commerce in that area.[9] Lonsdale, who visited Salaga in 1881, found among the traders in the market "the Mossi with his cattle, sheep, and slaves—these latter, generally Gurunsi, are not exposed for sale in the street or market, but can be seen where the owner resides."[10]

The activities of the various European nations in West Africa and other regions at this time led to military and diplomatic difficulties, which the Berlin Conference of 1884–85 was convened to resolve. Agreement was reached to assign "spheres of influence" to the various European nations, to regulate trade, and to provide for arbitration between rival claimants of conquered or "protected" territories. In West Africa, this meant the end

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

8. Cf. Marc, p. 156. 9. Cf. Fortes, pp. 258-71.
10. Skinner, "The Diffusion of Islam," pp. 659-69.
11. Tauxier, Le Noir du Soudan, pp. 585-86.
12. Dim Delobson, p. 205. 13. Crozat, p. 4820.
14. Ibid., p. 4822. 15. Ibid., p. 4835.
16. Binger, I, 452. 17. Ibid., p. 456.
18. Ibid., pp. 452-56.
19. Archives, Document 15G-190 (1897-98). Instructions left to Captain Scal by Destenave, June 1897.

CHAPTER NINE

1. Marc, p. 27.
2. Barth, III, 595. Although it is possible that the Wolof prince Bemoy did hear [114] about the Mossi, he was mistaken about the name of their ruler. Interestingly enough, the title "Ogane" is not too dissimilar from Hogon, the title of head men among the [174] Dogon (Habe or Kado) whom the Mossi had pushed into the hills of Bandiagara. Bascom, p. 24.
3. Barth, III, 606. 4. Bowdich, p. 180.
5. Dupuis, Appendix CVII. 6. Clapperton, II, 323.
7. Barth, III, 643-49. As cited earlier, Barth states that the Portuguese got reports about the Mossi in the year 1533 "from the wrong side, namely from Benin." This may not have been altogether "the wrong side," however, for Barth gives us data on caravans from Mossi country to Sansane Mango in Togoland that indicate how news about the Mossi might have traveled from the interior to Benin city in Nigeria.
8. Koelle, p. 6. Dixon, who seems to have been one of the few captured Mossi sold to the West, reports: "Mose is west of Gurma, east of Andemtenga, where a different [131] language is spoken. Mose is also two days journey from Butmera, where the same [101] language is spoken; four days from Bulega [Bolga tanga], the language still the same, [197] and confederate with Kambonse, i.e. Asante; two days from Yaongo, with still the same language; six days from Bosanse which is at enmity with Mose and where people [484] bore their lips, and often tie them together with grass, and whose language is different from Mose; four days from Busma also a different language, and in which country there is a very high mountain (Tanga) from which those who ascend never come back again [probably a reference to Plimpikou, the Mossi holy mountain]; three or four weeks from Kambonse, i.e. Asante. Kupeala is four days from Wardyga [Ouagadougou] the Mossi capital, whither the king of Asante often sent presents; and one month from Salak [Salaga], an Asante town, where they bring kola nuts."
9. Marc, p. 30.
10. Great Britain, Parliamentary papers xlvi, 1882.
11. The people of Nobere, Manga, and other districts surrounding Bere have traditions about Krause, who is remembered as the first white-skinned person ever [826] seen in those parts. The color of his skin was attributed to the fact that, "like the fish," he had come out of the sea.
12. Krause, pp. 92 ff. Although there is no evidence to this effect in the literature, it appears certain that Mossi government officials knew of Krause's visit. They treated [574] most travelers in the following manner: "After entering a town the party is given in charge of a man usually termed 'housemaster.' It is his duty to exercise surveillance over the action of the stranger and to report the result to the authorities. . . . The trader conducts his business through his 'housemaster,' who usually makes a handsome gain by acting as middleman (G. E. Ferguson, quoted in Wolfson, p. 199).

12:Skinner E-4,5 (1955-1957) 1962
FA28 Mossi FA28

long been famous. The former are sometimes ridden but are used primarily as beasts of burden. Horses were and are still important for military and ceremonial purposes and for external trade to other areas.

The Mossi have never excelled in metalworking. The people in the northern part of the country have worked indigenous ores since aboriginal times. Those in the south get iron mainly from traders and caravans. The other metals which the Mossi smiths manufacture into tools and ornaments are also obtained from traders.

TRADE IN HISTORICAL TIMES

The geographic position of Mossi country has much to do with its being an important trade and market center. The country itself has always produced grain, cotton and livestock for export. And for several centuries caravans have passed through this region carrying Sudanese and Saharan products to the forest zones to the south, and carrying forest products back to the arid north. The beginning of this trade is lost in the dim past, but it safe to say that it developed shortly after or along with the founding of Timbuktu about 1100 A.D. The Mossi themselves were not definitely linked to this important entrepot until they raided it in 1328, but we can assume that they had been trading there for some time before that event took place. Similarly, we have no record of when the Mossi began trading with the forest zones, but we can also assume that this trade began around the same period or even before.

Our first evidence of Mossi trade and commerce comes from Europeans who were themselves interested in conducting their own trading activities with the peoples in the Bend of the Niger. Bowditch, an Englishman who had journeyed to Ashanti to sign a treaty facilitating the reopening of a profitable trade with the coast, wangled the first important piece of information about the Mossi from his reluctant hosts:

> Five journies from Yngwa is Mosee, a more warlike but less visited kingdom: it consists of many states, but the superior monarch is named Billa, and the capital Kookoopella. I place it to the N.W. because its merchants pass by Yngwa; they do not cross the Karhalla [White Volta] nor any river which is not fordable. (Bowditch 1819 : 180)

This information is not strictly correct since Koupela was not the capital of any of the Mossi kingdoms, but Bowditch's informant had probably heard of Koupela because it was the largest political entity near the large caravan center at Pouitenga.

12:Skinner E-4,5 (1955-1957) 1962
FA28 Mossi FA28

175 Dupuis, who replaced Bowditch in Kumasi in 1817, obtained sur-
437 prisingly good data on trade relations between the Ashanti and the Mossi, considering the reluctance of the middlemen traders to furnish any help in this matter. He discovered that Ashanti traders

[103] . . . sometimes travel as far as Aughoa, the Magho, and to the east of Kasogho. Aughoa is distant from Coomassie twenty-five journies by the Salgha and Yandy Roads, which would give a distance of three hundred that vegetable substance . . . by the name of Shea butter. (Dupuis 1824 : App. cvii)[1]

The Hausa merchants and caravaneers knew a great deal about the Mossi and their resources, but it was only with great difficulty that Clapperton persuaded Sultan Mohammed Bello of Sokoto to give him the following information:

[101] The country of Mouchier or Mouchi is situated to the west of Ghurma. It is vast and possesses a gold mine, rivers, forests and mountains. It is inhabited by tribes of the Sudan who possess many fast horses, and large donkeys. Their king is called Wagadougou; their asses are sent down to the Gondja to carry the drums of the army. (Clapperton 1829 : 323)

It is obvious that either Clapperton or his informant confused the capital of the Mossi with their king, and included parts of Ghana in [23] their territory. Nevertheless, one does get an indication of the importance of livestock in Mossi trading.

The great bulk of the trade between the Mossi and their neighbors to the north and to the south was done through the medium of 175 caravans which crisscrossed their territory. The first person to signal 437 the existence of these caravans was Barth (1859 : III, 646–648) who,
487 although he did not enter Mossi country during his extensive travels in the Sudan from 1849 to 1855, reported the existence of several caravan routes which traversed the Mossi from the desert to the [103] forest. The first route he described proceeded from "Kirotashi, a town on the east side of the Niger, one day south of Say, to Woghodogho."
[366] Ten days out of Kirotashi caravans usually reached Tengkodogo, and on the thirteenth day they arrived at Koupela which according to

(1) The Aughoa referred to here is really "Wagha," the term often used by the Mossi
[63] when talking about their capital, Waghadougou. Magho is really "Mogho" the name of Mossi country itself, and Kasoagho is the name of a province of Wagadougou commanded by a minister of the Moro Naba, the Kasoagho Naba. Dupuis' report on the actual distance between Kumasis and Waghadougou is almost the same mileage as that [366] of today. Koelle (1854 : 6) received a report from a slave liberated in Sierra Leone in [648] 1854 that the great Mossi trading center "Kupeala is four days from Wardugu, the Mossi capital, whither the king of Asante often sends presents; and one month from Salak (Salaga), an Asante town, where they bring their cola-nuts."

●102

French West Africa
The hatching indicates the area inhabited by the Mossi.

From the Mission of the White Fathers at Ouagadougou.

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

[P. xii]

102
103
131
133

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

[p. xii]

102
103
131
133

12:Skinner E-4,5 (1955-1957) 1962
FA28 Mossi FA28

175 437 Dupuis, who replaced Bowditch in Kumasi in 1817, obtained surprisingly good data on trade relations between the Ashanti and the Mossi, considering the reluctance of the middlemen traders to furnish any help in this matter. He discovered that Ashanti traders

[103] . . . sometimes travel as far as Aughoa, the Magho, and to the east of Kasogho. Aughoa is distant from Coomassie twenty-five journies by the Salgha and Yandy Roads, which would give a distance of three hundred that vegetable substance . . . by the name of Shea butter. (Dupuis 1824 : App. cvii)[1]

The Hausa merchants and caravaneers knew a great deal about the Mossi and their resources, but it was only with great difficulty that Clapperton persuaded Sultan Mohammed Bello of Sokoto to give him the following information:

[101] The country of Mouchier or Mouchi is situated to the west of Ghurma. It is vast and possesses a gold mine, rivers, forests and mountains. It is inhabited by tribes of the Sudan who possess many fast horses, and large donkeys. Their king is called Wagadougou; their asses are sent down to the Gondja to carry the drums of the army. (Clapperton 1829 : 323)

It is obvious that either Clapperton or his informant confused the capital of the Mossi with their king, and included parts of Ghana in [23] their territory. Nevertheless, one does get an indication of the importance of livestock in Mossi trading.

The great bulk of the trade between the Mossi and their neighbors to the north and to the south was done through the medium of 175 caravans which crisscrossed their territory. The first person to signal 437 the existence of these caravans was Barth (1859 : III, 646–648) who, 487 although he did not enter Mossi country during his extensive travels in the Sudan from 1849 to 1855, reported the existence of several caravan routes which traversed the Mossi from the desert to the [103] forest. The first route he described proceeded from "Kirotashi, a town on the east side of the Niger, one day south of Say, to Woghodogho." [366] Ten days out of Kirotashi caravans usually reached Tengkodogo, and on the thirteenth day they arrived at Koupela which according to

(1) The Aughoa referred to here is really "Wagha," the term often used by the Mossi [63] when talking about their capital, Waghadougou. Magho is really "Mogho" the name of Mossi country itself, and Kasoagho is the name of a province of Wagadougou commanded by a minister of the Moro Naba, the Kasoagho Naba. Dupuis' report on the actual distance between Kumasis and Waghadougou is almost the same mileage as that [366] of today. Koelle (1854 : 6) received a report from a slave liberated in Sierra Leone in [648] 1854 that the great Mossi trading center "Kupeala is four days from Wardugu, the Mossi capital, whither the king of Asante often sends presents; and one month from Salak (Salaga), an Asante town, where they bring their cola-nuts."

12:Skinner E-4,5 (1955-1957) 1962
FA28 Mossi FA28

Barth was "a well-frequented market place of Mosi, and of greater importance than all the other towns of Mosi; the governor's name is Nabere Gager. The inhabitants are celebrated archers." Barth states that by the fifteenth day, or two days later, the caravans usually arrived at Wagadougou, but he tells us in a note that:

> Other people, in going slowly from Kulfela to Woghodogho, spend eight days on the road, sleeping the first night in Pashipanga, the second in Tangay, the third in Zorogo, the next in a place ruled by a man called Mane Bogonje, the fifth in another village called Tangay, and reach Woghodogho on the eighth. (Marc 1909 : 27)[2]

Finally, he reports that another spur of this caravan route ran from Tengkodogo to Sansanne Mangho, in what is now Togoland. This journey took five days.

The second caravan route described by Barth ran from Djibo, the capital of the province of Gilgohi or Jilgodi (about 60 miles south from Montdoro, 55 miles West-Southwest from Aribinda and 35 miles South-Southwest from Tinie) by way of Kaya, to Mane and finally to Wagadougou. A caravan leaving Djibo entered Kelbo, the first village of the territory of Mossi on the eighth day, but according to Barth the "border district in general is regarded as very unsafe." On the fourteenth day the caravan entered Kaya;

> ... an important place where several roads meet. And from Kaya the route went to Wagadougou by way of Boussouma, Mane and Yako. It took a caravan ten days to traverse it.[3]

The third major caravan route that Barth described lay entirely within Mossi country. It ran from Mane to "Yadega" (probably Wahigouya, the capital of the kingdom of Yatenga) by way of Yako, and it took a caravan eight days to travel it. The fourth caravan route lay between Mane and a place called Kong by way of Tema, Yako, La and other places. On the tenth day a caravan reached Kong;

> ... a large place, according to my informant, inhabited by Bambara. It can scarcely be identical with the well-known Kong, if the itinerary be correct; but nevertheless it may be the case.

The first day after the caravan left Kong to return to Mane, it

(2) Barth received fairly accurate information about the caravan routes, and Marc was impressed with his data. Nevertheless, Marc finds it impossible to believe that caravans took two days to travel the twenty-five miles between Tengkodogo and Koupela, and only two more days to travel the ninety odd miles from Koupela to Wagadougou. Barth obviously erred here, but the timetable he gives for those persons "going slowly" from Koupela to Wagadougou appears to be quite correct.

(3) It is highly unlikely that a caravan going to Wagadougou from Kaya would have gone through Mane and Yako unless the caravaneers were interested in tapping the resources of these two western towns before heading straight south to their destination.

12:Skinner E-4,5 (1955-1957) 1962
FA28 Mossi FA28

175 stopped at "Fura, a large market place." On the fourth day it stopped
437 at Dullugu (probably present-day Doulougou), and on the fifth day
487 at "Dakay [or Rakay] a place belonging to the territory of Mosi."
103 Finally, on the thirteenth day it arrived at Mane.[4] The last caravan route that Barth reported ran from:

> Kaye to Belussa [Boulsa], and thence to Belanga [Bilanga] ... From Belussa a person on horseback reaches Belanga comfortably the second day, the great station between these two towns being Alitinga, still belonging to Mosi, and an important place, inhabited by Mosi and Hausa traders; but common native travellers generally halt twice between Belanga and Alitinga, in Nyennyega and Koburi [Kouri], and once between Alitinga and Belanga, in a Gurma village called Yamba.

175 The goods which these caravans carried appear to have varied a 437 great deal. Barth met a Mossi caravan at Dori, southeast of Timbuktu, 439 and reported that to this market:

> [231] The people of Mosi bring chiefly their fine donkeys, which are greatly sought after; and a numerous body of people of the Sheikh A'hmedu, of Hamda-Ailahi, had left a few days before with a number of asses which they had brought here. Besides asses, the people of Mosi supply this market [435] with gabaga [cotton strips] or tari, as the Arabs near Timbuktu call them, [434] cotton being extremely cheap in their country, so that in the great market place of that country, especially in Kulfela [Koupela, but really at Pouitenga a few miles away] an indigo-colored shirt is not worth more than from 700 to 800 [cowry] shells ... Besides salt, cotton strips, dyed cloth, Kola nuts, corn, and asses, some copper manufactured chiefly into large drinking vessels is also brought into the market by the people of Mosi. However, I do not think they manufacture the copper vessels themselves, but bring them from Asanti. (Barth 1859 : III, 203–4)

Adolphe Krause, a German who was actually the first European to enter Mossi country, went through Wagadougou with a load of kola nuts destined for Timbuktu. He joined the caravan at Salaga on July 7, 1885, stopped at the Bere market in Mossi country during August, and then proceeded to their capital where he remained until October 26 before resuming his northward journey (Krause 1887–8).

Felix Dubois, who visited Timbuktu in 1895, gives us some information on the actual products which the Mossi traded there. He reported that the Mossi came to the market organized into caravans of oxen, donkeys and porters, and brought such commodities as livestock, millet, rice, manioc, peanuts, honey, kola nuts, peppers, dried onions, tobacco, dried fish, soap, iron, antimony, lead, cotton bands, straw hats, mats, jars, pots and calabashes. These goods the Mossi

(4) Barth's skill as a reporter is evident here. He is quite correct in disbelieving that the caravans could have reached Kong on the tenth day. Marc, 1909, agrees with Barth.

12:Skinner E-4,5 (1955-1957) 1962
FA28 Mossi FA28

People also assemble sheep of the Mossi variety, which are very puny. The larger variety of long-haired 175 Macina sheep are seldom exported. Once the livestock has been assembled, 437 the chief of the caravan would also provide himself with cotton bands. 439
This native fabric has often been described; it is commonly used on the [231] caravan routes to pay for the food of the travellers. (Marc 1909 : 172) [436]

Most of the caravans through Mossi country traveled as much as 175 fifteen or twenty miles a day. They left at the first sign of dawn, 437 traveled steadily until the heat became too intense, and then stopped 484 to rest. They resumed their march when the sun was midway between the zenith and the horizon, and then stopped at some village or stream for the night. This schedule was followed on the next day if the caravan was far from a market center, but in the vicinity of a large market the caravan might remain stationary as many as six days while its merchants traded for more livestock or merchandise. This being 175 the case, it is difficult to gauge how long it took the caravans to make 437 the journey from Salaga in Ghana to Timbuktu. Our best data come 484 from an analysis of Krauss' itinerary. He left Salaga with a caravan 487 on July 7, 1885, heading north through Walwale, and arrived in Bere, 103 a distance of some 250 miles (today's road mileage) towards the end of August. Famine delayed the caravan at Bere for some time, and he [731] did not complete the 50 miles or so to Wagadougou until September 24. He remained in the Mossi capital until October 26, some thirty-two days, before his caravan headed north again through Tema, Yatenga and Bandiagara. Krauss does not tell us when he reached Douentza, some 400 miles northwest of Wagadougou, or how long he remained there, but on December 7, a few days after he had left Douenzta on the last 200- or 250-mile leg of his voyage to Timbuktu, the Moro Naba ordered him to return to Wagadougou. It is possible that it took Krauss' caravan some thirty-five odd days to make the trip from Wagadougou to Douentza. His return to Wagadougou took him only about thirty days, since he arrived there on January 7, 1886. He apparently had to wait some fifteen days there for a caravan going south, because he did not leave the Mossi capital until January 22, 1886 (Krause 1887–88). Judging from this itinerary, it probably took caravans between five and six months to travel from the forest zones to the desert, a distance of about a thousand miles at the most. This averages about six or seven miles a day, with the normal stops for rest and marketing, instead of the fifteen or twenty miles a day which the average caravan covered when it was on the road.

The caravans did not encounter many dangers or difficulties during 175 their voyage. When the caravaneers had friends along the way they 437 stopped at their friends' homes for the night, and when they camped 484 in uninhabited places men were posted to protect the goods and livestock against marauding beasts and thieves.

485 o'clock in the morning to sell food to those migrants who have slept
265 under the trees or in the deserted market place and who are going on towards Ghana or to Wagadougou. At about 8:00 or 9:00 A.M. the majority of the food-sellers leave for home, but some of them remain around all day to sell to those migrants who pass by in the few trucks which can travel during the heat of the day. The food sellers then return at about 5:00 P.M. because from this time until about 1:00 A.M. most of the trucks bearing migrants stop for water and to allow 485 their passengers to eat and rest. The amount of money these women
265 gross varies from day to day depending upon the amount of traffic
434 and the time of year. During the off-season from June to October, 221 when most of the migrants are home planting, a woman may make as little as ten francs per day. In contrast, at the beginning of the dry season when the young men are migrating in droves, the women may make as much as 100 francs a day, even though twenty or thirty women line the road at trucking centers. Many women welcome this opportunity to earn money because by so doing they are free to buy in the local markets the things they need.

MARKET

366 The Mossi have always conducted most of their commercial activities
443 in market places even though some extra-market trading continually takes place. These markets were and are still divided into two main
● [103] types: (1) those specializing in external trading, such as Pouitenga, Dakay, Kaya, Mane, Yako, La, Beloussa, Tema, Wagadougou; and (2) those specializing in internal commerce such as the markets in the villages and district centers. Of course, there is an overlap between the two types of markets in the sense that some people from the villages go to the larger markets to dispose of their commodities and, in turn, buy goods which they bring back for resale on the local level. Similarly, in former days some caravaneers visited the local markets to buy commodities and in the process disposed of their goods. However, the main pattern is for local commodities to filter into the large market centers through local markets, and for goods from these centers to filter back down to the local markets. The more goods and traders available, the more numerous and successful the markets are.

443 The Mossi do not appear to have any legends about the origin of 173 markets in their country. When asked how and why markets first arose, they say that markets developed simply because people wanted to exchange goods with each other, or because the chiefs wanted markets in their own villages so that their people need not go to 443 other districts. When one asks the Mossi directly, "What is a market?"

12:Skinner E-4,5 (1955-1957) 1962
FA28 Mossi FA28

443 such individuals to find a market everyday in one neighboring district or another.

Every Mossi market not only has its own schedule but is also part of a cycle of markets in the sense that its main customers can and do regularly attend two other markets on the two nonmarket days without missing their "own" market. Table 30 takes the district market at 443 366 438 484 Nobere as the home market and lists the markets which Nobere's people can attend and the reasons they themselves give for going there.

[103] TABLE 30

Markets near Nobere

		Distance Away	Reasons for Going
First Day:
	Nobere		Home Market
	Manga	12 kilometers	Good Pottery
	Vooko	15 kilometers	Butter and Millet
	Twese	20 kilometers	Millet and Sorghum
	Binde	35 kilometers	Good Pottery and Mats "Very far and people do not go there very often"
Second Day:
	Basgana	10 kilometers	Good Pottery
	Sakouliga	15 kilometers	"To Have Fun"
	Giba	10 kilometers	"To Have Fun"
Third Day:
	Nobili	27 kilometers	"Good Millet"
	Pinse	6 kilometers	"Small Market; to have fun"
	Parougre	10 kilometers	"Good Millet and Pottery"

Nobere people scarcely ever go to Manga because the market there conflicts with their own and its one unique product, pottery, can be bought at Basgana on a day when there is no market at Nobere. A [435] person is likely to go do Vooko when he wishes to buy butter and millet at cheaper prices than he can obtain in his own market. But he scarcely visits the Binde market unless he is there visiting a friend [517] or relative. Nobere people think nothing of going to Giba or to Pinse to show off their clothes or to have fun at those markets. If any [436] commodity is cheap there they take advantage of the prices, but in general they believe that they can obtain better and cheaper products at their own market.

443 It is now possible to find a great variety of products at Mossi mar- 438 kets, and the larger the market the more varied its merchandise. Apparently this was not always so. Crozart (1891 : 4848), who visited the country just before it was conquered, reported that in the market at Wagadougou, he found "millet, rice, millet beer, butchered meat, small cutlery, morocco-leather goods, basketwork and jewelry items,

114 today; if it provides ethnography with new materials; if it makes the native better known to missionaries, administrators, officers, colonists, and merchants, and thus better understood; and if cordial relations between the native and ourselves are thereby facilitated. Railroads will soon open up and profoundly modify the country. While there is still time, let us hasten to record the mentality of this people in its primitive form. We were able to gather data which we believe reflect the truth quite closely, thanks to the circumstances of our stay in Mossi country: ten consecutive years among its people, of which seven were spent in Koupéla; a knowledge of the language sufficient to maintain a running conversation on any subject whatever with the natives; and the close contact into which our ministry brought us with the village inhabitants. We shall be the first to acknowledge, however, that errors may have crept in here and there. It is very difficult to obtain a precise piece of information, and several natives questioned on the same subject often gave different answers. We were forced to make choices, and although we always tended to adopt the story which appeared to offer the greatest number of safeguards, we may have been wrong at times.

It must not be forgotten that our goal is not to provide a complete record of Mossi manners and customs. This was not possible, it would have been onerous, and we did not feel that it was necessary in order to present what we consider to be a generally accurate over-all picture of these people. Truthfulness compels us to point out that these materials were gathered for the most part in the province of Koupéla and, therefore, bear the impress of that locality. Our fellow-workers in Ouagadougou were kind enough to provide us with some information, but we were unable to obtain any data on the Yatenga region. God permitting, we shall round out these notes in a more comprehensive work.

101 Before we broach our subject, one remark is in order. It has become usual to speak of the Mossi, of a Mossi, of the Mossi language, as though the word did not vary. We shall follow this custom and always write "Mossi" in the singular and in the plural, although the true name of this people is Moara, plural Mosé. Likewise, we have spelled geographical names in accordance with the practice of the Administration, so as to avoid the appearance of wishing to reform everything.

000 May we thank here all those from far and near who have helped us with this work, and especially those who have contributed the interesting photographs that illustrate it.

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

[P. 221]
[P. 220 is blank]

GLOSSARY

BABISSI. Literally, "fathers' brothers." A large extended family (minimal lineage) composed of people who had a common ancestor three, four, or five generations back.

BAGLERE. A group of bondsmen believed to be descended from the Fulani or from war captives.

BALOUM NABA. A provincial minister and the chief steward of the royal household.

BASGHA. Annual feast of the royal ancestors.

BENDERE NABA. A bard or minstrel who is often called upon to recite the ruler's genealogy at royal functions.

BOODKASMA (pl. BOODKASEMDAMBA). Head of a lineage or lineage segment.

COGANAMARSE. Stones on which dignitaries are seated during court ceremonies.

DAPORE. A group of bondsmen believed to be descended from war captives.

DIM (pl. DIMDAMBA). Literally, "submit only to God." King or king's son.

DOGUNBA. Literally, "keepers of the household." The younger wives of the ruler.

FADO. An inheritance tax.

GANDE NABA. An official charged with performing sacrifices on the ruler's behalf and with distributing gifts from the ruler to the royal officials and the royal household.

GOUNGA NABA. A provincial minister.

KAMBOINSE. Guards of the royal household.

KAMBO NABA. Head guard of the royal household.

KAMSAOGHO NABA. A provincial minister. He is also a eunuch.

KEEMA (pl. KEEMSE). Ancestral spirit; also, a deceased person.

KOMBERE OR KOMBERE NABA (pl. KOMBEMBA NANAMSE). A district chief.

KOS NABA. Collector of taxes on general merchandise sold in the market.

KOURITA (pl. KOURITADAMBA). A young son of a deceased Mogho Naba chosen to represent his father on earth. He is banned from the capital, and forbidden to see the new Mogho Naba under pain of death.

LARSIALLE NABA. A provincial minister. He was also responsible for offering sacrifices to the royal ancestors.

MABISSI. Literally, "sons of the same mother." All the children of one woman.

MOAGA (pl. MOSSI). A member of the Mossi group or nation.

MOGHO. Literally, "the world." The country of the Mossi.

MOGHO NABA. Literally, "ruler of the world." The title of the ruler of the Ouagadougou kingdom.

NABA (pl. NANAMSE). Chief, ruler, or official.

NABA ZID OUENDE. Literally, "sun king." God.

NAS'YIRI. House of the chief or ruler.

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

164

NAB'YURE. Literally, "king's name." No child born during his reign could bear the ruler's name, and those persons who already bore it when a new ruler was chosen called themselves Nab'yure.

NAKOMCE (sing. NABIGA). Children of the Naba; people of the ruling or noble class.

NAM. Sovereignty, which was conceived of by the Mossi as "that force of God which permits one man to control another."

NAMTIBO. The royal amulets, or any substance or object embodying the nam.

NAPOKO. Literally, "female ruler." The eldest daughter of a Mogho Naba. She ritually impersonates her deceased father during the interregnum.

NEMDO NABA. Collector of taxes on meat sold in the market, and the person responsible for distributing meat within the royal household.

NINISI, see TINGUIMBISSI.

OUAGADOUGOU NABA. The earth priest (Tengsoba) who had ritual control of the capital district.

OUEDRANGE NABA. Head groom of the royal stables.

OUIDI NABA. An official of the ruler. In Ouagadougou, he was both a provincial minister and the prime minister.

POGOPOSSUM. Premarital gift from a man's family to his wife's family.

PUGHSIUDSE. Women whom the chief received from his subjects and whom he subsequently gave out as wives on condition that their husbands give him their eldest daughters as future pughsiudse.

PUGHTIEMA. Head wife of a ruler.

PWE NABA. A religious practitioner in a ruler's household; he is responsible for the virtue of the ruler's wives and pages.

RAGA NABA. Official in charge of the market.

SAKA (pl. SAGHSE). A section of a village.

SAKAKASMA (pl. SAKAKASMADAMBA). Head of a village section; usually the senior man of the senior lineage segment in the village.

SAMANDE (pl. SAMANDE-KAMBA). A servant in the royal household or the chief's household.

SAMANDE KASMA. Head retainer in a ruler's household.

SAMANDE NABA. Official in charge of palace retainers.

SEKA (pl. SEGHSE). Compulsory labor performed for a ruler by his subjects.

SIMILI-MOSSI. An ethnic group formed through the intermarriage of the Fulani and the Mossi.

SOGHONE (pl. SOGHONDAMBA). A page in the ruler's household.

SOGHONE-KASANGA. Head page.

SOLEM. Kingdom or area ruled by the Mogho Naba.

SOSOGHA (pl. SOSOSE). Voluntary labor performed for a ruler by his subjects.

TANSOBA. War minister.

TENGA (pl. TENSE). Generalized female earth deity. Tenga had local manifestations called Tengkouga, or earth shrines. The Mossi talk about these shrines as though they are deities in their own right.

TENGKOUGA (sing. TENGKOUGRE). Earth shrines, including mountains, rivers, clumps of trees, etc. See TENGA.

TENGKOM. Civil war between villages or districts.

TENGSOBA (pl. TENGSOBADAMBA). Earth priest.

TINGUIMBISSI. Literally, "sons of the earth." The autochthonous population of Mossi country; also called Ninisi.

WEOGHO (pl. WEOTO). Wasteland or uncultivated land.

YAGENGA (pl. YAGENSE). Literally, sister's son. The son or grandchild of a female lineage member.

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

104

YIRI (pl. YIYA). A Mossi household.
YIRISOBA (pl. YIRISOBADAMBA). Head of a household.
YUMA (pl. YUMBA). Herald or musician.
ZAKA (pl. ZAGHSE). Interior courtyard of a compound.
ZOM KOM. A beverage made with millet flour and water. Sometimes honey is added.
ZONGAOONGO. War drum.
ZONGO. Reception hall of a ruler.
ZUGOABA KASANGA. Head eunuch.

105

Identification

The Lilse (Lyela) are a tribe of 39, 000 (in 1950) belonging to the Grunshi group of the Mossi-Grunshi branch of the Niger-Congo linguistic stock. With them are tentatively grouped the Nioniosse (Nyonyose).

Basic Economy

Primarily agricultural, with millet (Pennisetum spicatum) and sorghum (Andopogon sorghum) as the staples. Other important crops are maize, peanuts, beans, earth peas (Voandzeia subterranea), sesame, and cotton (Gossypium punctatum). Lesser crops include squash, "oseille" (Hibiscus sabdariffa), okra (Abelmoschus esculentus), tomatoes, peppers (Capsicum frutescens), and "chanvre" (Hibiscus cannabinus.) Almost no root crops are grown. Livestock, which are not numerous, include the following, in decreasing order of importance: goats, sheep, dogs, donkeys, horses, and cattle. (The foregoing data also apply to the Mossi of Yatenga). Horses are few, and there are some donkeys and many chickens. There is practically no trade.

Social Stratification

The Lilse supply smiths to the Mossi.

Marriage

A groom makes gifts to the bride's relatives, but there is no bride-price.

Family

There are non-residential extended families (perhaps really lineages) with heads.

Kin Groups and Exogamy

There are named "clans", and possibly lineages, presumably patrilineal. Tauxier says that few people know the clan to which they belong.

Kinship Terminology

Fa--mesa. Mo--miyin. Br, FaSo--m'iabi. Br, MoSo--m'sabi. Si--niondo. ElSi--nieboro. YoSi--nindikian. So--borobi. Hu--dibara. Wi--pongokiom.

FaBr--misabi. MoBr--bana. Father-in-law--mone. Mother-in-law--menekion. Son-in-law--mene.

Cousin or relative--bi.

Settlement Pattern

Dwellings are round, with thatched roofs.

Community Organization

Villages are divided into quarters. Many of the villages are reported to include only a single "family" (lineage?), where others have as many as 14.

Local Government

There are village headmen.

State

District chiefs are reported, but there was no higher political integration prior to the advent of Mossi rule.

Bibliography

Lavergne de Tressan, M. de. Inventaire linguistique de l'Afrique Occidentale Française et du Togo. Mémoires de l'Institute Français d'Afrique Noire, XXX, 1-241. 1953.

Tauxier, L. Le noir du Yatenga. Paris, 1917. (Has a modest amount of information).

Identification

The Mossi (Mole, Moshi) are a culturally homogeneous nation belonging to the Mossi-Grunshi branch of the Niger-Congo linguistic stock. Mangin and Tauxier report that they number about 1, 500, 000, of whom over 1, 000, 000 live in the central Mossi kingdom; this figure is exclusive of a considerable number of Yarse, Fulani, and subjugated natives of alien stock. De Martonne (1921) reports the Mossi of the Haute Volta as numbering 1, 950, 000, but he possibly includes the Gurma. Tauxier believes that the population is a fusion of Mossi conquerors from the NE and aboriginal peoples akin to the Dogon, Kipirsi, Grunshi, and Bussanse. Their state is old. Apparently founded in the 12th century, it was strong enough to conquer Timbuctoo in the 14th century. Political unification and internal peace have promoted a dense population of 65 per square mile (based on the total figure of 1, 500, 000). Until the French occupation the open practice of Islam was forbidden, but since then it has made appreciable inroads on paganism. Delafosse (1912) reports a population of 1, 262, 000 Mossi exclusive of 147, 000 Gurma. Urvoy (1942) reports a total population of 1, 360, 000, of whom only about 90, 000 are Moslem, these being the Yarse. Lavergne de Tressan (1953) reports 1, 680, 000 Mossi in 1950, plus 72, 000 Yarse.

Basic Economy

Primarily agricultural, with brand-tillage and hoe cultivation. The staple crop is millet (Pennisetum spicatum), followed by sorghum and then maize. Also grown are sesame, peanuts, earth peas, "karyanga" (a forage grain), okra, roselle, tomatoes, "native eggplant", peppers, squash, gourds, cucumbers, "yergan" (Cucumeropsis?), Coleus coffini, cotton, and ambary, as well as small quantities of taro (Galadium antiquorum), yams (very few), sweet potatoes, rice, sweet sorghum, earth peas, beans, and cow peas. Onions are not grown, nor is manioc (Tauxier; but Mangin reports it).

Cattle are kept in considerable number, but mainly by Yarse and Fulani rather than Mossi. The Mossi, however, keep numerous sheep, goats, donkeys, horses, dogs (eaten), chickens, guinea fowl, and bees, to which list Mangin adds some cats, ducks, and pigeons. Hunting is fairly important, fishing less so; both are pastimes, and there are also professional hunters. Gathering, especially of the fruits of Butyrospermum parkii (karite) and Parkia afrikana (nere), is as important as hunting (the same products are also reported for the Grunshi tribes).

Trade is likewise important. Internal trade is conducted at regular markets, of which there is one in each village. External trade is mainly in the hands of the Yarse (and a few Haussa), who import salt and livestock from the N and kola nuts and slaves from the S.

Sex Division of Labor

Men and boys tend goats, sheep, and fowls (the Fulani tend cattle and horses). Women gather. Men hunt and clear land for agriculture. Both sexes participate almost equally in other agricultural work, though the men do more hoeing.

Property

Cowries are used as currency. Uncleared land belongs to the village, and the headman's permission must usually be secured before clearing a new plot. Land is owned in theory by the king, and its control is vested in district chiefs. Tilled land is held by individuals, not collectively. Each householder usually has one large bush field and a smaller garden near his compound.

Inheritance is patrilineal--by ElSo, who takes his father's compound (leaving his own to an unmarried YoBr who inherits a widow of Fa) and farm land (giving some to younger brothers if more than he can work), and about half of the livestock, slaves, and money (distributing the rest among his younger brothers and even his sisters). In the restricted regions where there are functional extended families, family property is inherited by YoBr, then ElSo inheriting the private property. If a man leaves no sons, Mangin reports that the ElDa inherits, then the youngest son, but Tauxier reports that the next younger brother inherits the compound and fields and shares the livestock, money and slaves with the daughters. In default of children and younger brothers (an ElBr does not inherit), the primary heir is the eldest fraternal nephew.

Social Stratification

Slavery is well developed. Slaves are obtained by capture in war, by purchase, and by birth into slave status. A slave who marries a daughter of his master becomes free, and his children are free. Smiths form an isolated (and inferentially endogamous caste), occupying a separate quarter in each village. Fulani herders also live in separate small settlements outside the village. Yarse traders form a privileged class, below the nobility but above the commoners, and occupy special quarters in the villages where they live. The sons of chiefs form a privileged aristocracy; they inhabit special villages, often pillage caravans, and are permitted to exact gifts from commoners without recourse. At the top of the social pyramid is the royalty. The sons of kings are not allowed to live in the capital but are set up with special small courts in provincial villages. The daughters of kings enjoy a very high status; they dominate their husbands and often lead profligate lives.

Marriage

Normally a father choses a girl for his young son, makes periodic gifts to her family, and when she reaches puberty pays a bride-price, consisting on the average of 25, 000 cowries plus cloth, salt, and koka nuts. Where there are functional extended families, the head arranges for the marriage of young girls, sometimes by an exchange of women, sometimes with a bride-price, and sometimes without; in the last case, the bride-price for the ElDa of the union goes to the family head or his heir.

General polygyny prevails, exclusively in the non-sororal form. The first wife is chief wife, but each co-wife with her children occupies a separate hut. Secondary unions are preferred with FaWi, allowed with WiSi (but only after death of Wi) and BrWi (inferentially only ElBrWi).

Family

The normal residential unit is a polygynous family occupying a compound; it includes the wives and unmarried children of the male head, slaves, and oftentimes unmarried brothers of the head. There are also remnants of a patrilocal extended family organization in some regions, but not as a residential unit; where such an organization occurs, the head is succeeded by his YoBr, then his ElSo.

Residence

Residence is normally patrilocal. Older boys and unmarried men live in a separate hut in the compound of their father or ElBr until they marry. Then they build a new compound, which Tauxier says is normally close to that of the Fa or ElBr; Mangin, however, reports that the new compound is often in another quarter of the village or even in another village (i.e., neolocal residence). When a householder dies, the heir (usually ElSo) leaves his own compound and moves into that of the deceased.

Kin Groups and Exogamy

Dim Delobsom says local exogamy prevails.

Known kinship is reported to be a bar to marriage. This would prevent unions with any first cousin. Second cousins likewise do not marry.

Patrilineal descent prevails. There are corporate, exogamous, totemic patrilineal kin groups (their type is not specified), each headed by its eldest male member (succession is by seniority).

Kinship Terminology (from Rattray)

Fa--ba. Mo--ma. ElBr--kyema. YoBr--yawa. Sibling of opposite sex-tawa. So--biga. Da--bi-pugela. Hu--sida. Wi--pava.

Avuncular and nepotic terms are basically bifurcate merging.

Cousin terms, as reported, are strictly descriptive, i.e., of Sudanese type; if this is correct, the social structure as a whole is Normal Sudanese.

Settlement Pattern

The typical Mossi settlement is a sprawling village, or perhaps more properly a neighborhood. Dwellings are grouped into compounds --five or six round huts with mud walls and conical thatched (with straw mats) roofs arranged in a circle with connecting mud walls to surround a courtyard (the huts do not have verandas). Compounds are separated from one another by about 40-50 yards (Mangin says 15-20 yards) with fields of maize between them. Each settlement is also divided into quarters, separated from one another by 200-500 yards. The section occupied by Fulani herdsmen has low conical shelters of straw.

Community Organization

There is no information on kin-group localization, but the quarters suggest localized lineages or clan-barrios and the report of local exogamy suggests clan-communities. Circumcision of boys and clitoridectomy of girls are both practiced at 8-12 years of age.

Local Government

Each settlement has a headman or "chef de la terre" (tengasoba), who controls the land but exercises little political authority; he is succeeded, according to Ruelle, by a son selected by the village elders; his functions are primarily ritual, though he administers justice with the help of a council of elders. Mangin reports that the office of local headman (possibly different from the above-mentioned "chef de la terre") is filled by appointment by the chief of the district, who is courted and bribed by competing candidates, never by a near kinsman of the former headman. (Two distinct offices are common among the related Grunshi tribes). Dim Delobsom says the headman is succeeded by his ElSo. Each community also has a market supervisor. Each quarter of a village also has a head, who is succeeded by the eldest surviving family head in the quarter.

State

The Mossi are politically organized into three independent states--the main Mossi kingdom (with more than 2/3 of the total population), the state of Yatenga in the NW with its capital at Ouahigouya, and the state of Gurma in the E with its capital at Fada N'gourma. The large Mossi kingdom is divided into 9 provinces--five administrative provinces headed by the five great ministers (see below) and four vassal provinces with a considerable measure of autonomy (their heads are virtual monarchs in their domains). The provinces in turn are divided into districts, each comprising a number of settlements. District heads, who are often eunuchs appointed by the king, have non-hereditary speakers, are assisted by councils, and collect regular taxes and special imposts from the local headmen. At the head of the state stands the paramount chief or king, the Mogho-Naba, who maintains an elaborate court at the capital. He is assisted by five major ministers, who also serve as provincial governors. They are: (1) the Kamisoro, the prime minister and chief of the eunuchs (Mangin says he himself is one); (2) the Widi-Naba, who is chief of the cavalry and serves as ruler in the interregnum between the death of one king and the appointment of his successor; (3) the Larale, keeper of the royal tombs; (4) the Gunga-naba, chief of the infantry; and (5) the Ballum, chief of the pages and commandant of the palace. Other important officials include a military commander-in-chief, a leader of the royal bodyguard, a chief sacrificial priest, a chief of the royal servants, an official representative of the Yarse (a privileged trading caste of Mande origin), etc. There are also numerous eunuchs (only the king is privileged to have them), pages (young boys selected for their good looks; all chiefs have them), bodyguards, and royal wives (many of whom are established in scattered villages of eunuchs, who are responsible for their fidelity), etc. In addition to regular sources of revenue, the king has unlimited powers of confiscation. The death of a king is followed by an interregnum until the installation of his successor; this is a period of anarchy, with widespread pillage and even murder. The succession is determined by an electoral college consisting of the Widi-Naba (as president), the Larale, the Gunga-naba, and the military commander-in-chief. This meets and makes its selection in secret, to avoid influence from rival candidates. The successor is apparently always a son. Ministers are also succeeded by a son--the ElSo or another selected by his Fa while alive.

Warfare

The state has always been secure. There is no intervillage warfare, and the Zaberma (Dyerma) who ravaged the Grunshi tribes between 1872 and 1897 left the Mossi severely alone. The excellent cavalry of the Mossi was an important factor in their conquests. The last war before the French occupation was with the Gurma state. Inferentially there is no cannibalism or headhunting.

Bibliography

Dim Delobsom, A. A. L'empire du Mogho-Naba: Coutumes des Mossi de la Haute-Volta. Etudes de Sociologie et d'Ethnologie Juridiques, XI, 1-308. Paris, 1933. (Very good).

Mangin, E. Les Mossi. Anthropos, IX, 98-124, 477-493, 705-736; X-XI, 187-217, 323-331. 1914-16. (Has considerable information).

_____. Les Mossi. Paris, 1921. Day-Missions. (Same as above, in book form).

Marc, L. A. Le pays Mossi. Paris, 1909. (Not consulted).

Rattray, R. S. Tribes of the Ashanti Hinterland. 2 vols. Oxford, 1932. (Has kinship terminology only).

Ruelle, E. Notes anthropologiques, ethnographiques et sociologiques sur qualques populations noirs. L'Anthropologie, XV, 519-561, 657-703. 1904. (A few items).

Tauxier, L. Le noir du Soudan. Paris, 1912. (Sound and relatively complete except for kinship and kin groups).

_____. Le noir du Yatenga, pp. 1-524. Paris, 1917. (Excellent on the Mossi of the Yatenga kingdom).

_____. Nouvelles notes sur le Mossi et le Gourounsi. Paris, 1924. (Not consulted).

4: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1957
FA28 Mossi FA28

SECTION OF ANTHROPOLOGY

AN ANALYSIS OF THE POLITICAL ORGANIZATION OF THE MOSSI PEOPLE*

By Elliott Percival Skinner

Department of Anthropology, Columbia University, New York, N.Y.

121 The African Sudanic states were the subject of a discussion presented before The New York Academy of Sciences in 1949. At that time Joseph Greenberg discussed the rise of these states and evaluated the theories assigning the predominant part in their formation to Caucasian influences. However, the Negro genesis of the Mossi Sudanic state never has been seriously questioned.[1] In this paper I propose to analyze the political system of the Mossi in the light of such questions as: the power structure of the African state; the conquest theory of state formation; and the presence of feudalism or feudal-type states in the Sudan.

●105 The one and one-half million Mossi represent the largest population aggregate in what is now known as French West Africa. They inhabit an arid 125,000 square miles of sub-Saharan area drained by the Black, Red, and White Voltas and their tributaries. The Mossi are described physically as "true" Negroes as distinguished from the other Sudanic types. Their language belongs to the Mossi-Grunshi groups of the Niger-Congo family of African languages. In many respects their culture is similar to those of such Voltaic groups as the Tallensi, Dagomba, and Mamprussi peoples of the Northern Gold Coast (Ghana). The people in this Voltaic region are mainly agriculturalists who grow several varieties of millet and sorghum. They rear some cattle, sheep, and goats, but do little fishing or hunting. Their kinship systems are based on patrilineal segmented lineages. Throughout this entire region we find the institution of earth priests who are ritual owners of the land, but political organization is highly segmented and acephalous, with the exception of the centrally organized systems of the Dagomba, Mossi, and Mamprussi.

175 The Tarikh es Soudan, a chronicle written by Es Sadi, who lived in Timbuktu during the early seventeenth century, records that the Mossi first appeared on the historical scene about 1328. Between the years 1328 and 1477 the Mossi of the northern kingdom of Yatenga attacked and conquered Timbuktu, sacked Macina, and raided the towns of Bagana and Walata held by the Songhoi. In turn they were defeated by Sonni-Ali, the famous Songhoi ruler, who even invaded their territory, capturing slaves and booty. Askia El Hadj Mohamed, ruler of the Songhoi, raised a holy war

*This paper, illustrated with lantern slides, was presented at a meeting of the Section on May 27, 1957. The field work on which it is based was conducted between November 1955 and January 1957 and was made possible by a fellowship of the Ford Foundation's African Studies Program, New York, N.Y.

[122]

The author accepts sole responsibility for the contents of this paper.

8: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1958
FA28 Mossi FA28

Christianity and Islam among the Mossi[1]

ELLIOTT P. SKINNER
Columbia University

797 THE twin forces of Christianity and Islam are both seriously contending for the conversion of the pagan masses of the Western Sudan. Islam first penetrated this region during the 11th century and succeeded in converting many people to its faith. Christianity arrived on the scene only 60 years ago, and has not had the time to win many converts. However, there remained many societies in this area which were largely pagan until European conquests exposed them almost simultaneously to the influences of both Christianity and Islam. One such society, the Mossi, has been described as the principal island of resistance to Islam in the Sudan (Gouilly 1952:52). André (1924:31) states that the Mossi "offered to the Animists an irreducible rampart against the invasion of Islam." And Delafosse concurs that the Mossi "seem to have been particularly hostile to Islam which has made no progress among them since the Hegira. And although an appreciable number of Moslem strangers (Yarsé) lived among them, they have almost all remained pagans" (1912, vol. 3:187).

The first Christian Catholic missionaries arrived in Mossi territory in 1900, just four years after French conquest. These missionaries were kindly if fearfully received by the people, who gave them land for building a mission and for cultivating crops. The Mossi helped the Christians cultivate these crops and willingly allowed the children to attend the mission school. Nevertheless, when the missionaries tried to convert the children to Catholicism, the parents objected and withdrew the children from school (Socquet 1956:62). The Protestant American "Assemblies of God" mission first worked among the Mossi in 1926, and in 1931 they reported that the outlook for conversions was "hopeful" (Cooksey and McLeish 1931:215). But from 1926 to date, the Protestants have made negligible progress in their conversions. There are today about 155,000 Moslems, 26,000 Catholics, and 1,760 Protestants in a Mossi population of over 1,500,000. These figures attest to the fact that despite a long history of resistance to foreign religious systems, many Mossi are now abandoning their traditional religion. But the figures also show that while Islam is gaining many converts, the Catholics are making only slight progress, and the American Protestants hardly any at all. There are obviously many reasons for the differential advance of these three religious systems. In this paper I will examine and analyze the processes by which these religious systems attempt to gain converts, and delineate the reasons for their differential success.

The Mossi who are now feeling the impact of external religious influences 173 represent the unique example of a Sudanese group which has preserved its 105 ethnic identity and political autonomy through all the vicissitudes of Sudanic
[186] history until French conquest in 1896. Tradition records that the first Mossi rulers left the Dagomba region in the Gold Coast (present-day Ghana) during the 11th century and moved into the bend of the Niger River, carving out three large kingdoms and smaller principalities in the process. At the head of these still extant kingdoms are rulers (Moro Nabas, who hold feudal-like control of the provinces, districts, and villages which comprise their domains. A complex hierarchical administrative apparatus extends the power of the rulers into the smallest village, and funnels taxes and tribute back to them. French conquest modified this highly efficient system but did not greatly change it. The Mossi state apparatus rests on an economy which produces cotton cloth, horses, sheep, cattle, and goats, but the main support of this large population—one of the densest in the Sudan—is grain agriculture. Today, some Mossi districts still have as many as 70 persons per square mile.

The Mossi are divided into stratified royal, noble, and commoner patrilineages. Characteristic of this lineage system is a process by which royal sublineages descend serially until they merge with the mass of commoner lineages. Below the lineages there were once large non-Mossi groups of serfs and slaves, but these people have now been grouped into lineages and have become Mossi. Patrilocal polygynous extended family households, grouped into villages, form the basic Mossi settlement pattern. Marriages are arranged between unrelated persons through the agency of lineage members who establish "friendly" relationships. The two friends might ask their lineage heads for women to exchange as wives, or the "friend" who has received more gifts from his opposite number will give over a wife. Because only the older men have women and goods at their disposal, they are usually the ones who receive wives. The result is that most young men have no wives and must content themselves with occasional lovers until they inherit wives from lineage members. The Mossi have a great fear of incestuous relations which bring down the wrath of the ancestors (the Keemsé).

Ancestor veneration is at the core of Mossi religious behavior. The recent ancestors are notified, through sacrifices, of the important events in the lives of their descendants, and they are expected to aid in solving everyday problems. The ancestors also invoke their sanctions against antisocial behavior among their descendants. Once a year the Mossi people, in concert with the Moro Nabas, appeal to their individual and collective ancestors for good crops, large families, and for the preservation of the dynasty. Often associated with the ancestors as propitiatory agents are local deities called Tengkougas (sing. Tenkougre) or earth shrines, visibly manifested by clumps of trees, mountains, rocks, or rivers. Tengsobas or earth priests appeal to the Tengkougas on behalf of the local populations for help in sickness, for rain and good crops, and for children. When proper sacrifices are offered to the Tengkougas, their spiritual agents, called kinkirsé, enter the wombs of women and are born as children. Twins and children who die young are regarded as "evil" kinkirsé who entered a woman without being invited. Nevertheless, many persons consider twins as special gifts to parents in favor of the earth deities.

The earth itself, Tenga, is one of the principal deities of the Mossi. Tenga is during a period of transition to effective independence.

9:Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1960 FA28 Mossi FA28

The Mossi have the unique distinction of having preserved their ethnic identity and political autonomy throughout all the vicissitudes of Sudanese history until conquered by the French on September 1, 1896. The origin of Mossi society is couched in mythological terms. According to their tradition they came from Dagomba in the Gold Coast (present day Ghana) sometime during the 11th or 12th century and moved northward towards the Niger River. During this migration they carved out three large kingdoms and many small principalities by conquering and absorbing some of the indigenous Ninisi and Foulse and Dogon populations, and by chasing the others into the cliffs of Bandiagara. In 1328, according to Es Sadi in the Tarikh es Soudan, the Mossi attacked, burned, and sacked Timbuktu, then held by Mali, and during the following century attacked Walata and Banku. They received their first setback by the Ali, and were severely beaten by Askia the Great, the usurper of the Songhoi throne, who lead a jihad against them in 1499. But their attacks into the Niger bend did not cease until the Moroccans became masters of Timbuktu sometime in the early 1590's. From that period until the French conquest, the Mossi remained relatively quiescent. They developed and maintained an economy based on grain cultivation, livestock rearing, cotton production, and trade between the forest zones and the desert. Their political system crystallized into a loose confederacy of fairly autonomous kingdoms and principalities, sometimes tribute to the Moro Naba, the ruler of Wagadougou.

Wagadougou, the most important Mossi political entity, was like the lesser kingdoms, pyramidal in political structure. At the top was and still is the Moro Naba, a lineal descendant of Wedraogo, the Dagomba conquerer who founded the Mossi group and Moro Naba Wubri, the first ruler of the Wagadougou dynasty. Paying allegiance to him, were the princes who ruled such autonomous provinces as Yako, Boulsa, Mane, Riziam, and Boussouma. These princes were all sons or near relatives of the early Moro Nabas. Directly under the Moro Naba were district chiefs who were descended from the cadet branches of the ruling family. The villages within the district were in turn ruled by the chiefs of the indigenous populations. In many of the villages,

12:Skinner E-4,5 (1955-1957) 1962
FA28 Mossi FA28

[p.237]

CHAPTER 9

Trade and Markets Among the Mossi People

BY ELLIOTT P. SKINNER

105

The Mossi represent the dominant population of the Voltaic Re- [13] public, numbering about 1,600,000 out of some 3,200,000 inhabitants. [161] They represent the unique example of a group which has preserved its [128] ethnic identity and political autonomy through all the vicissitudes [648] of Sudanic history until it was conquered by the French in 1896. Tra- [173] dition records that the people who became the Mossi left the Dagomba region in present-day Ghana during the eleventh century and moved into the bend of the Niger River, carving out three large kingdoms and smaller principalities in the process. At the head of these still [642] extant kingdoms are rulers (Moro Nabas) who formerly held feudal- [643] like control over the provinces, districts and villages which comprise [631] their domains. The villages, with their patri-local, polygynous, ex- [621] tended family households, formed the basic Mossi settlement pattern. [592] A complex hierarchical administrative apparatus carried the power [631] of the Mossi rulers into the smallest villages, and funneled taxes and tribute back to them. This structure still exists, but of course it has [648] been modified by the French.

The Mossi were and are still divided into stratified royal, noble [565] and commoner patrilineages. Characteristic of this lineage system is [613] a process by which royal sub-lineages descend serially until they merge with the mass of commoner lineages. Below the lineages there [563] once were large non-Mossi groups of serfs and slaves, but these people have now been grouped into lineages and have become Mossicized.

The topography of Mossi country is typical of the Sudanic grass- 133 lands. It is an immense plain, some 1,500 feet above sea level and broken only by three low mountain ranges and numerous small hills. The annual total rainfall is between 30 and 40 inches, and falls 132 almost entirely as heavy showers or thundershowers during the period from June to September. So narrow is the margin of rainfall for [433] successful crop cultivation that any variation in the cycle results in [511] low crop yields and a difficult "hungry period" the following year before the new crops are harvested. The Mossi do not practice irri- 133 gation, and would have trouble doing so because the three Volta [241] Rivers which drain their territory serve as drainage chiefly during the rainy season. Only the Black Volta has water all year round; the

1: Delobsom, A.A. Dim. L'Empire du Mogho-Naba, Coutoumes des Mossi de la Haute-Volta. /The Empire of the Mogho Naba, Customs of the Mossi of Upper Volta/. Preface by Robert Randau. Institut de Droit Comparé, Etudes de Sociologie et d'Ethnologie Juridiques, Vol. II. Paris: Les Éditions Domat-Montchrestien, 1932.

Pp. viii, 303; 24 plates /Hraf MS. Pp. ii, 166/

Yale: P50 Et81 v. 11

/Not translated: Pp. 1-46, 223-233, 289-297/

/Translated from the French for the Human Relations Area Files by Kathryn A. Looney/

/Chapters 1-2, 19-20 and the appendix, which include material on the history, proverbs and rulers have not been translated since these features are covered in other sources. Dim Delobsom was a native Mossi of the noble class, employed by the French administration. He was asked by his superiors to clear up certain ethnographic questions, and the results of his investigations are included in this book. It contains information on the organization of the Mossi empire, slavery, festivals, the life cycle, circumcision, the penetration of Islam, housing, clothing, dances, agriculture and inheritance. Though superficial in many respects, the work is particularly valuable because it presents the point of view of an educated native.--Analyst/

1: Delobsom, A.A. Dim

Field date: No date
Analyst: Timothy J. O'Leary

Evaluation: Indigene - 5
Processed in 1959

2: Mangin, Eugène. Les Mossi, Essai sur les us et coutumes du peuple Mossi au Soudan occidental /Essay on the Manners and Customs of the Mossi People in the Western Sudan/. Paris: Augustin Challamel, 1921.

Pp. xi, 116; 17 plates. /HRAF MS: pp. ii, 141/

Yale Day Missions: Jf M31

/Translated for the Human Relations Area Files from the French by Ariane Brunel and Elliott Skinner./

/Father Mangin, who lived among the Mossi for many years, mainly in the province of Koupela, and spoke the language fluently, based this account of Mossi customs and institutions primarily upon personal observations and interviews. The book contains information on the history, physical environment, economic life, political organization, marriage and family relations, life cycle, religious beliefs, and general characteristics of the Mossi people. The author's colonial and religious biases sometimes appear, though this work is regarded as a basic source on the Mossi.--Analyst.

Field date: ca. 1910 Evaluation: Missionary-5
Analyst: Robert Lee Processed in 1959

3: Tauxier, Louis. Nouvelles Notes sur le Mossi et le Gourounsi /New Notes on the Mossi and the Gourounsi/. Paris: Émile Larose, Libraire-Éditeur, 1924.

Pp. viii, 208; preface; bibliography; errata /HRAF MS. 1-38/

Northwestern University: 572.966 T229no

/Only pages 1-33 translated for the Files/

/Translated from the French for the Human Relations Area Files by Paul A. Mankin/

/Only pages 1-33 of the original have been translated and processed for the file; the remainder deals with peoples other than the Mossi. The section processed is largely a reconstruction of the history of the Mossi based on different types of evidence including that presented by other authors, traditions and mythology of the Mossi, conclusions from linguistic studies, anthropometry, and an extensive chronology of the Mossi which the author correlates with historical notes on peoples with whom the

3: Tauxier, Louis.

Mossi have been in contact. The author adds a chapter on the cult of the sun; except for this latter section and occasional notes on various aspects of the culture, the work is devoted to history. The author had been among the Mossi and in nearby areas intermittently from 1908 to 1923. --Analyst/

Field date: 1908-1923
Analyst: George R. Bedell

Evaluation: Government Official-4,5
Processed in 1959

4: Skinner, Elliott Percival. An Analysis of the Political Organization of the Mossi People. Transactions of the New York Academy of Sciences, ser. II, Vol. 19, pp. 740-750. New York: 1957.

HRAF copy.

/This is a brief treatment of the history, traditions and present form of Mossi governmental organization. The author analyzes the political system of the Mossi in light of the power structure of the African state, the conquest theory of state formation, and the question of the occurrence of feudalistic states in the Sudan. The author is a member of the faculty of the Department of Anthropology of New York University. --Analyst/.

Field date: 1955-1957
Analyst: George R. Bedell

Evaluation: Ethnologist -5
Processed in 1959

5: Hammond, Peter B. Economic Change and Mossi Acculturation. In William R. Bascom and Melville J. Herskovits, eds., Continuity and Change in African Cultures, pp. 238-256. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1959.

Yale: Nkd 74 958B

/This article is concerned primarily with the changes in the culture of those Mossi who have been resettled in the area of the recently developed Niger Irrigation Project. As a background to his statements on such changes, the author presents a survey of Mossi political and social organization, the traditional agricultural and trading economy, a few aspects of the religion which are closely related to the economy, and a brief description of the economic cycle and the calendar of ceremonial observances which mark its phases. The principal adjustments discussed with regard to the resettlement are related to new introductions in technology, the influence of Islam on the pagan religion, and the change from residence rules and social groupings based on kinship to those which are determined by the administration. The author is a member of the faculty in the department of anthropology and sociology of the University of Pittsburgh. --Analyst/

5: Hammond, Peter B.

Field date: 1954-1956
Analyst: George R. Bedell

Evaluation: Ethnologist-5
Processed in 1959

6: Tauxier, Louis. Le Noir du Soudan, Pays Mossi et Gourounsi Documents et Analyses /The Black Population of the Sudan, Mossi and Gourounsi Country, Documents and Analyses/. Paris: Emile Larose, Librairie-Editeur, 1912.

Pp. 796; 33 appendices /HRAF manuscript, pp. 1-133/

Yale: Nkd80 912t

/Only pp. 451-598, covering the Mossi specifically, have been translated for the Mossi file./

/Translated from the French for the Human Relations Area Files by Ariane Brunel/

/This sketch of Mossi life is taken from a larger general work on the Negro peoples of the Sudan. It is divided into two sections: occupations and the family, public works and religion. Under the first section are included a brief historical sketch, and information on agriculture, diet, natural resources, domestic animals,

6: Tauxier, Louis.

pottery-making, smiths, stonework and other occupations. The second section describes the forms of the family found among the Mossi, and contains information on government, the Moro Naba, and various religious practices. --Analyst/

Field date: ca. 1908
Analyst: Timothy J. O'Leary

Evaluation: Government Official - 4,5
Processed in 1960

111 FA28 Mossi

7: Tauxier, L. Le Noir du Yatenga: Mossis - Nioniossés - Samos - Yarsés - Silmi-Mossis - Peuls /The Black Population of Yatenga/. Paris: Émile Larose, 1917.

Pp. iv, 790 (HRAF ms. pp. ii, 61)

Yale: Nkd80 917t

/Only pp. 223-273 have been translated for the Mossi file./

/Translated from the French for the Human Relations Area Files by Varian Schmokel./

/The section selected for translation is Book IV: The Family. It contains information on groupings larger than the single household, women and the household, children and education, appendages of the family (e.g., slaves and serfs), family property, and the laws of inheritance. Some data on marriage practices are also included. Information on clientage, the attaching of one's self to a richer household, has been placed in category 566. Tauxier was a colonial administrator with a long association with the Mossi.--Analyst/

Field date: 1913-1916 Evaluation: Government Official - 5
Analyst: Timothy J. O'Leary Processed in 1959

8: Skinner, Elliott Percival. Christianity and Islam among the Mossi. American Anthropologist, Vol. 60, pp. 1102-1119. Menasha: American Anthropological Association, 1958.

HRAF copy

/This article is a study of the history, methods and results of the attempts of Christians and Moslems to convert the pagan Mossi. Islam has the longest history in the area, first penetrating the Mossi territory in the 11th century, while Catholic missionaries arrived in 1900 and Protestant missionaries somewhat later. The Moslems have had the greatest success and the Protestants least. Christianity is looked upon with suspicion since it is the religion of the white conquerors and since so many of its tenets are at variance with pagan beliefs. The tenets of Islam are much closer to Mossi beliefs and it is far more adaptable to these beliefs as well. However, the Mossi have shown great resistance to both religions and the great majority of them are still pagan. There is a tendency today towards a greater Moslemization of the populace and a declining status for Catholicism and Protestantism. Skinner is a Professor of Anthropology at New York University. --Analyst/

Field date: 1955-1957
Analyst: Timothy J. O'Leary

Evaluation: Ethnologist - 5
Processed in 1959

9: Skinner, Elliott P. Traditional and Modern Patterns of Succession to Political Office among the Mossi of the Voltaic Republic. The Journal of Human Relations, Volume 8, pp. 394-406. Central State College, Wilburforce, Ohio, 1960.

HRAF copy (O'Leary)

[In this paper the author has described the period of political interregnum and political succession among the Mossi and how they have adapted this to meet certain political threats under the French colonial rule and to meet the demands of the present socio-political conditions in the Voltaic Republic. --Analyst]

Field date: 1955-1957
Analyst: Robert J. Theodoratus

Evaluation: Ethnologist-5
Processed in 1962

10: Hammond, Peter B. Mossi Joking. Ethnology, Vol. 3, pp. 259-267. Pittsburgh: University of Pittsburgh Press, 1964.

HRAF Copy.

[The author presents this paper as a tentative step in the reformulation of the ..."various and disparate observations on joking in the anthropological literature." He contends that an analysis of this literature would indicate that when joking has become institutionalized, the structural relationship between the participating parties would be characterized by ..."five significantly interrelated structural attributes: separation, reciprocity, ambivalence, equality and independence" which he illustrates with data obtained from the Yatenga Mossi. These data treat specifically of the mother's brother, mother's brother's wife joking relationships, siblings-in-law joking relationships, joking between sibs (i.e. lineages), joking between age-sets, intervillage joking, and joking between ethnic groups. Joking as a psychological adjustive mechanism, and a means of social control are also discussed.
Category 571 has been used as a general "cover" category for information on Mossi joking relationships. Footnotes appearing in the text will be found in category 116, pp. 266-267.]

Field date: 1954-1956
Analyst: John Beierle

Evaluation: Ethnologist-5
Processed in 1965

11: Skinner, Elliott Percival.

of Mossi-European relations, and the resulting changes taking place in Mossi political structure as the result of the European conquest of these people.

For lack of available information on the "Ninisi," an aboriginal people living in the Upper Volta area prior to the coming of the Mossi, information on this group has been subsumed under FA28 Mossi.

Footnotes appearing in the text will be found at the end of the source: see category 116, pp. 205-219./

Field date: 1955-1957
Analyst: John Beierle

Evaluation: Ethnologist-5
Processed in 1965-1968

11: Skinner, Elliott Percival. The Mossi of the Upper Volta. Stanford, California: Stanford University Press, 1964.

Pp. xiv, 236; 1 map; 11 unnumbered photographs; glossary; bibliography; index.

Yale: Nkd83 M6 964S. DLC GN655. M65S5 DLC card no.: 64-12074.

/This source presents an intensive study of the political development of the Mossi people, a Sudanese negroid group occupying the Republic of the Upper Volta, West Africa. The author gathered his data in the Upper Volta Republic between November 1955 and January 1957, a period during which many important political changes were taking place in this region, and most of the field work was done in the territory formerly included in the kingdom of Ouagadougou, although short visits were also made to the Yatenga, Tenkodogo, and Boussouma regions. The field work was further supplemented by data gathered from various government documents and ethnographies on the Mossi. Particular emphasis in this source is on the Mogho Naba (the supreme chief or emperor of the Mossi), his household, ministers, and various territorial chiefs (e.g., provincial, district and village chiefs), and the various levels of interaction between them. Additional information may also be found on law and judicial procedures, economic foundations, and religion and government. The last three chapters of this work present a culture history

12: Skinner, Elliott Percival. Trade and Market among the Mossi People. In, Paul Bohannan and George Dalton, editors, Markets in Africa, pp. 237-278, 739-753. Northwestern University African Studies Number 9. Evanston: Northwestern University Press, 1962.

Yale: Nfg75 A17 962B. DLC card no. 61-12383.

[According to Skinner, the Mossi kingdoms with their elaborate class system and hierarchical administrative apparatus derive much of their wealth and power from regulating and managing both internal and external Mossi market commerce: taxation and tribute obtained from the local and regional markets being a source of revenue maintaining the government and ruling elite. The point of view of the author is that the Mossi markets have multiple functions: not only as foci for internal trade exchanges between agriculturalists, herders, and certain craftsmen, but also that marketplaces are sites for rural-urban communication, intervillage social contact, rural administration, and performance of sacred and secular rituals and ceremonies. The author's thorough and complete coverage treats the social-political-economic-religious organization of the market as seen in all its dimensions. Historical evidence points to the crucial effects long range caravan trade had in establishing Mossi political power and dominance. The author refers liberally to these early sources for data on trade routes, volume and frequency of foreign trade, and on the marketable commodities themselves. Today, he claims that Mossi commerce is viable in two forms: external (trade with other West African societies) and internal (trade among the Mossi), both being a response to economic forces or pressures and to the existence of some surplus productivity enabling the Mossi to specialize in various types of production and distribution. Most of the article deals with the dynamics of the average daily or weekly market. He lucidly describes such ongoing processes as: market attitudes and expectations, structure and organization of mercantile establishments and retail selling, the commodities and services disposable on the market, the operation of the price mechanism in determining values and costs of products, the function of money, the nature of Mossi government supervision and inspection of the market, the integration of such institutions as marriages and funerals into the market situation, and other market rituals, ceremonies, and social behavior. While the author's discussion is not a theoretical analysis of general Mossi economic principles or their determinants, its descriptive generalizations on market interrelationships are superb. References at the end of the article are included in a combined bibliography for the entire volume.]

12: Skinner, Elliott Percival.

Field date: 1955-1957 Cultural Anthropologist-4, 5
Analyst: Gilbert Winer Processed in 1967

FA28 Mossi

Dim Delobsom, A.A. Notes sur les Yarcé au Mossi. Revue Anthropologique, Vol. 44. Paris, 1934.

/This is an article by an educated upper-class Mossi dealing with the Moslem Yarsé ingredient of the Mossi population. Since much of the material is covered in other sources processed, this source has not been processed for the Mossi file. --Analyst/

Dubourg, Jacques. La Vie des Paysans Mossi: le Village de Taghalla. Cahiers d'Outremer, Vol. 10, No. 40, pp. 285-324. Bordeaux, 1957.

/This is a study of the village of Taghalla, which lies on the left Bank of the White Volta in the savannah country. The village has a strong social cohesion under the authority of the zaka naba, the latter being the suzerain of 13 villages in the area under the Mossi feudal system. Subsistence is based on millet and maize cultivation, with Peul taking care of the cattle. There is a problem of overpopulation in the area, with many of the younger people migrating to the coast. The situation might be ameliorated by introducing new food crops, as well as by expanding into land which has not previously been under cultivation. Since subsistence and migration have been treated in other sources already processed, this source has not been translated for the Mossi file. --Analyst/

FA28 Mossi

Marc, L. A. Le Pays Mossi. Paris: Émile Larose, Libraire-Editeur, 1909.

Pp. 200

/This volume is by a colonial infantry lieutenant who was with the group of soldiers who overcame the Mogho Naba in 1896. It is a general history and description of the Mossi. Since the most valuable sections of this source have been quoted extensively in other books in this file, e.g., those by Mangin and Tauxier, this report has not been processed for the Mossi file. --Analyst/

FA28 Mossi

Ouedraogo, J. and A. Prost. Alimentation en Pays Mossi. Comptes Rendus de la Ire Conference Internationale des Africanistes de l'Ouest. 1951.

/This is a report on Mossi nutrition made at the First International Conference of West Africanists. Since the material has already been covered in other sources in the file, this report was not processed for the Mossi file. -- Analyst/

174 /13/This lack of certainty concerning the origins of the Mossi
141 should not prevent us from treating the anthropological question of the Mossi. On the contrary, for it is quite evident that, while linguistics can give us valuable information about the origins and affinities of the Mossi, anthropology can give us even more valuable and far-reaching information since, as we know, it is obviously easier for a people to change its language than the form of its skull. Let us, therefore, look to anthropology and consult Dr. Ruelle to find out what the Mossi are from a somatic viewpoint.

141 Dr. Ruelle, in the work cited below (1), has worked with 100

[18]

1. L'Anthropologie, Vol. XV (1904), pp. 519-561 and 657-703.

Mossi men (unfortunately, he did not measure women, which is a regrettable shortcoming and can invalidate certain averages, for instance, the ones concerning stature). From the viewpoint of skin color, which he generally finds dark brown (not only for the Mossi but for the other tribes of the IInd military territory which he studied at the same time as the Mossi), he gives for the Mossi the following numbers on Broca's chromatic scale:

70 Mossi out of 100 have no. 42
14 Mossi out of 100 have no. 41
19 Mossi out of 100 have no. 37 (2)

[19]

2. Page 522.

For the horizontal cephalic index:

2 Mossi have 65	15 Mossi have 75
4 Mossi have 68	11 Mossi have 76
4 Mossi have 69	7 Mossi have 77
2 Mossi have 70	8 Mossi have 78
3 Mossi have 71	6 Mossi have 79
13 Mossi have 72	1 Mossi has 80
17 Mossi have 73	2 Mossi have 81 (3)
5 Mossi have 74

4: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1957
FA28 Mossi FA28

based on kinship." He contrasts the Geselschaft feudal system with the tribal Gemeinschaft, and recognizes the possible transition from Gemeinschaft relationships to Geselschaft relationships in the evolution of culture. However, this admission places Coulborn on the horns of a dilemma as he does not accept feudalism as a step in the evolution of the state, but as a form of government that develops after the breakdown of a state and is used for state restoration. He states that "The place of feudalism in the rise of civilized societies is not yet complete, but we must pause to notice the profound importance of the substitution of something different for kinship relations."[13] We see from the Mossi data that they used kin bonds instead of warrior-band bonds as the basis for delimiting the persons chosen for government. The warrior-band members were rewarded with hereditary administrative positions. It must be emphasized, however, that despite kinship bonds, it was the loyalty of a man that determined whether his heirs received his fief.... These new vassals were required to renew pledges of allegiance to a ruler sometimes very remotely related. It must be borne in mind that kinship does play a part in political systems that range from feudalism to twentieth century Western democracy.

We cannot fail to observe that it was in regard to the society of the Chou period in China, one similar to that of the Mossi, that Coulborn was compelled to withhold judgment as to the nature of its political system. Shang society seemed to have had many of the tribal characteristics of the people found in the pre-Mossi Voltaic area. Chou had to face the problems of ancestor veneration associated with the tribal lands, and used some of the same techniques as the Mossi. Coulborn found many of these features "foreign to a tribal society" and finally decided to "leave open the decision as to whether Chou China developed a feudal system or a system of city states as its first enduring polity."[14]

In conclusion I shall say that the political system of the Mossi had definite feudal characteristics. These feudal characteristics did not come as a result of the breakdown of a pre-existing state, but served as techniques for building a state from small scattered groups. I should certainly like to keep open the whole question of feudalism, especially as it applies to the question of the origin of the pristine state, until more comparative data from Africa can shed additional light on this important subject.

References

1. GREENBERG, J. 1949. The Negro kingdoms of the Sudan. Trans. N.Y. Acad. Sci. Ser. II. 11(4): 130.
2. MARC, L. 1909. Le pays Mossi. : 137-139. Paris, France.
3. DELOBSOM, A. 1932. L'Empire du Mogho-Naba. : 131. Paris, France.
4. DELOBSOM, A. 1932. L'Empire du Mogho-Naba. : 63. Paris, France.
5. MARC, L. 1909. Le pays Mossi. : 140. Paris, France.
6. TAUXIER, L. 1912. Le Noir du Soudan. : 583. Paris, France.
7. RATTRAY, R. S. 1932. Tribes of the Ashanti Hinterland. 2 vols. : 549. Oxford Univ. Press. Oxford, England.

4: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1957
FA28 Mossi FA28

●113 8. RATTRAY, R. S. 1932. Tribes of the Ashanti Hinterland. 2 vols. : 550. Oxford Univ. Press. Oxford, England.
9. GREENBERG, J. 1949. The Negro kingdoms of the Sudan. Trans. N.Y. Acad. Sci. Ser. II. 11(4): 134.
10. MARC, L. 1909. Le pays Mossi. : 140. Paris, France.
11. STEPHENSON, C. 1942. Mediaeval Feudalism. : 15-30. Cornell Univ. Press. Ithaca, N.Y.
12. COULBORN, R. 1956. Feudalism in History. : 197. Princeton Univ. Press. Princeton, N.J.
13. COULBORN, R. 1956. Feudalism in History. : 195. Princeton Univ. Press. Princeton, N.J.
14. COULBORN, R. 1956. Feudalism in History. : 235. Princeton Univ. Press. Princeton, N.J.

8: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1958
FA28 Mossi FA28

large Catholic population. I am indebted to Conrad Arensberg, Joseph Greenberg, Marvin Harris, and Ben Zimmermann for many helpful suggestions. 114

[2] Tauxier (1912:792) reports that when he visited Pirigui village, situated to the north of Ouagadougou, he was surprised to discover that almost half of the nobles were Moslems. It is highly probably that here, also, were the descendants of a son of Sagha who replaced a dissident chief.

[3] These figures are only approximate since many thousands of persons are unreported. Again, many persons listed as Moslems are pagans who have taken Moslem names for ritual purposes.

REFERENCES CITED

ANDERSON, JOHN NORMAN DARYMPLE 113
1954 Islamic law in Africa. London, Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

ANDRÉ, P. J.
1924 L'Islam Noir: Contribution à l'étude des confréries religieuses islamiques en Afrique Occidentale, suivie d'une étude sur l'Islam au Dahomey. Paris, Geuther.

ASSEMBLIES OF GOD MISSION
1934 Report of the Assemblies of God Mission to the Mossi, Upper Volta. Springfield, Missouri, Gospel Publishing House.

BOUNIOL, JOSEPH
1929 The White Fathers and their missions. London, Sands and Company.

CONSIDINE, JOHN JOSEPH
1954 Africa, world of new men. New York, Dodd, Mead.

COOKSEY, JOSEPH J., and ALEXANDER MCLEISH
1931 Religion and civilization in West Africa. London, World Dominion Press.

DELAFOSSE, MAURICE
1912 Haut-Sénégal-Niger. 3 vols. Paris, Emile Larose.

DELOBSON, DIM
1934 Les Secrets des Sorciers Noirs. Paris, Librairie Émile Nourry.

DUBOIS, FELIX
1896 Tombouctou la mysterieuse. Paris, Ernest Flammarion.

DUPONT, ANDRÉ
1949 La Rapide evolution des Africains dans la Haute Volta. Paris, Marche Coloniaux, 5 Annee, no. 163. (Janvier 1.)

GORER, GEOFFREY
1935 Africa dances. New York, A. A. Knopf.

GOUILLY, ALPHONSE
1952 L'Islam dans l'Afrique Occidentale Française. Paris, Larose.

GREENBERG, JOSEPH
1946 The influence of Islam on a Sudanese religion. New York, Monographs of the American Ethnological Society No. 10.

LE CHATELIER, A.
1899 L'Islam dans l'Afrique Occidentale. Paris, G. Steinheil.

MARTY, PAUL
1917 Études sur l'Islam au Sénégal. 2 vols. Paris, Leroux.

QUELLIEN, ALAIN
1910 La politique musulmane dans l'Afrique Occidentale Française. Paris, Larose.

SANDERS, RAYMOND
1953 Meet the Mossi. Springfeld, Missouri, Gospel Publishing House.

SOCQUET, MSGR.
1956 L'Église Catholic en Afrique Noire. Paris, Magazine de l'A.O.F. no. 15 (Aout).

TAUXIER, LOUIS
1912 Le Noir du Soudan. Paris, Émile Larose.

9:Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1960 FA28 Mossi FA28

with the Moro Naba and his chiefs. The Mossi commoner who became Minister of the Interior in the Mendes-France government received the treatment fitting to his rank from French officials in Africa, but he bowed humbly and paid homage to the Moro Naba when he visited Wagadougou. In return he still receives political support from the traditional Mossi hierarchy. Whether or not this man and the other Mossi politicians of commoner origin will continue to honor and respect the chiefs in order to obtain their support is not known. It is possible that this situation will change if the growing number of urban Mossi and some of their rural fellows attack the position of the chiefs. But for the foreseeable future it appears as though the traditional dynasty will remain in power, and may even extend its power at the expense of the other non-Mossi groups who are now members of the Voltaic Republic.

The apparent success of the ancient political dynasty of the Mossi people to adapt itself to the requirements of the modern world shows the ability of African institutions to adjust novelty with tradition. It confirms what the anthropologists have always known, that Africa was not a tabla rasa on which conquerors could easily impose their ideas and institutions. The cultures of Africa were meaningful to its peoples and when they could not be maintained, they were reinterpreted to meet new situations.[9] It is quite true that because of historical reasons the Mossi did not come into as intensive contact with Europeans as did their neighbors to the south, and that this is possibly why their institutions have persisted. However, the experience of Ghana should make us pause before accepting such a facile answer. A British type of Parliamentary system was imposed upon that country, but it is changing so rapidly that one wonders whether it should have been imposed in the first place. It is still too early to tell what the Ghanaian and other modern African governments will look like; but one might speculate that within the bounds set by the exigencies of the modern world, these governments may resemble the traditional African ones much more than those of their ephemeral conquerors.

NOTES AND REFERENCES

1. According to C. K. Meek, among the Jukun "The King's demise was and is kept a close secret, and is not, in fact revealed until some months afterwards, when the body is formally buried. Various reasons are assigned for this secrecy, such as that the counsellors may have time to choose a successor, that bloody contests between aspirants for the throne may be avoided, or that the royal slaves and wives may not run off." (A Sudanese Kingdom, C. K. Meek. London, 1931), p. 166. Among the Banyoro of Uganda, "When the King died, it was not made known for some days and only those in attendance knew that death had taken place, that, as they said, "Kutura," he "slept." (p. 21). And although there was some understanding as to who should be chief there was fighting between the different princes. "The fighting among princes might last only a few days while sometimes it would go on for weeks and even months." (p. 124) (The Bakitara of Banyoro. John Roscoe. Cambridge University Press, 1923). Among the BaVenda, "None of the people are informed of the death of the chief, but when some months have passed and the people begin to grow restless they are told that he has gone away; often a year or more used to elapse between the death of the chief and any recognition of it . . . It appears that during the interregnum any excitement or attempts at usurpation of power have time to work themselves out before the heir is installed; Everybody has a shrewd idea as to the true state of affairs, although no one dares to speak of it." The BaVenda, Hugh A. Stayt, London, 1931), p. 207.

9:Skinner E-5 (1955-1957)1960 FA28 Mossi FA28

113 114

113 2. "The Kingdom of Ankole in Uganda," by K. Oberg, pp. 157-158, in African Political Systems, edited by M. Fortes and E. E. Evans-Pritchard, Oxford Press, 1940.

3. "An Analysis of the Political Organization of the Mossi People" by Elliott P. Skinner, in Transactions of the New York Academy of Sciences, Ser. II, Vol. 19, No. 8, 00 740-750, June, 1957.

4. Copy of Telegram in the Archives of I.F.A.N. at Wagadougou, Voltaic Republic.

5. French West Africa Virginia Thompson and Richard Adloff, Stanford University Press. 1958, pp. 223-224.

6. "Christianity and Islam Among the Mossi," Elliott P. Skinner in American Anthropologist, Vol. 60, No. 6, December, 1958, pp. 1102-1119.

7. Thompson and Adloff, op. cit. p. 177.

8. L'Afrique Francaise. Vol. 66, 1957, p. 21, Paris.

9. Man and His Works, Melville J. Herskovits, New York, 1950, p. 542 ff, and Joseph H. Greenberg, "The Influence of Islam on a Sudanese Religion," Monographs of the American Ethnological Society, Vol. X, 1946.

10:Hammond E-5 (1954-1956) 1964 FA28 Mossi FA28

4. The importance of sibling-in-law joking as a means of regulating conflict in the Mossi marriage relationship is further substantiated by the results of comparative research conducted among the Mossi resettled at the Office du Niger in the neighboring Republic of Mali.

The Mossi, who were first forcibly and later voluntarily resettled in Mali, were allocated farm land as elementary family units without regard for their extended kinship affiliations. Thus a man often found himself living in unaccustomed "isolation," in the company only of his wife or wives and children, and otherwise surrounded by total strangers. Although the potential for conflict in the marriage relationship remained high, or was even augmented by the stresses of adjusting to a changed milieu, sibling-in-law joking, the institution through which such tension is traditionally regulated among the Mossi, was no longer operative. Unless the younger siblings of each spouse had accompanied them to the resettlement area, those individuals were absent to whom they might have communicated their grievances and expressed their aggressive sentiments in a socially harmless, psychologically satisfactory, and culturally acceptable way.

As the traditionally sanctioned means of dealing with tension resulting from marital conflict was no longer available to the Mossi resettled in Mali, there occurred an increase in the incidence both of violence in marital disputes and of separation and divorce.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Brant, C. S. 1948. On Joking Relationships. American Anthropologist 50: 161.

Christensen, J. B. 1963. Utani: Joking, Sexual License and Social Obligations Among the Luguru. American Anthropologist 65: 1314-1327.

Colson, E. 1953. Clans and the Joking Relationship Among the Plateau Tonga of Northern Rhodesia. Kroeber Anthropological Society Papers 9-10: 45-60.

Cunnison, I. 1959. The Luapula Peoples of Northern Rhodesia. Manchester.

Eggan, F. ed. 1937. Social Anthropology of the North American Tribes. Chicago.

Fortes, M. 1949. The Web of Kinship Among the Tallensi. London.

Goody, J. 1956. The Social Organization of the Lo Wiili. London.

Griaule, M. 1948. L'alliance cathartique. Africa 28: 242-258.

Hammond, P. B. 1959. The Functions of Indirection in Communication. Comparative Studies in Administration, ed. J. D. Thompson et al. pp. 183-194. Pittsburgh.

——— 1963. The Niger Project: Some Cultural Sources of Conflict. Emerging Africa, ed. W. H. Lewis, pp. 12-28. Washington.

Labouret, H. 1929. La parenté à plaisanteries en Afrique Occidentale. Africa 2: 244-254.

Murdock, G. P. 1949. Social Structure. New York.

Paulme, D. 1939. Parenté à plaisanteries et alliance par le sang en Afrique Occidentale. Africa 12: 433-444.

Pedler, F. 1940. Joking Relationships in East Africa. Africa 13: 170-173.

Radcliffe-Brown, A. 1940. On Joking Relationships. Africa 13: 195-210.

——— 1949. A Further Note on Joking Relationships. Africa 14: 133-140.

Richards, A. 1937. Reciprocal Clan Relationships Among the Bemba of Northeastern Rhodesia. Man 37: 188-193.

Tait, D. 1961. The Konkomba of Northern Ghana. London.

Turner, V. 1957. Schism and Continuity in an African Society. Manchester.

Watson, W. 1958. Tribal Cohesion in a Money Economy. Manchester.

H: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

[P. 225]
[P. 224 is blank]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

113

Amon d'Aby, F. J. La Côte d'Ivoire dans la cité africaine. Paris, 1951.
Archives of the Gouverneur Général de l'Afrique Occidentale Française. Dakar, Senegal. Unpublished documents.
Arnaud, A., and H. Meray. Les Colonies françaises: Organisation administrative, judicaire, politique, et financière. Paris, 1900.
Balima, Albert S. Notes sur l'organisation de l'empire mossi. Unpublished manuscript, n.d.
Barry, J. Histoire de l'Afrique occidentale française. Paris, 1949.
Barth, Henry. Travels and Discoveries in North and Central Africa. New York, 1859. 3 vols.
Bascom, William. "Les Premiers Fondements historiques de l'urbanisme Yoruba," Présence Africaine, XXIII (Dec. 1958–Jan. 1959), 24.
Betts, Raymond F. Assimilation and Association in French Colonial Theory, 1890–1914. New York, 1961.
Binger, Louis. Du Niger au Golfe de Guinée par le pays Kong et le Mossi, 1887–1889. Paris, 1892. 2 vols.
Bouniol, Joseph. The White Fathers and Their Missions. London, 1929.
Bovill, E. W. The Golden Trade of the Moors. London, 1958.
Bowdich, T. E. Mission from Cape Coast Castle to Ashantee. London, 1819.
Buell, Raymond L. The Native Problem in Africa. New York, 1928. 2 vols.
Burthe d'Annelet, J. C. A travers l'Afrique française. Paris, 1939. 2 vols.
Cardinall, A. W. The Natives of the Northern Territories of the Gold Coast. London, 1925.
Cheron, Georges. "Contribution à l'histoire du Mossi: Traditions relatives au cercle du Kaya (Haute-Volta)," Bull. du Comité d'Etudes Historiques et Scientifiques de l'Afrique Occidentale Française (Gorée, Senegal), VII (1924), 648.
———. "La Cour du Boussouma Naba," Bull. du Comité d'Etudes Historiques et Scientifiques de l'Afrique Occidentale Française (Gorée, Senegal), VIII (1925), 304–12.
Clapperton, Hugh. Second Voyage dans l'intérieur de l'Afrique. Translated by Mlle. Eyries and de la Renaudière. Paris, 1829. Vol. II.
Cowan, L. Gray. Local Government in West Africa. New York, 1958.
Crozat, Dr. "Rapport sur une mission au Mossi (1890)," Journal Officiel de la République Française (5–9 Oct., 1891), 4820–30.
De Beauminy, André. "Le Pays de la boucle du Niger, étude économique," Revue Géographique et Commerciale de Bordeaux, VI (1919), 71–78.
———. "Une Féodalité en Afrique occidentale française," Bull. d'Information et de Renseignements Coloniaux, XXXV (1925), 24.

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

113 Delafosse, Maurice. Haut-Sénégal-Niger. Paris, 1912. 3 vols.
Deveze, Michel. La France d'outre-mer. Paris, 1948.
Dim Delobson, A. A. L'Empire du Mogho Naba. Paris, 1932.
Dubois, Félix. Tombouctou le mystérieux. Paris, 1899.
Dugue, Gil. Vers les Etats-Unis d'Afrique. Paris, 1960.
Dupont, André. "La Rapide Evolution des Africains dans la Haute-Volta," Marchés Coloniaux, No. 163 (Dec. 25, 1948), 2327–28.
Dupuis, Joseph. Journal of a Residence in Ashantee. London, 1824.
Forde, Daryll. "The Cultural Map of West Africa," Trans. N.Y. Acad. Sci., XV (April 1953), 206–18.
Fortes, Meyer. "The Political System of the Tallensi of the Northern Territories of the Gold Coast," in M. Fortes and E. E. Evans-Pritchard, eds., African Political Systems, London, 1940.
———. "The Structure of Unilineal Descent Groups," American Anthropologist, LV (1953), 17–41.
Fried, Morton H. "The Classification of Corporate Unilineal Descent Groups," Journal of the Royal Anthropological Institute, XXCVII (1957), 1–29.
Gautier, E. F. L'Afrique noire occidentale. Paris, 1935.
Gibb, H. A. R. Ibn Battuta: Travels in Asia and Africa, 1325–1354. London, 1929.
Gonidec, P. F. "Les Assemblées locales des territoires d'outre-mer," Revue Juridique et Politique de l'Union Française, VI (1952), 328.
Gorer, Geoffrey. Africa Dances. New York, 1935.
Great Britain, Colonial Report (Annual), 1900, No. 249. Gold Coast, C-9046-17.
———, Colonial Report (Annual), 1903, Gold Coast, Cd. 2238-6.
———, Parliamentary papers xlvi, 1882 (C. 3386, #42, enc. 2).
———, Parliamentary papers: Cd. 788–27, No. 317, Acc. and Papers, vol. LXIV, 1902. Cd. 2238–6, No. 429, Acc. and Papers, 1904, vol. LI, 1905.
Greenberg, Joseph H. "The Languages of Africa," International Journal of American Linguistics, XXIX (Jan. 1963), 8.
———. "The Negro Kingdoms of the Sudan," Trans. N.Y. Acad. Sci., XI (Feb. 1949), 126–34.
Hodgkin, Thomas, and Ruth Schachter, "French-Speaking West Africa in Transition," Bull. of International Conciliation, No. 528, Feb. 1961.
Holleaux, André. "Les Elections aux assemblées des territoires d'outre-mer," Revue Juridique et Politique de l'Union Française, X (1956), 18 ff.
IFAN (Institut Français d'Afrique Noire): Unpublished documents, Ouagadougou, Upper Volta.
Koelle, Sigismund. Polyglotta Africana. London, 1854.
Krause, Dr. "Krause's Reise," Petermann's Mittheilungen (Berlin), 1887–88, pp. 42ff.
La Haute Volta, Report prepared for the Exposition Coloniale Internationale de 1931 by the Gouverneur Général de l'Afrique Occidentale Française.
Lajus, Michel. "La République Voltaïque," La Revue Française (Nov. 1959).
Lambert, Capt. "Le Pays Mossi," Bull. de la Société Géographique de l'Afrique Occidentale Française, June 1908.
Ledange, Paul-Louis. "Une Colonie nouvelle: La Haute-Volta," La Revue Indigène, XVII (1922), 133–36.
Londres, Albert. Terre d'ébène. Paris, 1929.
Mahaut, Charles. La Colonie du Haut-Sénégal et Niger. Paris, 1910.
Mangin, Eugène. Les Mossi. Paris, 1921 (reprinted from Anthropos, 1916). Trans. by Ariane Brunel and Elliott Skinner and reissued by Human Relations Area Files, New Haven, Conn., 1959.

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

Marc, Lucien. Le Pays mossi. Paris, 1909.
Marie-André du Sacré-Coeur, Soeur. "L'Activité politique de la femme en Afrique noire," Revue Juridique et Politique de l'Union Française, VIII (1954), 490.
———. La Femme noire en Afrique occidentale. Paris, 1939.
Monteil, Lt.-Col. P. L. De Saint-Louis à Tripoli par le Tchad. Paris, 1894.
Murdock, George P. Africa: Its Peoples and Their Culture History. New York, 1959.
Noll, Ned. "Le Mossi: La Mission du Lt. Voulet," La Tour du Monde, XXXIII (Aug. 14, 1897), 257.
Ossendowski, Ferdinand. Slaves of the Sun. New York, 1928.
Ouédraogo, Joseph, and André Prost. "La Propriété foncière chez les Mossi," Notes Africaines, XXXVIII (April 1948), 16-18.
Randau, Robert. "Au pays mossi," Bull. de la Société de Géographie d'Alger et d'Afrique du Nord, XXXIX (1934), 433 ff.
Rattray, R. S. The Tribes of the Ashanti Hinterland. Oxford, 1932. 2 vols.
Roberts, Stephen H. History of French Colonial Policy, 1870-1925. London, 1929. 2 vols.
Ruelle, E. "Notes anthropologiques, ethnographiques, et sociologiques sur quelques populations noires du 2° territoire de l'Afrique occidentale française," L'Anthropologie, XV (1904).
Sa'di, Abderrahman es. Tarikh es-Sudan. Translated by O. Houdas. Paris, 1900.
Sarraut, Albert. La Mise en valeur des colonies françaises. Paris, 1923.
Siriex, Paul-Henri. Une Nouvelle Afrique. Paris, 1957.
Skinner, Elliott P. "The Diffusion of Islam in an African Society," Ann. N.Y. Acad. Sci., XCVI (Jan. 20. 1962), 659-67.
———. "Intergenerational Conflict among the Mossi: Father and Son," The Journal of Conflict Resolution, V (March 1961), 55-60.
———. "Labour Migration and Its Relationship to Socio-Cultural Change in Mossi Society," Africa, XXX (Oct. 1960), 393-94.
———. "The Mossi 'Pogsioure,'" Man, LX (Feb. 1960), 20-23.
———. "Trade and Markets among the Mossi People," in Paul Bohannan and George Dalton, eds., Markets in Africa, Evanston, Ill., 1962.
Socquet, Mgr. "L'Eglise catholique en Afrique noire," Magazine de l'AOF, XV (August 1936), 62.
Southall, Alain. Alur Society. Cambridge, Eng., 1956.
Tauxier, Louis. Le Noir du Soudan. Paris, 1912.
———. Le Noir du Yatenga. Paris, 1917.
Thompson, Virginia, and Richard Adloff. French West Africa. Stanford, 1958.
Van Vollenhoven, Joost. Une Ame de chef. Paris, 1920.
Von François, P. "Voyage à Salaga et au Mossi," Mittheilungen von Forschungreisenden und Gelehrten aus den Deutschen Schutzgebieten (1888), 143.
Wolfson, Freda. Pageant of Ghana. London, 1959.
Wright, Gordon. The Reshaping of French Democracy. New York, 1948.

113

12:Skinner E-4,5 (1955-1957) 1962
FA28 Mossi FA28

175 stock against marauding beasts and thieves. All caravaneers had to 437 pay a tax to the local chiefs to cross their borders or to stop in their 486 markets to trade. Binger reported that the caravans which passed
651 through the market center of Wagadougou had to give the Moro
[661] Naba a share of their merchandise, aside from the presents which they gave to him. He also reported that the horse traders from the Yatenga, in the north of Mossi country, and the Hausa caravaneers, were sometimes forced to sell part of their wares to the Moro Naba at one-hundredth the purchase price (Binger 1892 : II, 292–300). Not all the caravaneers submitted to extortion, however, and at one period many of them traded with Mane instead of passing through Wagadougou where the tariffs were too high. On the other hand, the Mossi chiefs did not tolerate any trespassing on their territories by [685] caravans that did not pay taxes. Those who tried to avoid doing so [515] were subjected to attack by the mounted nobles (nakomce) on behalf of the district chiefs. Wise caravan leaders not only paid their taxes but established close relationships with the chiefs in order to receive adequate protection from some nobles who illegally attacked and looted the caravans.

175 It is impossible to know the actual volume of caravan trade which 437 passed through Mossi country, but we can get a fairly good idea of it
439 by examining the customs reports on goods crossing the border between Mossi country and the northern territories of the Gold Coast in the few years just following European conquest.[8] For 1901 and 1903 the official figures were:

TABLE 28A
Mossi Trade (1901–3)

Year	Horses	Cattle	Sheep and Goats	Loaded Donkeys	Bales of Cotton Cloth
1901	126	3,111	18,181	2,095	236
1903	196	6,624	30,892	4,294	369

Lucien Marc, who had the opportunity to check the volume of this trade for 1904 and 1905, guessed that about 16,000 cattle and 75,000 sheep and goats passed through the customs post in Mossi country. Furthermore, he believed that since

> ... the Mossi also supply in part the markets of Togoland and the market at Bondoukou [Ivory Coast], one can estimate at least an annual export of 20,000 cattle and 100,000 sheep or goats. The import of kola nuts is at least 500 tons. (Marc 1909 : 178)

[113] (8) Great Britain Parliamentary Papers: Cd. 788–27, no. 357, Northern territories of Gold Coast, report of 1901 in Acc. and Papers, vol. LXIV 1902. Cd. 2238–6, no. 429, N.Ts of Gold Coast, report of 1903 in Acc. and Papers, 1904, and 1905, vol. LI.

12:Skinner E-4,5 (1955-1957) 1962
FA28 Mossi FA28

their own commercial centers, they acted quite differently outside their country. Dubois reports that at Timbuktu, "the great town of pleasure" with the freest morals in the Sudan, the merchants from Bamako, Djenne, Sansanding and Touat spent a great deal of money in pleasure and in gifts to the beautiful women, but the "Mossi did not waste their money and left as soon as they had finished their affairs" (Dubois 1899 : 292–300).

The days of the caravans are now over in Mossi country, even though large groups of traders carry on the traditional commerce in livestock, cotton, kola nuts, some dried fish, and salt. As soon as the French conquered th country they formulated plants to control the caravans. One of the earliest reports, for June 1899, reads:

> The country is calm and direct administration was established at Koupela, Mane, Yake . . . The Mossi trade is mainly with the English colony of the Gold Coast. It consists mainly of livestock, very plentiful in Mossi country, which is exchanged for merchandise from England; copper and material goods . . . Our task will be to discover the materials of the northern Ivory Coast which could be exchanged for cattle, and when this information is forthcoming we should be able to direct the caravans quite easily to the Ivory Coast. At the same time the English will see their provisions of cattle and sheep diminish. They will flood us less with their cotton cloth, with their glass beads, and with their kola nuts. In their place, the products of French manufacture can arrive to us through the Ivory Coast after being exchanged for the products of our colony there.[8]

These plans did not succeed. The Mossi still export a great deal of their products towards the forest zones of Ghana, including their "numerous laborers" which, according to Beauminy writing in 1919, were "the principal riches actually utilizable in Mossi country". (Beauminy 1919 : 71–78). The migrants themselves are, in a sense, the greatest traders in contemporary Mossi society.

PRESENT-DAY TRADE

There is a constant flow of goods between Mossi country and the Ivory Coast and Ghana. Much of the trade to the former region is in the hands of the large commercial companies and as such is beyond the purview of this paper. What is of interest here is the trade which is conducted by the ordinary people. A great deal of this trade is highly unorganized and the result of one or two men, or as many as five men, joining together to trade goods to and from Ghana and the Ivory Coast. The types of goods sent down to these two areas are the same as those traded in pre-European times.

(8) Unpublished document in the archives of Institut Français d'Afrique Noire, Wagadougou, Voltaic Republic.

12:Skinner E-4,5 (1955-1957) 1962
FA28 Mossi FA28

BIBLIOGRAPHY

113

ADANSON, M.
1759 A Voyage to Senegal, the Isle of Goree and the River Gambia (1749–53). London: J. Nourse.

ALEXANDER, J. E.
1838a An Expedition of Discovery into the Interior of Africa. 2 vols. London: Henry Colburn.
1838b "Report of an Expedition of Discovery, through the Countries of the Great Nom Aquas, Boschmans, and the Hill Damaras in South Africa," Journal of the Royal Geographical Society of London, Vol. 8, pp. 1–28.

ALEXANDRE, P. AND BINET, J.
1958 Le Groupe dit Pahouin. London: International African Institute.

ALLAN, W., GLUCKMAN, M., PETERS, D. U., AND TRAPNELL, C. G.
1948 "Land Holding and Land Usage among the Plateau Tonga of Mazabuka District," Rhodes-Livingstone Papers, No. 14.

AMES, D. W.
1955a "The Use of a Transitional Cloth-Money Token among the Wolof," American Anthropologist, Vol. 57, No. 5.
1955b "The Economic Base of Wolof Polygyny," Southwestern Journal of Anthropology, Vol. 11, pp. 391–403.

ARNOLD, ROSEMARY
1957 "A Port of Trade: Whydah on the Guinea Coast," in Trade and Market in the Early Empires (K. Polanyi, C. W. Arensberg, and H. W. Pearson, eds.). Chicago: The Free Press.

ARNOT, F. S.
1889 Garenganze. Chicago, New York: F. H. Revell.

ASTLEY, THOMAS (PUBLISHER)
1745 A New General Collection of Voyages and Travels. 2 vols. London: Printed for T. Astley.

BACON, R. H.
1897 Benin, the City of Blood. London: Edward Arnold.

BAINES, THOMAS
1864 Explorations in South West Africa. London: Longmans.

BALANDIER, G.
1952 "Actualité du problème de la dot en Afrique Noire," Le Monde Non-Chrétien, No. 21.
1954 Conséquences sociales de l'industrialisation et problèmes urbains en Afrique: étude bibliographique. Paris: Bureau International de Recherche sur les Implications Sociales du Progrès Technique.
1955 Sociologie Actuelle de l'Afrique Noir. Paris: Presses Universitaires de France.

BANTON, M.
1957 West African City. London: Oxford University Press.

BARNES, JOHN A.
1951 "The Fort Jameson Ngoni," in Seven Tribes of British Central Africa (E. Colson and M. Gluckman, eds.). Manchester: Manchester University Press.

BARTH, HENRY
1857 Travels in North and Central Africa. London: Ward Lock (Edition of 1890).
1859 Travels and Discoveries in North and Central Africa. New York: Harper and Brothers.

[739]

12:Skinner E-4,5 (1955-1957) 1962
FA28 Mossi FA28

●//3

BAUER, P. T.
1954 West African Trade. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.

BAXTER, W. B.
1958 "A Report on the Fishing Industry on that Part of the Kafue River Lying within Lusaka District." (Mimeographed.)

BEAUMINY, A. DE
1919 "Le Pays de la Boucle du Niger, Étude Économique", Revue géographique et commerciale de Bordeaux, Vol. 6, pp. 71–78.

BENEDICT, RUTH
1956 "The Growth of Culture," in Man, Culture and Society (H. Shapiro, ed.). New York: Oxford University Press.

BENNETT, M. K.
1954 The World's Food. New York: Harper and Brothers.

BINET, J.
1956 "Budgets familiaux des planteurs de cacao au Cameroun," L'Homme d'Outre-Mer, No. 3.
1957 "Une élite rurale: conseilleurs municipaux de Cameroun," Le Monde Non-Chrétien, No. 42.

BINGER, CAPTAIN LOUIS A.
1892 Du Niger au Golfe de Guinée par le Pays de Kong et la Mossi. Paris: Librairie Hachette et Cie.

BOEKE, J. H.
1953 Economics and Economic Policy in Dual Societies. New York: Institute of Pacific Relations.

BOHANNAN, LAURA, AND BOHANNAN, PAUL
1953 The Tiv of Central Nigeria. London: International African Institute.

BOHANNAN, PAUL
1955 "Some Principles of Exchange and Investment among the Tiv," American Anthropologist, Vol. 57, pp. 60–69.
1959 "The Impact of Money on an African Subsistence Economy," The Journal of Economic History, Vol. 19, pp. 491–503.
1961 "The Tiv Market Place." (Unpublished manuscript.)

BONNET-DUPEYRON, M. F.
1945 Maps (showing animal husbandry in West and Central Africa). Paris: O. R. S. T. O. M.

BOVILL, E. W.
1958 The Golden Trade of the Moors. London, New York: Oxford University Press.

BOWDITCH, T. E.
1819 Mission from Cape Coast to Ashanti. London: J. Murray.

BRADLEY, K.
1952 Copper Venture. London: Mufulira Copper Mines.

BRELSFORD, V. W.
1946 "Fishermen of the Bangweulu Swamps," Rhodes-Livingstone Papers, No. 12.
1947 Copperbelt Markets. Lusaka: Government Printer.
1956 The Tribes of Northern Rhodesia. Lusaka: Government Printer.

BRINCKER, H.
1886 Wörterbuch und Kurzgefasste Grammatik des Otgi-Herero. Leipzig: T. O. Weigel.

BRUSH, J. E.
1953 "The Hierarchy of Central Places in Southwestern Wisconsin," Geographical Review, Vol. 43, pp. 380–402.

12:Skinner E-4,5 (1955-1957) 1962
FA28 Mossi FA28

113

BULTOT, F.
1954 Saisons et Périodes Sèches et Pluvieuses au Congo Belge et au Ruanda-Urundi. Bruxelles: Publications de l'Institut National pour l'étude agronomique du Congo Belge.

BURTON, R. F.
1873 Lacerda's Journey to Cazembe in 1798. London: Royal Geographic Society.
1910 First Footsteps in East Africa. New York: E. P. Dutton.

CAILLIÉ, R.
1830 Travels Through Central Africa to Timbuctoo. Paris: Impr. par autorisation du Roi à l'Imprimerie royale.

CAMERON, V. L.
1877 Across Africa. London: Doldy, Isbister.

CAPELLO AND IVENS
1885 De Angola a Contra Costa. Lisbon: Imprensa nacional.

CERULLI, E.
1956 Peoples of South-west Ethiopia and its Borderland. London: International African Institute.

CHAPMAN, JAMES
1868 Travels in the Interior of South Africa. London: Bell & Daldy.

CHILDS, MURRAY GLADWIN
1949 Umbundu Kinship and Character. London: International African Institute.

CLAPPERTON, HUGH
1829 Journal of a Second Expedition into the Interior of Africa, from the Bight of Benin to Soccatoo. London: J. Murray.

CLARK, FRED EMERSON AND WELD, LOUIS DWIGHT HARVELL
1932 Marketing Agricultural Products in the United States. New York: The Macmillian Company.

CRAWFORD, DANIEL
1912 Thinking Black. London: Morgan & Scott, Ltd.

COLSON, ELIZABETH
1951a "The Plateau Tonga of Northern Rhodesia," in Seven Tribes of British Central Africa (E. Colson and M. Gluckman, eds.). Manchester: University of Manchester Press.
1951b "The Role of Cattle among the Plateau Tonga," Rhodes-Livingstone Journal, Vol. 11, pp. 10–46.
1958a "Plateau Tonga Diet," Rhodes-Livingstone Journal, Vol. 24.
1958b Marriage and the Family among the Plateau Tonga of Northern Rhodesia. Manchester: University of Manchester Press.
1960 Before Kariba: The Social Organization of the Valley Tonga. Manchester: University of Manchester Press.

CROZAT, DR.
1891 "Rapport sur une mission au Mossi," Journal Officiel de la République Française, 5–9 October.

CURLE, A. T.
1937 "The Ruined Towns of Somaliland," Antiquity, Vol. 11, pp. 315–27.

DEANE, P.
1953 Colonial Social Accounting. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.

DELAFOSSE, A. M.
1919 "Un pays de pilleurs d'épaves: Le Gandiole," Bulletin du Com. d'Études Historiques et Scientifiques de l'A.O.F.

12:Skinner E-4,5 (1955-1957) 1962
FA28 Mossi FA28

●113 DILLEY, M. R.
1937 British Policy in Kenya Colony. New York: T. Nelson.
DOKE, CLEMENT
1931 The Lambas of Northern Rhodesia. London: George G. Harrap.
DORJAHN, V. R.
1959 "The Organization and Functions of the Ragbenle Society of the Temne," Africa, Vol. 29, No. 2, pp. 156–70.
DOUGLAS, MARY
1951 "A Form of Polyandry among the Lele," Africa, Vol. 21, pp. 1–12.
1954 "The Lele of the Kasai," in African Worlds (D. Forde, ed.). London: Oxford University Press.
1957 "The Pattern of Residence among the Lele," Zaïre, Vol. 11, pp. 818–43.
1958 "Raffia Distribution in the Lele Economy," Africa, Vol. 28, pp. 2 ff.
1959a "Age-Status among the Lele," Zaïre, Vol. 13, pp. 386–413.
1959b "The Lele of the Kasai," in The Church and the Nations (A. Hastings, ed.). London: Sheed & Ward.
— "Blood-debts among the Lele," Journal of the Royal Anthropological Institute, forthcoming.
DRAKE-BROCKMAN, R. E.
1912 British Somaliland. London: Hurst & Blackett, Ltd.
DUBOIS, CORA
1936 "The Wealth Concept as an Integrative Factor in Tolowa-Tututni Culture," in Essays in Anthropology Presented to A. L. Kroeber (R. H. Lowie, ed.). Berkeley: University of California Press.
DUPIRE, M.
1957 "Les Forages dans l'Économie peule" (Mission chez les Peuls nomades du cercle de Linguère, Sénégal), in Eléments de politique sylvo-pastorale au Sahel sénégalais (P. Grosmaire, ed.). Gouvernement du Sénégal, Service des Eaux et Forêt. Pt. 2, Fas. 14.
1962 Peuls pasteurs, Étude descriptive des Wodaabe nomades du Sahel Nigérian. Paris: Institut d'Ethnologie, Musée de l'Homme.
DUPUIS, JOSEPH
1824 Journal of a Residence in Ashantee. London: H. Colburn.
DURAND, J. B. L.
1806 A Voyage to Sénégal. London: R. Phillips.

EGGERS, (LIEUTENANT)
1900 "Bericht über eine Reise nach dem Okavargogebiet," in Mittheilungen (für Forschungsreisenden und Gelehrten) aus den Deutschen Schutzgebieten, Bd. 13, H. 3, pp. 185–88. Berlin: G. S. Mittler und Sohn.
ELLIS, A. B.
1883 The Land of Fetish. London: Chapman and Hall, Ltd.
EVANS-PRITCHARD, E. E.
1954 "Introduction," in The Gift (by Marcel Mauss). Chicago: The Free Press.

FAGE, J. D.
1958 An Atlas of African History. London: E. Arnold.
FALLERS, LLOYD A.
1956 Bantu Bureaucracy. Cambridge: W. Heffer, for the East African Institute of Social Research.
FARINI, G. ANTONIO
1886 Through the Kalahari Desert. London: Sampson, Low.

12:Skinner E-4,5 (1955-1957) 1962
FA28 Mossi FA28

113

FARSON, NEGLEY
1941 Behind God's Back. New York: Harcourt, Brace.

FERRANDI, U.
1903 Lugh. Emporio commerciale sul Giuba. Rome.

FEUNTEUN, L. M.
1955 "L'élevage en A. O. F., son importance économique et sociale," Revue d'élevage et de médecine vétérinaire des pays tropicaux.

FIRTH, RAYMOND
1951 Elements of Social Organisation. London: Watts.
1958 Human Types. New York: Mentor Books.

FORDE, D.
1937 "Land and Labour in a Cross River Village," Geographical Journal, Vol. 40, No. 1.

FORDE, D. AND JONES, G. I.
1950 The Ibo and Ibibio-speaking Peoples of Southeastern Nigeria. London: International African Institute.

FORDE, D. AND SCOTT, RICHENDA
1946 The Native Economies of Nigeria. London: Oxford University Press.

FORTT, J. M.
1953 in Economic Development and Tribal Change (A. I. Richards, ed.). Cambridge: Heffer and Sons.

FRYER, G.
1958 "Mwamfuli's Village: The New Fulcrum of the Bangweulu Fish Trade," The Northern Rhodesia Journal, Vol. 3, No. 6.

FURNIVALL, J. S.
1939 Netherlands India, A Study of Plural Economy. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press. (Edition used—New York: The Macmillan Company, 1944.)

GABUS, J.
1955 Au Sahara. Neuchatel: A. la Baconnière.

GALBRAITH, J. K.
1955 Economics and the Art of Controversy. New Brunswick: Rutgers University Press.

GALETTI, R., BALDWIN, K. D. S., AND DINA, I. O.
1956 Nigeria Cocoa Farmers. London: Oxford University Press.

GALTON, FRANCIS
1891 Narrative of an Explorer in Tropical South Africa. London: Ward, Lock and Bowden.

GAMBLE, D. P. G.
1949 Contributions to a Socio-Economic Survey of the Gambia. London: Colonial Office.
1955 Economic Conditions of Two Mandinka Villages: Kerewan and Keneba. London: Colonial Office.
1957 The Wolof of Senegambia. London: International African Institute.

GANN, LEWIS
1954 "The End of the Slave Trade in British Central Africa, 1889–1912," Rhodes-Livingstone Journal, Vol. 16, pp. 27–51.
1958 The Birth of a Plural Society. Manchester: University of Manchester Press.

GERVAISE, J.
1960 Le Commerce des Kountas. Bulletin I. F. A. N. Dakar.

GIBSON, GORDON D.
1956 "Double Descent and its Correlates among the Herero of Ngamiland," American Anthropologist, Vol. 58, pp. 109–30.

12:Skinner E-4,5 (1955-1957) 1962
FA28 Mossi FA28

● 113 1958 "Herero Marriage," Human Problems in British Central Africa. Vol. 24, pp. 1–37.

GIELGUD, VAL
1900 Reports in the Public Records of Northeast Rhodesia, A 3/8/1; National Archives of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, Lusaka.

GLUCKMAN, MAX
1941 "Economy of the Central Barotse Plain," Rhodes-Livingstone Papers, No. 7.
1950 "Kinship and Marriage among the Lozi of Northern Rhodesia and the Zulu of Natal," in African Systems of Kinship and Marriage (A. R. Radcliffe-Brown and Daryll Forde, eds.). London: Oxford University Press.

GOLDSMITH, K. L. G., AND LEWIS, I. M.
1958 "A Preliminary Investigation of the Blood Groups of the Sab Bondsmen of Northern Somaliland," Man, Vol. 58, pp. 188–90.

GOODFELLOW, D. M.
1939 Principles of Economic Sociology. London: G. Routledge & Sons, Ltd.

GOUROU, P.
1951 Notice de la carte de la densité de la population au Congo Belge et au Ruanda-Urundi. Bruxelles: Institute Royal Colonial Belge.
1955 La Densité de la population rurale au Congo Belge, etc. Brussels: Acad. Roy. Sci. Col. Mem. 8, 1, 2.

GRAY, J. M.
1940 A History of the Gambia. Cambridge: The University Press.

GRAY, R. F.
1960 "Sonjo Bride Price and the Question of African 'Wife Purchase,'" American Anthropologist, Vol. 62, pp. 34–57.

GRAY, W., AND DORCHARD
1825 Travels in Western Africa (1818–21). London: J. Murray.

GREAT BRITAIN
1902 Northern Territories of Gold Coast, Report of 1901. London: H. M. S. O. (Cd 788–27, No. 357).
1905 Northern Territories of Gold Coast, Report of 1903. London: H. M. S. O. (Cd 2238–6, No. 429).
1918 Report of the Natives of South West Africa and their Treatment by Germany. London: H. M. S. O. (R 9146). (Parliamentary Papers 1918, Vol. 17, p. 491).

GREENBERG, J.
1955 Studies in African Linguistic Classification. New Haven: Compass Publishing Company.

GREENLAND, D. J. AND CHANCELLOR, R. J.
1958 "West Nile District: Some Soil and Vegetation Types," Uganda Journal, Vol. 22, March.

GREGORY, T. E.
1933 "Money," Encyclopedia of the Social Sciences, Vol. 10, pp. 601–2.

GULLIVER, P. H.
1955 The Family Herds: A Study of Two Pastoral Tribes. London: Routledge and Kegan Paul.

HAHN, C. HUGO
1857 Grundzüge einer Grammatik des Herero (im westlichen Afrika), nebst einem Wörterbuch. Berlin: W. Hertz.

HAHN, JOSAPHAT
1868 "Das Land der Ovaherero," Zeitschrift der Gesellschaft für Erdkunde zu Berlin, Vol. 3, pp. 193–224, 493–507.

12:Skinner E-4,5 (1955-1957) 1962
FA28 Mossi FA28

113

1869 "Die Ovaherero," Zeitschrift der Gesellschaft für Erdkunde zu Berlin, Vol. 4, pp. 226–58.

HAHN, THEOPHILUS

1883 "Answers to questions on Criminal and Civil Law, marriage and inheritance, land tenure and self-government." Cape of Good Hope Reports and Proceedings with Appendices of the Government Commission on Native Laws and Customs, Part 2, Appendix C, pp. 248–58. Capetown.

HANNA, A. J.

1956 The Beginnings of Nyasaland and North-Eastern Rhodesia. London: Oxford University Press.

HANNA, M.

1958 "The Lebanese in West Africa," West Africa, April 19, p. 369; April 26, p. 393; May 3, p. 415; May 17, p. 463; and May 24, p. 487.

HARRIS, M.

1959 "The Economy Has No Surplus?" American Anthropologist, Vol. 61, No. 2, pp. 185–200.

HERSKOVITS, MELVILLE J.

1938 Dahomey. New York: Augustin.

1941 "Economics and Anthropology: A Rejoinder," Journal of Political Economy, Vol. 49, pp. 269–78.

1952a Economic Anthropology. New York: Knopf.

1952b "The Problem of Adapting Societies to New Tasks," in The Progress of Underdeveloped Areas (B. F. Hoselitz, ed.). Chicago: University of Chicago Press.

HEWETT, J. F. N.

1857 "On the Jolloffs of West Africa," Royal Geographical Society Proceedings, Vol. 1.

HIGGINS, B.

1956 "The 'Dualistic Theory' of Underdeveloped Areas," Economic Development and Cultural Change, pp. 99–115, January.

HILTON-SIMPSON, M. W.

1911 Lands and Peoples of the Kasai. London: Constable & Co., Ltd.

HODDER, B. W.

1959 "The Yoruba Rural Market Ring," Research Notes, No. 12. Ibadan, Nigeria.

HOMBURGER, L.

1925 "Le Group Sud-ouest des Langues Bantues." Mission Rohan-Chabot, Tome 3, Fasc. 1. Paris: Imp. Nationale.

HORNER, GEORGE R.

1950 "La litérature orale: Une étude du folklore des tribus Bulu et Basa du Cameroun." Unpublished doctoral thesis, University of Paris, Sorbonne.

HORRABIN, J. F.

1960 An Atlas of Africa. New York: Praeger.

HUNTLEY, SIR HENRY

1850 Seven Years' Service on the Slave Coast of Western Africa. Vol. 11, Twelve Months in the Gambia. London: T. C. Newby.

HUTT, W. H.

1939 Theory of Idle Resources. London: J. Cape.

ISEL, JACOB

1917 Deutsch-Herero Wörterbuch (Abhandlungen des Hamburgischen Kolonialinstituts 32). Hamburg: L. Friedrichsen.

1906 Die Herero. Gütersloh: Bertelsmann.

12:Skinner E-4,5 (1955-1957) 1962
FA28 Mossi FA28

● /13 JARRETT, H. R.
1954 "Freetown, A Study in Space Relationships." Sierra Leone Studies, N. S., No. 2, pp. 98–108, June.
1955 "The Port and Town of Freetown," Geography, Vol. 40, pp. 108–18.

JENSEN, A. E. (ed.)
1936 Im Lande des Gada. Stuttgart: Strecker und Schröder.
1954 Mythes et cults chez les peuples primitifs (M. Metzger and J. Goffinet), Paris: Payot.

JOBSON, R.
1932 The Golden Trade or a Discovery of the River Gambia, and the Golden Trade of the Aethiopians (1620–21). London: The Penguin Press.

JOHNSON, C.
1956 "African Farming Improvement in the Plateau Tonga Maize Areas of Northern Rhodesia." Northern Rhodesia Agricultural Bulletin, No. 11. Department of Agriculture.

JONES, W. O.
1960 "Economic Man in Africa," Food Research Institute Studies, Vol. 1, No. 2.

KARP, M.
See Lorimer, Frank.

KENYATTA, JOMO
1938 Facing Mount Kenya. London: Secker and Warburg.

KNIGHT, FRANK
1941 "Anthropology and Economics," Journal of Political Economy, Vol. 49, pp. 247–68.

KOELLE, REVEREND S. W.
1854 Polyglotta Africana. London: Church Missionary House.

KOLBE, F. W.
1883 An English-Herero Dictionary. Capetown: J. C. Juta.

KRAUSE, ADOLPHE
1887–88 "Krause's Reise," in Petermann's Mitteilungen. 1887, pp. 57, 92, 152 and 217; 1888, p. 88.

KROEBER, A. L.
1948 Anthropology. New York: Harcourt, Brace.

LARRAT, R.
1954 "Problèmes de la viande," in A. O. F. Zones de production. II. Niger. Paris: Editions De l'Outre-mer.
1958 "Etat actuel de la production, de la collecte, du transport, de la transformation et de la distribution des divers laits et produits laitiers dans les pays chauds." Paris: Commission internationale pour la laiterie dans les pays chauds.

LAWRIE, J.
1954 "Frankincense," The Somaliland Journal, Vol. 1, pp. 26–30.

LESSER, A.
1939 "Some Comments on the Concept of the Intermediate Society," in Intermediate Societies, Social Mobility and Communication. Seattle: American Ethnological Society.

LEVINE, ROBERT A.
1959 "Gusii Sex Offenses: A Study in Social Control," American Anthropologist, Vol. 61, pp. 965–90.

LEWIS, I. M.
1955–56 "Sufism in Somaliland. A Study in Tribal Islam," Bulletin of the School of Oriental and African Studies, Vol. 17, pp. 581–602; Vol. 18, pp. 146–60.

12:Skinner E-4,5 (1955-1957) 1962
FA28 Mossi FA28

1958 Modern Political Movements in Somaliland. International African Institute Memorandum 30. London: Oxford University Press.

1959a "Somalia, United Nations Trusteeship Territory: Pastoral and Party Politics," in From Tribal Rule to Modern Government (proceedings of the 13th conference of the Rhodes-Livingstone Institute [R. Apthorpe, ed.]), pp. 157–73.

1959b "Clanship and Contract in Northern Somaliland," Africa, Vol. 29, pp. 274–93.

LEWIS, R.
1954 Sierra Leone: A Modern Portrait. London: H. M. S. O.

LEYS, SIR NORMAN
1924 Kenya. London: Hogarth Press.

LINTON, RALPH
1940 "A Neglected Aspect of Social Organization," American Journal of Sociology, Vol. 45.

LIPSON, E.
1949 The Economic History of England. 10th Edition. London: A. and C. Black.

LITTLE, K. L.
1951 The Mende of Sierra Leone. London: Routledge and Kegan Paul, Ltd.

LLOYD, P. C.
1952 "A Comparative Study of the Political Institutions in Some Yoruba Kingdoms." Unpublished thesis submitted for the Degree of B. Sc., Oxford.

LONSDALE, CAPTAIN R. LA T.
1882 in Parliamentary Papers, 46 (C. 3586) No. 42, En 2. London: H. M. S. O.

LORIMER, FRANK (ed.)
1960 Seminar on Populations in Africa. Boston: Boston University Press.

LUGARD, SIR F. D.
1929 The Dual Mandate. London: Blackwood.

MABOGUNJE, A.
1958 "Abeokuta." Unpublished thesis submitted for the Degree of M. A., London.

MACBRIAR, REVEREND R. M.
1861 The Africans at Home, being a popular account of Africa and the Africans, etc. London: Longman, Green, Longman, and Roberts.

MACLAREN, P. I. R.
1958 The Fishing Devices of Central and Southern Africa. Livingstone: Rhodes Livingstone Museum, No. 12 N. S.

MALINOWSKI, BRONISLAW
1922 Argonauts of the Western Pacific. London: Routledge and Kegan Paul, Ltd.

MANGIN, FR. EUGÈNE
1921 Les Mossi. Paris: Augustin Challamel.

MARC, LUCIEN
1909 Le Pays Mossi. Paris: Emile Larose.

MARX, KARL
1867 Capital. Edition used—New York: Modern Library.

MATTENKLODT, WILHELM
1931 Fugitive in the Jungle. New York: Little, Brown & Company.

MAYER, PHILIP
1950 "Gusii Bridewealth Law and Custom," Rhodes-Livingstone Papers, No. 18.

MEINHOF, CARL
1932 Introduction to the Phonology of the Bantu Languages. (N. J. v. Warmelo, tr.). Berlin: D. Reimer & G. Vohsen.

MELLAND, FRANK
1923 In Witchbound Africa. London: Seeley, Service & Company.

12:Skinner E-4,5 (1955-1957) 1962
FA28 Mossi FA28

●113

MEYER, FELIX
1925 "Wirtschaft und Recht der Herero," in Jahrbuch der Internationalen Vereinigung für vergleichende Rechtwissenschaft und Volkswirtschaftslehre zu Berlin, Vol. 8. Berlin: J. Springer.

MIDDLETON, JOHN
1952 "Labor Migration Among the Lugbara." An unpublished report submitted to the Colonial Office, London, and the Government of Uganda.
1958 "The Political System of the Lugbara of the Nile-Congo Divide," in Tribes Without Rulers (J. Middleton and D. Tait, eds.). London: Routledge and Kegan Paul.

MIDDLETON, JOHN, AND GREENLAND, D. J.
1954 "Land and Population in West Nile District, Uganda," Geographical Journal, No. 120, December.

MINTZ, S.
1959 "Internal Market Systems as Mechanisms of Social Articulation," in Intermediate Societies, Social Mobility and Communication. Seattle: American Ethnological Society.

MIRACLE, M.
—— "Plateau Tonga Entrepreneurs in Historical Inter-Regional Trade," Rhodes-Livingstone Journal, forthcoming.

MITCHELL, C.
1956 "Tribes in Towns," in The Tribes of Northern Rhodesia (W. V. Brelsford, ed.). Lusaka: Government Printer.
1957 "Tribal Distribution in the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland." Map. Salisbury: University College of Rhodesia and Nyasaland.

MOLLIEN, G.
1820 Travels in Africa, to the Sources of the Senegal and Gambia in 1818. London: Sir R. Phillips, and Company.

MOLONEY, J. A.
1893 With Captain Stairs to Katanga. London: S. Low, Marston and Company.

MONOD, TH.
1951 Description de la Côte Occidentale d'Afrique (Sénégal au Cap de Monte, Archipels) par Valentim Fernandes (1506–10). Bissau: Centro de Estudos Portuguesa.

MOORE, FRANCIS
1738 Travels into the Inland Parts of Africa. London.

MURDOCK, G. P.
1959 Africa, Its Peoples and Their Culture History. New York: McGraw-Hill.

MURPHY, R. F. AND STEWARD, J. H.
1956 "Tapper and Trappers: Parallel Process in Acculturation," Economic Development and Cultural Change, Vol. 4, No. 4.

MYRDAL, GUNNAR
1957 Economic Theory and Underdeveloped Regions. London: G. Duckworth.

MCCALL, DANIEL F.
1955 "Family Structure and Changing Economic Activities of Women in a Gold Coast Town." Unpublished doctoral thesis, Columbia University.
1959 "Trade and the Role of Wife in a Modern West African Town." Paper read at International African Institute Conference, Kampala, Uganda.

MCCULLOCH, M.
1950 Peoples of Sierra Leone Protectorate. Ethnographic Survey of Africa, Western Africa, Part II. London: International African Institute.

12:Skinner E-4,5 (1955-1957) 1962
FA28 Mossi FA28

113

McKiernan, Gerald
1954 The Narrative and Journal of Gerald McKiernan in South West Africa 1874–1879 (P. Sheraton, ed.). Capetown: The Van Riebeeck Society.

Nadel, S. F.
1947 The Nuba. London: Oxford University Press.

Nicolai, H.
1952 "Problèmes du Kwango," Bulletin de la Société Belge d'Études Géographiques, Vol. 25, No. 2.

Nicolai, H. and Jacques, J.
1954 La Transformation du paysage Congolais par le Chemin de Fer, L'Exemple du B.C.K. Acad. Roy. Sci. Col. Brussels, Sect. des Sci. Natu. et Med. Mem. in 8, XXIV, L.

Nigeria (Federal Information Service)
— The Nigerian Farmer's Diary. Lagos, Nigeria. (Published yearly.)

Nigeria (Census Superintendant)
1953 Population Census of the Eastern Region of Nigeria, 1953. Bulletin No. 4, Ogoja Province. Port Harcourt.

Northern Rhodesia
1956 "Geographical Distribution of Population." Mimeographed tables.

Northern Rhodesia (Forestry Department)
1954 Annual Report. Lusaka: Government Printer.

Norton, W. A.
1919 "The South-West Protectorate and its Native Population," The South African Journal of Science, Vol. 16, pp. 452–65.

Nyirenda, A. A.
1957 "African Market Vendors in Lusaka with a Note on the Recent Boycott," The Rhodes-Livingstone Journal, No. 22.

Ormsby-Gore, W.
1925 Report of the East Africa Commission. London: H. M. S. O.

Oram, N. D.
1952 "The Food Supply of Kampala." Unpublished report made to the Department of Labor of the Uganda Protectorate.

Ottenberg, Phoebe Vestal
1958 "Marriage Relationships in the Double Descent System of the Afikpo Ibo of Southeastern Nigeria." Unpublished Ph. D. dissertation, Northwestern University.
1959 "The Changing Economic Position of Women among the Afikpo Ibo," in Continuity and Change in African Cultures (William R. Bascom and Melville J. Herskovits, eds.). Chicago: University of Chicago Press.

Ottenberg, Simon
1957 "The System of Authority of the Afikpo Ibo of Southeastern Nigeria." Unpublished Ph. D. dissertation, Northwestern University.
1958 "Ibo Oracles and Intergroup Relations," Southwestern Journal of Anthropology, Vol. 14, No. 3, pp. 295–317.

Palmer, H. R.
1908 "The Kano Chronicle," Journal of the Royal Anthropological Institute, Vol. 38, pp. 63–98.

Park, Mungo
1799 Travels in the Interior Districts of Africa. (Reissued in Everyman's Library, 1907).

12:Skinner E-4,5 (1955-1957) 1962
FA28 Mossi FA28

●113 PEDLAR, F. J.
1948 "A Study of Income and Expenditure in Northern Zaria," Africa, Vol. 18, pp. 259–70.

PEDLER, E.
1955 Economic Geography of West Africa. London: Longmans, Green.

POLANYI, KARL
1944 The Great Transformation. New York: Rinehart.
1947 "Our Obsolete Market Mentality," Commentary, Vol. 13, pp. 109–17, September.
1957 "The Economy as Instituted Process," in Trade and Market in the Early Empires (K. Polanyi, C. W. Arensberg, and H. W. Pearson, eds.). Chicago: The Free Press.

PRÉSIDENCE DU CONSEIL
1951 "Le Sahara des nomades" (map). L'economie pastorale saharienne. Paris: L'Institute des Études islamiques.

QUIGGIN, A. H.
1949 Trade Routes, Trade and Currency in East Africa. Livingstone: Rhodes-Livingstone Museum.

REDFIELD, ROBERT
1956 Peasant Society and Culture. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.

REINING, CONRAD C.
1959 "The Role of Money in the Zande Economy," American Anthropologist, Vol. 61, No. 1, pp. 39–43.

RICHARDS, AUDREY
1939 Land, Labor, and Diet in Northern Rhodesia. London: International Institute of African Languages and Cultures.
1951 "The Bemba of North-Eastern Rhodesia," in Seven Tribes of British Central Africa (E. Colson and M. Gluckman, eds.). Manchester: University of Manchester Press.

RICHARDSON, E. M.
1954 "Preliminary Account of the Standard of Living of Africans on the Copper Belt, Northern Rhodesia." Unpublished manuscript in the Rhodes-Livingstone Institute.

ROBINSON, JOAN
1954 "The Impossibility of Competition," in Monopoly and Competition and Their Regulation (E. H. Chamberlin, ed.). London: Macmillan.

ROPER, J. I.
1958 Labour Problems in West Africa. London: Penguin Books.

ROUCH, JEAN
1956 "Migration au Ghana," Journal de la Société des Africanistes, Tome 26, Fasc. I-II. Paris: Musée de l'Homme.

SAUGNIER, M.
1792 Relations de Plusieurs Voyages à la Côte d'Afrique, à Maroc, au Sénégal, à Gorée, à Galam, etc. London: G. G. J. & J. Robinson.

SCUDDER, T.
1961 Before Kariba: The Human Geography of the Gwembe Valley. Manchester: Manchester University Press.

SELIGMAN, C. G. AND SELIGMAN, B. Z.
1932 Pagan Tribes of the Nilotic Sudan. London: G. Routledge and Son, Ltd.

SHORERL, R. (ed.)
Ca. 1821–25 The World in Miniature. Africa. London: R. Ackermann.

12:Skinner E-4,5 (1955-1957) 1962
FA28 Mossi FA28

113

SIERRA LEONE
1959 Report for the Year 1957. London: H. M. S. O.

SILVERMAN, S. F.
1959 "Some Correlates of the Cyclical Market," in Intermediate Societies, Social Mobility and Communication. Seattle: American Ethnological Society.

SKINNER, ELLIOT P.
— "Conflict and Flexibility in Succession to Political Office among the Mossi." Unpublished.

SMITH, E. W. AND DALE, A. M.
1920 The Ila-Speaking Peoples of Northern Rhodesia. London: Macmillan & Co.

SMITH, M. G.
1952 "A Study of Hausa Domestic Economics in Northern Zaria," Africa, Vol. 22, pp. 333–47.
1955 The Economy of Hausa Communities of Zaria. Colonial Research Studies No. 16 London: H. M. S. O.
1957a "The Social Functions and Meaning of Hausa Praise-singing," Africa, Vol. 27, pp. 26–45.
1957b "Cooperation in Hausa Society," Information, UNESCO, No. 11, pp. 1–20.

SMITH, MARY
1954 Baba of Karo. London: Faber.

STEINER, FRANZ
1954 "Notes on Comparative Economics," British Journal of Sociology, Vol. 5, pp. 118–29.

STIGAND, C. H.
1923 Equatoria: The Lado Enclave. London: Constable & Co., Ltd.

STREITWOLF, K.
1911 Der Captivizipfel. Berlin: W. Susserott.

STUTLEY, PETER
1959 "Report on a Visit to African Urban Markets in Northern Rhodesia." Unpublished.

TALBOT, P.
1926 The Peoples of Southern Nigeria. London: Oxford University Press.

TAUXIER, LOUIS
1912 Le Noir du Soudan. Paris: Emile Larose.
1917 Le Noir du Yatenga. Paris: Emile Larose.
1924 Nègres Gouro et Gagou. Paris: P. Geuthner.

TESSMAN, G.
1913 Die Pangwe. Berlin: E. Wasmuth.

THOMAS, N. W.
1916 Anthropological Report on Sierra Leone, Part I, Law and Custom. London: Harrison and Sons.

THOMPSON, B. P.
1954 Two Studies in African Nutrition. Lusaka: Rhodes-Livingstone Museum.

THOMPSON, J.
1899 "To Lake Bangweolo and the Unexplored Region of British Central Africa," The Geographical Journal, Vol. 1, No. 2.

THOMSON, J. MOFFAT
1950 Report on the Native Fishing Industry. Livingstone: Rhodes-Livingstone Museum.

THURNWALD, RICHARD
1932 Economics in Primitive Communities. London: Oxford University Press.

12:Skinner E-4,5 (1955-1957) 1962
FA28 Mossi FA28

•113 TONJES, H.
N.D. Wörterbuch der Ovambosprache. Lehrbücher des Seminars für Orientalische Sprachen 25. Berlin: G. Reimer.

TORDAY, E.
1925 On the Trail of the Bushongo. London: Seeley, Service & Co., Ltd.

TRAUWBORST, A. A.
1956 "Vee als Voorwerp van Rijkdom in Oost-Afrika." Unpublished Ph. D. thesis, University of Leiden. (Resume in Zaïre, May, 1956.)

TURNER, V. W.
1955 "Money Economy among the Mwinilunga Ndembu," Rhodes-Livingstone Journal, Vol. 18, pp. 19–25.
1957 Schism and Continuity in an African Society. Manchester: Manchester University Press.

UGANDA PROTECTORATE
1947 Annual Report of the Department of Agriculture.
1950 Annual Report of the Department of Agriculture.
1953 The Pattern of Income and Expenditure and Consumption of African Unskilled Laborers in Kampala, September 1953.

UNION MINIÈRE
1956 Union Minière du Haut Katanga, 1906–1956. Brussels.

UNITED NATIONS
1954 Enlargement of the Exchange Economy in Tropical Africa. New York: UN, Department of Economic Affairs. (E/2557 ST/ECA/23. Sales No.: 1954, II.C.4).

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, FOREIGN AGRICULTURAL SERVICE
1959 Notes on the Agricultural Economies of the Countries of Africa: Central and Western Africa. M-64, September 1959.

VAN DEN PLAS, A.
1947 La Température au Congo Belge. Pub. Minis. Colon., pp. 33–38.

VANSINA, JAN
1954 "Les Valeurs Culturelles des Bushong," Zaïre, No. 9, pp. 900–910, November.
1955 "Initiation Rituals of the Bushong," Africa, Vol. 25, pp. 138–52.
1956 "Migration dans la Province du Kasai," Zaïre, pp. 69–85.
1957 "L'État Kuba dans le cadre des institutions politiques Africaines," Zaïre, Vol. 11, pt. 1, pp. 485–92.

VEDDER, HEINRICH
1938 South West Africa in Early Times. London: Oxford University Press.

VERGER, P. AND BASTIDE, R.
1958 "Le Leseau des marchés Nago (Dahomey)," in Proceedings of the N.I.S.E.R. Conference, Ibadan, Nigeria.

VIEBE, G.
1903 "Die Ovaherero," Rechtsverhältnisse von Eingeborenen Völkern (S. R. Steinmetz, ed.). Berlin: G. Fischer.

VIEILLARD, G.
1939 Notes sur les coutumes des Peuls au Fouta Djallon. Paris: Larose.

VON FRANÇOIS, HUGO
1896 Nama und Damara. Magdeburg: G. Baensch.

VON ZASTROW, B.
1930 "Die Herero," in Der Eingeborenenrecht (E. Schultz-Ewerth and L. Adam, eds.), Vol. 2, pp. 213–68. Stuttgart: Strecker und Schröder.

12:Skinner E-4,5 (1955-1957) 1962
FA28 Mossi FA28

113

WAGNER, GÜNTHER
1957 A Study of Okahandja District (South West Africa). (Oswin Kohler, ed.) Ethnological Publications No. 38. Pretoria: Union of South Africa.

WALLER, H. (ed.)
1874 The Last Journals of David Livingstone. London: J. Murray.

WATSON, BLAIR, AND JOHNSTON, HENRY HAMILTON
1895 Unpublished correspondence in District Notebooks at Mporokoso.

WATSON, WILLIAM
1958 Tribal Cohesion in a Money Economy. Manchester: Manchester University Press.

WHITE, C. M. N.
1959 "A Preliminary Survey of Luvale Rural Economy," Rhodes-Livingstone Papers, No. 29.

WILSON, GODFREY
1942 An Essay on the Economics of Detribalization in Northern Rhodesia. Livingstone: Rhodes-Livingstone Institute.

WILSON, J. L. BOYD
1952 A Cooperative Digest. Lusaka: Government Printer.

WITTFOGEL, CARL
1957 Oriental Despotism, A Comparative Study of Total Power. New Haven: Yale University Press.

WOODWARD, E.
1902 Precis of Information Concerning Uganda Protectorate. London: H. M. S. O.

WRIGLEY, C. C.
1959 "Agrarian Structure in Buganda." Report of the Second Joint Conference on Research in the Social Sciences in East and Central Africa.

WYNHAM, H. A.
1935 The Atlantic and Slavery. London: Oxford University Press.

ZAHAN, D.
1954 "Notes sur les Marchés Mossi du Yatenga," Africa, Vol. 24, No. 4.

648 to open talks with Voulet. This poor political judgment cost him his crown. Binger had been preceded in Ouagadougou by Dr. Krause, who in 1885 was the first European allowed to enter the capital; Von François, coming from German Togoland in 1887, was stopped at the first Mossi village. As already mentioned, Binger, not without difficulty, managed to reach Ouagadougou in 1888. He stayed there for some time, longer than he had wished, and it was by virtue of his admirable energy that he was able to resume his journey toward the south. In 1890 Dr. Crozat was received for the first time by the Moro Naba, but he had to leave Ouagadougou speedily. The following year Monteil did not even manage to reach the capital. He was stopped a few kilometers from it and forced to depart abruptly. The mulatto Fergusson, in the service of the British, reached Ouagadougou by way of Tenkodogo, Nyaogo, and Kombisgri. Von Carnap, a German, came from Sansané-Mango in 1897 and visited Tenkodogo and Koupéla.

114 Such are, in brief outline, the verified contacts of the Mossi with Europeans. Were they already known by John II of Portugal, and even by John III, in the sixteenth century? Did they come from far to the east, from Sokoto, Bornu, perhaps even from Wadai? There are so many questions that seem quite mysterious to us in the present state of our knowledge of these peoples of the bend of the Niger, who lack written traditions. Lt. Marc discusses at great length the various opinions on this subject in his book, Au pays des Mossi /In Mossi Country/, chapters 1 and 7. Delafosse presents his own opinion in his work on Upper Senegal and Niger (especially in volume 2). We shall limit this account to the traditions gathered from the natives themselves.

124 Our working method, indeed, has been to question as many natives as possible and to gather their statements on all matters which seemed of interest. We have avoided any "interpretation" of the facts. We have allowed the natives to talk, to tell their story, to describe /3/ their customs, to explain the phenomena of nature and of life as they understand them. Our role was limited to a day-to-day record of what we heard, to the inducement of explanations, to the arrangement of these notes. Of course, our questions sometimes remained unanswered. We shall leave them unanswered here. Having no plan to defend, we hope to have been sufficiently objective.

114 We shall, nevertheless, be happy if this modest work makes a small contribution to the study of regional history, so heavily stressed

114 today; if it provides ethnography with new materials; if it makes the native better known to missionaries, administrators, officers, colonists, and merchants, and thus better understood; and if cordial relations between the native and ourselves are thereby facilitated. Railroads will soon open up and profoundly modify the country. While there is still time, let us hasten to record the mentality of this people in its primitive form. We were able to gather data which we believe reflect the truth quite closely, thanks to the circumstances of our stay in Mossi country: ten consecutive years among its people, of which seven were spent in Koupéla; a knowledge of the language sufficient to maintain a running conversation on any subject whatever with the natives; and the close contact into which our ministry brought us with the village inhabitants. We shall be the first to acknowledge, however, that errors may have crept in here and there. It is very difficult to obtain a precise piece of information, and several natives questioned on the same subject often gave different answers. We were forced to make choices, and although we always tended to adopt the story which appeared to offer the greatest number of safeguards, we may have been wrong at times.

It must not be forgotten that our goal is not to provide a complete record of Mossi manners and customs. This was not possible, it would have been onerous, and we did not feel that it was necessary in order to present what we consider to be a generally accurate over-all picture of these people. Truthfulness compels us to point out that these materials were gathered for the most part in the province of Koupéla and, therefore, bear the impress of that locality. Our fellow-workers in Ouagadougou were kind enough to provide us with some information, but we were unable to obtain any data on the Yatenga region. God permitting, we shall round out these notes in a more comprehensive work.

101 Before we broach our subject, one remark is in order. It has be-
104 come usual to speak of the Mossi, of a Mossi, of the Mossi language, as though the word did not vary. We shall follow this custom and always write "Mossi" in the singular and in the plural, although the true name of this people is Moara, plural Mosé. Likewise, we have spelled geographical names in accordance with the practice of the Administration, so as to avoid the appearance of wishing to reform everything.

000 May we thank here all those from far and near who have helped us with this work, and especially those who have contributed the interesting photographs that illustrate it.

114
171
174

1. Actually, these "Arab chroniclers" is simply Es-Sadi, the author of Tarikh-es-Soudan /History of Sudan/, who wrote as late as the seventeenth century. As a matter of fact, it was the Portuguese — writer, the great historian and geographer, Jean de Barros, author of l'Asia (1552-53), who was the first to reveal the existence of the Mossi in the sixteenth century. Léon, the African, did not know of them, nor did the Arab geographers and historians of the Middle Ages. Let us add that one should verify exactly in the area whether the Mossah resemble the Mossi other than by name. The matter has become relatively easy since the French occupation of the Cameroons.

171 Captain Lambert adds in a note:
174 "A new question arises here: can one consider the Mossi as being autochthonous to Bornu, or should their long stay in that region be considered as a step in the great migratory movement that, in successive phases, has brought them to the heart of the Niger estuary?

"In the present state of our knowledge, it would be unwise to take a firm position. We shall merely show that the feudal system that characterizes the political constitution of the Mossi can be compared to the system prevalent in Abyssinia. The hierarchical set-up seems to be identical in certain respects; leaders are appointed under analogous conditions, and the election of the Negus is accompanied by a period of anarchy which we also find here and which seems to go back to ancient traditions.

174 "It may well be that this goes beyond pure coincidence. While 197 we were in the process of editing a small dictionary of the Mossi language, we took the trouble to find out whether the dialects spoken in Abyssinia were likely to give us some clues on this point. We must admit, however, that the vocabularies of the Galla, Ahmaris /sic/, and Tigré languages that we consulted have not provided us /3/ with convincing arguments. But it is a proven fact today that, from the viewpoint of ethnographic research, text similarities do not mean very much, and idioms that are not fixed by writing may, within a few centuries, become deformed to the extent of being unrecognizable. While the value of grammatical comparisons is much more important, we have unfortunately had neither the time nor the means to make use of this method. We will, therefore, merely indicate this point of view which, in our opinion, could lead to fruitful observations. On the other hand, missionaries have claimed that the Mossi traditionally would have preserved the symbolic notion of the Christian cross, a fact we have been unable to verify and which, without being impossible a priori, seems unlikely."

After this parenthesis about the distant origins of the Mossi, Captain Lambert continues:

"It is indeed highly probable, and here again, lacking written documents, we have only oral traditions to base our opinions on, that the Mossi people, split up by the impact of a Moslem invasion from the east, must have, through successive waves and losing ground in the opposite direction, spread further toward the west, so that the Mossi-bé (1), who still form several agglomerations in the western part of Sokoto and even in the Dounzou circle and who also show striking analogies with the Mossi proper, can also be used as a reference. (Captain Lambert adds in a note: "Among the Mossi-bé we find the circumflex accent which would complete the ethnic tatooing of the Mossi as it is today. This mark rightly belongs to the natives of the left bank of the Niger river up to the angle formed by the Dollol-Maouri.") These agglomerations indicate, in a very approximate fashion, the location of the Mossi empire at the historical period that evidently marks its apogee of power; toward 1350, as we saw /4/ in the Tarikh, Timbuktu was conquered by the sultan of Mossi."

1. Mossi-bé is simply the plural of the word Mossi in Peuhle /Peul/ language.

The incident to which Captain Lambert refers here is the conquest of Timbuktu by the Mossi (in 1333 exactly, according to the most advanced calculations) (1), which is mentioned by Es-Sadi in

114
194

1. See the book by Lieutenant Marc, Le Pays Mossi /The Land of the Mossi/, pp. 136-138. The author sets the date of the fall of Timbuktu to the Mossi at 1333 or 1334. Delafosse, in his book Haut-Sénegal-Niger /Upper Senegal and Niger/, took the date of 1333. Binger (op. cit. Vol. I, pp. 481, 482) gives the date of 1329 according to the Tarikh, but assumes it to be wrong and that it was in 1326 that the Mossi, who he says were then part of the kingdom of Mali, captured Timbuktu for the sake of and by the order of the Mali kings. We know now that this assumption is false, that the Mossi were never under the domination of Mali, and that they sacked Timbuktu on their own behalf in 1333. Besides, the Malinké recaptured Timbuktu fairly soon thereafter and held it until 1433, at which time the leader Targui Akil took possession. The Mossi expedition against Timbuktu was, everything considered, nothing more than a raid, perfectly executed, but without any follow-up.

the Tarikh-es-Soudan /History of Sudan/; but one cannot conclude, as Captain Lambert does, that in the fourteenth century the Mossi were still living on the east bank of the Niger River, in what today is Djerma, and that they had not yet reached, at that time, the Mossi of today, nor even the Dagomba, and that it was from Djerma that they conducted their triumphant raid on Timbuktu. If the Mossi really did come from Bornu and ended up in Dagomba, and, as is only natural, spread on to Haoussa and Djerma (2), they did so in the very

2. As a matter of fact, one can explain the Mossi colonies of Sokoto as having come from the regions of Ouagadougou, Yatenga, or Fada N'Gourma at a relatively recent date, the thirteenth, fourteenth, or fifteenth centuries.

914 distant past, since we must place Rawa, the first conqueror of
174 Ouagadougou and Ouahigouya (see further on), in the twelfth century A.D., and his parents came from Dagomba where it is clear the Mossi have lived for some time. The crossing of Haoussa and Djerma by the forefathers of the Dagomba Mossi takes us back to a period that obviously cannot be precisely established, but which is definitely earlier than the fourteenth century (when the Mossi conquered Timbuktu), and one must recognize, contrary to Captain Lambert's opinion, that the Mossi who took Timbuktu came from the south (probably from Ouahigouya) and not from the east (the Say region). We would like to point out /5/ also that they were a great deal closer to Timbuktu in Ouahigouya than in Say. Once this point has been cleared up and the ensuing mistakes corrected, the plausibility of the discovery of the road followed by the Mossi who came from Bornu (if they came from there), which was re-traced by Captain Lambert, is acceptable.

These observations also apply to the continuation of Captain Lambert's report. He says that the wars waged by the second Songhaï empire against the Mossi (sixteenth century) forced the latter to leave the Djerma country to go southwest toward Dagomba. Obviously, all of this is quite inaccurate, but, without accepting Captain Lambert's cause for the emigration and his establishing it further in the past, we can accept the route he traces.

174 "This movement," says Captain Lambert, speaking of the march from Djerma to Dagomba, "took place in a southerly direction, and the Mossi, after having followed the Niger River, crossed it at a point located between Say and Ilo, but much closer to Ilo.

[301] "North of Ilo, the custom of shaving the heads of the chieftains'
[302] wives still persists. These women also wear metal leggings (1), particularly characteristic of the Mossi peoples and sometimes encountered among peoples who have been in contact with them.

[556] 1. Captain Lambert undoubtedly is referring to the beautiful copper leggings, about 20 centimeters high, worn by the rich Mossi women.

"From this point, the migration, leaving the Bariba country on the left (2), went in a straight line through Gourma and the Pama region

174 Captain Lambert adds in a note: "According to Colonel M.-P. Northcott, the founder of the Gambakha dynasty was called Tosogo; [174] but the information that he provides about him seems hardly in agreement with the tradition we are relying upon here." (See Report on the Northern Territories of the Gold-Coast, London, 1890).

Captain Lambert continues as follows:

"The creation of the actual Mossi empire came later; it is nevertheless safe to assert that from that period on, some of the new inhabitants of Mampoursi undertook to open a passage toward the north and achieved it in two different ways. One group, after leaving Gambakha, pushed the Boussanga back into the region they occupy today and reached Béloussa country where they spread toward the west and north, occupying a vast stretch of land which is today almost exclusively inhabited by the Mossi. The other group, blazing a path in Nankana country, went north of Tiébélé and pushed the Boussanga back from the opposite side, thus crushing them in a vice, so to speak, and spread out in the country circumscribed by the Red Volta, toward Ouagadougou.

"One has only to glance at a map of the Mossi country to recognize the direction of these two parallel movements which came together north of the present-day Boussangsé, an almost uninhabited region at the time of the great Mossi migration. It was there that the autochthonous Boussanga, who were then occupying the whole Tenkodogo country, were forced to find refuge and have since been just existing, hostile to any fusion with the invader."

173 Captain Lambert then goes on to the legend of the origins of the true Mossi empire:

"A naba of the Gambakha (the Gambakha, as we have seen, were directly descended from the leader who had led the great immigration to the Mampoursi River), having reached the end of his life without an heir, believed this fact to be a fulfillment of destiny. Nothing in this world is permanent, and doubtless his glorious dynasty had to make way for a new line of leaders. He was at least resigned to this, but his lonely old age was what saddened him above all else. He therefore implored the spirits to give him a child, pronouncing the solemn vow that he would dedicate it to virginity, whether it be a boy or girl. As if by a miracle, a girl was born to him at once. He called her Pogotoenga (woman of the tree) (1), considering her, therefore, from 174 country of Gambaga?" he asks (op. cit., p. 134). "It is rather difficult to /10/ speak authoritatively on this subject: probably from the central African Sudan, the region of the Chad. All Mossi traditions are unanimous in placing their country of origin very far in the east . . ."

Lieutenant Marc had already said on page 130, "Local traditions have it that the Mossi come from very far in the east. Very long ago, they occupied a country located beyond the Niger River, whose capital was called Aliaman. This country is presently inhabited by the Songhaï. Then the Mossi came to live in Dagomba, defeated its inhabitants, and the leader of the Mossi settled in Gambaga." (1)

173
114

1. There follows the legend of the daughter of the king of Gambakha. She is wrongly called Ouidiraogo, "stallion," as in Dr. Ruelle's version. Lieutenant Marc goes on to make another mistake by saying that Ouidiraogo means "hoof" (instead of male horse). Zoungourana (whom Lieutenant Marc calls Zoungourouma or Zougourouma) is presented here, as he was by Dr. Ruelle, as the second husband of the daughter of the king of Gambakha and as a Boussansé king. In Lieutenant Marc's version, he "waged war against his father-in-law and conquered the whole country from Gambaga to Koupéla." Then "Zougourouma had three sons: Séré, Oubri, and Couda. The first became naba of Boussouma; the second, Naba Oubri, conquered the country of Ouagadougou, set up his capital there, and took possession of Yatenga. Naba Oubri is considered by the Mossi as the first of the Moro-naba and founder of the present dynasty. His successors were his brother Couda, and then his son Nigamenda."

174 In this tradition reported by Lieutenant Marc, there is obviously an element of Moslem imaginations; Aliaman probably designates

174 Yemen. But the indication that this country is presently inhabited by the Songhay /sic/ certainly points to Djerma or Zaberma, slightly east of the Niger River in the Say and Dosso region. By dissociating the Moslem legend (undoubtedly created by some Yarse Moslem of the Mossi) from the rest of the tale, one still comes back to the temporary and distant occupation of Djerma by the ancestors of the Mossi.

174 114 Delafosse, on the other hand, contrary to Dr. Ruelle, Captain Lambert, and Lieutenant Marc, although, like the others, he has the Mossi come from Dagomba to their present habitat (see Haut-Sénégal-Niger /Upper Senegal and Niger/, Vol. I, pp. 305-310), seems disinclined to accept the idea of an eastern origin. He says (page 310, in a note), "Lieutenant Marc seems to want to attribute an eastern 174 origin to the Mossi. To strengthen his hypothesis, he says that the 171 organization of the court of the Morho nâba (emperors of the Mossi) 644 is unique in western Africa, while there are /11/ equivalents in 114 Haoussa, Bornu, etc. I should like to point out that this argument is of little value, precisely because, contrary to Lieutenant Marc's theory, one finds in all ancient states of western Africa (Ghana, Mali, Tekrour, Gao, Dahomey, Benin, etc.) an organization absolutely analogous to that of the Mossi court (see part IV of this work and compare with the reports of Arab geographers and early European 174 travelers)." Of course I agree with Delafosse in not finding Lieutenant 114 Marc's argument very penetrating (1), but Ruelle, Lambert, and

1. Here is the argument as developed by Lieutenant Marc (op. cit., p. 134, 135):

"The feudal organization of the Mossi country, the court of the Moro-Naba, its pages, and its eunuchs, are all unique in western Africa. On the other hand, the black monarchs, as they are known in central Africa, seem to live in a setting that greatly resembles the one in which the Moro-Naba lives. The sultans of Zinder, Bornu, and Wadai have also a court, eunuchs, and pages. The little we know about the organization of their empires seems rather similar to what we have seen among the Mossi. But our documentation on this matter is not extensive enough to enable us to attempt a comparative study."

174
914

Marc do not base themselves exclusively on this argument. They also use a tradition of the Mossi themselves, and it would doubtless be unwise to reject it without examining it further. An argument that could be cited in favor of a very ancient occupation of Djerma by the ancestors of the Mossi is Binger's following remark: "The Mossi must have remained in contact with the Touareg /Tuareg/ for a fairly long time (2) ... since they partially adopted their dress and use, as they do, the cross-handled [poignée en croix] saber."

[171 441]

2. In this quotation, I have omitted the word "after," since Binger assumes that the Mossi, after taking Timbuktu in 1326 by order of the Mali, remained there until 1433, having, therefore, one century of contact with the Touareg. In reality, the Mossi stayed in Timbuktu only a very short time, and this raid could not have given them a prolonged contact with the Touareg, from whom they were separated before the fall of Timbuktu, and again as soon as they left the town, by the entire Songhaï country stretching along the banks of the Niger River. On the contrary, if they had formerly occupied Djerma, before the Djermabé or the Songhaï, one can easily understand this contact with the Touareg as well as the existence of the sword with the short crutch-handle /poignée en croix (Binger wrongly calls this straight sword a saber). In addition, when Binger speaks of the Targui /Tuareg/ dress, adopted in part by the Mossi, he doubtless thinks of the lithâm (or face veil) which was then worn by the Mossi horsemen. At the present time, they are no longer worn, and I have never seen them among the Mossi, where I lived 1908-1909.

[291]

do, the crutch-handled /poignée en croix/ saber."

Actually, we must admit that we know nothing certain about the Mossi outside of Dagomba. This is what I /12/ clearly stated in my Noir du Yatenga /Blacks of Yatenga/ (1917) (1). The move into

1. See pp. 57 and 58.

Djerma is conjectural, and the question concerning the Mossah would have to be settled by an inquiry made in the Cameroons. At one time I was tempted to connect the Mossi with the races of the south, the Agni-Achanti /Ashanti/, and it seems certain that close relationships exist (2) between the numerical vocabularies of the Voltaic

[171]

2. See Appendix No. I. In addition, a woman called Aoura-Poko plays as important a part in the Baoulé historic tradition as in the Mossi historic tradition. And, although the word for woman is oba, eba, bla in Achanti, Abron, and Baoulé, the Baoulé heroine is called Poko, like Poko (woman) or Pokotoéga (woman of the baobab) of the Mossi tradition.

group and the Agni-Achanti group. But can one base a linguistic comparison on vocabulary alone? It would also have to be proven, grammatically speaking, that the Voltaic linguistic group is very close to the Agni-Achanti group. (3) And this has not yet been done.

3. Delafosse says that there is no special relation between these two groups from a grammatical viewpoint. In a more general manner, Delafosse would now like to believe, as far as Mossi origins are concerned, that Mossi residence in their present country goes back far before the eleventh century A. D. Apparently only a band of pillagers and happy warriors, a princely dynasty came from Gambakha in the eleventh century to found small kingdoms in a country which had already been colonized by the Mossi. However, there is a drawback to this opinion: the existence among the Mossi of an autochthonous people (Nioniossé or Foulsé /Fulse/) still extant, who are far from having, always and everywhere, merged with the Mossi. According to my observations made in the area (I spent three years in Yatenga, from 1913 to 1916), there are still more Nioniossé than Mossi in Yatenga, 100,000 as against 70,000 (see my Noir du Yatenga, pages 665 and 666). The existence of this earlier people proves that the Mossi colonization is a relatively recent one. Also, the Mossi could not have penetrated and survived in an already inhabited region in any way other than by forming small, conquering military monarchies. I think therefore, that the Mossi came, with their chiefs, from Dagomba, and that they didn't reach the present Mossi country until ...

174
114

[563]

But we are coming back to the chronological question which we will deal with later on.

174 For the moment, then, we are still reduced to dealing with hypotheses insofar as the origins of the Mossi are concerned. We know that the Mossi come from Dagomba and that they probably entered the country as conquerors. But where did they come from then? From the north-east? From the south? From the east? We cannot yet answer with certainty, just as we cannot for so many other historical, philosophical, and scientific questions, alas!

Grammatici certant et adhuc sub judice lis est.

174 173 Kaogo	1803-1806	"	1803-1306
Tougouri	1806-1822	"	1806-1822
Kom	1822-1825	"	1822-1825
Ragongo	1825-1831	"	1825-1831
Ridimba	1831	"	1831
Diogoré	1831-1834	"	1831-1834
Totébalobo	1834-1850	"	1834-1850
Yemdé	1850-1877	"	1850-1877
Sanoum	1877-1879	"	1877-1879
Noboga	1879-1884	"	1879-1884
Pigo II	1884-1885	"	1884-1885
Baogo	1885-1895	"	1885-1894
Bagaré	1895-1899	"	1894-1899
Liguidi	1899-1902	"	1899-1902
Koboga	since 1902	"	1902-1914

174 [174] First of all, we can note that there is, I think, a slight confusion in the beginning /18/ of Delafosse's chronology. As a matter of fact, he counts (Vol. I, page 306) 40 years per generation, and, on the other hand (Vol. II, page 126), he places Oubri approximately from 1050 to 1090. But Oubri was the son of Zoungourana, himself the son of Ouidiraogo, himself the son of the princess Yennenga, himself the son of Nédéga, the king who ruled in Dagomba. There are, then, four generations from Nédéga to Oubri, which must make 160 years, according to Delafosse's calculations, and, if Oubri is to be placed between 1050 and 1090, that would put his great-great-grandfather Nédéga at about 890, that is, at the end of the ninth century A. D., or at least in 910, that is, at the beginning of the tenth century (1).

1. I have already noted this in my Noir du Yatenga, p. 673 (Appendix No. IV).

In this last case, the approximate dates would be the following:

[173]

Nédéga.....about 910
Yennenga.....about 950
Ouidiraogo.....about 990
Zoungourana.....about 1030
Oubri..... between 1050 and 1090

174 Ouidiraogo, but one might hesitate between Rawa and Ouemtanango. If one chose the former, he would then have lived from 1200 to 1250 (which would indicate that my date of 1293 for this naba is too recent, and that Delafosse's date, the beginning of the eleventh century, is too early). If one chose Ouemtanango, the same would still apply: my date of 1333 for this naba would be a century too recent, and Delafosse's date would be some fifty years too early (1). In conclusion,

1. Delafosse places Ouemtanango at about 1170. One can deduce this from two passages of his Vol. II, pp. 126 and 139. In the last passage, he speaks of Ouemtanango himself and, in the first, of his father and uncles.

it is impossible for us to say exactly which naba was the first to wage war against the north, but, whether it was Rawa or Ouemtanango, it seems clear that since the beginning of the thirteenth century the Mossi were settled in their present territories, including Yatenga, and, therefore, we must conclude that they came there during the twelfth century. My 1917 Mossi chronology would, therefore, need some revision, since it brings the origins of Mossi history too close to our time. On the other hand, Delafosse's chronology also would seem to need some correction, since it exaggerates in the opposite direction. It would not be the first time that the truth should be found, as often happens, between two extreme opinions. /26/

Chapter 3

Mossi and Bambara

174 114 We know that the Bambara king, N'Golo, and the Mossi king, Kango, waged war against each other toward the end of the eighteenth century. Yatenga traditions preserve in detail the memory, embellished with somewhat burlesque variations, of the events that precipitated this war (see my Noir du Yatenga /Blacks of Yatenga/, 1917, pp. 88-91), but they say nothing of the war itself. Delafosse, in his

174 114 Haut-Sénégal-Niger /Upper Senegal and Niger/ (1912), starts out by relating, according to Bambara traditions, the same stories of the causes that brought about the war (1), but he does not say much about

1. Vol. II, pp. 143, 144.

the war itself. After speaking of Kango's cruel extermination of the Bambara auxiliaries whom he had formerly needed and who had been lent to him, Delafosse adds (2): "It took place about 1760: Ngolo

2. Page 144.

Diara, then emperor of Ségou, wanted to avenge his compatriots and waged war against Yatenga, but he was driven back by Kango. Later, following a kind of civil war that broke out in Ségou, the Dioula merchants of the town fled and took refuge in Yatenga. Ngolo asked Kango to send them back to him and, upon his refusal, led for the third time an expedition against the Ouahigouya empire. This expedition had no more success than the preceding one, and Ngolo died during it, followed in death shortly thereafter by his opponent (1787)."

Further on, Delafosse says (3): "Ngolo led two expeditions against /27/

3. Same work, Vol. II, pp. 289, 290 (chapter on the history of the Bambara of Ségou).

the Mossi of Yatenga, whose emperor, Kango, had cruelly put to death some Banmana /Bambara/ warriors, who had been previously put at his disposal by Denkoro or by Ton-Mansa. Driven back after his first expedition (about 1760), Ngolo later returned to Yatenga in order to get back from Kango some Dioula merchants who had fled Ségou following a kind of civil war and whom the Yatenga emperor refused to send home. It would seem that this second expedition was no more successful than the first; in any case, in the course of this campaign, Ngolo contracted a disease from which he died before he could return to his capital (1787)."

All this is very scanty, and we would know little more about it (1) were it not for a very curious passage by Mungo-Park, which no

174
114

1. Monteil, in his recent book, Bambara de Ségou et du Kaarta /Bambara of Ségou and Kaarta/ (1924), says nothing about these wars. He only alludes to them in a short note on page 76.

one has yet pointed out to my knowledge and which tells us of a very important event in this war: the capture of the town of Dienné by Kango, a feat of arms worthy of the ancient Mossi conquerors, Rawa, Ouemtanango, Nassodoba, etc., which assured a conclusive victory of the Mossi naba over the Bambara fama.

174 I have copied the following passage word for word from Mungo-Park (translation by the Abbé of Voisin, 1800, Vol. II, pp. 45 and 46):

"In the south of Jimbala is the Negro kingdom of Gotto (2) that [114]

2. Djimbala (which in Mandé means country of the great water, from gui, "water," ba, "great," and la, a suffix indicating the country or region) is the region north of Lake Débo. As for "Gotto," a name that Mungo-Park gives here to all the countries of the southeast and south (Mossi, Kong, Bondoukou, etc.), it is undoubtedly the word "Gottogo," the Sudanese and Mandé name for Bondoukou, which is given in error to everything southeast and south of Djimbala or Guimbala.

is said to be very large. In the past, it was divided into a large number of small states, governed by different chiefs whose continual wars incited neighboring countries to invade the land. One of these chiefs, called Moossie, was politic and shrewd enough to get all the others to declare war on the king of Bambarra /sic/, and to have himself unanimously named generalissimo. /28/ From the shores of Lake Debbie (1), on the upper Niger, Moossie sent a large number of

1. This refers to Lake Débo.

boats filled with provisions toward Yenné; and with his entire army

174 he entered into Bambarra. The inhabitants of Yenné saw him on the opposite shore of the Niger (2) before they had been told of his march.

2. Djenné is not right on the Niger nor on the Bani, but at a certain distance between the two rivers.

His flotilla joined him that same day, and, after having unloaded his provisions, he crossed the river with one part of his army and took Yenné by assault during the night. This exploit so frightened the Bambarra king that he asked for peace. He agreed to pay the victor an annual tribute of a certain number of slaves and to give back to the Gotto inhabitants all that had been taken away from them. (3)

[721 648]

3. This passage would indicate that the Dyoula of Gottogo (or Bondoukou), having some grievances against the Bambara of the Ségou region (assaulted peddlers, unpaid debts, etc.), went to the king of the Mossi to obtain justice, and that this might have been one of the causes of the war. There doubtless existed reciprocal grievances between Bambara and Mossi or between their natural allies.

Moussee /sic/ returned to Gotto in triumph, and he was proclaimed king. He gave his name to the capital."

As one can see, the important and valuable fact that must be extracted from this thick forest is the capture of Dienné by the king of the northern Mossi, the king of Yatenga (who at that time was Kango), during his struggles with the Bambara, that is, with Ngolo who was his contemporary. Because of his informants, who obviously did not inform him with absolute precision and thus made him commit many small errors or miscalculations, Mungo-Park embellished the true fact with imaginary details. First of all, there is the name of Kango, Moossie, Moussie /sic/, which is the name of the conqueror's country and not his own name. Then, the name of Gotto is given to the Mossi country, undoubtedly because of a confusion, either in the minds of the Blacks who informed Mungo-Park or in the mind of the great

174 ●114

174 traveler himself, between the people of Gotto who were mixed in this 114 affair and the Mossi of Yatenga who made the expedition. Finally, Naba Kango, although he brought great glory /29/ in the eighteenth century to the Mossi dynasty of Yatenga, obviously did not find, at the beginning of his reign, an absolute fragmentation of small countries which he would have gathered under single authority. He doubtless limited himself to restoring a kingdom that had formerly been powerful and centralized, and which he made so again through his personal prestige. In any case, he did not give his name to the Mossi (it is, on the contrary, the Mossi who, in Mungo-Park's description, give him his name), any more than to the capital which he indeed founded and which he called Ouahigouya. All these details are thus false or imaginary, but the principal fact remains and is very interesting. Mungo-Park arrived in Ségou just in time, in 1796, to [153] record it before the weak memories of the Mossi and Bambara Negroes would have condemned it to hopeless oblivion. /30/

Chapter 4

The Cult of the Sun Among the Mossi

794 Do the Mossi adore the sun? And is their great god Ouendé partly or wholly a sun god?

Binger was the first to state that the Mossi adored the sun. "They are fetishists," he says (1), "but they have a cult of the sun, which

1. Du Niger au golfe de Guinée
/From the Niger to the Gulf of Guinea/,
Vol. I, p. 492.

still today bears the same name as God; they call it Wouidi."

In turn, Lieutenant Desplagnes, in his Plateau Central Nigérien /Central Nigerian Plateau/ (pp. 275, 276) said in 1907:

"The Hougho-Ouango of Mossi (these priests live in Mossi in the villages of Boujema, Mani, Kondogho, Yolo, Tio) make sacrifices to the sun in order to bind it to the earth, morning and evening, at

794 Later, in 1917, in my book Noir du Yatenga /Blacks of Yatenga/, since the few attempts that I had made in Yatenga to find this cult of the sun had given no results, I wrote (page 277):

"The sun is called ouindigho or ouindigha in Mossi (tili in Bambara). The word has a certain relationship with Ouendé, and the word Ouendé seems to be part of the construction of the word ouindigho. In any case, the Mossi and the Foulsé of Yatenga make no sacrifices to the sun. I interrogated in vain several important people about the details given by Lieutenant Desplagnes, pages 275 and 276 of his work, Plateau Central Nigérien about a cult of the sun in Mossi. It is true that these details concern the religious society of the Ouango and the villages where the members of this society would be operating: this would apply to villages of the Residency of Kaya (such as, Mané, Boujéma, etc.). One could thus pursue the studies in Kaya. /32/ In any case, the cult of the sun is totally unknown in Yatenga."

In my conclusion, I denied that there was a cult of the sun among the Mossi of Yatenga, while I admitted that one might be able to find this cult in other parts of Mossi country, particularly in the Residency (today, the circle) of Kaya.

794 The question was at that point when Father Eugène Mangin published a study on the Mossi in Anthropos ("Les Mossi. Essai sur les us et coutumes du Soudan Occidental" /The Mossi, an Essay on the Usages and Customs of Western Sudan/, Vienna, 1916), a study in which the author, who lived for a long time in Ouagadougou among the central Mossi, brought most of his effort to bear on a study of the religious life of his charges. It may well be that Father Mangin's observations touch upon the question of sun worship in that country in a definitive manner, better than Binger and Desplagnes had done.

794 The Mossi, says Father Mangin, in their sacrifices to Ouendé, offer water for his rising and pour it to the east, and offer water for his setting and pour it to the west. In an argument, the weakest will also say: "God (Ouendé) is my witness that I have done you no harm, God [796] will give it back to you," and he will point to the sun. Thus, Ouendé, the principal god of the Mossi, is indeed a sun god, and indeed the Mossi worship, in him, the sun.

Does this mean that Ouendé cannot also be a god of the sky or of the atmosphere, as I maintained in my Noir du Yatenga? Certainly not, and indeed Father Mangin mentions that Ouendé commands

4: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1957
FA28 Mossi FA28

The village chiefs held their fiefs directly from the district chiefs, and were enfeoffed through the principle of primogeniture on the advice of district chiefs' ministers. They paid homage, and owed fealty, to their district chiefs, although part of their tribute always was sent to the Moro-naba. In the event of war they followed their district chief when he went to serve the Moro-naba. The village chiefs received presents from the heads of the families in the village and settled any local court cases in their villages. They did not have the right, however, either to put men into stocks or to have them executed. They were aided in the administration of the villages by the heads of families. 631 622

Almost every Mossi village had sections in which the nobles lived. As stated above, these people were the relatives or descendants of the district heads, and they lived in a semiparasitic condition upon the commoners in the village. Most of them owned horses and, in addition to furnishing the cavalry for the district chief's contingent during war, they raided and attacked caravans passing through the country. The nobles were subject to the control of the village chiefs, and it was not unusual for them to be under the jurisdiction of chiefs who were members of the commoner class. In such cases the district chiefs had a great deal of difficulty resolving the problems between their vassals and their kinsmen. The nobles could steal the wives and daughters of the commoners, but if a commoner tried to steal the wife of a noble he and the woman were both killed. Whenever a noble threatened to disrupt the life of a district he was secretly strangled by the district chief's men. 565 631

The above is a brief account of the origin and structure of the Mossi political system. Most of the myths regarding the origin of this system seem to suggest that here is a classic conquest state, but one neither founded by Caucasians nor extraordinarily influenced by them. The Mossi state is homogeneous in race, language, and culture, a feature not found in most of the other Sudanic states. This fact is not interesting in itself until we note that the Mossi share many cultural traits with the Voltaic peoples. Marc believes that this cultural homogeneity is the result of the Mossi invasion of the area during which they imposed their languages and customs on the indigenous populations. Apparently not believing the traditions about the Dagomba origin of the Mossi, he explains the fact that such non-Mossi groups as the Nankana, Wala, and Dagari speak Mossi dialects as proof that the Mossi were politically more powerful in ancient times, but "the feudal regime disappeared little by little.... The Mossi language was kept; [it is] the only actual witness of the ancient power of the Mossi" (author's translation).[5] We know, however, that the Mossi were still encroaching on the territories of their neighbors when the French arrived in 1896.[6] 631 692 174 114

Rattray believes that the inhabitants of Mamprussi, Dagomba, and Mossi territories are the same now as they were "centuries before the ancestors of those who are now their rulers appeared on the scene."[7] He states that

4: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1957
FA28 Mossi FA28

631 642 174 114 these conquerors even adopted the language and culture of the indigenous populations, but introduced an "administrative machinery" that welded scattered local groups into loose confederacies without affecting in any great degree the inner life of these groups.[8] Rattray's hypothesis appears to explain quite adequately the reasons for the cultural homogeneity of the Mossi and the other Voltaic peoples. It also conforms to what we know from recent historical times of the organizing and conquering abilities of such figures as Samory and El Hadj Omar. These men carved out veritable empires in this area in remarkably short periods. However, we need not accept Rattray's hypothesis that foreigners were the ones who instituted "administrative machinery" among the Mossi. It is highly possible that the Mossi state might have been the result of internal Voltaic development when one Dagomba lineage established its hegemony over scattered local people in this area. There is some evidence here that the Mossi state had many of the features of the widespread Negro pattern of political structure so common to the other Sudanic states, and this fits in very well with what Professor Greenberg reports about the basic African nature of these states.[9]

631 642 121 171 It is clear that the Mossi state was a complex entity and many persons cannot describe it without calling it feudal.[10] However, the question of feudalism itself is a vexing one, and many scholars limit the use of this term to describe the political system of medieval France and possibly Japan. In fact, not many people would admit the presence of feudal states in Africa although some, such as S. F. Nadel, who worked among the Nupe, call the Sudanic states feudal and talk about fiefs and vassalage. It is now generally agreed that feudalism, despite its other aspects, is basically a form of government. Stephenson gives the classic features of a feudal state as: (1) fief-holding with vassalage; (2) homage and fealty; (3) mutual obligations between lords and vassals; (4) military service from the vassals; (5) inheritance of fiefs by heirs of vassals, usually by primogeniture; (6) subinfeudation; (7) attendance at court; and (8) wardship and marriage arrangements by which fiefs could be held in trust for minors and, in the case of female heirs, husbands who can render homage for them.[11]

An examination of the Mossi political system in terms of the first six characteristics of feudalism shows that this system conforms very well to the specifications for a feudal system. The Mossi did not have an elaborate court structure on the European model and, since only mature males could inherit fiefs, no arrangements for wardships and marriages were necessary. Furthermore, I do not think that these two traits are necessary for feudalism, and they can be considered as cultural content that need not be present in all social processes with similar functions.

Mossi-like societies present a special problem to political theorists because of the importance of kinship in their political systems. Coulborn[12] strongly insists that "A feudal society . . . is based on contract. It is not

8: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1958
FA28 Mossi FA28

797 labor was abolished and the Mossi could do as they wished, mission school and church attendance declined, and the Mossi mothers even refused to attend the Catholic maternity clinics. During this entire period, the Moslems were propagating the ideas that recruitment for forced labor and other injustices would cease only when all the Mossi embraced Islam.

(3) Catholicism attempted to break down the Mossi social system during the period when their political system was rendered practially impotent. But while the Mossi could not forcibly oppose the effects of French policy on their political system, they effectively neutralized the church's attempts to disrupt their social system. In contrast to Catholicism, Islamic practices and tenets harmonized with many aspects of the Mossi social system, especially with regard to polygny and the status of women. Many Mossi converted to Islam in order to fulfill the prescriptions of pagan shamans, who linked conversion with the acquisition of children to continue the lineage. Christianity did not admit the existence of the tradtional supernatural forces, and evolved no techniques for dealing with the Mossi's belief in the efficacy of such forces. In the sphere of social mobility, Islam permitted the most illiterate emancipated serf to make a pilgrimage and return an honored El Hadj, while only the most brilliant scholar is able to become an official in the Catholic community.

(4) More of the young men who leave their homes to serve in the armed forces or spend long periods away as laborers return as Moslems than as Christians. There is, however, no evidence that the increased Islamization of the Mossi is due to the heavy seasonal migration of young men to Ghana and Ivory Coast.

(5) American Protestantism, although not associated with French administrative policy, was negatively received because its missionaries were Europeans (whites). Furthermore, the extremely intolerant Protestant attitude toward the traditional Mossi religion and the puritanical nature of their religion made their efforts at conversion highly unsuccessful.

(6) The increase of public schools is lessening the importance of Catholicism and the Catholic school as the only means of social mobility through education. The newly emancipated pagan and Moslem masses are forcing the Catholic-trained Mossi politicians to act in the interest of their constituents, even if at the expense of the missions and Catholicism. The Catholics have consecrated the first Mossi bishop and have installed him in his see, but the return of each plane-load of Mossi Hadjis from Mecca spreads Islam into the remotest villages.

NOTES

114 [1] This article is an expanded version of a paper read at a meeting of the American Anthropological Association in Chicago, 1957. The field work on which this analysis is based was conducted among the Mossi of Ouagadougou from November 1955 to January 1957, and was made [122] possible by a Fellowship from The Ford Foundation African Studies Program. Needless to say, all ideas contained herein are my own. During these months among the Mossi I lived both in the predominantly Moslem district of Nobéré, and in the district of Manga, which has a fairly

8: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1958
FA28 Mossi FA28

large Catholic population. I am indebted to Conrad Arensberg, Joseph Greenberg, Marvin Harris, and Ben Zimmermann for many helpful suggestions. 114

[2] Tauxier (1912:792) reports that when he visited Pirigui village, situated to the north of Ouagadougou, he was surprised to discover that almost half of the nobles were Moslems. It is highly probably that here, also, were the descendants of a son of Sagha who replaced a dissident chief.

[3] These figures are only approximate since many thousands of persons are unreported. Again, many persons listed as Moslems are pagans who have taken Moslem names for ritual purposes.

REFERENCES CITED

113

ANDERSON, JOHN NORMAN DARYMPLE
1954 Islamic law in Africa. London, Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

ANDRÉ, P. J.
1924 L'Islam Noir: Contribution à l'étude des confréries religieuses islamiques en Afrique Occidentale, suivie d'une étude sur l'Islam au Dahomey. Paris, Geuther.

ASSEMBLIES OF GOD MISSION
1934 Report of the Assemblies of God Mission to the Mossi, Upper Volta. Springfield, Missouri, Gospel Publishing House.

BOUNIOL, JOSEPH
1929 The White Fathers and their missions. London, Sands and Company.

CONSIDINE, JOHN JOSEPH
1954 Africa, world of new men. New York, Dodd, Mead.

COOKSEY, JOSEPH J., and ALEXANDER MCLEISH
1931 Religion and civilization in West Africa. London, World Dominion Press.

DELAFOSSE, MAURICE
1912 Haut-Sénégal-Niger. 3 vols. Paris, Emile Larose.

DELOBSON, DIM
1934 Les Secrets des Sorciers Noirs. Paris, Librairie Émile Nourry.

DUBOIS, FELIX
1896 Tombouctou la mysterieuse. Paris, Ernest Flammarion.

DUPONT, ANDRÉ
1949 La Rapide evolution des Africains dans la Haute Volta. Paris, Marche Coloniaux, 5 Annee, no. 163. (Janvier 1.)

GORER, GEOFFREY
1935 Africa dances. New York, A. A. Knopf.

GOUILLY, ALPHONSE
1952 L'Islam dans l'Afrique Occidentale Française. Paris, Larose.

GREENBERG, JOSEPH
1946 The influence of Islam on a Sudanese religion. New York, Monographs of the American Ethnological Society No. 10.

LE CHATELIER, A.
1899 L'Islam dans l'Afrique Occidentale. Paris, G. Steinheil.

MARTY, PAUL
1917 Études sur l'Islam au Sénégal. 2 vols. Paris, Leroux.

QUELLIEN, ALAIN
1910 La politique musulmane dans l'Afrique Occidentale Française. Paris, Larose.

SANDERS, RAYMOND
1953 Meet the Mossi. Springfeld, Missouri, Gospel Publishing House.

SOCQUET, MSGR.
1956 L'Église Catholic en Afrique Noire. Paris, Magazine de l'A.O.F. no. 15 (Aout).

TAUXIER, LOUIS
1912 Le Noir du Soudan. Paris, Émile Larose.

9:Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1960 FA28 Mossi FA28

with the Moro Naba and his chiefs. The Mossi commoner who became Minister of the Interior in the Mendes-France government received the treatment fitting to his rank from French officials in Africa, but he bowed humbly and paid homage to the Moro Naba when he visited Wagadougou. In return he still receives political support from the traditional Mossi hierarchy. Whether or not this man and the other Mossi politicians of commoner origin will continue to honor and respect the chiefs in order to obtain their support is not known. It is possible that this situation will change if the growing number of urban Mossi and some of their rural fellows attack the position of the chiefs. But for the foreseeable future it appears as though the traditional dynasty will remain in power, and may even extend its power at the expense of the other non-Mossi groups who are now members of the Voltaic Republic.

The apparent success of the ancient political dynasty of the Mossi people to adapt itself to the requirements of the modern world shows the ability of African institutions to adjust novelty with tradition. It confirms what the anthropologists have always known, that Africa was not a tabla rasa on which conquerors could easily impose their ideas and institutions. The cultures of Africa were meaningful to its peoples and when they could not be maintained, they were reinterpreted to meet new situations.[9] It is quite true that because of historical reasons the Mossi did not come into as intensive contact with Europeans as did their neighbors to the south, and that this is possibly why their institutions have persisted. However, the experience of Ghana should make us pause before accepting such a facile answer. A British type of Parliamentary system was imposed upon that country, but it is changing so rapidly that one wonders whether it should have been imposed in the first place. It is still too early to tell what the Ghanaian and other modern African governments will look like; but one might speculate that within the bounds set by the exigencies of the modern world, these governments may resemble the traditional African ones much more than those of their ephemeral conquerors.

NOTES AND REFERENCES

1. According to C. K. Meek, among the Jukun "The King's demise was and is kept a close secret, and is not, in fact revealed until some months afterwards, when the body is formally buried. Various reasons are assigned for this secrecy, such as that

9tSkinner E-5 (1955-1957)1960 FA28 Mossi FA28

113 the counsellors may have time to choose a successor, that bloody contests between 114 aspirants for the throne may be avoided, or that the royal slaves and wives may not run off." (A Sudanese Kingdom, C. K. Meek. London, 1931), p. 166. Among the Banyoro of Uganda, "When the King died, it was not made known for some days and only those in attendance knew that death had taken place, that, as they said, "Katuna," he "slept." (p. 21). And although there was some understanding as to who should be chief there was fighting between the different princes. "The fighting among princes might last only a few days while sometimes it would go on for weeks and even months." (p. 124) (The Bakitara of Banyoro. John Roscoe. Cambridge University Press, 1923). Among the BaVenda, "None of the people are informed of the death of the chief, but when some months have passed and the people begin to grow restless they are told that he has gone away; often a year or more used to elapse between the death of the chief and any recognition of it . . . It appears that during the interregnum any excitement or attempts at usurpation of power have time to work themselves out before the heir is installed; Everybody has a shrewd idea as to the true state of affairs, although no one dares to speak of it." The BaVenda, Hugh A. Stayt, London, 1931), p. 207.

113 2. "The Kingdom of Ankole in Uganda," by K. Oberg, pp. 157-158, in African Political Systems, edited by M. Fortes and E. E. Evans-Pritchard, Oxford Press, 1940.

3. "An Analysis of the Political Organization of the Mossi People" by Elliott P. Skinner, in Transactions of the New York Academy of Sciences, Ser. II, Vol. 19, No. 8, pp 740-720, June, 1957.

4. Copy of Telegram in the Archives of I.F.A.N. at Wagadougou, Voltaic Republic.

5. French West Africa. Virginia Thompson and Richard Adloff, Stanford University Press. 1958, pp. 223-224.

6. "Christianity and Islam Among the Mossi," Eliott P. Skinner in American Anthropologist, Vol. 60, No. 6, December, 1958, pp. 1102-1119.

7. Thompson and Adloff, op. cit. p. 177.

8. L'Afrique Française. Vol. 66, 1957, p. 21, Paris.

9. Man and His Works, Melville J. Herskovits, New York, 1950, p. 542 ff, and Joseph H. Greenberg, "The Influence of Islam on a Sudanese Religion," Monographs of the American Ethnological Society, Vol. X, 1946.

10:Hammond E-5 (1954-1956) 1964 FA28 Mossi FA28
Yatenga

position of the set in Mossi society. In the years immediately following initiation the members are much involved in group activities, e.g., the arrangement of social dances, courtship, and co-operation in work groups composed of male and female age-sets, and during this period joking is important. As the members attain adult status the groups tend to lose their structural integrity; their minor corporate functions dwindle and ultimately disappear as the responsibility of the young people to their kin groups increases. With this shift in emphasis, joking behavior also diminishes.

While it lasts, however, this type of joking likewise has a structural context characterized by the attributes already identified. Age-sets are structurally separate within the age-grade. Their relations are reciprocal: individual members co-operate in the arrangement of one another's sexual liaisons; they pool their labor and share the profits they earn as members of their co-operative work organizations; and young men often leave Yatenga as migrant laborers in groups organized on the basis of age-grade membership, thereby reinforcing many of the reciprocal ties established in the work groups. The ambivalence characteristic of the relationship is perhaps best explained as the rivalry of peers. Since there is no status hierarchy within a Mossi age-grade, the age-sets are structurally equivalent and independent.

Intervillage Joking

When intervillage joking is institutionalized it may involve all the members of each community. However, I believe it is particularly expected of their respective chiefs. In either case, the participants are separated by their differing political affiliations. The inhabitants of each village are expected to reciprocate in one another's defense, to be mutually hospitable, and to co-operate in the regulation of land tenure at their frontiers. Ambivalence derives from a history of past hostility, dating perhaps from an earlier period when competition for new land was keener and the expanding kingdom did not yet encompass all the villages now within its borders. Such villages are always structurally equivalent in status within the political system, and each is independent of the other.

Joking Between Ethnic Groups

The joking relationship which the Mossi maintain with the Gurunsi and the Samogho peoples, among others, appears to involve the same structural characteristics. However, I learned of this relationship only shortly before I left Yatenga, and a more certain statement concerning it must therefore await further research. It is certain that such joking occurs; I am unsure only of the number of other ethnic groups involved[8] and of the relevant details of their historical relations to the Mossi of Yatenga. The groups involved are again separate. There is an expectation that members of each group should extend hospitality and assistance to members of the other. As with villages whose inhabitants joke, the participants in this relationship are ambivalent in their attitudes; the present expectation of co-operation is coupled with a past

10:Hammond E-5 (1954-1956) 1964 FA28 Mossi FA28
Yatenga

ship itself and the contract of interlineage co-operation and solidarity which every marriage serves to establish or reinforce.[4]

Although this joking interchange is seen in its full implications when there is an immediate source of dissension between marriage partners, it may also occur in the absence of any specific difficulty. Then it is apparently indulged in simply because it is expected, and for the pleasure which the Mossi, like all people, derive from an occasion to exercise their wit. It is this relatively disinterested joking which has been most frequently described in the literature, and this may account for the failure of many scholars to perceive more fully the important social and psychological functions which joking may fulfill.

Conclusion

This paper has been written as a tentative step toward a reformulation of the various and disparate observations on joking contained in the anthropological literature. I have contended that an analysis of this literature indicates that wherever joking is institutionalized the structural relationship between the participants tends to be characterized by five significantly interrelated structural attributes: separation, reciprocity, ambivalence, equality, and independence. I have also indicated that such joking may serve as an adjustive mechanism by providing for the concurrent maintenance of communication, control, and the culturally harmless catharsis of potentially disruptive emotions.

A variety of forms of institutionalized joking found among the Mossi of Yatenga have been cited to illustrate these points. However, I suggest that the factors which cluster with this reliance on joking as an adjustive mechanism are not unique to the Mossi. Institutionalized joking reported for other parts of Africa appears to be structurally and processually similar.

NOTES

1. A shorter version of this paper was read at the annual meeting of the American Anthropological Association held in San Francisco in November, 1963. It is based on field research conducted among the Mossi from 1954 to 1956 with the assistance of a Ford Foundation Fellowship.

2. Marriage between the members of descent groups united by a joking alliance is regarded by the Mossi as highly desirable, apparently in recognition of the useful role of joking as an adjustive mechanism. Once such a marriage is contracted, however, Ego and his wife must take care that their joking insults are directed only at the younger kinsmen of the other and that the insulting remarks are personal. It would, for example, be acceptable for Ego to call his wife's younger sister a disreputable shrew but dangerous to call her a slave (a term of disrespect used frequently in joking between sibs). To refer to her as a slave would cast unflattering aspersions on her entire kin group, including her mother and father, with whom, in their new status as parents-in-law, Ego may no longer joke.

3. I believe that joking is also institutionalized between the Mossi and the Yarse, a highly acculturated ethnic minority of Mande origin who live throughout Yatenga. There is also joking between the Mossi and the indigenous blacksmith caste. Unfortunately my data on these two instances of joking are inadequate.

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

[p. vii]
[pp. iv–vi are blank]

PREFACE

THIS BOOK ATTEMPTS to contribute to our understanding of Mossi society, 114 about which relatively little is known even within the continent of Africa. [121]
Many of the data were collected in the Upper Volta Republic between November 1955 and January 1957, a period when the Voltaics were preparing for important political changes. I did most of my field work in the area formerly included within the kingdom of Ouagadougou. I stayed only one week in the Yatenga and paid but brief visits to Tenkodogo and the Boussouma region. Thus, my basic data hold chiefly for Ouagadougou. My 12 methods of research were the conventional anthropological ones: I recorded local oral histories, conducted personal interviews, attended court and important rituals, participated in the life of the people whenever possible, and collected genealogical and biographical data.

In addition, I read all the important documents I could find on the po- 127 litical history of the Mossi people in the files of the Institut Français d'Afrique Noire, in local administrative offices, and in the Archives of the Governor General of French West Africa in Dakar, Senegal. I also read published works on the Mossi by such scholars as Maurice Delafosse, A. A. Dim Delobson, Georges Cheron, Eugene Mangin, Lucien Marc, and Louis Tauxier. Their works were invaluable to me, and I owe them a debt of 121 gratitude. My hope is that what I have added to the store of knowledge about the Mossi may be of service to Mossi scholars, whose studies will ultimately bring to light aspects of their own culture that we have missed.

The ethnographer working in contemporary Africa is faced with the problem of the time dimension. In reporting his findings, he may use the "ethnographic present" and describe the cultural system he studied as though all elements, even those dredged up from the memories of old men, were still viable in the society. Or he may use the past tense and thus underscore [178] the fact that the society is changing, even though cultural traits from the past may be present and viable. I have elected the latter course primarily because, even though many of the aspects of Mossi culture described here are still in existence, Mossi society is changing ever more rapidly. Many old culture traits that I found there as late as 1955 had all but disappeared when I returned in 1960. Not to recognize this fact in preparing this study would have laid the ground for the criticism that anthropologists ignore the changes taking place around them in order to concentrate upon the past.

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

My own interest in the Mossi grew out of an early curiosity about the cultures and societies of Africa. It was born of my parents' concern over Ethiopia's struggle to remain free and nurtured by the writings of Mr. Marcus A. Garvey, Dr. W. E. B. Dubois, and Professors Melville J. Herskovits and E. Franklin Frazier. These factors, together with the help and encouragement of my relatives and friends, ultimately led me to choose a career in anthropology and African studies. I am grateful to Professor John L. Landgraf of New York University, who first taught me the elements of anthropology and thus provided me with the basic tools for understanding human societies. To Dr. Gene Weltfish and Professor Joseph H. Greenberg of Columbia University I owe a further debt of gratitude for having directed my first studies of African cultures. To them, and to Professors Conrad M. Arensberg, Morton H. Fried, and Charles Wagley, also of Columbia University, I owe whatever skill and competence in social-science research I may possess. I am grateful to the Ford Foundation for financing the field work on which this study is based, and to the Arts and Science Research Fund Committee of New York University for help in defraying the cost of preparing the manuscript for publication.

I am deeply indebted to the Mossi people for having permitted me to live among them for fourteen months. M. François Bouda, district chief of Manga, and Naba Boulga, district chief of Nobere, not only welcomed me but kindly consented to answer my innumerable questions about the nature of their political and other institutions. The Djiba Naba, who subsequently became Mogho Naba Kougri, also encouraged me in my task, and so did Dr. Joseph Conombo. Without the help of M. Beta Nyissa, my friend and interpreter, field work would have been difficult. He not only explained many aspects of Mossi culture to me, but put me in touch with persons who could answer my questions, and taught me the rudiments of the Mossi language.

I must also thank my good friend Mme. Ouennam Pousde for helping me to understand the point of view of the Mossi women. This kind lady never ceased to be amused at the attempts of this yagenga (brother's son) to participate as fully as possible in Mossi life. M. Frederic Guierma en-

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

the Niger-Congo family of African languages.[6] Like the Mossi, these groups are primarily horticultural; cereals are their main crops, and they cultivate yams where conditions permit. Their social organization takes both patrilineal and matrilineal forms. The veneration of ancestors lies at the core of their religious beliefs, but the existence of an otiose high god whose name contains the root We (Ouennam, Win, Wene, etc.) is also recognized. There are also tutelary spirits, the chief one being a female earth deity associated with We and called Tenga (also occurring as Teng, Tena, and Ten). The Tengsobadamba, who are priests or custodians of the earth shrines, are found among all the groups in the Voltaic family, and they often share leadership with more secular chiefs called Naba, Na, or Nab. Most of the ruling clans of the Voltaic groups claim common ancestry and acknowledge the same totems.[8]

The only glaring dissimilarity between these Voltaic peoples, and the one with which this study is primarily concerned, lies in the realm of political organization. Some are united into large kingdoms, while others form small acephalous groups. Delafosse makes the following generalizations about the smaller groups:

> It may be said of these people that, as a whole, they have remained quite primitive. With a few exceptions, they have not reached any significant level of political development; as a rule, they have not progressed beyond family unity. Although they neighbor on well-organized and powerful states such as the Mossi empires and the kingdoms of the Gourma and Bergo, which are inhabited by populations of the same ethnic group, they have derived little benefit from this proximity; some of them have been absorbed as subjects or vassals by these states, while others have remained on the outside, and seem to have but one purpose, the forceful preservation of their fierce but sterile independence. . . . Attachment to the land seems to be the only solid and fecund institution in their chaotic society.[7]

Rattray believes that the development of such highly organized political systems as those of the Mossi, Dagomba, and Mamprusi may be traced to "small bands of strangers." He thinks that the outsiders were better armed, better clothed, and familiar with the rudiments of Islam, and that since they knew about the institution of kingship, they were able to "superimpose upon the primitive tribes among whom they settled a new and unheard-of political conception, namely the idea of territorial and secular leadership in place of the immemorial institution of a ruler who was the high priest of a totemic clan and dealt only in spiritual sanctions." Nevertheless, Rattray is not certain that the Voltaic groups would not have evolved complex political systems if they had been left to themselves. He makes the significant statement that if the subjugation by the bands of strangers had not taken place, the local earth-priest or priest-king "undoubtedly would have evolved into the type of native ruler . . . who was not only high priest and custodian of the land of his tribe and of the ancestral spirits but one who was a chief or king on a territorial basis, whose sanctions were secular and physical rather than spiritual; in other words, what the average European implies when he uses the word 'king' or 'chief.'"[8]

-11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

Since pristine state development has occurred so seldom, it is difficult to evaluate Rattray's speculations about the possible local development of complex political forms. Nevertheless, his view that bands of strangers were responsible for state formation in the area is supported by most of the local traditions.

The relationship between the Voltaic peoples and the bands of strangers has not received the attention it deserves. In fact, the implications of such a relationship have often been underrated. As a result, groups that may once have been part of larger political entities created by these strangers have been regarded as acephalous, that is, as having very weak chiefs or no chiefs at all. In his studies of the Tallensi of northern Ghana, for example, Fortes constantly refers to a group of lineages called Namoos, whose members claim to be descended from the Mamprusi ruling group. He states that a Tallensi chief from the Tongo area claimed to be "the ruler of all the Tallensi." In another context Fortes discusses the status of a chief called Kuna'aba, who, he tells us, is regarded by the other Tallensi chiefs as their "father," to whom they owe "loyalty, respect, and ceremonial deference." Moreover, Fortes indicates that ceremonial investiture by Kuna'aba is "the crucial act conferring chiefship" on a Tale, even if the latter is actually selected by an administrative officer.[9] These facts should have indicated to Fortes that he was dealing with a rather complex historical problem that required further investigation.

Instead of carrying the investigation further, however, he dismisses the Tongo chief's claim of control over all Taleland with the assertion that "it is a distortion in terms of the modern privileges of chiefship, of a status which is merely that of primus inter pares in the native system." Similarly, he doubts the historical status and role of Kuna'aba: "Kuna'aba's modern judicial and administrative authority rests solely on the sanction of force represented by the [British] Administration." Interestingly enough, Fortes tells us that "the Administration has always regarded Taleland as part of the 'Mamprusi State,' under the ultimate rule of the chief of Mampurugu, through his sub-chief and deputy, the Kuna'aba, who was considered to have full jurisdiction over the 'Kurugu Division.'"[10]

Rattray, whose study of the Tallensi predates Fortes', declares that the

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

643 the name of the current ruler. When Crozat asked one of his Mossi bearers why Boukary Koutou had chosen a title that means "elephant," the man declared, "He is an elephant; he is king of all kings as the elephant is king of all animals; a great elephant-king he is."[2] Another Moaga, meeting Crozat on the road to Ouagadougou, told him to be prepared to meet a monarch "whose riches are inexhaustible and whose splendor is marvelous. [644] He and his family wear only the most admirable European clothes; a thousand horses stand before his door, and there are more than a thousand women in his house. He is served by one hundred eunuchs; he commands as master 333 chiefs; and when he speaks to them it is as though God himself had spoken; everyone bows down before him and obeys."[3] Crozat, looking at the Mogho Naba through European eyes, did not find the "great [576] king" he had expected. Yet he and later European visitors to the Mossi [516] capital did affirm that all Mossi officials and district chiefs prostrated themselves in obeisance to their sovereign, even if they did not subsequently follow his instructions.[4]

643 Many rituals associated with the person and court of the Mogho Naba 796 served to emphasize the high esteem in which he was held by his subjects. For example, the sovereign showed himself every morning at a ceremony called "Ouend pous yan" (literally, "God rises," or "the sun rises") that survives to this day. The name of this ceremony has led many scholars [114] and travelers to assert that traditionally the Mogho Naba was considered a divine king. Dim Delobson states that this ceremony "shows the regard which the Mossi have for their chief, since they compare him to the sun, and thus to a 'god.'"[5] However, the Mossi do not now and probably never did regard their monarchs either as gods or as divine kings. There is a great deal of difference between regarding a man as "powerful and brilliant" like the sun and regarding him as divine. As a matter of fact, the [522] Mossi very often dramatize in humorous fashion the all-too-human frailties of their rulers, without ever considering it sacrilegious to do so. On the other hand, the Mogho Naba, as the supreme ruler, was expected to follow faithfully the strict etiquette demanded by his exalted position.

643 The morning ceremony was opened by the ruler's chief page, the so- 796 ghone-kasanga, who sprinkled a phylacteric solution around a throne 644 (guere) in the courtyard in front of a reception room called the zongo. Other pages (soghondamba) brought out a large cushion (naghpure), the ruler's sword, and other personal accouterments, and placed them on the [292] throne. Still other pages aided the Mogho Naba in his toilet. He was clothed in a large red robe, which symbolized the rising sun; he wore a bonnet surmounted by silver streamers (wazourfou sebere), which repre- -sented the sun itself.

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

fathers died. In this way the rulers not only retained the allegiance of the boys' fathers but had a unique opportunity to determine whether these boys were qualified to succeed to the nam. 644

The life of a page was confining, even if sometimes very rewarding. Pages were bound by the demands of the ruler, whose every wish had to be satisfied immediately. A quarrelsome ruler was a terror to his pages, who had to bear silently his insults and blows. On the other hand, a considerate monarch permitted or encouraged his pages to profit from the small political intrigues in which they were invariably involved. Prospective district chiefs "made friends" with pages to find out whether their suits were progressing, or to whom they might usefully offer gifts. The pages used any money they might procure to buy clothes for themselves, to supplement the clothing and presents they received from their relatives. Every page was "adopted" by one of the royal wives, who prepared his meals and took care of him. In return, he helped this woman cultivate her field when his presence was not required by the monarch. When a page completed his service satisfactorily, he received a pughsiudga as a wife. If his work had not been satisfactory, he was simply dismissed. [662]

The only woman who played any significant role at the court of the Mogho Naba was the Pughtiema, his head wife. She was the only wife to whom he presented his friends, and whom he allowed his subjects to visit. This woman, who was commonly the widow of the former Mogho Naba, was often chosen because she was past childbearing age: she was thus older and wiser than the other wives, less preoccupied with children, and above the sexual jealousies that may often develop in polygynous households. She arbitrated among the wives and stood in loco parentis to the younger ones, whom she instructed and advised. She served also as official hostess to the ancestors during the annual propitiatory rituals. It was her duty to prepare the millet beer and millet water for the sacrifices to the ancestors, who were believed to feast at her hut before they visited the rest of the household. In addition, it was she who prepared to accompany the Mogho Naba to La each day. Lastly, it was her duty to introduce any new royal wife to the ancestors, and to ask them to watch over this potential mother of their descendants. 644 595 643 [782]

The ruler inherited some of his wives from his father; some he received from his many friends and vassals; and others he selected from among his pughsiudse. Crozat reports that Mogho Naba Wobogo (1890-96) allegedly had a hundred wives. Crozat did not see this many women at Wobogo's court, understandably, since most of a ruler's wives lived in villages, where they were guarded by eunuchs.[22] Of the substantial number of royal wives [114]

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

000 went to Djiba when his grandfather died and his father was installed as Mogho Naba.

The origin of Djiba's status as the seat of the Crown Prince is rather 634 obscure. The people of the neighboring district of Nobere say that Djiba 644 was founded by a "companion" of their own founder, Naba Biligo, one of 173 the numerous "eldest" sons of Mogho Naba Oubri, the implication being that Djiba was supervised by Nobere. However, no one seems to know when Djiba's status changed or what happened to the ancient family who used to govern it. The consensus is that in earlier times the heir presumptive to Ouagadougou did not necessarily become chief of Djiba, but was given any district whose chieftainship was vacant when he came of age. Dim Delobson reports that Djiba became the district of the Crown Prince [114] sometime during the seventeenth century, when Mogho Naba Zombere, who had reigned for sixty years, found it necessary to establish a permanent seat for his heir.[20] However, Dim Delobson does not report under what conditions Djiba was chosen, nor does he say what happened to the local ruling lineage when this transfer took place. That the transfer was carried out in the manner reported by Dim Delobson is not doubted, because each new [558] Mogho Naba obtained districts for his relatives in this way. Through this [613] process, the people of the ancient ruling lineages were usually reduced to the level of commoners, and this is apparently what happened to the rulers of Djiba.

634 The first public sign that the young prince was being prepared for the 643 nam came in the form of a summons commanding him to go to Ouagadougou to be installed as Djiba Naba. On his way to the capital, he visited several villages where the local Tengsobadamba made sacrifices to the earth goddess in his name. He took this opportunity to meet with the district chiefs and their assembled village chiefs; he was entertained by them; and in turn he distributed gifts to the old women, whose praises were considered especially effective in bringing health and long life. When the boy finally arrived at the capital, he lodged at the compound of the Kambo Naba, head of the palace guard, until the Mogho Naba and his ministers installed him as chief of Djiba.

The installation rites for the Crown Prince were very similar to those already described for the Mogho Naba, and identical to those for the district chiefs. During the ceremony, no mention was made of the fact that the prince was the son of the Mogho Naba. The only special feature was that when the prince went into the courtyard after the ceremony to render homage to the Mogho Naba, he sat in an area assigned to him by custom. When the ruler appeared, the prince followed the Gounga Naba, who was pro-

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

65 643
831
642
628
175

cause he thought Sanum had attacked him unjustly. For such acts of war, the Dimdamba involved usually lost their lives, and in at least one such case a Dim was turned over to the Mogho Naba by another Dim. We have seen that Dimdamba occasionally came to the aid of the Mogho Naba against another Dim.

643
631
642
628
174
114

A question of some importance is whether this relationship between the Mogho Naba of Ouagadougou and the rulers of independent kingdoms and autonomous principalities was characteristic of Mossi society or a rather late development. Was warfare the natural concomitant of a system in which the normally powerful Ouagadougou ruler was sometimes too weak to command allegiance from his peers and subordinates? Did the Mogho Naba resort to warfare as the only possible means of exercising his authority when his commands were challenged or ignored? Delafosse states, "Sometimes . . . , especially in very recent times, discord arose between the emperor [of Ouagadougou] and some of his vassal kings: thus Naba Sanum had to fight against the desire for independence of the kings of Boussouma and Boulsa."[16] Delafosse seems to suggest that the Mossi people were undergoing a period of stress when the Europeans arrived, and were faced with significant new administrative problems.

Here Binger appears to support Delafosse's view:

> Ever since he acceded to the throne, [Mogho Naba Sanum] has been compelled to govern the Mossi with unmitigated despotism. His fear of losing power led him to take such severe measures that he was forced to relax them. As soon as his major vassals saw this, they took these concessions as signs of fear and began to conspire secretly against him. Today, the chiefs of Mani, Boussouma, Yako, and Koupela represent forces with which Naba Sanum will have to reckon. . . . Before long, the Mossi empire will break up; the country will organize into confederacies like those of Beledougou and Yatenga.[17]

It is not completely clear, however, whether Binger really understood the intricacies of the Mossi political organization. He lists as "vassals" of the Mogho Naba such territories as Mane, Kaya, Koupela, Bonsa, Boussouma, Djitenga, Boulsa, Dakay, and Doulougou, as though they were all related to Ouagadougou in the same way. In reality, some were autonomous and some were directly dependent on the Ouagadougou ruler. It is possible that at the time of Binger's visit, the relations between the Mogho Naba and his subordinates were so fluid that the outsider had difficulty in understanding them. If this is the case, then the situation in Mossi country had indeed changed when the Europeans came in.

Crozat, who says the Mossi governmental structure was feudal in na-

643
642 66 ADMINISTRATION

631 ture, offers what is probably the best analysis of power relations among the 628 important Mossi chiefs. In commenting upon the Mogho Naba's inability 174 to stop the war between Yako and Yatenga he asks, "How could it be 114 otherwise? With what sanctions could this king without an army back up his orders if he ventured to give any? . . . In short, when the Ouagadougou ruler speaks, he is sometimes obeyed. If he is, all is well; if he is not, all is still well. Everything remains as before."[18] Crozat was mistaken if he believed that the Mogho Naba did not have a fighting force. What he did not have was a standing army to exercise his power whenever he wished. When he was able to summon an army, he was effective; when he was not, he had little power over any territory but his own. Crozat, like Binger, gives a strange picture of the political relationship between the Mogho Naba and the other rulers. He tells us that in the Mossi political hierarchy, "after the ruler of Ouagadougou comes the ruler of Boussouma, then the Yatenga ruler, and then the ruler of Yako."[19] Yatenga was traditionally independent of Ouagadougou, whereas Boussouma and Yako were simply autonomous principalities dependent on the Mogho Naba. It is possible that Crozat mistook the relative power of these various political entities for a hierarchical relationship. It is also possible that at the time of his visit, the Dimdamba felt sufficiently powerful to ignore the traditional hierarchy as far as their political relationship with other rulers was concerned, and were simply acknowledging relative gradations of power.

643 Clearly, the sovereignty of the Mogho Naba of Ouagadougou over the 642 independent kingdoms and autonomous principalities depended chiefly on 628 military might. The stronger a Mogho Naba was, the more actively he tried to control the internal administration of the autonomous principalities and to exercise police powers over them or on their behalf. However, most Mogho Nanamse were content to claim superiority or control over the independent kingdoms and refrained from meddling in their affairs.

643 Within the Mogho Naba's own kingdom, however, the situation was 635 different. Here, like other important Mossi rulers, he directed the admin-
634 istrative apparatus. For administrative purposes, the kingdom of Ouaga-[642] dougou was divided into five large provinces (weto; sing. weogho; or [161] solem, from so, "command"). Together they included some three hundred districts, in which there were over four thousand villages inhabited by some 862,000 persons.[20] (Not included here were districts and villages directly administered by the Mogho Naba.) The provinces were not compact physical entities, because their component units were scattered throughout the country. To be sure, some of the districts within a province were close together or even contiguous, but many others stood alongside districts be-

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

Naba was responsible for checking these depredations, but he had little coercive force since these nobles were infinitely superior to him in rank. 634 635

The Mogho Naba held his five ministers responsible for the administration of the districts within their provinces. Therefore they had to function as liaison officers between him and the district chiefs. Every morning, in order of precedence, the ministers reported the news they had received from their provinces since the previous day. At this time, the Mogho Naba also gave them messages for their districts. Later in the day, the ministers presented to the ruler those persons who had come from their provinces to the capital with special grievances, requests, or gifts. Delicate affairs of state were left for the evening, when they were discussed by the Mogho Naba, his minister or ministers, and other important persons. 645

From all reports, these administrative affairs kept both the ministers and the Mogho Naba quite busy. Binger, who could barely conceal his displeasure with Mogho Naba Sanum, gives this critical but otherwise highly illuminating view of the Mossi ruler's administrative activities: 643 644

> The duties of Naba Sanum are not too important. They consist of receiving visits throughout the day. In the morning, at about six o'clock, the drums announce that the ruler has arisen. When he has washed and refreshed himself with a meal, his captives and his wives go to his chamber to salute him. Then comes the turn of strangers, people of the neighborhood, petitioners, and others. They squat before the reception area until the ruler deigns to appear. When a large number of people have gathered, one of the [pages] goes to notify the ruler, who then arrives, sits on his cushion, and casts an amiable glance on the gathering while all present snap their fingers. As soon as Naba Sanum is seated, the petitioners and visitors hurry toward the monarch, throw themselves face down on the earth, and cover their heads with sand. Then each of them gets up and presents a gift of greater or lesser importance, in cowries or foodstuffs, according to what he wishes to ask. Then the [pages] come and say to the ruler, "A certain man has brought a sack of cowries, or a goat, or an ox. He desires to speak to you." The ruler thanks all of them with a nif kende (thanks) and retires into his chamber. It is well known that not one out of fifty petitioners was given the opportunity to have his wishes heard. Those who were heard had first spoken to an attendant who, after being paid in advance, had put off their case indefinitely by stating that it would be dealt with next. . . . Since the monarch's days are so well filled, one easily understands why he finds it difficult to deal effectively with the internal and external affairs of his kingdom; in any case, Mossi country is in a period of decadence that will only be aggravated with time.[25] [662]

The activities Binger considered frivolous were, on the contrary, important for the proper administration of the kingdom. The Mogho Naba had to receive petitions from the districts and transmit administrative orders to 643 [114]

648 warriors as El Hadj Omar and Samory Touré surprised and puzzled many 175 of their early visitors. Binger explains it as follows:

> Thanks to the primitive tribes that surrounded them like a rampart, the Mossi were spared the incursions of their powerful neighbors. This immunity cannot last much longer, because [Mogho Naba] Sanum is weak, has little spirit, and is badly counseled.[8]

Binger was partly correct in attributing the immunity of the Mossi to the presence of weaker groups on their borders. To the military adventurers of the period, the Mossi must have appeared invulnerable when compared to their weaker neighbors. Nevertheless, the Mossi declare that it was their vigilance and willingness to fight that prevented Samory Touré, among others, from invading their country.[9] They claim to have captured and executed nine of the ten spies he sent to survey their territory. The one spy who returned allegedly told Samory Touré that the Mossi were too strong to be attacked, because they banded together against all outsiders.

175 Crozat attributes the Mossi freedom from attack to miraculous and 648 magical factors:
789

> There is widespread belief in surrounding territories that Mossi country is inviolable. Alone amid the troubled populations that surround it, it enjoys [176] relative peace. It owes this to the very special protection of a deity, and also to the virtues of the special talismans owned by the ruler of Ouagadougou. The terror inspired by these charms is such that some years ago the leader of Gadiari's column suffered a mass desertion of his men when he tried to lead them to the conquest of Mossi country. He himself was killed, perhaps by his own sofas [soldiers]. This case cannot be expected to undermine belief in these presumptuous charms.[10]

175 This statement, like Binger's, contains an element of truth, but not in 648 the way that Crozat believed. The Ouagadougou kingdom did have a
[114] series of ritual pacts with neighboring Mossi and non-Mossi groups. Crozat found that Mogho Naba Sanum was on "good terms" with the people of Fada-N'Gourma. He tells us that this friendship was maintained by a "curious custom" whereby the Ouagadougou ruler sent wives, captives, and horses from his predecessor's estate to the ruler of the Gurmanche.[11] Similarly, Pinchon, a British officer stationed in the Gold Coast at the beginning of the century, reports that there existed an ancient pact between the Mossi and the Mamprusi. This pact kept the ruler of each country from attacking the other on pain of death by the ancestors. Like the pact between the Mossi and the Gurmanche, this agreement was sanctioned by an annual gift of a horse, slaves, and cloth from the Mossi to the Mamprusi. Pinchon speculates that it was the existence of this pact that induced the Mamprusi

Wobogo. However, he did not have to intervene, because while still en route he heard that Ouagadougou had fallen."[28] Thanks to this type of aid, the Mogho Naba was able to gather quite a large army, a fact that contradicts Crozat's belief that the Mogho Naba was a "king without an army."[29]

The early Mogho Nanamse used to accompany their armies into the field, but this practice was later abandoned and was revived periodically only by the more adventurous rulers. (The last ruler to die in warfare was Mogho Naba Doulougou [ca. 1800].) However, it was the Mogho Naba's duty to greet the army when it came to Ouagadougou, to beat the royal war drum, and to turn the troops over to the Tansoba. This officer served as commander in chief of the army, and was assisted by the Gounga Naba, a provincial minister, who served as his aide-de-camp. The Gounga Naba was expected to die rather than retreat in battle, especially if the Tansoba was killed. Two other ministers, the Kamsaogho Naba and the Larhalle Naba, also accompanied the army. The later Baloum Nanamse did not venture into battle, because they had to attend to the personal needs of the Mogho Naba. In early times, however, they accompanied their sovereigns into battle and fought alongside them. The Ouidi Naba never went to war, because it was his duty to look after the kingdom. He had to ensure the interests of all the people even if the royal army was defeated, the country invaded, and the ruler killed or forced to flee. The Samande Naba went to war and served as chief of the infantry.

Scouts preceded each district contingent as the army marched off to battle. Within the contingent, the younger warriors marched in front, followed by older men. It was the duty of the more experienced warriors to make sure that the younger men did not break ranks and run under the stress of battle. Behind the foot soldiers came the cavalry, composed of nobles and of the few commoners who possessed horses. Behind these came the district chief, surrounded by his own palace guard. Several heralds known as yumba (sing. yuma) accompanied the district forces to exhort them to fight. As the men marched to battle the yumba shouted:

> Men! Your ancestors were not slaves. They were men. They were stronger than anyone else. They did not bathe with water; they bathed with blood. Do you wish to return home to drink millet water and eat bread? Never! A man does not eat bread or drink millet water; a man fights. Your ancestors were not afraid of anyone; you must not be afraid of anyone. Even if you are killed today, you must march ahead, beat your enemies, and take their villages. You must not be afraid!

Mossi armies on the march used scouts to keep a sharp lookout for the enemy or for any evidence that he was aware of impending attack. The tactics these scouts used to avoid detection, such as camouflaging themselves less of the amount of millet harvested from the Mogho Naba's fields, there had to be one hundred baskets full of grain. If the number of baskets filled with the Mogho Naba's grain fell short of the mark, the serfs and slaves had to make up the difference with the produce of their own fields. The ceremony concluded with sacrifices to the royal ancestors, after which the Mogho Naba's wives, daughters, and sisters gave beer and kola nuts to the laborers.

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

As head of the central government, the Mogho Naba received revenue in the form of money and livestock which the district chiefs collected from the village people. These were given to him during an elaborate annual ceremony called the "Basgha" ("feast of the royal ancestors"). Several days before this post-harvest festival, the district chiefs and their retainers arrived in the capital and lodged with their provincial ministers. At a designated time during the ceremony, the district chiefs and nobles went to the palace. In provincial contingents and led by their ministers, they walked up to the sovereign's throne and gave the Mossi salute. After they had returned to their places, their servants gave the royal pages the presents they had brought to the palace.

The Dimdamba apparently made their annual contribution to the Mogho Naba at the time of the Basgha. There is one report that they took this opportunity to send gifts to the ruler's son, the Djiba Naba, as well. The Dimdamba customarily sent the Mogho Naba part of the goods they had seized in combat against non-Mossi peoples, as well as a tax (jado) out of the goods they had inherited from their predecessors.[3] There is also some evidence that the Mogho Naba solicited goods from the Dimdamba at other times. Crozat says:

> During my first visit to Yako, three envoys from Ouagadougou were at the chief's house. They were tax collectors. They had come to offer the vassal a silver bracelet sent by the sovereign. The Yako Naba responded by sending horses, captives, and cowries to Ouagadougou.[4]

Crozat could not understand this reciprocity between the Mogho Naba and his vassals, and questions whether the Mogho Naba really collected taxes from them. He concludes that the Mogho Naba did receive taxes, "but these are never given to him except in the form of presents which are reciprocated."[5] Crozat found it puzzling and disturbing that many of the Dimdamba had not given the Mogho Naba any "taxes" for several years. He indicated, moreover, that they did not wish to pay taxes to the Ouagadougou ruler even under the guise of an exchange of presents. This was especially true of the Yatenga Naba, who had not sent the Mogho Naba any presents for six or seven years prior to 1890. Crozat surmised that

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

631 because of this delinquency, the Mogho Naba might hesitate to come to 651 the aid of any of his vassals if a general war broke out. It is true that the 643 Mogho Naba did not aid the Yatenga ruler when the French arrived.
114 But whether this was because of his failure to pay taxes, or because the [648] French conquest of the Yatenga coincided with a civil war there, we shall [669] probably never know. We do know that many of the Mogho Naba's vassals came to his aid when the French finally arrived at Ouagadougou. It is my opinion that the gifts exchanged between Yatenga and Ouagadougou were not "tributary," but were more in the nature of tokens of friendship between two peers.

643 The Mogho Naba and his provincial ministers also received revenue as 645 a function of their judicial roles. The nature and disposition of the fines
692 levied against legal offenders were discussed in Chapter V. The Mogho
651 Naba's fees came in the form of the traditional gifts the litigants gave him
[431] even before their cases were tried. These gifts were never regarded as bribes, for this would have contradicted the Mossi axiom that "the truth is at Ouagadougou."

643 The Mogho Naba inherited all the property of the Kamsaogho Naba, 651 and claimed all the property of district chiefs who died without close rela-
634 tives. He also received inheritance taxes (fado) from the estates of deceased 768 district chiefs. In collecting the fado, the Mogho Naba first retained the [428] horse on which the messenger came to announce the chief's death. He reciprocated by sending envoys with cowries and animals to be offered to their common ancestors at the chief's funeral. After the funeral, the envoys claimed the dead chief's quiver of arrows to take to Ouagadougou for deposit with those of other dead chiefs. Then they demanded the fado, and jestingly told the heirs that the Mogho Naba would be satisfied with nothing less than "a thousand of everything" (tusri bumbu fa) the deceased had possessed: wives, slaves, horses, cows, goats, chickens, articles of clothing, and so on. The heirs pleaded poverty and jokingly gave the envoys a few old and sickly animals, old chickens, tattered pieces of clothing, etc. Eventually, they handed out the fado, which usually consisted of livestock, clothing, food, weapons, jewelry, cowries, and even slaves. Lastly, they gave the envoys the chief's ceremonial horse and presents for themselves.

643 The Mogho Naba and his ministers collected a considerable amount of 645 revenue from the traders who visited Ouagadougou and the larger market 651 towns and village markets throughout the kingdom.* The Mossi (especially 439 the assimilated Yarse) were good traders, and they benefited from their [98] country's strategic location between the Sahara and the forest regions. According to Barth, some six caravan routes crossed the country, linking district chief's wrath. Thus, there was some method in the collection of this tribute and certain expectations had to be met, even though many of the contributors may have felt that their gifts were voluntary.

In direct contrast, Dim Delobson, himself a chief, states that Mossi chiefs demanded a stipulated amount from their villagers. He adds, however, that the tribute "varied in amount according to the resources of the contributors," and that the district chief set the "amount of cowries and grain due from each village in accordance with the number of its inhabitants."[24] According to him, the rate of assessment was usually 100 cowries for a married man and 50 for an adult bachelor (apparently, this difference was an acknowledgment of the woman's contribution to her husband's wealth). In addition, each adult male was assessed 10 baskets of millet of about 100 pounds each. Dim Delobson adds that to these exactions the district chief added his own contributions to the Mogho Naba, usually in the form of cattle.

It seems that Dim Delobson rationalized and regularized a rather informal system of contributions. The present-day Mossi declare that soil differences in the villages and variations in rainfall prevented a district chief from demanding a set tribute, because no one could tell whether a crop would be good or bad. Only a ruler's informers could tell him how much he should receive each year, and the chief based his exactions on this report. Several of my respondents agreed with Dim Delobson that the district chief provided mostly cattle for the annual tribute to the Mogho Naba, and that the village people furnished cowries, small animals, and grain.

A district chief was seldom wealthy, because he always had to use his revenue to fulfill unexpected obligations toward his subjects, his superiors in the political hierarchy, and his household. He had to be generous to his subjects, providing millet water, millet beer, and the more expensive imported kola nuts for those who visited and conferred with him daily. He was expected to provide food and shelter for the countless strangers who settled in his district, until they could provide for themselves. He also lodged and fed the messengers who brought him orders from the capital, and gave them gifts to take back to the provincial ministers. And he had to provide goods for the many members of his family who depended upon him. Finally, in the event of crop failure or famine in any of his villages, he had to provide grain from his granaries to feed the hungry. "How could he do otherwise? Was he not a 'father' to his people?"

The expectation that the district chief should provide hospitality to his subjects was so strong that those chiefs or princes who were deprived of an income for any reason often resorted to banditry to fulfil their obliga-

they might take the lives and property of their subjects. There are many stories of avaricious chiefs who convicted wealthy commoners of spurious crimes and had them executed or banished in order to seize their wealth. There are also stories of twin tricksters, Raogo, a boy, and Poko, a girl, two enfants terribles who always succeeded in outwitting and killing avaricious chiefs. When I asked a district chief to explain the significance of the Raogo and Poko tales, he replied that they were "meaningless stories told by children who do not understand how difficult it is for a chief to command and protect men." This remark prompted one of his officials to add that in olden days, people gladly supported the Mogho Naba and his chiefs in order to be safe from their enemies—a statement which might have been made by a conscientious government official anywhere. However, whether commoners or chiefs, all Mossi believed that men must have government, and that without it chaos would prevail.

The Mossi political organization was subject to severe strains. For one thing, its economic basis was not very strong. True, goods and services were channeled to the capital from the smallest areas, and in time this permitted the establishment of increasingly complex governmental structures. Nevertheless, the Mossi fiscal system was not highly developed, and much of the revenue the rulers received came to them in the form of legal fees and gifts. Moreover, most of these revenues were irregular in nature.

Despite this fact, the Mossi believed that their rulers were wealthy—and there can be no doubt that they were wealthier than their subjects. Nevertheless, visiting Europeans found little difference between the standard of living of the chiefs and that of the people. Binger would have us believe that Mogho Naba Sanum bragged so much about imaginary wealth, including 10,000 horses, that he "managed to convince himself of it."[26] Binger's subsequent remarks about Sanum's resources are illuminating even if somewhat biased, because they throw light on the economic basis of the Ouagadougou kingdom. He tells us that Sanum's revenues were > not well regulated. He lives on gifts and offerings which people have brought him with the aim of obtaining justice, or to demand something from him. He sometimes sends a band of men to capture slaves in Kipirsi country, or at least supports such ventures. But these revenues, like those of all the black chiefs, are not sufficient, because these men are prone to squander their resources. As a result, these sovereigns are compelled to use expedients in order to procure horses and other commodities. Thus, like the rulers of Tieba, Pegue, and Kong, Naba Sanum still has captives in villages devoted to agriculture, but he does not take proper care of these villages. If he does not receive enough millet in the form of gifts, he must sell his slaves in order to procure it.[27]

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

 643

Binger's statement about the "squandering" to which "all the black chiefs" are prone reveals his ignorance of the nature, role, and function of West African chiefs in general and of Mossi chiefs in particular. These men were often the center of redistribution systems that embraced their entire territory. The Mossi chiefs did not necessarily squander their resources when they used them to support their household, their administrative staff, and even visitors to their realm. A rather large portion of the millet the Mogho Naba received was not even used by his own household, but was held for gifts to visiting strangers. Binger himself benefited from the generosity of Mogho Naba Sanum, and he provides us with excellent data about how Boukary Koutou distributed his resources: "I can say that never has a chief given me food, kola nuts, and beer as often as he did. I received things to eat two or three times a day."[28] No Mossi chief could have done less. This was a role that chiefs had to play, and they lost power and prestige if they proved inhospitable or parsimonious either to visiting strangers or to their own subjects. 631 434 574 (114)

Binger's lack of insight into the economic basis of the Mossi political organization also kept him from obtaining a clear understanding of the political system itself. For example, he saw the loose political organization of the Mossi as a sign of decadence, and felt that the Ouagadougou kingdom was too weak to survive for any length of time: 642 114

> Before long the Mossi empire will break up, and the country will be organized into a confederacy like Beledougou and Yatenga. This is an event that we Europeans can only favor. Experience has shown us that as soon as a Negro chief commands more than 2,000 people, he dreams of empire; his needs grow, and he tries to expand. Since his revenues are small, he labors under a deficit, which he must remedy with slave raids. In a confederacy the chiefs do not reach this point so rapidly. As soon as one of them begins to rise, the others can band together and nip his ambition in the bud.[29]

It is quite true that many of the political systems in the western Sudan had a loose character similar to that of a "confederacy." This was not due to the vigilance of neighboring chiefs, however. From time to time, such powerful rulers as Sundiata, Mansa Musa, Sonni-Ali, El Hadj Omar, and Samory Touré did arise and conquer vast areas, but they were unable to sustain their gains over extended periods.

The political organization of the Mossi was not decadent but structurally weak—its economic base was never strong enough to support a higher degree of centralization. Strong chiefs only tested the limits of the system; they could not change the system itself. 642

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

The Mossi were probably brought to the attention of modern Europe by T. E. Bowdich, an Englishman who went to Ashanti in 1817 to sign a trade agreement with the Asantehene. While at Kumasi, Bowdich diligently sought information about the lands in the interior, but was relatively unsuccessful because his hosts pleaded ignorance. Nevertheless, he did find out that "five journies [days] from Yngwa [Yendi] is Mosee, a warlike but less visited kingdom: it consists of many states, but the superior monarch is named Billa, and the capital Kookoopella."[4] This misinformation is interesting because it shows that Bowdich's respondent had precise information only about Koupela, a town located near the great caravan center of Poitenga. Similarly, the linguistic data reported by Bowdich are for Dagomba rather than Mossi.

Another Englishman, Joseph Dupuis, led a trade mission to Kumasi in 1819, and obtained data on the Mossi that are surprisingly accurate given the reluctance of middlemen traders to reveal commercial information. He reports that Ashanti traders "sometimes travel as far as Aughoa, the Magho, and to the east of Kasogho. Aughoa is distant from Coomassie twenty-five journies by the Salgha and Yandy Roads, which would give a distance of 360 British miles. Their object in frequenting this place is to collect that vegetable substance by the name of shea butter."[5] There is no doubt that "Aughoa" is really "Ouagha," the term often used by the Mossi to refer to their capital, and the distance between Kumasi and Ouagadougou as reported by Dupuis is approximately the same as the road mileage today. The name "Magho," which appears from time to time in these early documents, seems to be none other than "Mogho," the traditional name of Mossi country. "Kasogho" probably refers to the section of Ouagadougou that was controlled by the Kamsaogho Naba.

The Hausa merchants knew a great deal about the Mossi and the resources of their territory, but only with difficulty did the English trader Hugh Clapperton persuade Sultan Mohammed Bello of Sokoto to give him the following information:

> The country of Mouchier or Mouchi is situated to the west of Ghurma. It is vast and possesses a gold mine, rivers, forests, and mountains. It is inhabited by tribes of the Sudan who possess many fast horses and large donkeys. Their king is called Wagadougou; their asses are sent down to the Gondja to carry the drums of the Army.[6]

Either Clapperton or his informant obviously confused the capital of the Mossi with their king, and included parts of Dagomba in their territory.

Barth, who traveled extensively in the Sudan between 1849 and 1855, did not enter Mossi territory. Nevertheless, he obtained rather precise information on the important caravan routes leading from Timbuktu through the Mossi trade centers of Ouagadougou, Kaya, Yako, and Koupela, down to Salaga and other towns in Ghana, and even across to Sansane Mango in Togoland. His data on the Mossi are invaluable:

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

> The whole triangle interposed between the Niger toward the north, and the country of the Eastern Mandingoes or Wangarawa toward the south, appears to be inhabited by a single race of people whose language, although they are divided into several states and nations, nevertheless appears originally to have been the same stock. It is very probable that this race in ancient times occupied the whole upper course of the Niger, and that this tract may have been wrested from it in later times by the Songhai and the Mandingoes, especially that section of the latter which is generally called Bambara. These are the Gourma toward the N.E., the Tombo toward the N.W., and between them the Mossi. . . . The strongest among these pagan kingdoms five centuries ago, and even at the present moment, is that of the Mossi, although the country is split into a number of small principalities, almost totally independent of each other, and paying only some slight homage to the ruler of the principality of Woghodogo.[7]

Europe learned more about the Mossi from Sigismund Koelle, who visited Sierra Leone in 1854. His informant was one Andrew Dixon, who had lived in Koupela before being captured and sold into slavery. He furnished information on the location of the Mossi, their wars with the Busansi, and their important commercial and political relations with the Ashanti.[8] Koelle's report, taken in conjunction with the reports of Dupuis, Bowdich, Clapperton, and Barth, shows that the Ashanti, like the Hausa and other coastal peoples, were protecting their trade when they attempted to isolate the peoples of the interior from the Europeans. But as soon as the British defeated the Ashanti in the war of 1873–74, the Sudan was opened and adventurers poured in. In 1877 and 1878, two missionaries of the Basel Mission visited the northern regions of Ghana, and subsequently gave a good description of Mossi commerce in that area.[9] Lonsdale, who visited Salaga in 1881, found among the traders in the market "the Mossi with his cattle, sheep, and slaves—these latter, generally Gurunsi, are not exposed for sale in the street or market, but can be seen where the owner resides."[10]

The activities of the various European nations in West Africa and other regions at this time led to military and diplomatic difficulties, which the Berlin Conference of 1884–85 was convened to resolve. Agreement was reached to assign "spheres of influence" to the various European nations, to regulate trade, and to provide for arbitration between rival claimants of conquered or "protected" territories. In West Africa, this meant the end > of those chiefs whom we like, in those countries on the other side of the Niger which have been given to us? Perhaps people will tell you again that everywhere we go, we change everything and wish to be the only masters. Have we changed something in Kenedougou, whose fama [chief] has been our friend for a long time? We have, it is true, deposed Ahmadou of Segou, but he waged war upon us, and Segou is not his. . . .

643 *648

The Mogho Naba listened to Crozat in silence and later sent a servant to him with an equally diplomatic message:

> The Mogho Naba is very happy that you came, and thanks the chiefs who sent you; he wishes to declare his friendship with the white men who are in the West, especially with the French. He will see them with pleasure when they come again to the Mossi. They will be well received by us. . . . The chief declares his alliance and friendship with the French. . . . He will be pleased to see other Frenchmen come here, provided that they are not too numerous. As for your black traders and French merchants, they can come and trade with the Mossi in all security: he will not maltreat them.
>
> On his part, the chief will send his people to trade in your possessions. As for you . . . you are now free to depart whenever you wish, and by whichever route you choose. The chief will give you four men to accompany you to the border.[26]

In his report to his superiors, Crozat suggests that the widespread belief in the Mossi immunity to attack by neighboring populations is based on imperfect knowledge of their actual strength and fighting ability. He questions the Mogho Naba's riches and power, declares that "he does not have an army," and concludes by stating that the commoners are exploited by their rulers and by the Moslem holy men and "would welcome the Europeans as rulers." He thus shows quite clearly that the Mossi were correct in viewing him as an enemy.[27] Marc, who had no reason to be hostile to Crozat, commented: "It seems to us that Crozat is somewhat unfair in his notes on the indigenous culture of the Mossi. It is possible that the total failure of his mission made him rather intolerant."[28]

[114]

Crozat was followed the next year by another French emissary, Lt.-Col. P. L. Monteil. The chief of Yako detained him briefly on the advice of a Moslem who had had unpleasant experiences with Europeans. When Monteil finally reached Ouagadougou and asked for an audience with the Mogho Naba, he was informed that the ruler would not see him and had given orders for him to be expelled from the country. Monteil had no recourse but to leave, but he made this observation: "One important result of this journey augurs well for the future. We were able to travel throughout Mossi country without difficulty."[29] He made a careful survey of the country which was used to good effect by his countrymen five years later.

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

9. In Dim Delobson's account (p. 60), an unnamed wife of the Mogho Naba ran away, and he allegedly tried to follow her because she was the only person in his household who knew how to cook his favorite food. 000

It is interesting that the Mossi have a tradition in which their ruler undergoes the same experience as many a Mossi husband, namely, being betrayed by his wife. It is also interesting that Mogho Naba Waraga is the ruler named in this incident. He is the ruler who waged a five-year-long civil war with one of his vassals. It may well be that his ministers devised the myth about his wife in order to prevent him from leaving the capital to fight. [837]

10. The Mossi practice of tasting food before giving it to another person is obviously connected with the fear of poison. The Mossi believe that only a boorish person would give another person something to eat without first tasting it himself. [576]

11. The full significance of this ceremony is unclear, for the Mossi hesitate to talk about it. It is known that the "sacred fire" is linked to the nocturnal visits of the royal ancestors. But the relationship of the fire to another sacred fire kept in Koubri district (about seventeen miles from Ouagadougou) is not known. [372]

Faithful to Mossi tradition or ignorant of the true nature of the ceremony, Dim Delobson says nothing about the ceremony and does not mention the presence of the namtibo. However, he does report that the palace guards would kill anyone who approached the place where the rite was being performed (p. 62). [114]

12. There are several traditions concerning female regents. However, I believe that they may have their basis in the role the Mogho Naba's daughter played during the interregnum.

13. Mossi genealogies show that only in one case in which the nam passed from a Mogho Naba to his brother did the former Mogho Naba's sons receive districts from their uncle, the new ruler. Since it is difficult to believe that the eleven other Mogho Nanamse who were succeeded by their brothers died without issue, it can only be concluded that the descendants of a ruler who did not inherit the nam were ignored by their uncles in power.

14. To this council could be added other men whose experience was valued. For example, the Baloum Naba was called upon in 1942 to give advice about a successor to Kom.

15. Dim Delobson, pp. 130-32.

16. It is interesting that the sheepskin garb of the Mossi pretenders is similar to the dress of the chiefs among the smaller tribal groups of the Voltaic culture area. If we can assume that culture traits characteristic of ritual and ceremonial practices tend to persist longer than most other traits, we might have evidence that the complex Mossi state evolved from the political organizations found among the smaller local groups. [171] [174]

17. The "naming of a name" speech is part of most Mossi rites de passage, and is often used to brag about some achievement or to cast aspersions on one's enemies. Most newly elected monarchs pledge good government, brag about their elevation, and vilify their enemies.

In his inaugural speech Naba Kom II said, "When plenty of water falls during the rainy season, the rivers and seas are glad because they are enlarged." "Kom" means "water," and Kom's speech meant that he pledged to bring happiness to all his subjects.

Boukary Koutou insulted his listeners by declaring, "Even if a hundred ghosts join together, they cannot harm an elephant." He was called Mogho Naba Wobogo ("elephant").

18. It is said that if the amulets were stolen during the interregnum, the thief had to be elected Mogho Naba; if they were stolen afterwards, the ruler lost the basis for the mystical quality of leadership and authority he had inherited from his ancestors.

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

000 19. There is a curious story among the people of Nobere district that Mogho Naba Mottoba (who reigned in the seventeenth century) was not a Mossi but a Fulani who was given the nam after he chanced upon the installation ceremony and assassinated the newly elected man during the night. This story is denied in Ouagadougou; in fact, it contradicts the genealogical records of the ruling dynasty. However, the genealogy does show that Mottoba's father, Mogho Naba Guiliga, had succeeded his brother, and it is possible that there was dynastic rivalry for the nam between Mottoba and the former Mogho Naba's son. [174]

20. This rite was performed during the installation of the present Mogho Naba of Ouagadougou, although it is hardly recognizable as described in Newsweek (December 9, 1957, p. 48): "A man named Moussa Congo assumed the name of Kougri Naba last week and became the 35th Mogho Naba of the Mossi in the capital city of Ouagadougou in the Upper Volta region of French West Africa. Son of Emperor Issoufou Congo, Kougri Naba, as the new Mogho Naba, has one white horse, 200 wives, and 8,000 warriors, who danced around his palace ten times." [182]

21. This practice has apparently lapsed since Mogho Naba Kougri moved into the modern concrete palace built for his father, Mogho Naba Sagha II.

22. Tauxier, Le Noir du Soudan, pp. 569–70. Tauxier claims the Mogho Nanamse used the pages for homosexual purposes on Fridays in order to circumvent the Moslem prohibition against intercourse with women on this holy day. Homosexuality is rare among the Mossi, as Tauxier himself admits, and most Mossi deny that the Mogho Nanamse ever resorted to it. However, one respondent did state that he had heard about homosexuality among certain past rulers. [838]

23. Crozat, p. 4849.

24. When Mogho Naba Kom II died under mysterious circumstances in 1942, it was rumored that he had committed suicide rather than reduce the number of his wives as ordered by the administration under the influence of the Catholic missionaries. Kom allegedly held that no one can inherit a sovereign's wife during his lifetime. Therefore, in order to avoid loss of status by seeing his wives go to commoners, he chose death so they would be inherited by nobles. [648] [762] [797]

25. The statement in Newsweek (December 9, 1957, p. 48) that Kougri has two hundred wives is untrue. [114]

26. Intermarriage between the Mossi and the Fulani has produced a people known as the Simili-Mossi. Nevertheless, the Mossi are strongly prejudiced against the Fulani, especially against the women, stating that the Moaga who has sexual intercourse with a Fulani woman must bathe in nine different rivers before he becomes clean. The basis of this prejudice appears to be that Fulani women are not cultivators and therefore are unacceptable as Mossi wives. [563]

27. Mossi women know a great deal about the history and traditions of their people. But they never indicate that they do except during such rituals, when they are required to play certain roles.

28. Dim Delobson, p. 96.

29. Dim Delobson (p. 101) states that there are "sacred things" in this village, but I have been unable to substantiate his report.

30. Dim Delobson (p. 104) gives the classic explanation of this nighttime ride. On his ride from Bere to Djiba, the mounted prince must try to touch a certain branch of a certain tree. If he is destined to succeed his father, he will succeed in touching the branch; if he is not, the branch will magically withdraw at his approach. [824]

I visited the area in which this ritual reportedly took place, but the people in the vicinity denied that such a tree existed.

31. Ibid., p. 106.

32. IFAN (Compte Rendu No. 429). There are many other rumors concerning Kom's death. In a book praising the loyalty of the Africans to the Free French Gov- [648]

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

15. Ibid., p. 673.
16. Delafosse, II, 128–29.
17. Binger, II, 502.
18. Crozat, p. 4849.
19. Ibid., p. 4822.

20. The structure of the Mossi kingdoms and their relationship with the autonomous principalities make it difficult to determine the exact number of districts within each unit. For example, the Mossi people always claimed that the Mogho Naba of Ouagadougou was sovereign over "333" chiefs (cf. Binger, I, 502). However, since the Mossi always associate the number 3 with males, any number giving a multiple of threes is suspect. Binger stated that some of the chiefs referred to as part of the 333 were no more than village chiefs. However, Tauxier (Le Noir du Soudan, p. 567), describing the kingdom of Ouagadougou, states, "At the top of this hierarchy is the king, the Mogho Naba, paramount chief of the Mossi, residing at Ouagadougou. To give at least an idea of the relative importance of this empire, without going further than, say, the cercle of Ouagadougou, there were eight provinces comprising 300 cantons [districts], 5,000 villages or small towns, and 861,700 inhabitants."

While voicing the myth that the Mogho Naba had "under his control 333 chiefs or Nabas," Dim Delobson actually gives only about 150 chiefs in his list of district and other chiefs (pp. 46, 288–97). It was impossible for me to get any idea of the number of chiefs, because the Mossi hierarchy has changed radically since 1905.

21. Dim Delobson, p. 63.
22. Cheron, "Contribution," p. 651.
23. The Mossi did not acknowledge the defeat of Mogho Naba Wobogo by the French until the Ouidi Naba surrendered to the invaders and installed a ruler they had chosen.
24. Archives, Document 1G-334. Lambert describes Karfo as "a curious figure who unfortunately is not well known."
25. Binger, I, 465.
26. Dim Delobson, pp. 15–45, passim.
27. It appears that the monarchs found fault with their district chiefs most readily when they had sons or other relatives in need of districts to govern. Since a possessor of the nam could not be deprived of it while alive, he had to be accused of some crime and executed. Koabga was replaced as Doulougou Naba by Lassanne Congo (called Naba Kouliga), a son of the Mogho Naba. On the other hand, when Naba Pusha of Nobere district fled rather than commit suicide or start a civil war, he was replaced by his own brother, who became Naba Soulougou.
28. Dim Delobson, p. 44.
29. Cheron, "Contribution," p. 655.

CHAPTER FIVE

1. Mangin, p. 25.
2. Mangin does not discuss rape, but reported that an "abductor" was beaten and put in irons. The girl was returned to her family, and if she gave birth to a child, it was killed (pp. 26–27).
3. Dim Delobson, p. 55.
4. Most of my informants state quite clearly that the district chiefs did not have the right to impose the death penalty, but could do so if they were discreet about it and did not take advantage of their subjects. But Dim Delobson states: "Contrary to what people generally believe, the Kombere—the chief of the canton [district]—also had the power of life and death over his subjects. How many persons have been put to death only because they were wealthy? How many village chiefs have been killed by the district chiefs in their territories without the Mogho Naba's intervention?" (pp. 55–56).
5. Dim Delobson (p. 56) insists that justice was free of charge, but added that plaintiffs gave the chiefs the traditional presents of a white cock and a sack containing from 200 to 1,000 cowries.

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

6. Mangin declares: "Most of the troubles which arise between one Mossi and another derive from their wives and from their debts; yet it may not be said, as a general rule, that women are unhappy or ill treated" (p. 39; see also p. 33). But cf. Dim Delobson, pp. 182, 185.

7. Mangin states that in Koupela a recidivous thief was "led to the market place with a rope around his neck; he was supplied with an abundance of meat and beer, and then clubbed to death at the foot of a tree" (p. 25). I doubt whether this practice was very widespread, because the Mossi were afraid to anger the market Tengkouga (earth spirits) by spilling blood in the market place.

8. Cf. Ruelle, pp. 679 ff.

9. Binger, I, 462.

10. But cf. Marc, p. 134.

CHAPTER SIX

1. Sa'di, pp. 45–46. The date of this battle and the location of Benka are unknown. However, Delafosse (II, 141) believes that it was located in the Massina region on the shores of Lake Debo.

2. Sa'di, pp. 112–13.

3. Ibid., pp. 114–15.

4. Ibid., pp. 121–23. The chronicle also states (p. 168) that these Mossi captives were installed in a special ward of Askia's capital, a practice apparently followed by all victorious Sudanese groups including the Mossi.

5. Ibid., p. 173.

6. See Delafosse, II, 143–45, and Tauxier, Le Noir du Yatenga, pp. 88–91.

7. Crozat, p. 4822.

8. Binger, I, 502.

9. Almamy Samory Touré was the last empire-builder in the western Sudan. He was defeated by the French in 1898 and exiled to Gabon, where he died in 1900. See Binger, I, 84ff.

10. Crozat, p. 4837.

11. Ibid., p. 4849.

12. Archives, Document 1G-315 (1903–1904).

13. Crozat, p. 4849.

14. Tauxier, Le Noir du Soudan, p. 463.

15. Mangin, p. 13.

16. Cheron, "Contribution," pp. 655, 675–76.

17. Ibid., p. 673.

18. Ibid., p. 676.

19. Ibid., p. 654.

20. Ibid., pp. 685–86.

21. Ibid., p. 674.

22. Ruelle, p. 686.

23. Mangin, p. 62.

24. Binger, I, 473.

25. Cheron, "Contribution," p. 660.

26. Crozat, p. 4849.

27. Mangin, p. 12.

28. For example, when Mogho Naba Sanum's army attacked Boussouma, it made "such a rapid retreat" that Ligidi, the Boussouma Dim, could only counterattack the army's rear guard (Cheron, "Contribution," p. 676).

29. Archives, Document 15G-190 (1897–98).

30. Mangin, p. 12.

31. Ibid.

32. Dim Delobson, p. 21.

33. Ibid., p. 29.

34. Cf. Southall (pp. 246–60) for a discussion of the "segmentary" state in Africa.

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

CHAPTER SEVEN

1. Dim Delobson, pp. 153ff.
2. Ibid., pp. 251–54.
3. Cheron, "Contribution," p. 674.
4. Crozat, p. 4849.
5. Ibid.
6. Skinner, "Trade and Markets," pp. 237–78.
7. Barth, III, 644–49.
8. Ibid., pp. 202–4.
9. Dubois, pp. 282–92, 300.
10. Great Britain, Parliamentary papers: Cd. 788–27, No. 357, Acc. Papers, Vol. LXIV (1902).
11. Marc, p. 178.
12. Binger, I, 467.
13. Crozat, p. 4849.
14. Binger, I, 465.
15. Mangin, p. 23.
16. Dim Delobson, pp. 85–86.
17. Ruelle, p. 679.
18. Bovill, p. 244.
19. Gautier, p. 139; cf. Mangin, p. 112.
20. Cf. Sa'di, p. 168.
21. The chief of the Kamboinse was the only Mossi "chief" to possess a stool, which is indicative of an Akan origin. The Akan origin of this group is further supported by Koelle's evidence: a Mossi informant told him that the Mossi called the Ashanti "Kamboinse" (Koelle, p. 6).
22. Skinner, "The Mossi 'Pogsioure,'" pp. 20–22.
23. Cf. Ouédraogo and Prost, pp. 16–18.
24. Dim Delobson, p. 25.
25. Binger, I, 470.
26. Ibid., pp. 502–4.
27. Ibid., pp. 504–5.
28. Ibid., p. 456.
29. Ibid., p. 502.

CHAPTER EIGHT

1. Cf. Dim Delobson, p. 156. He speculates that the Mogho Naba himself sacrificed the animals in the presence of his senior wife and courtiers.
2. Ibid., p. 157.
3. Tauxier (Le Noir du Yatenga, p. 379) reports that a comparable ceremony among the Yatenga Mossi was called the "Bega," and that in reality it was a Fulse ceremony "adopted by the Mossi." According to him, both the Fulse and the Mossi held this festival in order to obtain good harvests the following year, and made sacrifices to "the ancestors, to the Earth, and to God."
4. Tauxier, Le Noir du Soudan, p. 588.
5. Dim Delobson's description (pp. 148 ff) of the Tense differs somewhat from that given to me by my respondents. According to his version, the Tansoba played the role I have ascribed to the Larhalle Naba. Furthermore, he states that the Tense was held on Friday, an impossible fact since Saturday is the Mossi "day of the dead." In any case, all of my respondents insisted that Saturday, and not Friday, was the day on which the Tense was held. It is possible that Dim Delobson mistook the eve of the festival for its beginning, in which case his error is understandable. In most other respects our descriptions are not too different.
6. Ibid., p. 152.
7. There is a widespread tradition in Mossi country that the Tenkodogo Naba made and still makes similar sacrifices at Kouroungoutenga and Sansabloga, two important earth shrines. There is a controversy about whether human sacrifices were ever offered there. The missionaries in the region claim they were. The Mossi deny this and accuse the missionaries of slander.

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

8. Cf. Marc, p. 156. 9. Cf. Fortes, pp. 258–71. 640

10. Skinner, "The Diffusion of Islam," pp. 659–69.

11. Tauxier, Le Noir du Soudan, pp. 585–86.

12. Dim Delobson, p. 205. 13. Crozat, p. 4820.

14. Ibid., p. 4822. 15. Ibid., p. 4835.

16. Binger, I, 452. 17. Ibid., p. 456.

18. Ibid., pp. 452–56.

19. Archives, Document 15G-190 (1897–98). Instructions left to Captain Scal by Destenave, June 1897.

CHAPTER NINE

1. Marc, p. 17.

2. Barth, III, 595. Although it is possible that the Wolof prince Bemoy did hear about the Mossi, he was mistaken about the name of their ruler. Interestingly enough, the title "Ogane" is not too dissimilar from Hogon, the title of head men among the Dogon (Habe or Kado) whom the Mossi had pushed into the hills of Bandiagara. Cf. Bascom, p. 24. [114] [174]

3. Barth, III, 606. 4. Bowdich, p. 180.

5. Dupuis, Appendix CVII. 6. Clapperton, II, 323.

7. Barth, III, 643–49. As cited earlier, Barth states that the Portuguese got reports about the Mossi in the year 1533 "from the wrong side, namely from Benin." This may not have been altogether "the wrong side," however, for Barth gives us data on caravans from Mossi country to Sansane Mango in Togoland that indicate how news about the Mossi might have traveled from the interior to Benin city in Nigeria.

8. Koelle, p. 6. Dixon, who seems to have been one of the few captured Mossi sold to the West, reports: "Mose is west of Gurma, east of Andemtenga, where a different language is spoken. Mose is also two days journey from Butmera, where the same language is spoken; four days from Bulega [Bolga tanga], the language still the same, and confederate with Kambonse, i.e. Asante; two days from Yaongo, with still the same language; six days from Bosanse which is at enmity with Mose and where people bore their lips, and often tie them together with grass, and whose language is different from Mose; four days from Busma also a different language, and in which country there is a very high mountain (Tanga) from which those who ascend never come back again [probably a reference to Plimpikou, the Mossi holy mountain]; three or four weeks from Kambonse, i.e. Asante. Kupeala is four days from Wardyga [Ouagadougou] the Mossi capital, whither the king of Asante often sent presents; and one month from Salak [Salaga], an Asante town, where they bring kola nuts." [131] [101] [197] [484]

9. Marc, p. 30.

10. Great Britain, Parliamentary papers xlvi, 1882.

11. The people of Nobere, Manga, and other districts surrounding Bere have traditions about Krause, who is remembered as the first white-skinned person ever seen in those parts. The color of his skin was attributed to the fact that, "like the fish," he had come out of the sea. [826]

12. Krause, pp. 92 ff. Although there is no evidence to this effect in the literature, it appears certain that Mossi government officials knew of Krause's visit. They treated most travelers in the following manner: "After entering a town the party is given in charge of a man usually termed 'housemaster.' It is his duty to exercise surveillance over the action of the stranger and to report the result to the authorities. . . . The trader conducts his business through his 'housemaster,' who usually makes a handsome gain by acting as middleman (G. E. Ferguson, quoted in Wolfson, p. 199). [574] larger markets there were and are solid stalls which are built and tenanted by merchants. In the small district and village markets, these stalls are built out of millet stalks which offer little but protection against the noonday sun on market days. Men build these structures for their womenfolk and for themselves. Some of the shelters which are not used for trading serve as galleries where the young blades look out and comment on the passing scene. Others are used as meeting places by adult men who sit and discuss all sorts of affairs. Still others are used by the older men, who gather there to arrange marriages between their several families, wait for gifts from younger men who seek wives, or spend a great deal of time reminiscing about their youthful adventures. Those persons who do not have such shelters sit in the sun or use grass lean-tos as protection from the sun.

12:Skinner E-4,5 (1955-1957) 1962
FA28 Mossi FA28

Except in the large towns, Mossi markets are held between the hours of 10:00 A.M. and 4:00 P.M. every fourth day. In the larger towns there are daily markets, but these remained unimportant until today when they serve a growing urban population. The capital city of Wagadougou now even has an "evening" market which opens about 4:00 P.M. and closes at about 9:00 P.M. In addition, numerous daily markets have sprung up in many of its wards. The three-day markets are, however, the traditional type, and they are still the most numerous through the country. By "three-day market" I mean that a market is held one day, not held over the two following days, and then held again on the next day. These markets also have a 21-day cycle from one Ragakasanga or Rag'kasanga ("larger market") on a Friday to another Rag'kasanga on a Friday three weeks later, a total of seven markets between the two important ones. The people give no adequate explanation for the observance of the three-day cycle or the 21-day cycle. One man did suggest that it took the women three days to prepare beer and this was why markets could not be held more often, but even he did not speculate about the 21-day cycle.[10] This same man did point out, however, that the cycle made little difference to persons who really liked to go to market, since it was possible for (10) Zahan (1954 : 373) apparently found one of the few Mossi informants with a mystical bent; he reports that the seven three-day cycles of markets in the 21-day cycle have the following significance for the Yatenga people: "The first of these numbers explains the cycle of the person (7 symbolizes the complete person: male [to which the Mossi assign the number 3] and female [to which they assign the number 4], the second that of the creation." He believes that each market starts a new cycle, a beginning and an end: "the seventh market signifies the most perfect equilibrium: the one which exists between the universe, mankind, and the divinity." In a footnote he suggests that this sybolism is not too different among the Dogon, who are "ideologically and geographically close to the Mossi." Peter Hammond, who worked in Yatenga, could not find this kind of symbolism.

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

because, even though many of the aspects of Mossi culture described here are still in existence, Mossi society is changing ever more rapidly. Many old culture traits that I found there as late as 1955 had all but disappeared when I returned in 1960. Not to recognize this fact in preparing this study would have laid the ground for the criticism that anthropologists ignore the changes taking place around them in order to concentrate upon the past.

My own interest in the Mossi grew out of an early curiosity about the cultures and societies of Africa. It was born of my parents' concern over Ethiopia's struggle to remain free and nurtured by the writings of Mr. Marcus A. Garvey, Dr. W. E. B. Dubois, and Professors Melville J. Herskovits and E. Franklin Frazier. These factors, together with the help and encouragement of my relatives and friends, ultimately led me to choose a career in anthropology and African studies. I am grateful to Professor John L. Landgraf of New York University, who first taught me the elements of anthropology and thus provided me with the basic tools for understanding human societies. To Dr. Gene Weltfish and Professor Joseph H. Greenberg of Columbia University I owe a further debt of gratitude for having directed my first studies of African cultures. To them, and to Professors Conrad M. Arensberg, Morton H. Fried, and Charles Wagley, also of Columbia University, I owe whatever skill and competence in social-science research I may possess. I am grateful to the Ford Foundation for financing the field work on which this study is based, and to the Arts and Science Research Fund Committee of New York University for help in defraying the cost of preparing the manuscript for publication.

I am deeply indebted to the Mossi people for having permitted me to live among them for fourteen months. M. François Bouda, district chief of Manga, and Naba Boulga, district chief of Nobere, not only welcomed me but kindly consented to answer my innumerable questions about the nature of their political and other institutions. The Djiba Naba, who subsequently became Mogho Naba Kougri, also encouraged me in my task, and so did Dr. Joseph Conombo. Without the help of M. Beta Nyissa, my friend and interpreter, field work would have been difficult. He not only explained many aspects of Mossi culture to me, but put me in touch with persons who could answer my questions, and taught me the rudiments of the Mossi language.

I must also thank my good friend Mme. Ouennam Pousde for helping me to understand the point of view of the Mossi women. This kind lady never ceased to be amused at the attempts of this yagenga (brother's son) to participate as fully as possible in Mossi life. M. Frederic Guierma en-not enter Mossi territory. Nevertheless, he obtained rather precise information on the important caravan routes leading from Timbuktu through the Mossi trade centers of Ouagadougou, Kaya, Yako, and Koupela, down to Salaga and other towns in Ghana, and even across to Sansane Mango in Togoland. His data on the Mossi are invaluable:

11: Skinner E-5 (1955-1957) 1964
FA28 Mossi FA28

> The whole triangle interposed between the Niger toward the north, and the country of the Eastern Mandingoes or Wangarawa toward the south, appears to be inhabited by a single race of people whose language, although they are divided into several states and nations, nevertheless appears originally to have been the same stock. It is very probable that this race in ancient times occupied the whole upper course of the Niger, and that this tract may have been wrested from it in later times by the Songhai and the Mandingoes, especially that section of the latter which is generally called Bambara. These are the Gourma toward the N.E., the Tombo toward the N.W., and between them the Mossi. . . . The strongest among these pagan kingdoms five centuries ago, and even at the present moment, is that of the Mossi, although the country is split into a number of small principalities, almost totally independent of each other, and paying only some slight homage to the ruler of the principality of Woghodogo.[7]

Europe learned more about the Mossi from Sigismund Koelle, who visited Sierra Leone in 1854. His informant was one Andrew Dixon, who had lived in Koupela before being captured and sold into slavery. He furnished information on the location of the Mossi, their wars with the Busansi, and their important commercial and political relations with the Ashanti.[8] Koelle's report, taken in conjunction with the reports of Dupuis, Bowdich, Clapperton, and Barth, shows that the Ashanti, like the Hausa and other coastal peoples, were protecting their trade when they attempted to isolate the peoples of the interior from the Europeans. But as soon as the British defeated the Ashanti in the war of 1873–74, the Sudan was opened and adventurers poured in. In 1877 and 1878, two missionaries of the Basel Mission visited the northern regions of Ghana, and subsequently gave a good description of Mossi commerce in that area.[9] Lonsdale, who visited Salaga in 1881, found among the traders in the market "the Mossi with his cattle, sheep, and slaves—these latter, generally Gurunsi, are not exposed for sale in the street or market, but can be seen where the owner resides."[10]

The activities of the various European nations in West Africa and other regions at this time led to military and diplomatic difficulties, which the Berlin Conference of 1884–85 was convened to resolve. Agreement was reached to assign "spheres of influence" to the various European nations, to regulate trade, and to provide for arbitration between rival claimants of conquered or "protected" territories. In West Africa, this meant the end and a bit peeved at not being able to put my idea into practice. I next sought the advice and consolation of an elder noble who listened quite calmly and then said: "The customs of these kafirs (heathens) are foolish." Being a Moslem, my friend was very often critical of the pagans, and could be relied upon to explain why their customs were "foolish." He said that in former days the Raga Naba would have climbed a tree and announced to the crowd any message from the district chief. Moreover, he was the custodian of all lost articles and restored them to their owners. The Moslem said that my request could not be granted because there was no Raga Naba, and that probably there would never be another. When the French first banned the institution, the local chief dismissed the Raga Naba. With the passage of years, however, the market became so dangerous that the chief tried to appoint another ex-serf to the job. This man soon died, and his successor died shortly after being appointed. Since that time the chief has made no attempt to name a new market chief.

12:Skinner E-4,5 (1955-1957) 1962
FA28 Mossi FA28

With this new knowledge I called my aide and inquired from him whether this information was true and if so, why did he not tell me the true state of affairs. His reply was that he did not wish to say that the market was bad because the local people believed that they had solved the problem of the lack of a Raga Naba. When the last Raga Naba died, the chief decided not to name a new one, but in order to placate the market tengkouga, he ordered his tengsoba to make sacrifices to it. It was believed that these sacrifices would be acceptable as long as the officiant did not bear the title of Raga Naba. The other functions of the Raga Naba, such as collecting goods for the chief and preserving peace in the market, were taken over by the Kos Naba and another servant of the chief. However, the Kos Naba had to be careful lest he overstep his authority in such a way as would acquaint the tengkouga with the real situation. In my case, the chief was acting by trying to get the Kos Naba to acquaint the people with my loss in as inconspicuous a manner as possible. The consensus was that the Kos Naba would have risked his life had he made any kind of announcement to the market people, because the tengkouga would have thought that he was the new Raga Naba, and if not contented with the people would have killed him. Under these circumstances, I withdrew my request. I discovered later that my pen was not lost but had been in the hut all the time.

Those chiefs who have succeeded in retaining their market officials even secretly have been able to maintain their control over public behavior there. The Mossi are fairly law-abiding despite the persistence among them of a warrior tradition. Every man who goes to market, or anywhere for that matter, usually carries a baton over his

1: Delobsom I-5 (no date) 1933 FA28 Mossi FA28

600

The Empire of the Mogho Naba, Customs of the Mossi of Upper Volta

[L'Empire du Mogho-Naba, Coutumes des Mossi de la Haute-Volta]

by A.A. Dim Delobsom

Paris: 1933
F. Loviton et Cie

Translated from the French by Kathryn A. Looney

Human Relations Area Files

1959

[Title page]

Table of Contents

Page

[Chapters 1, 2, 19, and 20, plus appendix, not translated]

Chapter 3. Political, Administrative, and Judicial Organization of the Mossi Empire 1

Chapter 4. The Court of the Mogho Naba. Tribute and Payments to the Naba. Other Obligations of Mossi Subjects to their Nabas 9

Chapter 5. Slavery among the Mossi 25

Chapter 6. The Djiba Naba, Crown Prince of the Mossi Empire 33

Chapter 7. The Mossi Salute. Respect due the Home of the Naba. The Cap. Precedence among Chiefs. A Legend Concerning the Origins of Chiefdom among the Mossi 40

Chapter 8. Customs. Enthronement of the Naba. Names 51

Chapter 9. The Two Major Mossi Festivals. 65

Chapter 10. The Wives of the Naba. The Sogoné. The Pogsiouré 73

Chapter 11. Marriage, Birth, and Death 81

Chapter 12. The Penetration of Islam into Mossi Country 101

ooo

Table of Contents

Page

Chapter 13. Dwellings of the Mossi Chiefs (Construction and Repair. Dwellings of Mossi Subjects 107

Chapter 14. Clothing (before and after French Occupation). Personal Grooming. Sanitation 113

Chapter 15. Mossi Dances and their Significance . . . 119

Chapter 16. Agriculture (Choosing the Land for Cultivation. Propitiatory Sacrifices. Harvesting, Threshing, and Storage in the Granaries. Diet of the Natives. The Kawinré of the Mogho Naba 124

Chapter 17. Inheritance and Rights of Succession among the Mossi 133

Chapter 18. Circumcision. Do the Mossi Practice Circumcision? 137

[46] Chapter 3

Political, Administrative, and Judicial Organization of the Mossi Empire

I. Political and Administrative Organization

643 The Mossi empire of Ouagadougou was governed prior to the period of French occupation by a supreme chief, the Mogho Naba, who was revered by all his subjects as a "god" and whose territory, in the minds of his people, had no limits. He had the power of life and death over all his subjects.

[192] The word mogho means "country of the Mossi," but by extension it also means "the world." Thus, in this sense the Mogho Naba was regarded as the master of the world.

643 631 It is said that he had under his rule 333 chiefs, naba, among whom were his ministers, the three sogon'kassemsé (great servitors), and some forty petty chiefs called kougzindba, which refers to the heaps of stones designating the place of each minister or petty naba in the emperor's court.

643 177 The authority of the Mogho Naba over his vassals. In spite of the claims made by a colonial official who was trying to free the canton chiefs of one of the administrative districts of the colony from the authority of the Mogho Naba, the emperor's power never was merely nominal. If it has become so, it is a consequence of the intervention of French [47] administrative authority in the politics of the country -- an intervention which has resulted in assigning too much power to certain chiefs.

643 669 I do not mean to imply that before French penetration into the country there were not real conflicts, wars or mere skirmishes (1),

1. In Chapter 1 [not translated]we described in great detail the war waged by the Mogho Nabas Sanum and Wobgo against Lallé. We said also that Sanum warred with the Boussouma Naba and with Boulsa.

but the chiefs who tried by these means to free themselves from the emperor's authority were usually punished for their temerity.

000 Ministers and officials in the court of the emperor of the Mossi. We shall provide a list of the persons making up the emperor's court in a later chapter.

Functions of the Ministers

645 The four ministers, Ouidi Naba, Larallé Naba, Gounga Naba, and Baloum Naba, were charged with the nomination of the kombemba (plural of kombéré, vassal chief), subject to the emperor's approval. At the present time they retain the same prerogatives subject to ratification by the administrative authorities. These ministers further assisted the emperor in deciding important matters whenever he called upon them, and they transmitted the orders of the Mogho Naba to [48] his vassals. Today the Mogho 643 Naba is hardly concerned with the regulation of affairs, since these 648 are dealt with by his ministers or by the French authorities. However, the leading court dignitaries always submit to him matters of any importance, they keep him informed about all matters of general interest, and, finally, they report to him any interviews which they may have had with the administrator of the circle, who represents the government of the colony [Ed., the circle (Fr., cercle) is the largest French administrative unit below the colony (Fr., colonie)].

Organization of Territorial Control

634 Each of the emperor's ministers had authority -- we shall 845 presently see under what conditions -- over a group of cantons [Ed., the canton (Fr., canton) is a traditional Mossi administrative unit, containing a number of villages, and several cantons together form a province; the native districts were incorporated into the French administrative system to some extent]. A kombéré naba was head of each canton. Originally and up to the time of Naba Sanum's reign, the Baloum Naba commanded the dimbissi (canton chiefs who were descendants of the recent Mogho Nabas), while the other cantons, except the most thickly populated and hence the richest, such as Zittenga, Manga, etc., were distributed

634 among the other ministers. The rich and important cantons
645 were entrusted to the Kamsaogo Naba, chief eunuch. This was [839] because the emperor wanted to be sure that he would recover the fortune left by this minister at his death. Since the latter was merely the guardian of the king's wives, he had no legitimate heirs. The eunuch appointed to replace him had to establish his own personal fortunes. Only the horses or women which the late minister might have given [49] during his lifetime to persons in his section were left with their owners. [Ed., Mossi villages are [621] divided into sections (Fr., quartier), which are really hamlets containing several households or compounds. These sections are indigenous, not colonial subdivisions.]

Powers of the Ministers over the Vassal Chiefs of the Mogho Naba

634 It would be a mistake to think that before the French occu-645 pation the ministers had any great authority over the canton chief.
642 Actually, the ministers' role, as has been pointed out, was to act as intermediaries between the emperor and the canton chiefs. They could not, however, under any right or pretext, intervene in canton affairs, since the kombéré was the only lord in the area whose command had been conferred upon him as an appanage by the Mogho Naba.

That is why it has been possible for canton chiefs who were dissatisfied with the minister under whose rule they found themselves to report, henceforth, to another minister. Furthermore, the Mogho Naba saw no objection to this. The Mossi expression, [638] Gansobend'ka sambiri n'tont vigri yé ("hospitality is not like kinship; you can evade it") amply illustrates the accuracy of the [651] foregoing. If it is further noted that before the French occupation the naba came to Ouagadougou only once a year to pay their respects to the emperor and to bring him annual tribute, one will readily understand the insignificance of the ministers' authority over them.

This does not mean, of course, that it was possible to [50] do without any intermediaries, but rather that it was possible to choose them freely. In any case, one of the incentives to 634 submission was based solely on the fact that although the em-

645 peror named new canton chiefs, he was too remote to know any-
642 thing about the children of deceased naba, so, in order to make sure during his own lifetime that his eldest son would succeed him, the kombéré affected some respect toward the emperor's ministers and made gifts to the principal dignitaries at Ouagadougou.

Present situation. It is my belief that the present political 631 and administrative reorganization, which dates back about eighteen
648 years (1912), has taken no account whatsoever of the existing hierarchy of ministers in the distribution of territorial control. Thus, it has come about that a given minister has to pass through numerous villages which are under the authority of another minister in order to reach his own administrative area. In addition, if one examines the situation closely, it seems that the sole aim of the administration ["administration" always refers to French administration] at that time was to reward certain young and capable ministers at the expense of those who were too old.

In point of fact, however, one must go back to 1908 to find the causes of such a state of disorganization. At that time the late Larrhallé Naba, Pawitraogo, a province chief, was sent off on a mission to Koudougou, and his vacated office had to be filled. Later on the emperor dismissed the Kamsogho Naba [51] and replaced him with an "incompetent," so the local administration decided to entrust the province to a more qualified minister.

It would be highly desirable if a new reorganization were put into effect which would 1) progressively eliminate certain insignificant cantons by combining them into larger units; 2) gather the so-called independent villages into cantons; and 3) grant to province chiefs identical material rewards. This last can only be achieved by an equitable allotment of the cantons. The French administration has granted equal salaries to all province chiefs and, as a consequence, has established an equality which did not formerly exist. Three of these officials are now educated men; they enjoy equal consideration, have the same needs, and alike perform valuable services. They should all be accorded equal advantages if jealousy and discontent are to be avoided.

631 Finally, to return to the kombemba, it should be stated that the vassals of the Mogho Naba at Koudougou and Kaya enjoy a 631 certain amount of independence since they can communicate with the circle commanders with no intermediary other than the interpreter, an indispensable adjunct as long as the chiefs do not attend the [French] schools. On the other hand, the authority of the vassal chiefs still attached to the administrative district of Ouagadougou is, if not entirely lost, at least greatly diminished.

Indeed, their action is thwarted by that of the ministers, the province chiefs, from whom [52] they receive orders, sometimes falsified or amplified by ambitious intermediaries.

It must certainly be conceded that such a state of affairs may have -- it has had -- an unfortunate effect on the progress of these naba. This is an evil which should be remedied without delay.

636 645 565 The local administration at the very beginning made the serious error of failing to take into account the importance of the canton chiefs, most of whom (see the list in the appendix [not translated]) are descendants of the Mogho Naba. On the other hand, virtually all the ministers and other court officials, despite the respect one owes them and the privileges they enjoy, are of humble origin (see Chapter 4 for the origins of the Ouidi Naba and the Larrhallé Naba, for example).

The Petty Kings (Dima) in the Past and Today

643 631 As has been noted in the introductory chapter [not translated], some of the chiefs have gradually freed themselves from the authority of the Mogho Naba and have assumed the title of dima, that is, "king." These chiefs are the Boussouma Naba of the Kaya circle, the Konquizitenga Naba of the Kougoudou circle, the Yako Naba of the Kougoudou circle (Yako subdivision), and the Riziam Naba of the Ouahigouya circle.

These chiefs were, in a sense, independent "rulers," since the emperor's suzerainty over them was so weak [53] that they enjoyed almost complete independence. Some of them, notably the Boussouma Naba and the Yako Naba, have authority over canton chiefs whom they invest in the same way the emperor does.

643 These dima maintain courts which with some exceptions, are like-631 that of the emperor of the Mossi.

They were appointed directly by their own ministers; the emperor took no effective role in the proceedings.

Today. The local administration has made these petty kings into simple province chiefs and sometimes -- as happened to the Konquizitenga Naba -- into mere canton chiefs.

Respect due the Mogho Naba. Each year the petty dima sent numerous gifts to the Mogho Naba (horses, cattle, and cowries).

643 An error. The Tenkodogo Naba (1), contrary [54] to what

643
634

1. It should not be assumed that the Tenkodogo Naba controls all the cantons in the administrative district of Tenkodogo.

Several Boussancé [Busansi] cantons were ruled by the Mogho Naba before the French occupation. Out of the 14 cantons which now make up the province called Boussanga, 11 were under the emperor's jurisdiction and their chiefs were appointed by him. Like all vassal chiefs, they were required to visit the emperor once a year and to bring him annual tribute.

Since Tenkodogo has been changed first to a subdivision and then to an autonomous circle, the Boussancé chiefs involved have been appointed directly by the local administration with the consent of the population; the Mogho Naba was no longer consulted. After trouble arose over the appointment of a canton chief, the Mogho Naba had to intervene, and from this affair arose the necessity of putting a relative of the emperor at the head of those cantons organized as provinces. The choice fell upon a uterine brother of Naba Kom, Moustapha Kongo.

643
634

He was recalled in 1930 after ruling for only three years. His dismissal was certainly due to errors committed in the performance of his duties, but it was also caused by the fact that the Boussancé had been independent too long to take kindly to a master.

Thus, as was pointed out at the beginning of this chapter, the local administration has interfered too much with the organization of the Mossi empire. The position of the Mogho Naba has been completely distorted, and his prestige diminished. This is why the ill-informed official to whom we have already alluded could state that the authority of the Mogho Naba over his vassal chiefs was merely nominal.

A list of Boussancé cantons under the authority of the Mogho Naba follows: (1) Niaogo, (2) Niarba, (3) Lenga, (4) Gon Boussougou, (5) Komtoéga, (6) Beguedo, (7) Ouanragou, (8) Sanogo, (9) Toalla, (10) Zourga, (11) Yakala.

643 has been accepted up to now, is a true king in his territory and as such is absolutely independent of the Mogho Naba at Ouagadougou, to the same degree as the head of the state of Yatenga (Ouahigouya) and the head of Fada N'Gourma.

As was pointed out in an earlier chapter [not translated], the Tenkodogo Naba is the descendant of Naba Zoungrana, the son of Ouedraogo, and is consequently the "elder" of the Mogho Naba, who is a descendant of Naba Oubri, the founder of the Mossi dynasty of Ouagadougou.

The Boulsa Naba, a direct descendant of the kourita [representative after death] of [55] Naba Oubri, is not a dima but merely a kombéré. He has a vassal, to be sure, the chief of Koupéla in the circle of Tenkodogo who is now considered a province chief, but the Boulsa Naba himself is a vassal of the Mogho Naba.

631
635

II. Military Organization

701 An army, properly speaking, with cadres and hierarchies, did not exist among the Mossi.

721 In the event of war, the Tansoba or Tampsoba (war minister) notified the canton chiefs who promptly assembled with all their able-bodied men and as many horsemen as possible.

705 The villages were charged with feeding the soldiers.

III. Judicial Organization

692 693 Justice was rendered in conformity with local customs which had been handed down from generation to generation and according to local practice.

1. By village chiefs, assisted by some of the elders, for petty affairs, pilfering, and insults.

2. The canton chief, assisted by his court dignitaries and the minister, ruled on matters concerning theft, adultery, and bodily attacks, as well as on other matters.

3. The Mogho Naba took cognizance of all matters of general interest, especially with crimes of assassination and murder. In theory, he could by himself pronounce the death sentence on the [565] nakomsé [descendants of Mogho Naba]. Contrary to general belief, a [56] kombéré (canton chief) also had the power of life and death over his subjects. How many individuals have been put to 661 death merely because they were wealthy! How many village chiefs have been killed by the canton chiefs over their territories without any intervention by the Mogho Naba! The nakomsé could 565 be executed, however, only for very serious crimes, such as 684 adultery with a woman of the nobility. The guilty man was led 762 into the bush by old nakomsé; they gave him a rope with which he was expected to hang himself and thus expiate his crime.

694 Justice was free; no fee was expected or assessed. The plaintiff, however, customarily presented the naba with a white or light gray 431 rooster, accompanied by the traditional satchel containing from 200 to 1,000 cowries.

[57] Chapter 4

The Court of the Mogho Naba. Tribute and Payments Due. Obligations of Mossi Subjects to their Naba.

Morning Honors Paid to the Emperor of the Mossi

644 The council of the emperor of the Mossi is held every morning in front of an antechamber called zango which opens out upon a very large courtyard.

831 The Mossi have for a long time regarded the sun as a "god."
776 Wend'pous yan, "God shows himself," refers to the rising of 643 the sun, but it is used in a figurative sense to refer to the emergence of the Mogho Naba. This illustrates the regard held by the Mossi people for their chief since he is compared to the star of daylight and thus to a "god."

643 The Mogho Naba appears each morning dressed in an ample red robe and with a red gourmousga (a kind of burnoose) folded and 292 thrown over his shoulders. On his head he wears a cap, a fez, topped with a wazourfou sebré (literally, "silver paper" [streamers], that is to say, silver amulet). Red represents the light that comes [822] with the appearance of the sun, while the silver on the cap represents the brilliance of the star itself.

644 Before the time set for the start of the ceremony, the three sogon'kassemsé (great servitors) bring into the courtyard the [58] cushion, nagpouré, and all the other insignia of office. As soon as [201] the Mogho Naba appears, they arise and make a snapping sound with thumb and index finger to indicate that the naba is coming.

"Wend'pous yan" is also cried out by the gagando and luinsé
[533] (drummers) as soon as His Majesty sits down. The Bend'Naba [chief drummer] is the only one who does not beat his drum; instead, he rubs his finger back and forth over the waxed part of the drum head to imitate the roar of the lion. Four or five young men bearing loaded rifles take their places in front of the emperor.

Honors are rendered to the Mogho Naba in the following order.

1. The Samandé Naba, Baloum Naba, Wedranga Naba, and Simandé Nabila, as well as the Zusoabin'kassanga (chief eunuch and guardian of the emperor's household), are the first to greet His Majesty and to inquire about his health.

644 2. Next come the Ouidi Naba, the Larralé Naba, the Kamsaogo Naba, the Gounga Naba, the Nemdo Naba, and the Poé Naba.

[527 788] 3. On Friday and other Moslem holidays, the imam who represents Islam at Ouagadougou comes to give the doua, a kind of benediction which consists of reciting verses from the Koran, in the morning as well as in the evening.

Lebeg'sonre. As soon as these honors have been completed, the Mogho Naba goes back into his house to put on a less dazzling costume. Shortly thereafter he once more returns to the courtyard.

[59] Next the Baloum Naba and his retinue present their respects as described above. The Ouidi Naba and his followers are not required to do so unless they have foreigners to present to His Majesty.

[533] Then, the Bend'Naba, gangando, and luinsé (drummers) and the doudissi (violin players) play together in praise of the Mogho Naba.

It should be noted that the Mogho Naba speaks to no one before his morning appearance. It is not until he has finished his ceremonial duties and returned to his apartments that his tampa (sisters) greet him.

644 273 Before the officials and ministers of the court return to their homes and as soon as the Mogho Naba has withdrawn, the Sogon'-kassanga, that is, the ranking servitor, offers them some dam (known as dolo or fermented millet beer).

1. One canari [jar] of dam is offered to the Baloum Naba, who is obligated to give a gourdful to the Zusoaba, one to the Wedkim Naba (chief groom), and one to the Soré Naba (Bendré, "chief of the path").

2. A canari of dam is then offered to the Ouidi Naba who is obligated to give a gourdful to the Poé Naba (chief confessor for the wives and pages of the Mogho Naba) and one koré [gourd] to the Bend'Naba. He drinks the remainder with the other ministers in his retinue.

[276] 3. On Fridays and holidays, kola nuts, gouré are offered to the imam after he has given his doua and before the Mogho Naba goes to renew his pledge of loyalty [60] to France before the representative of the Republic in Upper Volta.

644 431 The Mogho Naba spends the rest of the day receiving individuals who have come to see him, accepting poussoum (gifts to the chief) and giving dam, gouré, foutou (garments), etc., and listening to the praises of his courtiers.

Mogho Naba Na Tough'la, "The Mogho Naba Goes to La" (1)

1. A dependent village in the administrative district of Yako, Koudougou Circle.

173 644 [262] Tradition relates that a certain Mogho Naba, Naba Warga, had a favorite, the only one who knew that his preferred food was léla (fruit of the léhinga or wild plum tree). It should be added that ordinarily anything might be chosen as a favorite food, and it should not be supposed that the Mogho Naba eats only the best foods. Obviously he does not lack choice morsels, but he cannot be expected to like everything. One day this woman asked leave to visit her home at La and failed to return. The Magho Naba, tired of waiting and missing his favorite food, had his horse saddled one morning and announced that he wished to go and join his wife. His ministers begged him to stay at home and asked him to put off his departure until the next day... Every morning the preparations for the departure were repeated and always there was the same pleading, up to the time of the ruler's death. His son, [61] who succeeded him, chose to follow his example. The following paragraph describes the manner in which this custom was still practiced only a few years ago.

[492] When the Mogho Naba appears in the morning, one of his horses, partially harnessed, is brought into the courtyard bearing a saddle with silver stirrups, but with the girth unbuckled. After the Mogho Naba has responded to the salutations of his ministers and the whole court and has dealt with some minor matters, he declares that he is going to La. The court officials, especially the Kamsaongo Naba, appear before him and say: "Sire, order them to unsaddle your horse; you shall go tomorrow." The Mogho Naba of course agrees to this, but he retires to his apartments rather

173 abruptly, as though he were somewhat provoked by this obstacle
644 to what he wants to do. At the same time the saddle is removed and the horse returned to the stables.

It should also be noted that every morning the pougtiéma (first wife) orders a basket and hamper to be filled with all the things needed for a journey, intending to accompany her husband to Là.

As soon as the Mogho Naba postpones his journey to the following day, the pougtiéma, duly warned, unpacks her basket.

Today, the breath of civilization has blown upon these ancient practices, and the present Mogho Naba merely sees his horse, which is walked up and down while he is receiving his ministers. The animal is at once taken back to the stables when the [62] king returns to his palace without having tried to mount it, much less having heard any entreaties from the Kamsaongo Naba.

Koaga Basgo

644 At sundown each day the Baloum Naba goes to the residence
789 of the Mogho Naba for the koaga. Only the Zusobin-Kassanga (chief eunuch) and the Sogon'kassanga (ranking servitor) assist at this performance. The koaga is a sort of earthenware basin into which is put a bit of fire and ... mystery. The head servitor places the koaga in the courtyard in front of the antechamber and blows on the fire, which quickly blazes up and then dies down. Meanwhile, the bendré (drummer) has been rubbing his hand back and forth over the waxed portion of the drumhead.

During the whole performance, no one is allowed either to enter or leave the house of the Mogho Naba. Anyone coming from [687] the outside is not allowed to pass through the courtyard during the proceedings and anyone caught watching the koaga basgo was severely punished by the lash or even executed. When the performance is over, the Zusoba and the Baloum Naba, each of whom was seated at a particular place, arise, then approach and greet each other, and wait to be served some dam before separating for the rest of the night. They sometimes also salute the Mogho Naba before returning to their quarters.

[63]
Ministers and Officials of the Court of the Mogho Naba

644 645 Ministers. (a) Ouidi Naba (literally, "chief of the horses," or superintendent of His Majesty's stables). In the old days the Ouidi Naba had the duty of choosing the color and kind of horse suitable for the Mogho Naba. He usually had charge of the horses of deceased chiefs.

202 644 If a kombéré (canton chief) owned horses during his lifetime, upon his death one of them is sent to the Mogho Naba in Ouagadougou as bearer of the sad news. Branches of the tahnga (karite [or shea] tree), wound with white rope, are tied to the horse's tail.

[64] The horse thus presented to the Mogho Naba is then handed over to one of the representatives of the Ouidi Naba who, after cutting loose the branches with a knife and leaving them in the courtyard of the Mogho Naba, leads the animal to Ouidin [section of the Ouidi Naba].

Unless the Mogho Naba gives the horse to someone, the Ouidi Naba is free to dispose of it.

645 (b) Larrhallé Naba, second minister of the Mogho Naba. Formerly he accompanied the Tansoba or Tampsoba to war.

In the section where the Larrhallé Naba now lives, there were once enormous trees whose leaves were constantly astir. When he was made a minister, the Larrhallé Naba said that he wished to dwell at the place "where the leaves on the trees are always astir" (tisse vand'sin y a lag, lag zighin wan). From this came the name of Larrhallé, which designates the section.

(c) Gounga Naba, third minister (1). His section stands in a

645 173 1. Originally the Gounga Naba was the prime minister, and the title was his by right since he was a companion of Naba Oubri. One day, as he was attending to a natural need, he met a very handsome young man and offered his friendship to him; the latter accepted. Later he presented the boy to Naba Oubri who adopted him, settled him at court, and put him in charge of the royal stables. The Gounga Naba then said to the Mogho Naba: "Since I have come to you, give the first rank to this man. I will show him what he must do to please you. He will be the Ouidi Naba."

645
173

A man from Tansobongo, having heard that the Ouidi Naba was living in the greatest ease, came to see him. He, too, was a handsome youth. He was presented to the Mogho Naba (Naba Oubri) by the Gounga Naba who proposed the young man's appointment as second minister, the Larrhallé Naba, and reserved for himself the post of third minister.

So it came about that the Gounga Naba is the emperor's third minister.

645 place where there were once many goumsé (gounga, silk-cotton tree); hence, his name.

He is a brother-in-arms of the Tansoba and always accom-
[126] panied him to war, where he chose death rather than defeat, especially if the Tansoba had been killed.

644 (d) Baloum Naba, the chief steward of the palace and chief servitor of the Mogho Naba. He never goes to war, but remains always at the side of the Mogho Naba. It is his duty to carry out [181] [65] sacrifices, such as killing the chickens or livestock offered to the manes or to the spirits when such sacrifices are prescribed by the soothsayers or other charlatans for the health and well-being of the Mogho Naba.

(e) Kamsaogho Naba, formerly accompanied the Tansoba to [839] war. The Kamsaogho Naba is a eunuch, and for this reason he is commonly called Mogho Naba na poug'tiéma, "first wife of the Mogho Naba."

Other personages (not ministers). (a) Samandé Naba, in charge of all of the people in the outer courtyard of the Mogho Naba and a brother-in-arms of the Larrhallé Naba.

644 (b) Poé Naba, formerly the confessor for the wives and pages
687 of the Mogho Naba. His duty, carried out by magical practices, 661 was to denounce those wives or persons guilty of treason or of 644 attempted adultery. This practice (poéré) found many victims,

687 and its suppression by the French was a real service to the Mossi,
661 who were formerly murdered for a trifle. An ogling glance at a chief's wife was punishable by death. A man who met one of the wives of the Mogho Naba on the road was executed along with the wife. If one met a napagha [royal wife], he left the path and took to the bush. The woman herself would run off and return to the road only when she was sure that the man was a long way off.

Such is naturally no longer the case, and the wives of the Mogho Naba on their way to the market at [66] Ouagadougou no longer expect not to be looked at or even jostled. I hasten to add, however, that the Mossi still retain great respect for them and will even swallow serious insults, such as tampiri, "bastard," from a napagha if they are so unlucky as to offend them.

644 (c) Daporé Naba, chief of the section of the free or house
683 slaves. It was formerly the duty of the Daporé Naba and his followers to massacre any pages or other convicted persons whose execution had been ordered by the Mogho Naba.

644 (d) Bend'Naba, chief of the drummers of the Mogho Naba.

(e) Soré Naba (literally, "chief of the path"), the drummer who always accompanies the warriors and who, therefore, even in time of peace, is allotted a horse.

644 If the enemy appears to be winning during a battle, the Soré
726 Naba kindles the courage of the warriors of the Mogho Naba and constantly asks for a head, m'data zougou. This means that he is asking each warrior to forget himself and to think only of victory. In order to have a victory, the enemy must suffer such losses that they decide either to retreat or to surrender. Thus, the expression m'data zougou implies ruthless slaughter.

701 (f) Tansoba or Tampsoba, the war chief. The Tansoba of the Mogho Naba lives in a small village, Moussa, in the province of the Baloum Naba.

701 [67] When there is friction between the Mogho Naba and one 687 of his vassals and there seems to be no hope of agreement, the Mogho Naba sends to the Tansoba for logdo (warriors armed with arrows). The Tansoba at once proceeds to Ouagadougou and stops at Baoghin. The emperor assembles his ministers and the principal dignitaries of his court and says to them: "I never thought that chief X, to whom I myself gave the pougla (red fez) would dare to 701 oppose me. I therefore demand that his fez be returned to me."

687 To take away the fez of a naba is to dethrone him and reduce him to the level of his subjects.

The court officials, including the Tansoba, at once send emissaries to the chief at fault, asking him to choose between suicide (some take a poison called sounadré, while others kill themselves with a poisoned arrow) and war with the Mogho Naba.

If the chief is not prepared for such a summons, he kills himself, and the envoys return with the news.

669 If, on the other hand, he declares that he wants pouwega, that 701 is, war and a noble death, he sends back the representatives of the ministers. A few days later, with drums beating and the Tansoba, chief of the army, at its head, the whole warrior band appears before his walls.

The Tansoba sends the Samandé Naba to the chief to ask him to confirm his declaration of war. If the naba still wants war, he usually replies: "Ya yingri bala la ka sakénian."

The Tansoba withdraws, sending word to the chief [68] to expect him back on a stated day (seven or eight days later); this period of time will enable the chief to assemble his warriors also. When the day arrives, it is a merciless battle, a massacre.

727 Often the forces of the Mogho Naba are victorious, and in that event the slaves, livestock, and other property go to those who seized them. Only the corpses belong to the Tansoba.

701 If an arrow, even a poisoned one, wounds the Tansoba, he 577 must under no circumstances pull it out. Indeed, he must often endure thirst and hunger, and it is only when he is at rest in an enclosed place that the arrows are removed from his body. It should [789] be noted that since the Tansoba's costume is virtually covered with amulets and other charms, he is not very likely to be wounded seriously by an arrow. This is not, of course, to belittle his bravery and composure in the face of danger, since he is expected [762] never to retreat and, if the enemy is victorious, often prefers to kill himself rather than to report a defeat to the Mogho Naba.

644 There are, in addition to the foregoing, a great many petty naba whose role is not clearly defined and of whom it seems needless to speak.

Customary Payments by the Mossi to their Chiefs

643 651 To the Mogho Naba. In former times, before the coming of the French, the kombemba (canton chiefs) [69] and the nakomsé (descendants of Mogho Naba) were all required to come to Ouagadougou once a year to pay their respects to the Mogho Naba on this occasion to present gifts to him (cattle, horses, sheep, cowries, and loads of millet).

For all practical purposes, this amounted to a fixed fee which varied in amount, of course, with the resources of the contributors (canton chiefs and nakomsé) and the number of subjects that the administration entrusted to the leaders.

Although the horses, cattle, and sheep were personally contributed by the kombéré, the cowries and millet were furnished by their Mossi subjects. The canton chief set the amounts of cowries and grain due from each village according to the number of its inhabitants.

The assessment was usually 100 cowries for a married man and 50 for a bachelor (adult). The payment in millet was 10 baskets, each averaging 40 kilograms.

Likewise, a kind of fee was paid annually to the Djiba Naba, crown price, in cowries and livestock. This was done to stay in the good graces of his father, the emperor.

643 651 178 Nowadays the canton chiefs (kombemba), who come to Ouagadougou more often than formerly for important feasts and other events, never return to their lands without paying their respects to the Mogho Naba and giving him the traditional gifts (cowries and livestock). Gifts are now made more often, but they no longer have [70] the same importance. As a general rule, certain canton chiefs still require their people to give small amounts of cowries when they visit Ouagadougou for the celebration of July 14. Some chiefs, however, either because they fear penalties from the administration or because they think that their people are already heavily burdened, prefer to give the little they have personally acquired by selling produce (cotton, yams, etc.) or trading.

Some of the vassal chiefs of the Mogho Naba, who, however, are no longer subject to Ouagadougou since the division of the

643
651 Mossi circle into several administrative districts, still continue to 178 make substantial annual gifts to the Mogho Naba (cowries, cattle, and a considerable amount of grain, millet and rice).

634 Payments Due the Kombemba (canton chiefs). Formerly each
651 canton held one or more ritual feasts each year, and the Mossi subjects, that is, the tengsoba (village elders, notables, and those in comfortable circumstances), regularly made gifts to the canton chief (cowries, goats, sheep, and roosters). The Peulh [Peul] gave cattle.

The canton chiefs also retained a portion of the payment made by the people for the benefit of the Mogho Naba.

[178] At the present time these traditional gifts are still made, but white or light gray roosters are more and more being substituted for livestock. [71]

661 Payments due the Ministers of the Mogho Naba. In order to 431 maintain good relations with the ministers, court officials, and 644 intermediaries between the emperor and his vassals, the canton
634 chiefs in former times used to present unspecified gifts to the high dignitaries at court when they paid their respects to the Mogho Naba. A certain number of cowries was given to the pougtiéma, first wife of the Mogho Naba (500 cowries equals two and a half francs, formerly 50 centimes).

A canton chief who has been called to Ouagadougou for some reason may choose not to call on the emperor, but he is obligated to bring cowries, a sheep, or a rooster to the minister who is head of the province in which his canton is located.

651 Common laws. (a) Regulation of market fees. Before the ar-
443 rival of the French, market fees at Ouagadougou were collected for the benefit of the Mogho Naba by a collector in his employ.

In important villages, fees were collected by Gourounsi [Grunshi] captives on behalf of the canton chiefs (kombemba).

651 (b) Hunting. In former times, before the fields were cleared
224 for seeding, the Mossi used to go out in groups of several villages
634 on hunting drives. Small game (partridges, guinea fowl, hares, etc.) were left to the hunters. On the other hand, a haunch of any quadruped killed (deer, gazelle, coba [a kind of horse antelope], etc.) was reserved for the canton chief.

651 [72] (c) Fishing. Fishing in the larger water holes could take 226 place only by authorization of the canton chiefs. The day on 634 which fishing took place was treated as a holiday. All the young men in the village and their neighbors, even if the latter did not belong to the canton, came out on the day set by the canton chief and fished for the benefit of the naba. All large fish were reserved for him, and only the small ones were left to the fishermen.

This practice still prevails.

776 Other common laws. Many deities are worshipped by the 782 Mossi. Groves, fields, mountains, etc., all have their "god."
661 It often happens that the naba (canton chief), at the behest of the soothsayers, offers an animal. This may be a sheep, a goat, or even a cow, and it is offered to one or another of the deities, either for his personal interests or for those of his people, or perhaps to ask for rain. The naba dispatches some sogoné [servitor] or samand'kamba [people of the outer courtyard] to one of the villages in his canton to find a victim. The animal is taken without its owner having any right to complain or to ask for compensation. Is there not a Mossi saying to the effect, Talagh-gounda [538] Naba'gninga the serf raises livestock for the benefit of his naba)"?

For sacrifices prescribed for the Mogho Naba, the animals are provided either by the inhabitants of the [73] town of Ouagadougou and its environs or by the canton chiefs.

Labor Service Customarily Required of the Mossi on Behalf of their Chiefs

651 Forced labor was used to cultivate the fields of the naba and to repair or construct their houses.

647 The Mogho Naba. (a) Cultivation of fields. The duty of 651 cultivating the fields of the Mogho Naba fell entirely on the Bilbalsé,
241 the residents of Bilbalogo (section of the Baloum Naba) and on all former servitors and descendants of former servitors. The Kam Naba (chief of the young men), charged with assembling the workers, had a crier announce in all the important markets that on such-and-such a day the Bilbalsé were to assemble in the emperor's

644 fields. On that day, the Mogho Naba had one or two cows
651 slaughtered and a large quantity of sagbo (millet cakes) prepared
241 for the workers. If the latter, after being assembled two or three times in the manner indicated above, were not finished with all the fields, the work was carried on by the samand'kamba (the people who dwelt in the outer courtyard of the Mogho Naba).

644 The emperor, however, received none of the millet grown in 574 his own fields, which, incidentally, did not have their present boundaries. This millet was reserved exclusively [74] for use as food for foreign visitors and for the feeding of horses (1).

1. For the ceremony of threshing this millet (kawinré), see the special chapter below [Chapter 16].

644 It was the duty of the canton chiefs and the ministers to pro-
651 vide loads of millet for the use of the Mogho Naba and his harem ("harem" should be understood to mean all young or middle-aged women, but to exclude the elderly women who have to support themselves and who have their private fields).

644 (b) Repair of the houses of the Mogho Naba. The work of 651 building and repairing the houses actually belonging to the em-
356 peror fell entirely upon the inhabitants of Bilbalogo (section of the Baloum Naba), Kamsaonghin (section of the chief eunuch), and Dapoya (section of the slaves of the Mogho Naba).

[343] The outbuildings, wédanga, four round huts with thatched roofs located outside the emperor's house, served as stables for the horses given to the Mogho Naba by canton chiefs or other personages and were built and maintained by three ministers, the Ouidi Naba, Larrhallé Naba, and Gounga Naba, with the help of the people in their sections.

The tamping of the floors and clay roofs was done wholly by the wives of the persons responsible for [75] the construction or repair, that is, the wives of the ministers and of the inhabitants of their sections.

Labor service due the province chiefs, ministers of the emperor.

651 (a) Cultivation of fields. The fields belonging to the ministers
645 of the Mogho Naba were cultivated by a system of payments in kind 241 as follows.

651 For the Baloum Naba; the work was done by all the bilbalsé.
645 The Kam Naba set the day for the sekka (gathering), and all the 241 young and able-bodied men were required to report. They received the food they required from the Baloum Naba. The number of work days was not fixed. The sekka might be held once or several times, depending on the acreage.

For the other ministers, the Ouidi Naba, Gounga Naba, and Larrhallé Naba, the field work was done by the people in their entourage (that is, the inhabitants of their respective sections) and in the neighboring villages which were formerly under their jurisdiction. Since the formation of the canton of Ouagadougou and its outskirts, the area has been under the exclusive authority of the Baloum Naba (fourth minister of the emperor).

645 If, however, the fields were so extensive that their cultiva-
476 tion could not be taken care of solely by the above system -- the 241 laborers also had to care for their own fields -- the ministers [76] called for volunteers from among the young men in the neighboring villages and paid them with food and drink. This is the sissoaga, a system commonly in use among the Mossi.

645 (b) Construction and repair of houses. As a general rule, re-
651 pair of the roofs of huts in the establishments of the province chiefs 356 was the duty of the inhabitants of their respective sections and of the neighboring villages under their jurisdiction.

651 The canton chiefs. The cultivation of the fields of the naba 634 and the repair of the huts in their establishments were wholly in-241 cumbent on their subjects. Each village had a fixed number of 356 huts to be repaired or roofed; this is known as sough'pilli, and it is still in effect annually.

651 Today, perhaps in the interests of tranquillity, canton chiefs require labor service in their fields only from their sogoné and samand'kamba and sometimes even resort to the sissoaga.

The local administration, with respect for local customs, has the policy of organizing the system in a way that, in our opinion, will safeguard the interests of the natives, overburdened due to the negligence of the province chiefs, and at the same time will enhance the prestige of the Mossi chiefs.

653 The naba is not entitled to any other labor services. The building of dams to provide water for the villages cannot be 653 considered forced labor since this work is done in the common interest.

[77] Installation of a Market

366 As in many other circumstances, the Mossi first consult soothsayers when they desire to establish a market. The Moaga [singular of Mossi] is convinced that invisible spirits are everywhere, behind his house, under the trees, in the fields and groves, and even in uninhabited places, so above all he is anxious to obtain the good will of these beings whose anger is fearful. It is, therefore, only after consulting several soothsayers, who use various types of divination (with cowries, stones, sand, etc.), that the village chief has chickens and livestock sacrificed on the site where he wishes to set up the new market. The naba chooses two or three candidates from among his followers, and the soothsayers are required to indicate which of these has the best prospect of good fortune and a promising future. This person will be the one who performs the sacrifice. The victims are furnished, in theory, by the village or canton chief, unless he decides to call on the populace. In this case, a small assessment is made on some of the notables, and the proceeds are used to buy chickens, a goat, or a sheep.

366 In any event, the canton chief is not permitted to appropriate the animals in the villages or sections under his jurisdiction as would be done in the case of sacrifices offered for the general welfare of the country.

The individual chosen by the bagba [soothsayers] presents himself at the site, accompanied by a more or less [78] impressive crowd, depending on the importance of the village. The women bring fritters and other provisions.

The following sacramental words are pronounced: "Ya sida Ting' Naba yeta nan lougoul dagh, Naba zidwendé Bad kom deghin kon zigh tinghin damba, tib kon yaramba, tib regh kon saramba, tiya gnimassem lad ratta, tib regh lass zim-yellé, tiya nogoam la tigue koada soaba lad zoïta." A literal translation follows. "This is true, the canton chief wishes to install a market on this spot. Oh God, the Sun, here are water and animals for zigh tinghin damba (people who died childless), for grandparents and ancestors. We ask 366 for good fortune and health. Prevent all bloodshed in this market.

782 We also fear those who are quarrelsome and those who talk too much, those who provoke disorder." The chicken is the first victim to be sacrificed, and if the offering is accepted, it must have first fallen on its back and only then turned over face downward (this means that the gods of the place will protect the naba and the persons who will frequent the market). Next the goat or sheep is killed.

The new market is opened immediately after the sacrifice. Those present buy the women's fritters. Ordinarily, Mossi markets [1443] are held every three days. The news travels rapidly that such-and-such a village has a market, and thus the business of the market gradually grows.

Collection of fees. It is only later on, one or even two years
366 after the installation of his new market and when [79] it is success-651 ful, that the canton chief appoints a yaguinga (grandson, or, more [601] accurately in native terms, a sister's son (nephew)or son's son (grandson), of the naba or of a member of his family) or a Gourounsi captive to act as collector of market fees. (We shall list below the various fees for a place in the market as they were collected for the benefit of the naba before the arrival of the French.)

366 Transfer of the market. Upon the death of a naba (the emperor, a vassal chief, or even the chief of the village where the market is held), the market is temporarily set up in another place. In large towns, such as Ouagadougou, for example, there may be as many markets as there are sections. These temporary markets are called kim'dagha (market of the kimsé, that is, of the deceased).

366 When a new naba has been named, the market is moved back
782 to its former site and the reinstallation calls for new sacrifices of fowl and livestock. That was why in 1897, when the market at Ouagadougou was being re-established, the emperor asked the captain who was in command of the post to provide a cow to be sacrificed along with a sheep and a rooster which he himself provided.

Likewise, whenever a hyena has run through the market (its 366 presence is discovered either by the tracks left by the animal or by 825 consulting the soothsayers), just as happens when a naba dies, the 787 market must be moved elsewhere for a few days. It is believed that if [80] a brawl should occur after a hyena had passed through the market, there would certainly be a death.

Scale of Market Fees Collected by the Mogho Naba and the Canton Chiefs Before the French Occupation

443
651

At Ouagadougou two collectors had the duty of gathering market fees.

The Kos Naba (from kossé "to sell," and naba, "chief") collected a tax on every animal slaughtered whose meat was sold at the market.

The Ragh' Naba (from ragha, "market," and naba, "chief") collected fees on all other produce.

The fees were as follows.

Captives. 1,000 cowries per captive sold; fee paid by the seller.

Large animals. (a) Oxen, 250 cowries per ox slaughtered; cows, 250 cowries per cow slaughtered. (In addition, the hump of every head of cattle slaughtered was taken for the Mogho Naba and delivered to him that evening.)

(b) Donkeys: 200 cowries per donkey sold, paid by the seller.

(c) Horses: no tax was collected. Horses, being luxury animals and sought only by chiefs and a few [81] well-to-do persons (rakangba) were not put up for sale at the market.

Small animals. No special tax on sheep, goats, etc.

Dam (dolo, beer). No tax. The seller was supposed to present a gourd or canari of beer to the chief of her section (the emperor's minister) whenever she made some. This was called the lenga, that is, a "taste." This practice no doubt explains the lack of any tax on the beer merchants.

Cotton strips. Taxes graded from 20 to 100 cowries according to the size of the rolls of cloth.

Cotton. First collected in kind and then a tax of 20 cowries paid after the sale.

Grains and fats. Small millets, sorghum, rice, peanuts, millet that is sprouted to be used for beer, beans, and peas: for these kinds of produce, the Ragh' Naba and his assistants had special measuring devices, bowls of a sort, made of wood and used to collect payments in kind. All of the grains, including the millet used to make beer, were stored by the Ragh' Naba in granaries for disposal by the emperor.

443 Ready-made clothing, beads. No tax collected.
651 [82] Soumbala (kalgo in Mossi) [locust beans pressed into balls]. Payment in kind (one ball per seller).

Other spices. No fee paid.

Karite [shea] butter. Collected with a soutga (a kind of ladle), karite butter was used almost exclusively for the horses of the Mogho Naba.

Fritters and other cooked foods. Actually no fee was called for on these products, but the collectors demanded the payment of a tax in kind to provide their own food or that of the samand'kamba (servitors of the outer courtyard).

Salt. 300 cowries for each load (ox or donkey).

Hoes, axes. Each merchant provided a daba or an axe for work in the field of the naba. Nothing was collected at the subsequent market if all of the tools had not been sold in one day.

Jewelry. No tax was collected. The jewelers who made [306] bracelets and other jewels for the wives of the naba, as well as various harness parts, were exempt from all taxes.

Other markets. Fees collected for the benefit of the canton chiefs were about the same as [83] those paid at the market of Ouagadougou. In small markets, however, payments were made in kind. The edible products made up the food of the collectors, Gourounsi captives for the most part, who were prevented by their social status from having wives and so had no one to prepare food for them.

Chapter 5

Slavery Among the Mossi

567 We shall endeavor in the following lines to describe slavery as it existed among the Mossi before the French occupation.

567 173 We know that slavery has existed for a very long time in the land of the Mogho Naba, but, because of the total lack of dates in Mossi history -- handed down from generation to generation by the griot [heralds, drummers] of the naba -- it is difficult to determine when it was first introduced.

567 It is known, however, that the first slaves of the Mossi were all of Boussanga [Busansi] origin. The canton of Garango in what is

567 now the circle of Tenkodogo constituted a reservoir (figuratively called lambagré, "cotton reserve") from which the warriors and vassals of the emperor brought back hundreds of young slaves. This was because Garango recognized no authority; it was dependent neither on the Mogho Naba of Ouagadougou nor on the king of Tenkodogo. Tradition has it that the warriors of the Mossi chiefs were always surprising the people of Garango on market days. The memory of these raids is why, even today the markets at Garango [366] are open only from six in the morning until noon.

The Mossi considered themselves to be free men, and no one,
[64] not even naba, had the [85] right to reduce a Moaga subject to slavery. The facial tattoos made it easy to distinguish the Moaga [304] from foreigners.

Since there were few contacts between neighboring villages, 567 it was difficult even for highwaymen to sell young people from near-
674 by areas. This does not mean that there were not, all the same, captives of Mossi origin. Bandits rode, for instance, from Ouagadougou to Boussouma. They always carried large leather [492] sacks tied to their saddles and into them thrust children and women who were taken by surprise while gathering fruit in the bush. Such captives were always sold far from their home villages. Naturally such practices were severely dealt with by the naba. Naba Wobgo drove the canton chief of Bilgotenga, Warongo, from his territory because he enslaved Mossi people. Warongo was forced to take refuge in Yatenga and returned home only after the coming of the French.

567 Some of the slaves brought back from Garango were kept by the emperor, and the rest were distributed among the warriors. Up to that time no one thought of using them for anything but field work and domestic labor.

It was Naba Baongo, the twenty-sixth successor of Oubri, who first thought of selling the slaves. He said: "Id kossi bazas kamba tib boude nan wa saf" (literally, "let us sell these slave dogs; perhaps, one day, [86] there will be no more of them"). It is as if the emperor had foreseen the suppression of slavery and the emancipation of the slaves.

Today one seldom encounters former Boussanga slaves. They have no doubt returned to their villages since the arrival of the [304] French. Their descendants (house slaves, dogyiri) now wear the same facial tattoos as the Mossi.

567 The only slaves who have remained faithful to their masters or, more exactly, who have preferred to remain in Mossi territory after their emancipation, are nearly all Gourounsi.

The Gourounsi Captives

567 727 648 Sonrhaï [Songhai] forces led by Alpha Haïnon, Gazeré, and Babato used to raid Gourounsi country. They reduced a large number of Gourounsi to slavery, immediately making soldiers of the more enterprising among them to fight against their own people and selling or exchanging the rest for horses. Mossi country has always had a large supply of horses, so the Mossi used to go to Léo to trade their horses for slaves or simply to trade their slaves to the Sonrhaï for cowries. [439]

567 648 The Sonrhaï chiefs maintained good relations with the emperor of the Mossi, Naba Sanum. That is why they spared the Gourounsi village chiefs who had taken refuge with the Mogho Naba.

Boukary-koutou, the future Naba Wobgo, enjoyed the [87] regard and friendship of the Sonrhaï since he aided them in their wars against the Gourounsi in exchange for an ample share of the booty and slaves. We have shown that the large number of Gourounsi whom he brought with him to Ouagadougou contributed mightily to his being named emperor of the Mossi.

567 651 During the reigns of Naba Koutou, Sanum, and Wobgo, there were special slave markets attached to the regular markets at Ouagadougou and other large centers. A fee of 1,000 cowries was collected for the benefit of the naba for each captive sold, regardless of sex.

567 302 787 When owners desired to sell a slave, they first shaved his head, and it was only after the hair had begun to grow again that he was taken to market. The cutting of the hair derives from a superstition among the Mossi.

Depending on where the hair starts to grow, whether well back on the head, at the forehead, or near the ears, the interpretation varies as to how the slave is to be regarded: as a dangerous being; as a lucky or unlucky influence on the family owning him.

We shall not now go into details since such beliefs will be discussed in a special section.

567 The several categories of captives are as follows.

1. The Yemdaogo, all of whom are of foreign origin (Boussanga and Gourounsi) and either bought or captured during a war.

2. The daporé or dapobi (house slaves) who are the decendants of slaves. [88]

3. The bengaré, former slaves of the Peulh, who have abandoned their masters and put themselves under the sole authority of the Mogho Naba.

4. The Kamboiensé.

The Various Types of Slaves

567 Daporé ("living behind the house"). (a) The daporé belong-
563 ing to the Mogho Naba. At Ouagadougou there is a section called Dapoya, and its inhabitants are called Dapobi. They are wrongly considered (even by themselves) to be captives. Of Kibissi origin (we have noted that the Kibissi, the Ninissi, and the Gourounsi were the original inhabitants of the present Mossi area), they came of their own volition to Obri-Bangrenaba (Naba Oubri's chief of the bangré slaves), and he presented them to the emperor. It has been impossible to find out who was reigning when they arrived. The Mogho Naba first installed them at Wavoussé and later behind his house where they acted as guards and also were entrusted with important responsibilities.

These are voluntary captives. They are therefore not yemsé in the usual sense of the word, since they were neither bought nor sold, and the emperor did not mistreat them, although he did not grant them, as foreigners, the same rights as those possessed by his [583] subjects. The dapobi could not marry Mossi girls. They were obliged to marry slaves, and that is perhaps why they are considered slaves themselves. The children of these marriages, called [89] dogyiri ("born in the house") make up the "house slave" class.

567 (b) Daporé of the Kamsaoughin and daporé of the canton chiefs. In addition to the foreign dapobi just mentioned, there are true dapobi who were either captured in battle or bought. The former are slaves of the Mogho Naba and are entrusted to the care of the Kamsaougho Naba, chief eunuch, who is responsible for guarding

567 part of the emperor's harem. The dapobi belonging to the canton chiefs, belonging to the kombemba, are of the same origin. While the Mogho Naba could not sell the dapobi of Kibissi origin, the emperor and the canton chiefs could do as they liked with the true dapobi. They were sold for the most trifling faults and their wives and children were either sent away with them or turned over to other deserving captives.

Slaves of the Crown. (a) The bangaré. These are Peulh captives who have gradually cast off the authority of their masters and who have submitted voluntarily to the authority of the Mogho Naba.

A herd of cattle is called nab'bangaré, and it seems likely that the word bangaré, "herd," to designate this type of slave came from that source. However, the bangaré are not solely former Peulh slaves since a free individual who has committed a serious crime in his [90] native village and fears reprisal comes to join the "herd."

Once presented to the Mogho Naba, they were henceforth considered slaves and, as such, immune from prosecution.

567 The principal bangaré villages, generally known as "independent 62 villages," are: Kaïbo (province of Gounga); Manghin, Zaanga (canton of Zorgongo); Zaon'pighin, Payaobtinga (canton of Boudry); Nabasnoghin (canton of Nedogo); Bangar'Nabilin (canton of Zorgo); Gandaogo (canton of Zoungou); Boumintoré, Sidtenga, Mandié, Bougoumbarga, etc.

567 The emperor could supply himself from these "herds" when-
681 ever the need arose. Any bangaré who had committed serious crimes or who had been denounced as dangerous individuals who spread disorder in the villages or committed robbery were castrated and made into eunuchs or sold by order of the emperor.

[582] The bangaré intermarry since no free Mossi father would give them a daughter in marriage. This is solely due to the fact that if the emperor decided to sell a bangaré, his family would share the same fate. The father of the wife would not intervene in such a case, because this might be dangerous for him. So it is easily understandable that, under these circumstances, no father would seek such a match.

567 Bangaré chiefs. The chiefs of bangaré villages [91] are ap-622 pointed by the Mogho Naba. The villages themselves are free of any 567 control by the canton chiefs in whose territories they are located.

622 The inhabitants pay nothing to the kombéré nor can the chief require any labor service in his fields or for the upkeep of his houses. They recognize only the Mogho Naba as chief.

567 Kamboinsé. True Kamboinsé are not Mossi; they came from the west during the reign of Naba Waraga (nineteenth successor of Oubri). Like the dapobi of the Dapoya section they came with guns (their chief even had a [ceremonial] stool) to put themselves under the authority of the Mogho Naba. Their chief, Gambaré by name, told the emperor that they had come to offer themselves as soldiers and slaves to help him pacify his territory. The Kamboinsé occupy a section of the town behind the Catholic mission on the right side of the road to Pô.

When the emperor's native gunners found themselves faced with competition from foreigners, they countered by appointing their own chief who took the title of Kamboin Naba. They are, however, different from the true Kamboinsé, and they live a dozen or so kilometers from Ouagadougou in the villages of Kamboinsé and Wobrigré.

While the first-mentioned Kamboinsé are voluntary slaves, the others are true slaves captured in war or bought by the emperor.

567 426 [92] Use of slaves as security for debt. Captives might be used to settle debts. It should be noted that the right to own slaves was not limited to the emperor and his vassals. Any prosperous Moaga (dakangré) might own them.

[612] If the head of a household died leaving debts, the heirs could sell a few slaves to pay off the obligation. If, however, the creditor preferred to have the slaves, the latter were put up for appraisal just as though they were livestock.

In the same way, slaves could be traded for horses, garments, or even loads of kola nuts.

567 If slaves were maltreated by their owners, providing that the latter were not of the nobility, they could put themselves under the protection of the naba. In that event they ceased to belong to their former owners. On the other hand, if a Moaga took it upon himself [682] to kill a slave, he at once had to pay a fine of 100,000 cowries to his canton chief as a blood price.

567 439 Ordinarily, captives who were brought back from the wars were at once sold to the Haoussa [Hausa] or Yarcé [Yarse] who traded

567 them for kola nuts with the Achanti [Ashanti] or for loaves of salt
439 at Timbuktu. Although they were always transported by roundabout routes to prevent them from finding their way back to their homes, still some of them always managed to escape.

492 The naba used the young yemdado as soroné or grooms, and 567 they would often [93] take the young and attractive women (yempoksé) as wives.

441 The sale of free men. Neither the emperor of the Mossi nor 681 his vassals sold their subjects. Individuals who were regarded as dangerous were simply put to death unless they took refuge in a bangaré to avoid being executed, as has been noted above. Some were sent to the emperor to be made into eunuchs.

304 The facial tattoos worn by the Mossi clearly distinguished them
567 from neighboring peoples. However, if by accident or because of need a naba sold a free man and the latter was claimed by his rela-
689 tives, the chief was required to buy back the slave or to indemnify his family. We have described above how a canton chief was exiled by the emperor for having sold free Mossi.

583 Concealed selling of women and children. In the chapter on marriage customs among the Mossi we shall show that a native
562 Moaga did not demand a bride price because he did not want to feel that 567 he was selling his daughter. There is no doubt that this rule has exceptions. Indeed, we shall show that the failure to pay a debt, a bout of drunkenness, or a favor received might suffice to mortgage the future of a daughter, even though at the time she might be a small child and quite unaware of her fate. In any event, there would be no question of her expressing any opinion, since her wishes are never taken into account. During periods of famine -- which have been [131] occurring almost [94] regularly for some years -- a small basket of millet is enough to make a father promise his daughter. In the same way, we regret to say, a great many girls are promised in exchange for trifling sums at the time the poll tax is paid.

567 Rights of slaves. Since he is regarded as an inferior being, the yemdaogo (slave) has no well-defined rights. He is required to perform all kinds of domestic work and must give unquestioning obedience to his master and the master's family. Besides his essential duties, however, he is permitted to do some farming for himself, practice some trade, or to raise cattle, with the proceeds constituting 567 his personal fortune. The management of any such property is left entirely to him. If the master becomes indebted [to the slave], he is required to pay the debt within a fixed time limit.

Emancipation from slavery. As was indicated in the foregoing paragraph, it was possible for a slave to amass property through his own efforts. He might then free himself by paying his master 100,000 cowries. He then might either return to his native village or settle in his master's village. There have been slaves who not only freed themselves in this way, but also became slave owners in their turn.

If, however, slaves marry female slaves given to them by their masters and become fathers of families, they do not usually leave their masters. [95] They acquire a certain standing and are counted as members of the family. It is understood that they do not have the right to dispose of their children since the latter are dogyiri (house slaves).

465 Various types of unpaid work. Aside from the labor and other obligations required of all Mossi subjects for their naba -- we have described the forced labor in a previous chapter -- it may be said that, in general, no work is required without pay, even from slaves. In an area that is predominantly agricultural there can be no question of payment in money as would be the case in private or official enterprises where contracts specify the obligations of an employer to his employees. On the purely native level, the employer is obligated only to feed the workers.

In sum, what are the duties of a Moaga?

1. Cultivation of the family fields.

2. Construction and repair of huts and roofs.

3. Private work: basketry, shoemaking, weaving cotton strips, pottery, sewing, etc.

The head of the household is required to feed the workers who 592 cultivate the family plots or repair the huts. In a later chapter we 476 shall see that when the [96] members of a family could not complete a task without help, they called on other young men in the village. In that case, animals were slaughtered, dolo (millet beer) was brewed, and sagbo (millet mush) or benga (beans) was prepared.

567 On the other hand, it should be stated that when yemdago were used for hard labor, they were very well fed and were even given double rations.

567 Were slaves part of an estate? Among the Mossi, the wives
428 are part of an estate on the same footing as the rest of the property
562 of the deceased. The same thing applies to the captives (yemsé) and dogyiri (house slaves) who constitute and integral part of the estate. They constitute a patrimony to be handed down from father to son in accordance with the customary order of succession. They remain the exclusive property of the legitimate heir and are not distributed as are the wives of the deceased.

[97] Chapter 6

Djiba Naba, Crown Prince of the Mossi Empire

Preliminary Remarks

644 In writing on this subject we have not tried to ascertain whether the canton of Djiba was once independent or whether it was under the direct authority of the Mogho Naba.

At the outbreak of the World War in 1914 the Djiba Naba, a brother of the present emperor, Naba Kom, was drafted into the army, and another brother had to be appointed to take his place. The latter's administration was in many ways unsatisfactory, so when the Djiba Naba, on his return from the front, had to be sent to Doulougou to replace a deceased son of Naba Wobgo, the Mogho Naba retained direct authority over the canton of Djiba. Meanwhile, his eldest son had returned from Tunis and had been officially named the chief of Djiba, but he had had to leave again for military service at Salonika. Thus, it can be said that even before the canton of Djiba had been made the prerogative of the eldest son of Naba Zombré, it had already been under the latter's authority.

It was during the reign of Naba Zombré, twenty-third Mogho Naba, that the eldest son of the emperor was given jurisdiction over the canton of Djiba. Naba Zombré, after Naba Niandeffo, had one of the longest reigns in the history of the country. He actually ruled for sixty years.

643 [98] An old tradition requires an emperor who has ruled for 782 thirty years to go to Oubritenga to celebrate zom'bika (literally, 643 "to mount the bika").

782 Bika. When the emperor goes to Oubritenga, a large pit is dug in which all sorts of provisions are placed and, finally, a living man. Poles cover the opening of the tomb where the suffocated man lies, and the whole thing is covered with earth. A throne (guéré) is placed on the grave, and it is there that the emperor -- with little ceremony -- receives the faithful during his stay at Oubritenga. In carrying out this practice, the emperor is considered as having died and then come to life again. Hence, when he returns to Ouagadougou, after an absence which may last for years, he is welcomed by the populace with the greatest enthusiasm, and he must carry out all sorts of customary obligations just as he did at the beginning of his reign.

This custom is of course bound to disappear. In any event, if it were still an obligatory ceremony today, the man would no doubt be replaced by a rooster.

643 Naba Zombré went to Oubritenga to mount the bika and re-
644 mained there for three years. His eldest son acted for him at Ouagadougou and in the process acquired some fame and the esteem of the populace.

When his father returned, it was obviously necessary to bestow upon this prince, who had already tasted the "joys" of ruling, and developed a real talent for command, a post of real distinction. Djiba was chosen. From that day on, [99] as soon as the eldest son of the Mogho Naba reaches the age of discretion, he is appointed Djiba Naba. It is thus understandable that Naba Kom, enthroned at an early age, was much disturbed when two of his sons were sent to Senegal and then to Tunisia.

644 The appointment of the Djiba Naba differs very little from that of other canton chiefs, but this naba has certain obligations which will be discussed below.

Before Appointment

644 Before his appointment, the crown prince of the Mossi empire
782 first proceeds to the village of Zango where he must remain for a week. He must bring with him a sheep, a white rooster, and a cow which are to be given to the village chief for use in a sacrifice to 644 782 tenpelem (the earth) in order that he may have health, happiness, etc. In addition, he provides a bar of salt which is to be shared among the old women.

As he passes through Nonsin, he gives a sheep, a white rooster, and some salt for a similar sacrifice.

644 On the seventh day he returns to Ouagadougou and stops at Bilbalogo, the home of the Kam Naba (chief of the young men), whose guest he becomes. The Mogho Naba informs his ministers, and the day is set for the appointment.

The customary formalities are nearly identical with those required for the appointment of canton chiefs (kombemba).

[100] After Appointment

On the day following his appointment, the Djiba Naba calls upon his father. A cushion (nagpouré) is placed near a shed in the emperor's courtyard at the foot of a special stake called the "zandaogo of the Djiba Naba." The Djiba Naba becomes the guest of the Gounga Naba, in whose section he will henceforth stay whenever he comes to Ouagadougou. (At the present time, because of the enmity between the emperor and his brothers, the Djiba Naba stays at Kamsaoghin [section of the Kamsaogho Naba], not far from his father's house.)

644 557 He then has to call upon his father's ministers, and precedence requires him to visit the Ouidi Naba, the prime minister, first. As soon as the latter is notified of the arrival of the Djiba Naba, he offers him a sheep, some dam (beer) and some kola nuts.

Then the crown prince goes to the Larrhallé Naba, who is required to present him with the same gifts, and thence to the Kamsogo Naba, chief eunuch, where the same honors are rendered to him and where he is also given a sheep, beer, and kola nuts.

He next calls upon the Gounga Naba, the Poé Naba, the Samande Naba and, finally, the Baloum Naba, from whom he receives many gifts.

On the third day he completes his visits by calling upon the imam who represents Islam at Ouagadougou. There he is offered water containing [millet] flour and honey, as well as kola nuts.

644 554 576 [101] It is to be noted that a gourdful of this water with millet flour on which a bit of karite butter is floating is a customary courtesy offering among the Mossi. It is most improper to greet or to receive a stranger by offering him plain water.

644 782 On the fourth or fifth day the Djiba Naba proceeds to Zoanghna (a village located two or three kilometers behind the government buildings) and there hands over a sheep and a cow to serve as offerings to the sacred amulets of the ancestors and to protect him from evil spirits and wicked people. He does not spend the night in this village but returns home immediately after the sacrifice.

644 788 Several days later the decision is made to install the new naba in his domain. A large number of soroné, drummers, and followers accompany him on what amounts to a kind of obligatory pilgrimage which we shall describe briefly.

The following itinerary is customary.

First, the Djiba Naba goes to Badnogo where he spends the night. The next day he goes on to Samba where he is offered water with flour in it, and for his part, he gives salt to be shared among the old women of the village.

One may ask why salt is given to the old women and not to the other people. The Mossi call old women nough' pouk ramba, [888] that is, those who, when blessing you, clasp their hands so as to make a higher power hear and grant their prayers.

644 788 431 [102] On the following day he proceeds to Tensobitenga where he remains for three days. Beer is prepared for him; he is given a cow for his followers and a wife for himself. At Nakamtenga, his next stop, the village chief welcomes him with a sheep and many baskets and bowls of sagbo (millet mush).

644 788 He does not remain here for the night but instead goes on to Koubri. This is the village where eunuchs formerly suffered the cruel operation of castration (1). The canton chief meets him, leads 839 304 681 1. Eunuchs. Bandits, thieves, murderers, and slaves or soroné (servitors) convicted of adultery with women of the nobility were the only ones sent to Koubri, a canton in the circle of Ouagadougou, to be castrated. This operation involved only the removal of the testicles, until the day when a eunuch managed, no one knows how, to take advantage of some of the women he was supposed to be guarding. From then on it was deemed necessary to remove the penis completely, and a copper cartridge was inserted for purposes of urination.

839
304
681

839
304
752

As soon as the person fainted after undergoing the operation, a drink was concocted whose ingredients are unknown. When he revived, he was so thirsty that he downed the drink in a single gulp. It is said that the drug stupefied the eunuch to such a degree that he would be incapable of taking vengeance even if he had any weapons at hand.

839
644

It was only after he had completely recovered that the victim was sent to the Mogho Naba. The latter assigned him the duty of guarding a harem or a royal tomb.

644
788 him to his house, seats him by his side, and announces to the populace that he has just been visited by his son (Koubri Naba is a descendant of the Mogho Naba).

644
788
431

He then offers the crown prince a cow and a great deal of [103] beer, and then, before he leaves, the Djiba Naba has free access to the chief's household where he takes as a wife the first nubile girl he encounters. The stay at Koubri traditionally lasted for seven days, but it could be shortened to two or three in view of the great expense involved in entertaining a prince of such high rank, especially at the present time when the canton chiefs no longer enjoy their former prestige.

The Djiba Naba continues on his way to Kombissiri where he is the guest of the canton chief. For a week, in addition to his food which must, of course, be copious and abundant quantities of beer, the crown prince also receives a cow, a sheep, and, before his departure for Doulougou, a wife.

[i.e. canton chief — Analyst]

644 788 431 The chief of the canton of Doulougou, where the prince is a guest for another week, also gives him beer, a sheep, a cow, a robe, and, finally, a wife.

At Bagamini, where he goes next, he receives from the canton chief a cow, a wife, a quiver, and arrows, presented with these significant words: "Ad locko la pema taon widi, laf ra taon neb'yé ti ya f'ba yemsé" (literally, "Take these arrows to shoot against horses and not against men, for the latter are your father's slaves and the country also belongs to him and therefore to you").

Seven days later he leaves Bagamini and goes to Ipelsé where he receives the same warm welcome. On leaving, he will take with him a cow and a wife.

He likewise remains at Ipelsé for seven days. Passing through Bedgo in the domain of the Peulh chief, the Djiba Naba chooses the finest [104] bull from the herd of cattle which must be presented to him. He likewise takes a girl from the chief's household who becomes his property. He then goes on to Guirgo where he is guest of the canton chief for a whole week. On his departure he receives a cow, a robe, and a wife from the chief.

The inhabitants of the village of Kakamsé, through which the Djiba Naba merely passes, bring him quantities of millet cakes (sagbo) and a gift of their choice (a sheep, a goat, a cow, cowries, beer, etc.).

The crown prince continues on to Kondrin and remains there for three days. In addition to sagho and dam, the chief of Kondrin is required to offer him a cow and a wife before his departure.

From there he proceeds to Béré where the chief, called Rimbissi Kasma (the oldest descendant of the Mogho Naba), gives the Djiba Naba a cow, a robe, and a wife and acts as his host for a week.

644 788 824 During the night of the seventh day, the notables of the canton of Djiba come to Béré to look for the naba. He allows himself to be led away, accompanied by only a single servitor and a groom. The rest of the escort from Ouagadougou remains behind and follows him the next morning (1).

1. Why this departure at night and seeming escape? On the route leading into his dominion, the Djiba Naba must pass under a tree whose branches he should be able to touch since he is on horseback. His whole future depends upon his doing so. It is from this day forward that the prince will have a long life and will succeed his father. It is believed that the tree has magical powers and that its branches will withdraw of their own accord as the prince passes by if, even though he is the emperor's eldest son, he is not the successor designated by Wendé (God).

644
788
824

644
788
434

[105] In advance of his coming, care has been taken to find a nice dwelling suitable to house a prince who is the emperor's eldest son. With this in view, an establishment has been chosen which is well built and fairly large, one belonging to a dakangré (prosperous man), and His Highness is conducted to it. As soon as the Djiba Naba has dismounted, his involuntary host must leave his home and take shelter with one of his neighbors. He takes great care to gather all his property, money (liguidi) and wives, into one part of the house; the rest henceforth belongs to the naba. Indeed, it is not long before the establishment is enlarged and some of the huts demolished to make way for more sumptuous buildings.

As soon as the prince is installed, the displaced host receives some gifts and wives as a kind of indemnity for loss. A suitable house is built for him a few hundred meters away.

For several days, celebrations are the rule throughout the canton of Djiba. All the notables and village chiefs, including neighboring canton chiefs who have not had the honor of receiving the prince, come to pay their respects to the new naba and to bring him large gifts.

The escort from Ouagadougou is then sent back [106] with many gifts. The most important nayirdamba [court dignitaries] receive wives and clothing.

Besides the wives the Djiba Naba may have had before his appointment, it is to be noted that he collected quite a harem

644 during his peregrinations. He will bestow some of these on his followers 788 and keep the prettiest for himself.
431 In the old days, the Boulsa Naba, Boussouma Naba, Konkisitenga Naba, and all the others who were, so to speak, independent "rulers" of their lands never brought annual tribute to the Mogho Naba without sending gifts to his eldest son at Djiba.

In the same way, the canton chiefs were expected to make the same annual gifts to the Djiba Naba as to his father.

644 It should also be noted that chiefs who had quarreled with the 696 Mogho Naba and were in danger of being executed could readily obtain pardons by the expedient of buying the friendship of the Djiba Naba. The emperor, after all, was reluctant to distress his son by putting to death one of his intimates.

[107] Chapter 7

The Mossi Salute. Respect due the Home of a Naba.
The Cap. Precedence among Chiefs.
A Legend Concerning the Origins of Mossi Chiefdom.

Salutation of the Naba (Nab'Pousgho)

647 The kombemba (canton chiefs) and nayirdamba (ministers and other court dignitaries), when calling upon the Mogho Naba, are required to remove their cap when they reach the threshold. They hand it to their soroné (servitors) or followers. If they did not come on horseback, they must give their néoda (shoes) to a page and walk barefoot. In a word, they remove anything which might impede the execution of the very complicated Mossi salute.

The following passages concerning the Mossi salute are taken from Father Mangin.

Mossi Salute

644 "The Moaga puts down everything, load, hat, cap, and sword,
576 removes his shoes, and sits on the ground. He folds his legs slightly and bends the upper part of his body forward. The elbows rest on the ground, spread as far apart as possible. The forearms, folded

644 in front of the chest, and the half-closed hands with thumbs raised 576 together strike [108] the ground three or four times. Then the Mossi raises his body a little and rubs the palms of his hands together. He never looks at the face of the person he is saluting, but keeps his eyes slightly lowered. It is truly a very humiliating posture, especially when the chief who is being saluted remains standing or on horseback, towering above his subordinate and barely according him a glance.

"The women, instead of striking the ground with their forearms, hit it with the elbows and raise their open hands, fingers extended, to shoulder height.

"The grand salute, (1) very rarely used, consists of turning

1. Father Mangin neglected to mention that this salute is used only when the chief or other personage has given a wife, a robe, or some other gift to the person who is saluting him. Furthermore, those present cover their foreheads with dust.

around after the ordinary salute has been completed, taking some dust in both hands, spreading it on the forehead, and then saluting once more.

576 "When two natives who know each other meet along the way, the younger of the two squats first and begins the salute, which the other acknowledges by squatting in turn. If they are carrying loads, they set them down before saluting. They are never in a hurry. Servants and women, when they walk before a chief, bow slightly and join their hands in front of the chest. Though complicated, the Mossi salute is rendered easily and gracefully by the natives; they are used to it from an early [109] age and never perform it in the clumsy and awkward manner which is theirs when they attempt to imitate the military salute."

Respect Due the Home of the Naba

554 The kombéré is absolute master of his territory. His subjects must show him the same deference as he himself shows to the Mogho Naba.

However, even though he is not a noble, a minister of the emperor need not remove his cap to respond to the salute of a kombéré. On the contrary, the latter is required to humble himself, to give way before him just as he would before the Mogho Naba.

644 The nabiga (son of a naba), nakomsé (descendants of naba) and, still more, an ordinary Moaga are all categorically forbidden to wear their shoes or their caps at the court of the naba. The only exception to the rule is when the person is a Moslem convert, but even then he always leaves his shoes at the door. He may, however, wear his cap or turban. Shoes and headgear may be put on again only after the subject is 300 meters from the house of the naba. Sometimes, in places where custom is rigorously enforced, the person must be out of sight.

[687] Any infraction of these rules was punished severely by the lash and by confiscation of property by the samand'kamba of the naba [110] when the offender was not of the nobility, that is, was neither nabiga nor nakombga.

291 It is interesting to note that wearing the fez, originally one of the badges of chiefdom, was forbidden to the nabiga and all the more to the talga (ordinary Moaga). Today it is commonly worn by men and youths since European traders and shops have made common an article which was once very rare.

576 Shaking hands. One seldom sees a naba extend his hand to one 413 of his subjects or, more especially, to his brothers or fellow nobles (nakomsé).

There are two reasons for this prohibition: 1) the naba is supposed to maintain a certain distance between himself and his subjects, a normal practice; and 2) a superstitious belief has it that persons [154] harboring evil intentions toward the chief put magic powders on their hands to cause swellings which may develop into real abscesses.

576 Thus, although the Mogho Naba would not in the least object
643 to shaking hands with a Bambara or a Djerma, he would be astonished if a native Moaga -- even an official -- should offer his hand.

543 As soon as the children of a naba have reached the age of dis-576 cretion, they may no longer play with their "papa," even less shake hands with him. They must henceforth follow the general rule which requires the Mossi salute, kantissé.

576 [111] Nowadays naba (kombemba) and nayiridamba (ministers 602 of the emperor) understand the uselessness of such signs of distrust.
Therefore, even though they continue to be less familiar with their relatives (brothers, uncles, and sons -- whom they regard as rivals), they willingly offer their hands to Mossi of any standing and to foreigners.

644 Reception by the naba. 1) Up to the present time and despite some thirty-five years of French occupation, the way one is received at the court of the emperor, which, of course, befalls his servitors, has altered very little. Natives who are now officials in the administration and in business enterprises are still treated on the same footing as their less highly placed compatriots. Not only are they required to perform the kantissé (Mossi salute) as described by Father Mangin, but also afterwards they must sit on the ground, a position that is difficult in European clothes. Foreigners (Bambara, [648] Djerma, even Gourounsi) are offered seats because the soroné do not regard them as fellow countrymen.

645 2) By the ministers. At the present time all the emperor's
576 ministers have comfortable houses and splendid drawing rooms
352 furnished with Morris chairs and folding chairs. These seats are 177 offered [112] to visitors of any standing, while benches two or three meters long are reserved for persons of less consequence (house boys, cooks, circle guards, notables, etc.).

631 3) By the kombemba. Benches are always reserved for visitors of 576 note or, if there are none, mats are provided. Some of these chiefs 352 even own a few commonplace chairs and perhaps one or two folding chairs.

Hierarchies among the Ministers and Officials at the Court of the King of the Mossi

554 There exists a kind of hierarchy among the naba. One chief
631 may have to uncover his head before greeting another because he is his "little brother" (naoua) or because he is in the presence of a chief of higher rank (for instance, the "petty kings," dima).

It is extremely difficult to determine the hierarchy which exists among the kombemba because there are so many of them, but they respect it even today. It would be difficult to undertake research on the subject which has only local interest and would not benefit our work.

645 The following paragraphs, therefore, will deal only with the 554 ministers and other officials at the emperor's court.
576 Mutual relations among the ministers before the French occupation. (a) The Ouidi-Naba, prime minister and chief of the cavalry. [113] After his appointment the Ouidi Naba is required only to call on the Mogho Naba. The other ministers and the notables at Ouagadougou must call on him. Naturally, by virtue of his rank, the Ouidi Naba is expected to offer them large quantities of beer and to have sheep and even cows slaughtered in their honor.

(b) The Larrhallé Naba, a minister also and guardian of the tombs. Despite what happened quite recently (March-April, 1929), the Larrhallé Naba is only required to call on the Ouidi Naba and, if he wishes to do so, on the Gounga Naba. He does not call upon the other ministers and officials.

(c) The Gounga Naba is required to call upon the two higher ministers, the Ouidi Naba and Larrhallé Naba. The other officials at court must call on him, and, like the Ouidi Naba, he offers them beer and meat.

(d) The Baloum Naba, the steward of the Mogho Naba and chief of the pages. Early in his term of office he must call upon the three principal ministers and upon the imam. No other visits are required of him, he does not call upon other court personages.

This stated, let us go on to the most important matter.

644 Ministers and other officials at the court of the Mogho Naba. In the courtyard where the emperor's audiences are held, [114] there are heaps of stones to mark the places of the ministers and their followers.

The Ouidi Naba, Larrhallé Naba, Gounga Naba, and Kamsaongho Naba assemble with their followers. The Baloum Naba, Zusobinkassanga, and the rest also have their fixed places. They are not permitted to leave their places to greet one another until they have saluted the Mogho Naba.

In the old days only the Baloum Naba, the Zusoaba, and the Kamsaogho, together with the servitors and grooms, were allowed to call upon the emperor in his palace courtyard. The other ministers and court officials (Ouidi Naba, Larrhallé Naba, Gounga Naba, etc.) were not, under any pretext or circumstance, permitted to penetrate the interior courtyard of the home of the Mogho Naba. They had their presence announced by soroné and [344] waited under a shelter (benda zandé) in the audience courtyard. Only a few years ago, when the present Gounga Naba succeeded his father, he asked the reason for this prohibition. Since no good reason was given, he asked the emperor for permission to break the rule, and since that time all his colleagues have followed suit.

644 The cap. We have seen that at the time of his appointment 292 [115] each minister, court official, and canton chief is presented 554 with a cap by the Mogho Naba. Obviously he cannot wear the same cap for the rest of his life, so later replacements bought by him are regarded as just as sacred as the original. All his subjects, even the son of a naba, are strictly forbidden to wear this cap. We have also seen that in the old days an ordinary Moaga was expressly forbidden to wear the red fez (1) since this was the type of headgear

[714]

1. Among the Habè [Habe] the hogon is the [illegible] is the only one who may wear the red fez. When young Habè men are taken into the [French] army as riflemen, they never again wear the red fez [part of the army uniform] after they are discharged and return to their homes.

644 conferred by the Mogho Naba on the canton chiefs.

292 With the exception of the Tenkodogo Naba and, more re-
554 cently, the Boussouma Naba, neither of whom renders honors to the Mogho Naba, all ministers, other petty dima, and chiefs of Mossi cantons must take off his cap to greet the emperor.

576 (a) Between ministers. The Ouidi Naba does not remove his 554 cap for any of his colleagues.

The Larrhallé Naba, Gounga Naba, and Kamsaongo Naba are 645 equals and greet each other with their caps on.

The Baloum Naba and Samandé Naba are also equals, and they do not take off their caps when greeting each other. However, they were required to remove their caps (pougla) and even to perform the kantissé in the presence of the three principal ministers.

[116] Next in importance are the Nemdo Naba or "chief of the meat" [in charge of slaughtering], the Poé Naba who is confessor to the emperor's wives, the Bend Naba, chief of the drummers, and, finally, a whole string of petty chiefs of no importance who can hardly be distinguished from the general populace and whom it would be fruitless to enumerate here.

The Poé Naba may keep his cap on when he is in the presence of the Baloum Naba or the Samandé Naba, but he must remove it for the other ministers and must even prostrate himself to perform the kantissé.

645 Not very long ago, when the province chiefs of Ouagadougou
574 possessed neither comfortable houses nor furniture, the ministers rarely visited each other. I have even once seen a minister sit on the ground in order to give his seat to one of his colleagues.

645 Whenever matters came up which required a meeting, the ministers met at night in one or another of their homes without the knowledge of the public.

645 Today, the principal ministers have proper reception rooms.
576 They can, therefore, remain seated when a more important colleague calls upon them and limit their special consideration of the visitor to offering him a Morris armchair or a folding chair.

701 The Tensoba, the minister of war, never takes off his cap for a 554 minister or a canton chief. He does so only before the emperor.
645

701 Formerly, when war broke out and he was summoned to [117]
554 Ouagadougou, the Tansoba [sic] assembled the principal ministers
645 of the Mogho Naba at the home of his host, and his word was final.

Aside from this special case, he might call upon a minister, but then a servitor always brought along the cushion on which he would sit until the minister receives him in his private quarters. He was never received in public.

Once inside, the Tansoba occupied the best seat, and the minister got down on the floor and performed the Mossi salute.

In sum, the Tansoba was held in higher esteem than any other personage at the king's court.

(b) At the present time. Today ministers often visit each other.
645 Since they have rapid means of transportation at their disposal, they 574 regularly go about without escorts. Most often their visits are made in order to deal with matters of general interest.

When a minister calls upon another minister, he keeps his cap 645 on and neither removes his shoes nor performs the kantissé. They 576 are equals. This equality has been established by the local admin-
574 istration which has granted the same rights and salary to all. The minister shakes hands with his colleague and takes a seat. He is served copious quantities of beer, and then he takes his leave.

In spite of assertions to the contrary, the Mossi empire is po-
642 litically disorganized. This accounts for the errors committed by the local administration and the [118] mistakes held against the ministers of the Mogho Naba who for a long time were granted too much power.

The Origin of Mossi Chiefdom (Legend), or the Way the Peulh, the Yarcé, and the Blacksmiths Salute Mossi Chiefs

713 The Peulh, the Yarcé, and, to a certain extent, the black-
184 smiths do not perform the kantissé (Mossi salute). They have a dif-
576 ferent way of saluting naba. A curious legend explains this phenomenon. However bizarre it may seem, it is not lacking in interest, and we shall tell it just as it was handed down to us.

113 Origins of chiefdom. God first created four brothers. Like Adam and Eve in Paradise, they lived a life of ease without thought for tomorrow. When God saw this, he made four hàpidgou baskets and in them placed four miracles. The baskets were of different weights and shapes. Then he called the four brothers and said to them: "The future of each of you will depend on your choice." The eldest chose the heaviest basket, the second brother imitated his elder brother, the third took the largest basket, and the youngest took the last and smallest basket.

God then said to them: "Go forth into the world (that is, [119] Mossi country), and each of you build your house on a plain."

The next morning the four brothers started out. They came to a broad plain, and there the eldest brother remained. The three other brothers were grieved to leave him, but they continued on their way until each had found a place to settle.

It was then that the following miracles occurred.

1. The blacksmith (sayan in Mossi). Upon awakening the morning after he was established, the eldest brother found himself surrounded by a small family, large quantities of iron, and an anvil. These were the contents of his chosen kapidgou. The man at once realized that he was supposed to use the iron for something useful, so he set to work and, with God's help, discovered the hoe (wanka) and the axe (laré) which are essential for farming. Thus, he became a blacksmith (sayan).

2. The Peulh ("silmiga" in Mossi). The second brother, upon awakening, found himself surrounded by great numbers of oxen and cows, herded by some young men of his tribe. There was nothing in the way of shelter except a kind of crude hut (songdo), but he himself was very trim. His clothing was all white, and he had a white cap wound with a turban. He realized that he was the master of all of the beings around him, because he had only to give an order and large gourds filled with milk were at once brought to him. Thus, he became a Peulh.

3. The Yarga. The third brother, on waking, found [120] himself surrounded by donkeys laden with salt, kola nuts, and other articles of trade. Like his elder brother, the Peulh, he wore an ample white robe, but his cap was of a darker color. Thus, he 773 became the Yarga or tradesman.

4. The naba. As for the youngest brother, imagine his astonishment upon awakening to find himself in a splendid dwelling made up of many tata [houses] and surrounded by a real court with hundreds of courtiers, horses, and grooms. He saw a crowd approach and prostrate themselves in the Mossi salute as it is performed today. Furthermore, he had a harem. He realized that he was the uncontested master of all these people. Thus was created the naba.

These four brothers, however, could not endure having no news of each other. One day the eldest brother, the blacksmith, said to himself: "I am going to undertake a journey to find my brothers and learn what has happened to them." He started out, first taking care to provide himself with some of the tools he had made. When he reached the village, he had great difficulty in making his way through the herds of cattle and their herders. Finally he managed to present himself to the master of the place, the owner of so much wealth, and recognized his brother, the Peulh. The latter received him cordially and saw to it that abundant food, prepared in large part from milk, was served to him.

[121] After he had rested, the blacksmith told the Peulh the object of his journey, and the latter decided to accompany him. They left at dawn, the blacksmith with his load of daba (wanksé) and the Peulh followed by some of his cattle and by many bearers carrying gourds filled with milk for the journey. At nightfall they reached the village of their brother, the Yarga, whom they hardly recognized. For the first time they tasted kola nuts (gouré) which, they were told, came from komnoré (shores of great rivers). In short, the Yarga gave his brothers a worthy reception.

When the blacksmith and the Peulh told their brother that they were merely passing through to inquire about his health and that they were going on the next morning to seek their youngest brother, the Yarga, in turn decided to accompany them. All three set out with many followers. The tradesman loaded a donkey with salt, intending to sell some of it to people encountered along the way and to give the rest to his young brother.

They were overcome with both admiration and fear when they reached the youngest brother's house. They had heard along the 113 road -- but did not take the news seriously -- that their brother had become a "great naba," that he ruled over numerous subjects and that it would be difficult to approach the throne on which he sat. To their great surprise, all came about exactly as had been foretold. They encountered great difficulties in breaking through the rigid court protocol. They were repulsed by sogoné, jostled by grooms, and had to wait for hours [122] before His Majesty the Naba deigned to receive them as though they were the humblest of his subjects. In spite of their protestations, the courtiers of the naba had not for a moment believed that there might really be a family tie between these strangers and the one whom they regarded as a "god."

Flourishes on drums finally announced the appearance of the potentate. When he took his place on the throne (guéré), even though his three brothers were filled with wonder, jealousy nevertheless arose in their hearts. They looked at each other questioningly. Should they abase themselves as did his subjects? Here is what happened. The blacksmith sat down on the ground but did not imitate the Mossi salute. He merely struck the ground with his zanré. The Peulh, who was more arrogant, squatted, held his arms out in front, closed his fists, and then casually uttered these words: "Lafibé raoua, gang'bélafi" (literally, "Good day, man, how are you?"). He had kept his cap on but had left his néoda (shoes) at the door out of respect and fear. As for the Yarga, who was nearest to the naba, he sat down on the ground, slightly bent his legs, bowed a little, and finally rubbed his hands together slightly by way of salutation. He had also left his néoda at the door but had kept his cap on, like his brother, the Peulh.

The naba had them led to the home of one of his ministers and for several days saw to it that they were given copious meals and presented them with many gifts.

In return, the blacksmith presented the naba with a load of wanksé [123] (hoes) to cultivate his fields, the Peulh gave him some cattle, and the Yarga gave a bar of salt.

Finally they decided to leave their young brother and return to their respective villages. They took counsel along the way and decided to settle in the territory of the naba, thus making sure of his 773 protection. The Peulh would acquire more cattle by taking charge of the animals belonging to the Mossi, and the Yarga would find better markets for his salt and kola nuts. As for the blacksmith, he would make the many farm implements needed for the cultivation of the vast domains which were either not worked at all or insufficiently exploited because of the lack of tools.

They set the date for their return. Once more the naba received them very cordially, but they showed no greater deference to him than they had shown on their first visit.

And so the legend comes to an end by concluding that this is why the Peulh and the Yarga have retained their spirit of independence. As for the blacksmith, who remained poorer, he came [526] to submit to certain regulations which are common to all the Mossi although he never leaves his forge to salute the naba when he passes. As has already been noted, he merely strikes his zanré against his anvil, just as formerly he struck it on the ground by way of salutation.

[124] Chapter 8

Customs. Enthronement of the Naba. Names.

Death of a Mogho Naba

643 766 The death of a Mogho Naba is kept secret until the arrival at Ouagadougou of the Tansoba, who was forewarned when the illness became grave. On his arrival, the public is told that "the fire has gone out" (bougsaré kimé).

The personages in charge of the burial are Pazany'ting'soba (the undertaker), Tampouy Naba, Kassiri Naba, Benghin Naba, Toghin Naba, Ganin Naba, and Tanghin Naba.

The arrangement of the tomb. The grave in which the mortal remains of the king are buried is really a subterranean hut. Before the king is placed in his final dwelling (1), the following things

1. The body is wrapped in one or several cow hides.

643 are placed in the tomb: two sheep skins (gando); some cushions
766 (nagpouya); several bolsters (fourkamsé); and a zoukougré -- all made of leather. All of these are arranged as though the chief were to lie down to rest.

After the corpse has been washed (Naba Siguire, father of the present Mogho Naba, was washed by marabouts [125] since he was the son of a naba who was a Moslem believer), it is clothed all in white. In the house of every Mogho Naba a corner of the wall is [531 decorated with rather attractive designs, and the dead Mogho Naba
761] is carried through it on his way to the tomb. The sight of this corner, which is seldom visited, reminds the chief still living of the mortality of all beings and makes him realize that in the same way as he succeeded someone, so will he, in turn, be replaced by another; the corner will one day become an opening through which his own body will pass at the end of his lifetime.

In addition to the garments in which he is clothed, the following items are placed in the grave beside him: a folded white robe (fou yorgo); a pair of trousers (kourga); a blanket (fou gobga); a pair of slippers (néoda); a small knife (souga); a sword (zangoégo); a gourd of beer (dam) with a calabash over the neck and a small cloth (leppré) over it; a loaf of salt (yamsem); a gourd filled with a hundred kola nuts (gouré wamdé); a sewn sack filled with cowries (liguide ne yolmoumdi); napaga ornaments (douamba and zuyan); and tobacco if the chief smoked or chewed it.

[767] The undertaker is entitled to take the salt, some kola nuts, and some meat when he departs.

[126] When the burial is over, one walks around the house of the deceased.

643 It should be noted that before the burial or sometimes when the death of the king is first known, all of his wives who have children take flight for fear that their son will be made kourita.

The kourita is a child of the deceased and must bear the latter's name. He is exiled and must never, so long as he lives, look upon the new Mogho Naba. Until the emperor is represented on earth by his kourita, his successor cannot be named. This explains the general flight of all of the wives who have children.

The Kourita

443 As we have just seen, the child who is made kourita is exiled and is no longer regarded as a member of the family. He is himself the Naba, and he must never see the new emperor. His brothers may visit him, and he may visit them.

1. The kourita is washed with the remainder of the water that was used to wash the body of the deceased king.

2. He is carried through the same opening (vonré) as was used to carry out the body of the dead naba.

3. He is given the woman with whom the chief last had sexual relations before he was stricken by illness.

4. He is also given the horse which the deceased king rode every Friday.

[127] He is dressed in the last garments worn by the deceased. He is given one or two servitors and as many grooms and is then sent to the Kilwin Naba (chief of a hamlet near Bissiga, three kilometers from Ouagadougou), who is required to give him hospitality for about a month.

In the old days, the power of a kourita was almost unlimited. Indeed, during his stay at Kilwin, he had the right to pillage, to ruin everything, and to live like a true potentate. Naturally he always had plenty of willing helpers to aid him in plundering the property of the unfortunate Mossi. The kourita traveled about through many cantons where the kombemba (plural of kombéré) paid him all the honors due the Mogho Naba. It was during these wanderings that he finally chose a permanent residence.

[127] The new Mogho Naba is obliged to satisfy all the desires of the kourita to avoid being visited by him, an omen of disaster. Indeed, the Mossi believe that if the kourita should visit the new Mogho Naba, the latter would die.

The Enthronement -- Before and After

As we have already seen, once the burial is completed, one walks around the house of the deceased king. Then, the following persons are summoned to Ouagadougou:

1. Loumbila Naba.

643

2. Saponé Naba.
3. Ouagadougou Naba (who lives in Ouagadougou). [128]
4. Zagtouli Naba.
5. Bingo Naba.
6. Gnimdi Naba.
7. Sabtenga Naba.

All of these personages are accompanied by many men, armed with arrows and rifles. They halt before the women's gate (paghnoré) and lie down. They have become guards of the royal household.

At this time the candidates for the position of Mogho Naba are all in Ouagadougou, and each of them is calling on the ministers and presenting many gifts to them. There is often competition for the post, but as a rule the eldest son of the king is named to succeed his father.

On the day of the nomination, the nabiga (from naba, "chief," and biga "son") is taken to the home of the Samandé Naba where the ministers hold council. If they agree unanimously to name the nabiga, they bring him out of the hut in which he has been anxiously awaiting their decision and tell him that Oubritenga, Zound'wéogo, Koudtenga, and so on are his property (that is, that he is recognized as the sole holder of power and that he alone rules all the lands enumerated). This is ordinarily done in the evening. The next morning the new Mogho Naba dresses and mounts his horse in front of the paghnoré (women's gate). The Kalzi Naba takes the bridle, leads the new appointee to the Loumbila Naba, and says to the latter and his followers: "Oubritenga Ramba, adi Naba, adi Kouda (People of Oubritenga, here is your master)."

[129] He is then taken before the Saponé Naba, and the latter and his followers are told: "Koud'tinga Ramba, adi Naba, adi Kouda (People of Koud'tinga, here is your master)."

The new chief is then presented to the Zagtouli Naba and to the Ouagadougou Naba with the words: "Naba Rimba Tenga Ramba, adi Naba, adi Kouda (People of Rimbatenga, here is your master)."

Finally, he is presented to the remaining chiefs with the words: "Zound'wéogo Ramba, adi Naba, adi Kouda (Here is your master)."

The Mogho Naba then returns to his house. He is king.

643 Soon afterward he comes out and seats himself in the shade of a tree at the home of the Samandé Nabila [assistant to the Samandé Naba]. The doudissi are played ensemble, and the whole populace shouts joyfully.

The Ouidi Naba, the Tansoba, and all the other ministers and important personages come to present homage and to swear their fealty and submission. Each one makes a profession of loyalty.

In the evening, the new naba leaves the home of the Samandé Nabila and goes to spend the night at the home of the Ouagadougou Naba.

The next day he goes to Passepanga (from passé, "to increase, to add," and panga, "power, strength") where all other chiefs and descendants of Mogho Naba come to salute him.

At Passepanga the Mogho Naba sits under a tree with thousands of men right and left, all armed with rifles and aligned as for a session of rifle practice. They leave a kind of avenue in front of the new naba so that he is easily seen. Each [130] naba, with his retinue, comes to swear fealty and to make a profession of loyalty. The brothers of the new appointee, even those who were his rivals, come to make obeisance. The Mogho Naba then retires to the home of his gansoba (host) and sees to it that everyone has ample quantities of dam and that nissi (cows) are slaughtered for them.

The Mogho Naba remains at Passepanga for a week, and then he goes to Dimvoussé ("king's rest").

Finally, two or three years later, he chooses the place where he wishes to build his permanent residence.

Certain Names and Their Meaning

551 When appointed, every chief loses his given name, and he is even forbidden to say it. He chooses a name for himself when he is appointed.

We shall now study some of these names and try to establish the moral precepts that go with them.

551 643 1. Mogho Naba Wobgo (Boukary was his real name). When Mogho Naba Sanum (literally, "gold") drove his brother Boukary from his territory, the latter took refuge at Bassawarga where he conquered the Gourounsi whom he enslaved, although later they became his sofa [guards or military retinue].

551 When Naba Sanum died, several candidates presented them-
143 selves to be named Mogho Naba.

Boukary also returned, accompanied by an impressive escort of Gourounsi armed with arrows, rifles, and clubs. He made gifts to the ministers, as all his [131] rivals were doing. However, seeing that the nomination of a successor to his late brother was being delayed, he one day remarked to the Ouidi Naba: "Designate anyone you wish for the throne, but I shall wrest it from him."

The evening of the day set for the nomination arrived (we have already noted that each candidate was put in a hut at the home of the Samandé Nabila), and the future Naba Wobgo assembled all his Gourounsi followers and addressed them more or less in these terms: "The new Mogho Naba is to be appointed tonight; when I go to the home of the Samandé Nabila you follow me, be armed, and surround the place. If by any chance I am not named, I shall say to you when I come out, 'Forward! Spare no one, not even the ministers, the other nabissi, or the new appointee.' "

That night, the Gourounsi, faithful to the commands of their chief, did as he had ordered.

While the ministers were discussing which of the nabissi should be named (of course, the future Naba Wobgo was automatically eliminated), the Larrhallé Naba came out to relieve himself. In the half-darkness he was astonished to see the men armed with arrows, rifles, and clubs. He reported these disquieting developments to the Ouidi Naba, who at once came out to see for himself. Everyone knew that only Boukary could organize such a plot. Fearing that they would otherwise all be murdered, they unanimously appointed him Mogho Naba.

When the time came for him to select the name that would be his until death, he said this: [132] "Kim missi laguem koabga kon bougouss'Wobgo (a hundred ghosts cannot frighten an elephant)." I am sure that here he was addressing his competitors. Then he added: "Ni Tiem Koudré Banghe pouiré taloug'pa salga (an old man who bequeaths his property wisely avoids strife)." Here he was addressing the ministers. He was aware that he was not liked, so he had prepared for war. The ministers had not wanted to name him and had done so only out of fear of being murdered.

551 643 2. Mogho Naba Kom (kom, "water"). When he was still quite young, Mogho Naba Kom, who is on the throne today, succeeded his father, Naba Siguiri, to the great surprise of his enemies. He took the name of Naba Kom.

(a) Kom sound Tambdo ti koulg'king lad moaghana. (During the rainy season when much water falls, the rivers and seas rejoice to see their water swell.)

(b) Neb san toul béogo bi a balem Wendé. (He who dreams of tomorrow must place his faith in God.)

(c) Sandib, laguem koabga ti pigh'pam nionré. Since he was very young at the time of his nomination, many begrudged him the appointment, and sorcery was used to cause his death. This third name means "A hundred charlatans, makers of charms, cannot prevail against the pigha (rock, i.e., the chief)."

(d) Gonpaniendégha kon nies niédga. (One does not [133] wipe one's bottom with thorns and brambles.) This alludes to his enemies and means that in spite of them he rules all the same.

(e) Tang'niebga belem mogré pamé wek'balbo. (Since the crocodile can only really live and procreate along the banks of watercourses, what is a mountain crocodile to do if he desires many offspring? He must move his dwelling and go to the water.)

551 645 3. The Ouidi Naba (actually named Rabi), Naba Boulga (literally, "well [pit]").

(a) Baning sorr'yoagba n'tilig kinsé la wamsé. (The large white or sorghum grown under the Strophanthus has no fear of being eaten by birds or monkeys.)

(b) Yel somd'boulgh'tont niédbo. (The well of righteousness cannot be filled.)

4. The Gounga Naba (actually named Namébrogo Ilboudo), Naba Yemdé (literally, "hippopotamus"). Yem deng kouilga ti zimbi datin dem yaré. ("When the hippopotamus is first to arrive at the waterhold, the fish can play about at will," or "when fish play around a hippopotamus, they will not be troubled by either big fish or fishermen.")

5. The Baloum Naba (Tenga Ouédraogo), Naba Tanga (literally, "mountain").

(a) "A mountain crowned with trees is soon noticed," or "in order to be respected, one must have good support, good backing."

551 [134] (b) Kata laghem koagb'kon sirigh tanga. (A hundred 645 barking hyenas cannot shake a mountain.)

6. Kamsoro Naba (Ouene Nongué), Naba Niouga ("cat"). He is chief eunuch. Nioug'nok wendé na pa ne Sabelem. (A cat who trusts in God is sure to preserve his blackness.) In other words, one who is protected by the Mogho Naba, his "God," will never lack for anything; everything will come to him as if by magic.

7. Naba Gnighnemdo (Mogho Naba). Naba Oubri, the founder 551 of the Ouagadougou dynasty, fell in love with one of his own daugh-643 ters and had intercourse with her. The girl became pregnant and 835 gave birth to a son. The wives of Naba Oubri wanted to put both the child and the mother to death. They asked the girl the name of the child's father, and she replied, "Ask my father, he ought to know." When Oubri was questioned, he answered: "Bassi yan ya mam lam gnighnemdo (Do nothing, this is my own flesh)."

The child of this incestuous union was thus named Gnighnemdo and later succeeded his relative, Naba Nasbiré.

The Placing of Statues at Loumbi-Raogo

211 Ganlougdou. In the old days, upon the death of a Mogho
306 Naba or soon after, a jeweler was called in [135] to make a wax
532 statuette, later to be cast in bronze, in the likeness of the late chief. The jeweler also made statuettes of one soroné, one napagha, one bendré, and one lounga, and all were deposited at the home
[177] of the Loumbila Naba. This practice was suppressed upon the arrival of the French, and it appears that there is no statue of Naba Siguiri, father of Naba Kom, the present naba, at Loumbila.

The acting Mogho Naba is never supposed to see these statues, and the jeweler who made the likeness of his father must not see [135] them either. The jeweler was paid 100,000 cowries, a horse, a donkey, a cow, a wife, a large robe, and 1,000 kola nuts, and he was then sent away from Ouagadougou. He must never return and must never see the new Mogho Naba.

These gifts represented a considerable sum in the old days, even today for that matter. They were given to aid the jeweler in consulting seers and charlatans for the purpose of prolonging his life. Tradition has it that unless he followed faithfully the prescriptions given by the seers, he would die within a year after completing the statues.

The Kombéré: Death, Enthronement

631 763 202 Death. Upon the death of a kombéré two representatives in mourning are sent from the canton to Ouagadougou to deliver the sad news to the Mogho Naba. The envoys are entrusted with a horse or a sheep, depending on the importance of the naba. Tanga branches are tied to the animal's tail (see Ouidi Naba, Chapter 4).

[136] When the first emissary reaches the courtyard of the Mogho Naba, he sits down, taking care to place one hand on the ground and stretching out his arm. Since the very sight of the horse is significant, even before any explanation is offered, the Zusoaba enters the house of the Mogho Naba and comes out again bearing a gourd of water with flour in it (zom kom) which he pours on the envoy's arm.

The horse is then handed over to a representative of the Ouidi Naba who removes the branches and leads the animal to Widhin [Ouidin].

The Zusoaba takes back the gourd, and it is only then that the Ouidi Naba says to the Mogho Naba: "Naba zagl yka sambga le tongalamé (Chief So-and-So has been stricken with such-and-such an illness and has succumbed)." It should be added that before going to see the Mogho Naba, the envoys first inform the ministers of the death of the kombéré.

631 766 The Mogho Naba asks a few appropriate questions and sends the representatives to prepare the kouré. On the day of the ceremony, the Nabitienga (eldest son of the deceased chief) has large quantities of beer and saghbo prepared and sheep and cattle killed to feed the people gathered in great numbers for the occasion.

The house is circled, as was described for the Mogho Naba.

[445] (a) Koupéogo (kouré basket). The koupéogo is a basket, artistically made, into which is put the foutou (clothing of the deceased), [137] koursi (trousers), his pougla (red fez), his néoda (slippers), the zandé (club), and the wed'zouré (horse's tail). This basket is laid upon a pé'gaongo (skin of a sheep) in the zaongo (antechamber).

One of the sisters of the Nabitienga, usually the eldest daughter of the deceased, carries the péogo outside and seats herself at the place where the dead chief held his daily audiences (guéré). The benda, liunsé, and gangando drums are played together, and then 631 766 everyone gives what he can. Everyone from the Nabitienga down through his brothers and sisters, close relatives, and their brothers and sisters, in short, anyone even remotely related to the deceased, comes up and offers something. Most often the gift is made up of cowries.

The koupéogo is then returned to the zaongo. Some zom kom (water with flour in it) and some dam (dolo or fermented millet beer) are poured at the door of the antechamber.

The benda and other drummers gather up all the cowries they have received and go a short distance from the house to divide them up.

The benda are expected to give a few cowries to any Yarga, Silmimoaga, or sayan (1) who happens to pass by during the distribution.

1. Yarga: a Dioula [Diula] of the Mandé [Mande] group. Silmimoaga: one who has adopted the customs of the Peulh.

Sayan: blacksmith.

643 428] (b) Fado. This is the share that goes by right to the Mogho Naba from the estate of every kombéré.

[138] The Mogho Naba sends representatives to whom are entrusted a rooster, a sheep, and, depending on the importance of the chief, a cow and 5,000 to 10,000 cowries.

As soon as he has been presented to the Nabitienga, the first envoy of the Mogho Naba says to him: "Nab'kayé ti mog'naba yel tid wa pous' nabitiengh'togo lad reguib' lokon'wa tib laguemb taba ti ya yel koudgo (Such-and-such a chief having died, the Mogho Naba sends us to deliver his condolences to the Nabitienga and to request of him that the quiver of the naba be turned over to us so that it may be placed beside those of his ancestors, as is the custom)."

The Nabitienga thanks them and orders the loko [quiver] to be brought out at once. It is placed on the ground, and sacrifice is made, in turn, of the chicken, the sheep, and even the cow sent by the Mogho Naba.

631 All of these preliminaries are only the beginning, and when 643 they are completed, the emperor's first envoy orders the Nabitienga
428 to go out into the sunshine so that the fado [share for the Mogho
766 Naba] may be claimed. The Nabitienga complies with the request. Thereupon the first envoy says to him through a messenger: "Mogh' Naba yé tid wa reg fado, ya nig'tousri (1,000 head of cattle), pissi tousri (1,000 sheep), bouss'tousri (1,000 goats), foutou tousri (1,000 garments)," etc. To which the Nabitienga replies: "Tond ba sin ki a ka bas roumsi ne arzek'yé (our late father left neither animals nor other wealth sufficient to satisfy the demands of the Mogho Naba)."

The messenger reports the reply to the emperor's representatives. The relatives of the Nabitienga go [139] to gather together a wanka (hoe), a laré (ax), and a goégo (sickle), and then they tell the nayiridamba (representatives) to go into the antechamber where all of the wealth is piled up. The nayirdamba [sic] send in some soroné who come back and report on what is there. Then they ask the Nabitienga for the fado a second time, and this time it is given to them in the form of the following articles: a robe, a pair of trousers, bracelets, fodo, rouamba (ornaments of the napagha), an ample robe, a pair of slippers, a knife (zangoégo), some salt, some cowries, kalgo (soumbala) balls, nemdo (dried meat), moui (rice), etc.

The envoys are housed for a whole week by the Mabitienga, aided by the inhabitants and his relatives.

On the eighth day, before taking leave of his guests, the Nabitienga slaughters a cow, has large quantities of saghbo and beer prepared and sheep killed, gives clothing to all the envoys of the Mogho Naba, offers them up to 50,000 cowries, depending on their importance, etc.

He has a horse saddled with his father's saddle, and the animal is tethered in front of the antechamber.

One of the nayirdamba unties the horse and walks three times around the house of the deceased naba. The person who mounts the horse is given liguidi (cowries) and clothing and the fez of the naba. He is entitled to keep all this after his return to Ouagadougou, after he has reported to the authorities. The horse becomes the property of the Mogho Naba and is turned over to the Wedranga Naba (personal equerry of the king).

63 The Nabitienga notifies the populace of the [140] canton that 43 in view of his father's death he wishes to go to Ouagadougou to lay claim to the succession. He then asks the aid of every man present: 100 cowries from each ykanda (head of compound) and 50 cowries from each dakonré (bachelor). This aid is at once forthcoming unless there is rivalry for the post. In that case the villages give their help to the candidate they wish to have appointed.

When he reaches Ouagadougou, the Nabitienga makes a series of calls and presents numerous gifts.

He gives: 1) 10,000 cowries and a sheep to the minister of the Mogho Naba who has jurisdiction over him; 2) 50,000 to 100,000 cowries, depending on his importance, a horse, and sometimes a cow to the Mogho Naba himself; 3) varying quantities of cowries, depending on the importance of the person visited, to the other ministers and important personages; 4) 1,000 to 2,000 cowries and a rooster to the Zusoaba (chief eunuch) whom he visits the following morning; and finally 5) generous gifts during the rest of his stay to the bonsramba (griot), benda, luinsé, doudissi, and gangando, as well as other courtiers.

63 Nomination. A kombéré candidate may stay at Ouagadougou from twenty to thirty days or even longer. On the eve of the nomination, the Mogho Naba summons the Baloum Naba and orders him to have the Baloum Naba and orders him to have the Nabitienga provide a chicken and a sheep for his sacrifice. This is certain proof that he is going to be appointed the next day, so he very generously rewards the soroné who brings him the message.

[141] The sheep (pesgo) and the rooster (noraogo) are sent to the Mogho Naba, who has them killed in his courtyard.

The next day the Mogho Naba, as soon as he appears, summons the Ouidi Naba, the Larrhallé Naba, the Kamsoro Naba, the Gounga Naba, and the Baloum Naba, and says to them: "Today I wish to make an end of the koubissi ("children of the kouré" or funeral observances); which among the candidates here is really capable of succeeding the late chief?" The Ouidi Naba replies: "Do whatever pleases you, Sire." After this, the Mogho Naba says: "In that case, I designate the Nabitienga, for his father did not forget me an instant during his life and it would not make sense to pass over his son." Then the Mogho Naba returns to his palace.

The Ouidi Naba returns to his place, calls the Baloum Naba, the Bend Naba, and the Poé Naba, and tells them the sovereign's

(63) decision. These three personages thank the Ouidi Naba, and the Baloum Naba in turn goes back to his place, summons the Sogoné-kassanga (chief of the sogoné), and orders him to send for a reliable sogoné. The latter, accompanied by a Bilbalga (inhabitant of Bilbalogo, the section of the Baloum Naba), is sent to answer the call of the Ouidi Naba.

The Ouidi Naba says to them: "Yelé Nakomsé, Nabaoudba tib leb saomin (tell the naba candidates to come out into the sun), Laï soki Nabitienga diessé à ba sin nan ki a yela mé ti niondi kon and nam (and ask the Nabitienga which son or relative his father, before he died, designated to succeed him)." The Nabitienga replies: "Yamb yam m'ba ka niak ned [142] yé (act as you see fit; my father designated no one)."

Once more the Ouidi Naba sends a question: "Là ting ramb yé la me tib kon anda (which candidate was chosen by the inhabitants of the canton)?" The Nabitienga replies again: "Ting ramb ka niak ned tib kon yé (the inhabitants have no choice but yours)." When this reply is brought to the Ouidi Naba, he finally says: "Go now and invest the Nabitienga with full powers; he is the choice of the Mogho Naba (Toughin kon nabitieng'nam, ti Mog'Naba yella me tib kon nien)." Then the envoys snatch the sheepskin which the Nabitienga was wearing over his shoulder and turn in one corner of it. They bear him in triumph to the tom-boko (literally, "hole in the dust"), and the appointed naba is now acclaimed by the crowd. He is then taken successively before the Ouidi Naba, the Zusoaba, and the Baloum Naba. Finally he is led to the shelter in which stands the Bend' Naba (chief of all the drummers of the Mogho Naba), who salutes him to the sound of his drum.

[551] The Zabyouré (literally, "pseudonym"). This is the name adopted by each new chief. It replaces his real name which must not be uttered during the lifetime of the naba.

As he stands before the Band'Naba, the Nabitienga says: "Everyone has honored me, respected me, and the Mogho Naba has chosen mé to succeed my father. I have no zabyouré, and I cannot, after all, get along without one." He then begins to enumerate some possible ones (for a study of these names, see [143] the special section above). Once all of these formalities are completed, the 63 new naba mounts his horse and goes off with the minister who has jurisdiction over him. The minister offers him some zom kom (water with flour in it) and then welcomes him into his courtyard where he is offered a canari of dam (beer) and gouré (kola nuts). He is then escorted back to the home of his gangsoba by a goodly throng of drummers, horsemen, etc.

63 All the defeated candidates are required to shave their heads
302 at once and to make a formal act of submission to the new naba as soon as he has returned to the home of his gangsoba (host). It should be added that the candidates allow their hair to grow from the day of the death of the naba to the day on which his successor is appointed.

63 The new appointee must offer dam, saghbo, and cowries to the 43 nayiridamba. He also offers dam, kola nuts, and cowries to the drummers.

63 On the following day he accompanies the minister to the home of the Mogho Naba. During the monarch's second audience (beg sonré), 644 the minister calls him to salute the Mogho Naba. The new naba goes forward to the tomboko, cries out three times (cries of joy), and then performs the kantissé (the Mossi salute). Thereupon, the Ouidi Naba says to the Mogho Naba: "The chief whom you deigned to honor yesterday wishes to express his gratitude." The Mogho Naba responds to the salute and then, for the first time, offers him a canari of dam.

The new naba then calls upon the ministers and other important personages (Ouidi Naba, Larrhallé Naba, Gounga Naba, [144] Poé Naba, Kamsoro Naba, Samandé Naba, the imam, Daporé Naba, and the next day the Zusoaba).

Seven days later the Mogho Naba gives him a robe, a pougla (red fez), a nagpouré (cushion), and néoda (slippers).

The new naba removes his old ragged clothes (I use the description advisedly, since custom forbids him to change his clothes until he has received those given by the Mogho Naba). He gives the discarded garments to a relative, dresses in the robe from the Mogho Naba, puts on the pougla (fez), and becomes a true naba.

63 A few days later he asks permission to return to his own lands. Many court representatives (nayirdamba) accompany him. It is the 631 duty of these representatives to assemble the notables of the villages and to order them to submit to the new naba, the only one recognized by the Mogho Naba.

631 In order to show their joy,[3] the people have large quantities of 527 beer prepared, and games are organized which may continue for several days. The village notables come to offer their submission and to swear fealty, bringing gifts (cowries, sheep, etc.) in accordance with the resources of the village and the wealth of the inhabitants.

631 When the nayirdamba leave for Ougadougou, the naba gives:
431 a wife and a robe to the Bilbalga; a wife and a robe to the soroné of the Mogho Naba; a wife and a robe to the soroné or the Baloum-Naba; a wife and a robe to the child of the Bend'Naba; etc.

Any children born to the women [145] so given belong, respectively, to the masters of these representatives.

631 Burial. Their burial is carried out in much the same manner
766 as in the case of the Mogho Naba, except for the specific persons involved. The arrangement of the tomb is also similar, although there is, of course, less pomp displayed. [146]

[3] [i.e. At the appointment of the new naba—Analyst]

Chapter 9

The Two Major Mossi Festivals

Mossi Festivals

796 In actual fact, there is only one annual festival celebrated by 527 the Mossi. It is known as tinsé or tingana. A second festival, which is more a family affair, is called basgha. The latter is variously named, depending on the region: for the Mogho Naba, it is called m'barengma; for the ordinary Moaga, basgha; in certain regions, kinkirga; etc. Although the date for the first festival is fixed by the Mogho Naba, the second festival is celebrated by each canton chief, each village chief, or each ikanda (married man) on any day that suits him, usually after the harvest.

In addition to these principal festivals, every important village has its annual festival, a kind of special market day. On 796 that day there is dam (beer) in every house and abundant meat, 527 and the inhabitants of nearby villages come to the festivities.

Here we shall describe only the two major festivals, tinsé and basgha.

Tinsé (Mossi Ritual Festival), or Naba Oubri Ma Kouré (The Funeral of Naba Oubri's Mother)

796 Origin. Naba Oubri, son of Zoungrana and [147] founder of 769 the Ouagadougou dynasty, gave his mother a very impressive kouré (funeral). The kouré took on the appearance of a great festival because of the large number of animals sacrificed, the generous supply of food, and the great quantity of beer (dam) prepared. Since Oubri was very powerful, he ordered that the anniversary of his mother's funeral should be celebrated every year, even after his death. His mother was Pogh'toe Hinga (literally, "bearded woman").

For this reason and also to obtain health for his people and abundant rain for their crops, the Mogho Naba still quite regularly celebrates this annual festival known as tinsé (from tinga "earth"). There is no set date for it; it is celebrated whenever possible, usually after the harvest.

796 Preparatory sacrifices. Before setting the date for the tinsé,
769 the Mogho Naba has livestock (cows, sheep) and roosters killed
782 on the tombs of his predecessors.

According to precedence, the sacrifices begin with Naba Zoungrana, Oubri's father, whose tomb is at Komtoega in the circle of Tenkodogo. The Mogho Naba sends a cow to the Loumbi-Raogo Naba to be sacrificed on the tomb of Naba Oubri. Oubriyaogo Naba (the guardian of Oubri's tomb) has the duty of sacrificing the animal.

The other animals are sacrificed by the Ouagadougou Naba, representing the family of the Ninissi (first [148] inhabitants of the country). He is accompanied by the eunuchs who are the guardians of the tombs (yad'nanamsé).

In order to honor emperors whose tombs are in various parts of the colony, representatives of the Mogho Naba are sent out with 796 sacrificial animals, and they are required to celebrate the festi-

769 val in these villages before returning to Ouagadougou.
782 In the old days the animals destined to be sacrificed were captured in the cantons by horsemen assigned to that duty. Today, however, the Mogho Naba requests his vassals to supply them.

It should be noted that the following Peulh chiefs provide cattle of their own volition and without any compulsion: Komtam Silmanaba, Gombogo Silminaba, Kourgou Silminaba, and Barkoundba Silminaba.

796 Setting the date for the ceremony. A week after the sacrifices
769 the emperor summons the Tansoba (war minister) or, if he cannot appear (sickness or some other chance reason), the Konkosé Naba. This personage must reply to the summons on the day he receives it.

796 The king then assembles his principal ministers and sets the 769 date for the celebration of the tinsé, twenty or twenty-one days
211 ahead. The Mogho Naba hands the Tansoba several knotted ropes (yoda) which are to be distributed by him to the following chiefs: [149] Sapone Naba, Tuili Naba, and Loumbila Naba.

The last-named chief hands his rope over to the Dapelgo Naba and to the Méguet Naba.

There are as many knots in the rope as there are days remaining until the festival.

As soon as the Tansoba has handed over the ropes, he must immediately return to his village.

The persons who have received the ropes are required to transmit them to the kombemba (plural of kombéré, canton chief) who untie a knot each day.

796 Celebration of the festival. Early on the day of the ceremony, 769 a Friday (arzouma), the ministers and other court officials present themselves before the king to wish him welcome (tabo).

The Mogho Naba presents a loaf of salt (yamss'néré, literally 796 "salt millstone") which is to be divided among the following digni-
769 taries: Ouidi Naba, Larrhallé Naba, Gounga Naba, Kamsaongho
263 Naba, Bougretenga Naba, Benga Naba, Poé Naba, Tampouf Naba, Bend'Naba, and their followers.

Half of a loaf of salt is also offered to the Baloum Naba, Dapoya Naba, Samandé Naba, and Wedranga Naba.

796 769 263 The latter reserve a small share for the Zussoba [150] (chief eunuch) and the Bilbalsé (inhabitants of Bilbalogo, the section of the Baloum Naba).

796 769 The next morning, Saturday, the king has a large number of cattle slaughtered and many sagbo cakes prepared. The latter are piled one on top of another to form tahinsé (mountains) in the courtyard where the daily audiences are held.

On these mountains of sagbo are placed whole quarters of sheep. Many bowls of cooked rice are put in rows beside the millet cakes.

The Larrhallé Naba, the second minister who is in command of the Samandé (the court), stands before one of the mountains of sagbo, takes a cake which he divides into three parts, and tosses them at random in different directions in the courtyard. Thus he offers food to the invisible spirits and to the manes of previous ministers who once frequented the place. During this ceremony he utters some words which may be translated as follows: "Take this sagbo and bring peace and happiness to the emperor and to his people."

After this, the Larrhallé Naba returns to his kouga (mound of stones) to make way for the Gand'Naba. The latter, too, picks up a cake and also the foot of a cow. Then the king's bodyguard, the followers of the ministers, the Bilbalssé, and the emperor's servitors make a dash for the mountains of sagbo and the rice, and there is a general scramble to get the biggest piece. It goes without saying that they come out of the fray covered with sauce, and half of the food is spilled on the ground. [151]

At this point, the ministers and their escorts depart.

Each ikanda (head of a family) calls the family elder (the patriarch) and gives him a rooster and a goat (lacking a sheep) to be sacrificed to the manes of his ancestors. The old man pronounces the following words: "Youmd yelle n'ta, ta zagla yel t'm konfo, tif reg kouin gnimassem, la sounogo, ta pam kodo, la rogom (accept these offerings on the part of X... and grant him health, happiness, and prosperity. Protect his family and grant him good harvests and many children.

796 769 263 776 It is interesting to note that the meat, whether boiled or roasted, is never seasoned with red pepper (tiparé), for the tinsé [spirits]

796
769
263
776

would visit their anger upon those who were guilty of such an indiscretion by making them blind or at least causing them severe eye trouble in later years.

796
769
[261]

Everyone celebrates the tinsé at home by preparing all sorts of food (sagbo, rice, corn, beans, etc.). The people stuff themselves to the point of indigestion.

Thirty days after the anniversary celebration of the funeral of Oubri's mother, the Tansoba (war minister) returns to the emperor the rope used for the date of the tinsé.

Around the fortieth day, that is, a week after the departure of the Tansoba, the Loumbila Naba comes to salute the emperor. The latter gives him a cow to be slaughtered at Widin (section of the Ouidi Naba).

A week after the departure of the Loumbila Naba, [152] the Guilingou Tengsoba pays a visit to the Mogho Naba. We have already seen that it was an ancestor of this Tengsoba who asked Naba Zoungrana to send his son, Oubri, to administer the country and to help him drive out the Habé who today live by the cliffs of Bandiagara (Sudan). The Mogho Naba is obligated to give a cow and some salt to this Tengsoba.

Then comes the turn of the Saponé Naba (nayrdin, representative of Naba Kouda) who, with his followers, receives a cow and some salt. Finally, for Bonsa Naba, Kamsaonguin Tengsoba, and Pazani Tengsoba, the Mogho Naba has a sheep killed which is served with many plates of sagbo.

It should be noted that when the Tangsob-ramba appear before the emperor they put down their laya (magic axes) and are at once brought white roosters which they are expected to kill in the timpelem (courtyard).

Thus, it is apparent that this festival has no particularly remarkable features. Its sole aim is to make peace between the living and the dead and to give everyone a chance to eat well.

The Basgha of the Mogho Naba, or the Nights the Emperor M'ba (Rarengma) Sleeps Away from Home

(May my father not arrive before I do.)

769 The basgha. Before making use of his newly harvested crops, 782 the Moaga ikanda (married man, head of a family) is obligated to 796 offer this new produce to his ancestors. Therefore, he has dam (dolo, millet beer) prepared with the large red [153] millet, already sprouted, and cakes made with the millet or the sorghum. He kills chickens and a goat, or a ram, and invites his neighbors and relatives to the feast. He is convinced that the manes of his ancestors share the feast.

The emperor of the Mossi is no exception to this rule. The basgha of the Mogho Naba is celebrated with more pomp, and we shall describe it briefly below.

It should first be noted that there is no particular date set by custom for the basgha, either for the Mogho Naba or for the ordinary Moaga. Everyone celebrates it whenever he can after the harvest.

491 The sotasgo (completion of the road). Before the French came 653 and the administration took over road building, each minister had a road or, more accurately, a broad path which led straight to the king's courtyard and which had to be maintained by the minister. Since everyone is busy in the fields during the winter months, it is easily understandable that the roads are somewhat neglected during that season. When the Mogho Naba decides to put everything to rights with his ancestors, he notifies the Ouidi Naba, his first minister, who sends word to the other ministers that they must clear their soyan (from soré, "path"). The ministers order the inhabitants of their respective sections to do the work, but put off completing the last stretch leading into the courtyard, samandé, [154] until the date for sotasgo is known.

653 Sotasgo takes place on a Saturday.

The Ouidi Naba makes a large pile of several loads of millet (kaguindi) and chooses about forty strong young men to carry it into the court of the king. His colleagues (Larrhallé Naba, Gounga 653 Naba, and Baloum Naba) do the same thing. (We have seen in an earlier chapter, under "Payments to the Mogho Naba" that the millet brought by the ministers and vassals makes up the food supply for the emperor and his wives; the harvest from his own fields is used to feed foreigners and to make beer for the basgha.)

[533] In order to arouse the young men to greater efforts, drummers accompany them, playing "pang'rog'kamga, kamba komsomba (these young men were born of strength; they are worthy of their parents)."

Loads of millet are presented to the emperor during his first audience (wend'pous yan), after the ministers have paid their respects. The Soré Naba (literally, "chief of the path"), taking his place before the Mogho Naba, but with his back to him, orders the young men by the sound of drums to finish clearing the roads of the naba up to the king's courtyard. Since the work was virtually completed, this is a mere formality.

The ministers' followers and the bearers who brought in the millet, equipped with axes, daba, and even sticks, pretend to work energetically. They gesticulate, cry out, and [155] sing. The Soré Naba then goes under a shelter reserved for him, and the young men join him there.

196 769 The Ouidi Naba, the Larrhallé Naba, the Gounga Naba, and the Kamsaoug' Naba salute the emperor, and it is only then that the latter sets the date for the celebration of his basgha.

Once the date is set, the bodyguards of the Mogho Nabo (samand' kamba), whose chiefs are Samandé and Rakogdo, are ordered to start at once to repairing the shelters in the courtyard where the daily audiences are held.

Sleeping away from home. Three days before the Feast of the Dead and as soon as he has given his pugtiéma (first wife) the sprouted millet for making dam (beer), the Mogho Naba becomes uneasy. This is because the kimsé (manes of his ancestors) are present in the house. He must find more peaceful lodgings.

On Wednesday evening, therefore, he goes to the home of the Samand'Naba of Kamsaoghin. He spends the night there, but at cockcrow the following morning he returns to his home where he spends the day. That night he goes to Gounghin and spends the night in a house near the home of the Gounga Naba, his third minister.

796 Friday night he stays at the home of Bangr'Naba Sambo. Very early 769 Saturday morning he returns home in time to be present when the Bend'Naba (chief of the drummers) comes to wish him a happy new year and a long life and to pray that Wenam (God) will spare him to [156] offer many more bascé (plural of basgha) in honor of his predecessors.

[431] It goes without saying that during the nights spent away from home the emperor receives many visitors and substantial gifts. The persons at whose homes he spends the night naturally give him the warmest possible welcome.

Preparatory sacrifices. These are performed inside the house of the Mogho Naba, and the details are known only to the following four persons: Mogho Naba, Emperor of the Mossi; Baloum Naba, chief steward and chief of pages; Zussoba Kassanga, chief eunuch and guardian of the harem; the pugtiéma, the first wife of the Mogho Naba.

It is known that animals are sacrificed, with the Mogho Naba 796 himself holding the victim and pronouncing the sacramental words.
769 Perhaps there is also worship of certain sacred fetishes. In any 782 event, we are convinced that there is nothing involved in the ceremony which is contrary to the principles of French civilization since there is no human sacrifice. We should have liked very much to describe these ancient practices, but the secret has been well kept.

Celebration of basgha. As soon as the Mogho Naba appears in 796 front of the zango (antechamber), the Bend' Naba beats a drum while 769 calling the names of deceased naba, beginning with Naba Oubri, the 533 founder of the Ouagadougou dynasty. [157]

As soon as the Bend'Naba stops playing, he and his followers are served sagbo (millet cakes), mouf (rice), dam (millet bee.), and nemdo (meat).

796 Likewise, the ministers and other court officials who come to 769 greet tabo (the new year) are given dam, sagbo, rice, and meat by [554] the Mogho Naba. The food is distributed to the dignitaries in the order of precedence, and the rest is reserved for the Bilbalessé and other followers of the ministers.

About eight-thirty, the ministers and court officials say [556] wennatassé, "God be with us," which means good bye, and then they return home.

769 they return to their homes.
796 The Bend'Naba and other drummers remain in the courtyard until the Sogon' kassanga (chief eunuch) bring to them, on behalf
533 of the emperor, the sum of 10,000 cowries and some beer. In the old days a young captive, seated amidst the cowries, accompanied these gifts. The messengers say to the drummers: "Nab'yet b'wa poustabo (the king sends us to give you these gifts on the occasion of his basgha)."

The chief of the drummers pours a drink for the Zussoba and orders his followers to play together "Tompaongo, Wend'kaouss'Naba niuré, Wenna wilig'vinré" (literally, "We thank the king for his gifts. May God give the Mogho Naba long life and allow us to come back to play here next year").

Before sending them away, the Mogho Naba is obligated to give a karfo (black robe [158] imported by the Haoussa) to the Bend' Naba and a robe to the Loun Naba (chief of the luinsé). Water with flour in it is likewise brought to the Bend'Naba, and he scatters it about the courtyard. The emperor is required by custom to walk upon this water of gnimassem (of good health) as he goes back to his apartments.

When all these formalities have been completed, the Bend'Naba, accompanied by his bards, takes his leave. The festival is over. On the days following, the drummers call on the ministers and [431] the other court dignitaries and are given many gifts (cowries and livestock).

All of these gifts are retained by the Bend'Naba or by someone chosen by him, and they are distributed later, with due regard for the hierarchy existing among the griot. The share of the older men is always greater than that accorded to the younger ones. [159]

Chapter 10

The Wives of the Naba. The sogoné. The Pogsiouré

Naba Warga and the Origin of the Sogoné

173 Naba Warga was constantly at war with the Riziam Naba, who 644 was called Mamzi (which means "I myself do not know"). He had 357

173 to be on the field of battle himself and for five years was unable 644 to vanquish his enemy who was entrenched on a mountain and 357 well supported by the local inhabitants.

After Warga had tried every means at his command to conquer his enemy, he hacked down the crops, which were almost ripe, and captured all the livestock that ventured down the mountain. In short, he devastated the country.

This succeeded so well that at last the local inhabitants, faced with famine, had to choose between the life of the chief they were sheltering and their own lives. Mamzi was therefore handed over and imprisoned at Saponé (1).

1. The principal canton town in the district of Ouagadougou.

During the five years of this difficult campaign, Naba Warga, aside from the warriors, had only a young boy to serve him since his wives were not present. The boy served as cook [160] and personal servant. In short, he performed the duties of a wife so well that Warga decided that he was worthy of some notice and decided to reward him.

When he had returned to his lands, he freed this faithful servitor after first giving him a wife. Then it occurred to him that several children in his court could perform the same services. He therefore ordered them to be recruited on a large scale, and these were the sogoné.

357 Every boy recruited to become a sogoné can expect to be given 644 a wife, however little she may be worth, when he is freed.

The sogoné have the same standing as the napagba,[1] and they [554 304] wear the same ornaments. A group of bracelets worn on the wrists, in fact, distinguish the napagba and the sogoné from free women.

It is their duty to serve the naba. They form a half circle around the naba when he appears; they accompany him on his short outings; and they carry the scepter and all of the insignia of chiefdom. They serve drinks to the naba, fan him when he takes a nap [293] with fans called fika, make his bed, and do various errands. Likewise a naba never sends anyone but a sogoné to take a message to his wives.

[1] [i.e. royal wives — Analyst]

644 The sogoné may not wear trousers. He wears a type of 357 drawers called benda. All the nanamsé (plural of naba) have 292 followed the example of Naba Warga, and nowadays the most insignificant kombéré has at least a dozen sogoné.

[161]

The Napogré. General Conditions. Number of Wives of the Emperor Today. Ornaments.

644 Depending on whether the napagha is destined for the chief 595 himself or for one of his brothers or sons, the instruction of the napogré are given either in the quarters of the pugtiéma (first wife of the naba) or at the home of one of the old nabissi.

Water is heated and in it is put a bit of karite butter and other 644 ingredients. After the girl's head, armpits, and public hair have 595 been shaved by some old women, the pugtiéma or the old man dips
302 a hand into the water, utters certain cabalistic words, and gives the names of all the chiefs who have succeeded each other up to the father of the current ruler.

644 The water is then given to the old women who bathe the 595 young napagha. It is at this time that she is instructed in the duties and obligations of the napogré, what she may do and what she should avoid.

[301] The new wife is then adorned with bracelets, kouaba (plural of kobré), and with rouamba [ankle rings], or with only bracelets. The chief may marry her at once or, depending on the circumstances, send her to the man for whom she is destined.

[684] The napagha must never have relations with any man other than her husband as long as she lives. Formerly she was pitilessly killed if she broke this rule. [162]

[302 As we have just seen, the napagha has no hair, and this is 30[] the primary distinctive mark. Also, she wears bracelets on her wrists, sometimes even on her arms and some on her ankles (this is done mostly by favorites). Finally some wear kouaba, ornaments most often worn by old women.

The number of wives or napagha varies according to the importance of the naba and especially according to the desires of naba. According to the 1926 census, the present Mogho Naba had thirty-seven wives.

644 It should be said that the napagha, who is regarded as a 595 piece of property, is part of the estate of a deceased chief. The 562 new naba takes some of the old and young wives, and the rest are 587 kept in the family of the nabissi. It is therefore not unusual to find women in the household of a naba who have been married to two or even three deceased chiefs. If they are not too old, they may give birth to children of the chief who is their second or third husband.

644 The establishment of a naba is often divided into three sec-
595 tions.

1. The zagkas sanga (the great house). All the old women, the unwanted ones, live here. Their mistress and guardian is the pugtiéma, who has charge of the house where the kimsé or manes of the ancestors live.

2. Zagbilin. The middle-aged women [163] who are still occasionally visited by their husband live here.

3. Dogoundba. This is the assemblage of several young and beautiful wives grouped around the favorite. They are called dogoundba, "guardians of the hut of the naba." These women receive all the favors, wear the finest ornaments, and are dressed in [291] godé (1). Most of the time the dogoundba live in one or several

1. A skirt that is highly valued among the Mossi.

huts, depending on their number.

Each of the women in the other two sections has her own hut.

Since the naba has too many wives to be able to look after all of them, they must provide their own clothing and food. Hence, they are forced to cultivate plots and sell some of their produce. Each napagha has her own small field of millet, peanuts, beans, and peas.

The dogoundba have a collective plot. They help their husband who not only has to feed them, but is also required to support [357] the sogoné and the samand'kamba (the latter are "people of the outer courtyard," another category of servitors who are sent on errands to the villages or who serve as grooms).

In the homes of the kombemba (plural of kombéré), it is the duty of the dogoundba to prepare food for the sogoné and for any

644
595 foreigners who are being housed by the naba. [164]

Each sogoné or samanbiga chooses a mother from among the 644 wives of the naba (only those in the first two sections).
595

He helps her to cultivate her plot of ground and receives in 357 return a little food over and above the ration of sagbo given to the 608 sogoné as a group.

At Nanore (1), for example, it was formerly the rule that

1. Canton in the administrative district of Koudougou.

when a woman brought some sagbo to her adopted son, she could not simply hand it to him. Instead, holes were dug in the courtyard of the naba, into which the woman put the sagbo and sauce. Then the young man came to eat the food, and later the woman came back for her bowls.

644 Finally, it is still forbidden for anyone to play a guitar when 595 a napagha is passing by unless the player is the naba himself or 533 someone called upon to play by the naba. It should be noted that 687 the Moaga prefers the guitar for intimate occasions. Therefore, to 832 play it when a napagha passes by is actually to court her.

The Pogsiouré, or the Recruitment of Sogoné and Saman'kamba

643 Aside from a few special cases limited by custom which we 562 shall presently describe, the naba can never dispose of the daughters of his subjects, either to make them [165] his own wives or to bestow them on someone else, without the permission of the parents.

Pogsiouré comes from pog', the diminutive of pagha, "woman," and from siouré, diminutive of sioubo, "to give anticipating a profit."

562 As a result of family quarrels or even voluntarily, a Moaga
431 "may give away his daughters and those of his brothers and close 643 relatives to the naba." It is obvious that the naba cannot keep all of these girls, so he gives some of them to his brothers, his uncles, his sons, and even to ordinary Mossi who have done him a service.

In the same way -- and this is more frequent -- every sogoné (page) or samand'biga [singular of samand'kamba] (bodyguard or

562
431 groom) who has served his naba satisfactorily receives, at the 643 time he is freed, a young girl who may be nubile, but who may, on the other hand, be just a small child.

In either case, the former servitor is required to call upon the naba from time to time and to take him gifts (cowries or roosters). If the girl is still living with her relatives, in addition to his trifling presents to the naba, the fiancé may make a few presents to his in-laws, although it is not obligatory.

562 Pogsiouré. The first daughter born of a marriage between a 643 Moaga subject (former servitor, son, brother, or uncle of the naba, 644 etc.) and the woman given to him [166] by the naba becomes the 858 "property" of the latter with full rights over her. She is known as "the daughter of the pogsiouré" and is fated to become pogsiouré in her turn.

If the first-born is a boy, the naba may bring him to his 643 court as soon as he reaches the age of discretion to make him either 644 a sogoné or a samand'biga, and the child's father cannot make the 858 slightest objection.

357 This does not imply that under Mossi law the sogoné and samand'kamba must be children of the pogsiouré. As absolute master of all his subjects, the naba can recruit his servitors throughout his domain as he needs them, with no opposition by the Mossi to this recruitment.

644 The fate of the daughters of the pogsiouré. The girls are 858 taken from their relatives as soon as they are old enough to work
562 and are entrusted by the naba to his own wives.

The latter, for all practical purposes, become the adoptive mothers of these children and, as such, see to their food and clothing. This does not prevent the real mother from bringing cowries and clothing to her daughter, and to make sure that the child will be well treated by the napagha (wife of the naba), she sometimes [431] even brings the latter a gift of kalgo (soumbala) or karite butter (kamé).

When the girls reach puberty, the naba chooses the most at-[584] tractive for his fiancées, and the [167] others are given to some of his administrators or to his own relatives.

562 593 644 Rights of parents over their daughters. Although, as has already been noted, the parents retain the right to help their daughters in small ways, they may not, under any circumstances or pretext, break off their engagement nor prevent their marriage. Still less can they promise the daughter to a third party or expect any sort of gifts from the naba.

Later on, in the event that there is agreement between the parties, the husbands may give trifling presents to their in-laws, but there is neither obligation nor coercion to do so.

562 858 Exceptions. Girls given to the marabouts by the naba are considered a kind of alms (saraka), and any children born of such unions belong to the true fathers and may not be disposed of by the chief.

644 357 858 Disposition of boys. Boys recruited as sogoné or samand'kamba are required to serve the naba faithfully, but they continue to belong to their real relatives from whom they annually receive cowries and particularly the fougoibga (blanket).

644 357 661 Although the sogoné are regularly fed and clothed by the naba -- because [168] a naba must always be surrounded by many pages -- this is not done for the samand'kamba. In many cantons and especially in Ouagadougou at the emperor's court, they receive only a meager pittance every two, three, four, or seven days since their role as "vagabond" or groom is supposed to provide them with ample opportunities to rob or rather to pillage the natives. During the winter the grooms and other samand'kamba go out into fields of maize and millet at night or in the morning, and there is general looting. As for any fowl lingering in the karaga (fields of millet near the huts), they are killed and hidden in the bundles of hay used to feed the horses. There are exceptions to this rule: some ministers of the emperor and canton chiefs give their samand'kamba at least one meal per day -- at night -- and during the winter, because they are doing field work, they are given cooked beans or sagbo (millet cakes) at noon.

644 357 608 In general way, however, it may be said that this type of servitor is not supported by the naba. Like the sogoné, the samand'biga chooses a mother at the court of the naba. He helps her cultivate her plot and performs other small services for her (weaving her clothes, 644 357 608 for example), and in return the adoptive mother gives him a bit of food, over and above his regular ration.

644 357 [169] In view of these circumstances, those who are not required at the home of the naba to care for the horses or for some special service spend half the year with their relatives.

644 357 565 It is perhaps of interest to point out that the samand'kamba are mostly sons of the chiefs of villages of nabissi (sons of naba), sons of nakomsé (descendants of naba and nabissi), and sometimes even sons of canton chiefs at the court of the Mogho Naba. There is also the child of the ordinary Moaga, who was not made a sogoné because he was not thought worthy of the position. The rigorous discipline required of the former young men teaches them "to suffer in order to be able to command."

644 357 Anticipation of freedom. If the sogoné or samand'biga is the eldest son and is old enough to marry at the time of his father's death, the naba is required to free him, even though the period of obligatory service has not been completed.

643 844 584 Another custom, the zan-boko. There is another curious custom among the Mossi. If during the course of his journeys the naba stops in a village and during his stay a girl is born to a local Mossi woman, the child is his, with full rights, if he has been told of the birth.

However, the naba often knows nothing about the event, and the father takes care not to speak of it and then makes whatever disposition of the child he wishes.

844 584 [170] This custom, however, is practiced to its fullest extent between Mossi. A Moaga sana (stranger) passing through the village is invited by the elders to dig the zan-boko (hole in which the placenta must be buried). This is his zounogo, "opportunity." He gives a few cowries (100 to 200) to the head of the family and becomes the fiancé of the baby girl. Later on, when she reaches puberty, the man will make the customary gifts to the parents, and nothing will stand in the way of the marriage.

[171] Chapter 11

Marriage, Birth, and Death

Marriage

000 In this chapter we shall review all aspects of marriage throughout Mossi country. The customs are the same everywhere, ranging from the marriage of girls reared in the household of the naba to the institution of concubinage. We shall first deal with the most common forms of marriage, then discuss the matter of bride price, and finally conclude with a discussion of the social status of the Moaga woman.

587 Girls are married between the ages of seventeen and nineteen. With certain rare exceptions, a girl of sixteen or eighteen is never sent to her husband. Such an age is considered very unfavorable [843] for child-bearing, and it is even thought that children whose mothers are too young will not survive.

Young men marry between the ages of eighteen and twenty-five. [172]

562 584 Marriage of a girl reared in the household of a naba. Girls born of the marriage of a woman given to a former servitor by either province or canton chiefs became by right the property of the latter. These girls are taken from their parents when they are old enough to do some work and are entrusted by the naba to his wives. They are henceforth regarded as betrothed to the naba and are obliged to submit to all of the conditions of servitude which are imposed on the other wives.

When they reach marriageable age, they may be given, without either their own or their parents' consent, to freed servitors or to any individual who may have rendered some service to the naba.

This is the first type of forced marriage.

Marriage of a girl given by her parents. Since the girl is regarded as simply a "thing," a being without volition, she may be promised at birth. Very often gratitude for hospitality or the existence of an old debt is sufficient reason for promising a daughter.

562 When the girl reaches marriageable age, she usually finds herself 584 with a husband who is sometimes older than her father and whom she cannot possibly love. She must go to him, however, since such is her father's will.

[131 [173] The fiancé brings some gifts (cowries, chickens, millet 585] beer) and claims his wife. The girl is sent off to her husband's home with no ceremony being performed.

This second type of forced marriage has the parents' consent.

587 Marriage by inheritance. When the head of a household dies, the 428 women, who are considered a part of his estate, are divided up just as is the rest of the property. They are apportioned to the sons of 562 the deceased, or his brothers if the sons are not of marriageable age.
768 However, unlike the procedure for a chief's estate, in which the wife is just a "thing," these wives may choose their husbands from among the members of the family.

This is semi-free marriage.

587 Besides the type of marriage which we shall later call "free marriage" -- a form which occurs very frequently since it includes the marriages of loose women who may have as many as nine husbands, only stopping at the last one because of old age -- there is also remarriage due to successive widowhoods. Some women are so [177] unlucky as to lose [174] a succession of husbands. They are finally avoided like the plague since they have the reputation of being cursed by the gods (Mossi, kombwinga; Bambara, térédiougou).

584 Marriage after a conventional proposal. When a young man wishes to ask for the hand of a young girl who is not yet engaged, he chooses as his go-between a person who is on good terms with the elders of the girl's village. If the response is favorable, the young man brings a chicken, a secco (dagnopinri) [coarse matting] to close the doorway, and some fagots. He goes back to his village and returns at intervals bearing sprouted millet or millet beer and a chicken for the head of the family. The latter at last tells the go-between: "Tell X... that we accept him as our son and that we shall try to give him satisfaction as soon as possible."

Some time later the young man returns once more with a chicken, sprouted millet, or beer for the elders of the village. He makes 584 visits and presents a few small gifts. This state of affairs goes on for one or several years. Finally the head of the family calls together his little council and makes known his intention of giving So-and-So's daughter to X... from such-and-such village. There is seldom a refusal since he has sole authority to give the girls in marriage. The young man is then sent to make the acquaintance of his prospective in-laws. As soon as he is presented, he makes a small gift (usually [175] 100 to 1,000 cowries are given).

If the girl is the oldest daughter, her fiancé is expected to bring a sheep, a hoe, a guinea hen, and some beer.

585 The young man is then told the date on which he may send for his fiancée. He has nothing further to do, except to make some preparations and to wait. When the girl is brought to him, he kills some chickens and a goat if he has one, and he has food prepared for the girl's escort. He must also give cowries to them, the amount depending on his own resources.

In many villages the girls married in this way never leave their husbands for fear of being cursed by their parents and condemned never to see their native villages again.

574 Finally, if the wife gives birth, the husband sends a chicken to 851 the village elder and the wife goes there to visit.

787 Girls who are hostile to a husband. These are girls whom the 584 soothsayers point out as hostile to a husband.

Although these girls are promised at an early age, just like other girls, they must not know that they are engaged, and if their fiancés should by chance come to visit, they are treated like ordinary guests who have just happened by.

583 When such a girl reaches seventeen, her fiancé arranges with her family to send her to the waterhole, the well, or the nearest market.

[176] The fiancé selects a group of his strongest friends, plies them with beer, and sends them off with instructions to abduct his fiancée on the way. The latter, accompanied by a woman or by other girls, is surrounded unexpectedly and seized by strong arms despite the resistance, often quite vigorous, of her brothers or her companions. She is then taken to the home of her husband.

A few days later some people are designated to take the girl's effects to her husband's home and to receive the traditional gifts.

837 588 548 [586] Free Marriage. The only marriage which can be called free, since it is accepted by both parties, is that of a woman who is unable to endure her first husband and leaves her village with the intention of becoming a prostitute. Divorce is quite rare because the Moaga does not readily agree to it. As she passes through a village, she asks for hospitality, and the news soon spreads that a "free" woman is staying at such-and-such a place. The young men hasten to her and seek to win her favors. Gifts are sent to her, and her hostess is used as go-between. Nine times out of ten, the woman accepts the candidate preferred by her hostess. After some questions concerning his origins and circumstances, one of the young men is accepted as a temporary lover. His comrades come to his aid, and for a few days there is a veritable festival in the village. There is a slight change in the [177] regular fare, since meat is added to the mush; chickens, raised with considerable difficulty, are used for this special treat. This semblance of marriage is thus celebrated. As has been pointed out, however, there has been no divorce, and the deserted husband soon learns the whereabouts of his wife. As soon as he finds out what village she is in -- it may be 100 kilometers away -- he promptly sets out, carrying in a sheepskin enough ground millet for the journey and 500 to 1,000 cowries. He also carries a rooster which, along with the shells, will be offered to the chief of the canton where the lover lives, to whom he will make his claim.

[578] Unions of this sort give rise to three-quarters of the quarrels with which the canton or province chiefs have to deal. A young Moaga who desires peace of mind never regularizes the situation by a so-called marriage even though he may not be able to resist the temptation to harbor the woman for a few days. In any event the affair is easily broken off since sooner or later the woman, eager for change, will want a new lover.

583 Thus, it may be said that although forced marriage has the disadvantage of having a girl marry without her consent, still it also has advantages and a degree of security because the woman, fearing [178] her parents' wrath, rarely leaves her husband. Furthermore, this type of marriage is vastly preferable from the standpoint of peace

583 to the sort of concubinage that "free marriage" is, as practiced in Mossi country.

The Situation of the Betrothed Couple during the Engagement

584 Generally speaking, the fiancé is supposed to avoid his betrothed before marriage. They treat each other with a kind of shy reserve.

Aside from the gifts made to the village elders and some cowries given to the future in-laws at the time of his first visit, no further demands are made on the fiancé.

584 694 The young man is formally forbidden to carry on an intrigue with a woman in the girl's village. If he does so, not only may the engagement be broken, but the lover may never again set foot in the village on paid of death.

Breaking the Engagement

584 When an engagement is broken, the gifts received need not be returned. On the other hand, the death of the girl is not regarded as breaking the engagement; the family must, sooner or later, offer another daughter to the young man to replace the girl who died.

An engagement may be broken [179] automatically in case of adultery, discussed below, or in the event of a quarrel between the two families.

Marriage Between First Cousins

582 Marriage between first cousins is not allowed. There can be no valid union between the children of a brother and sister, between a man and the daughter of either his father's or his mother's brother.

588 582 751 However, it sometimes happens -- inadvertently -- that a girl who has been given in marriage in a very distant village may find that her husband is a descendant of a great-grandparent (material or paternal) in the same family as her own. Had this been known, the marriage would not have taken place. Ordinarily, distant relationship is not discovered until long after the marriage, after complicated genealogical research. In that case, one of the pair, usually the wife, 588 582 751 wears a bracelet made of copper and iron intertwined, kalembanga, which is believed to protect the wearer against any disaster due to the technically illegal marriage. The kalembanga is also believed to protect the children born of the union from sudden death.

Polygyny

595 Polygyny is the rule throughout Mossi country. It is true that the number of wives varies with the resources and position of the individual. Mere heads of compounds who are somewhat well off may have [180] from five to eight wives and numerous fiancées. The [584] latter are usually reserved for the dakompa (older sons and younger brothers of the head of the family), assuming that these men will in turn render real service and be completely devoted to the head of the household.

There are many reasons for the practice of polygyny, but the main one is procreation. The under-nourished natives must rely on [553 134] the mother's milk to feed their babies and must therefore wait two or even three years before resuming sexual relations with a wife who is a nursing mother. Therefore, they prefer to have several wives.

Consummation

585 When the young girl is taken to her husband, she is entrusted to a woman whom she will henceforth treat as "mother."

A few days after the departure of the cortege, whose composition we shall describe presently, the man claims his fiancée. She is taken at night to the nuptial hut, which has no special features, and no one is present at the consummation of the marriage. In this respect the Mossi differ from the Bambara, who have a griot or an old woman accompany the couple to help the young man, if necessary, overcome the girl's resistance.

It goes without saying that if the girl is found to be a virgin, the [181] husband is overjoyed. If she is not a virgin, the love which he may have felt for her before possessing her is much diminished. The man shows the girl his anger, certain that she will at least tell her mother about it.

585 The following morning the new wife returns to the hut of her "mother." She is summoned by her husband several nights in a row before he resumes the practice of receiving each wife in turn.

The Bride Price. The Basket of the Fiancée

583 Bride price. Mossi custom does not require a bride price. The one thousand to several thousand cowries that are required, depending on the man's resources, plus chickens, a sheep and beer, are not a bride price, properly speaking, or "selling a daughter." Nothing is asked which could not be repaid one day without too much difficulty.

585 The fiancée's basket. The basket of the fiancée contains the girl's clothes, some soap, some karite butter, some cowries, gourds, and ladles. The basket is carried by one of the women in the cortege.

The cortege. The fiancée's cortege is usually composed of a young girl, a woman who has borne children, and a boy.

They proceed to the house of the village elder. [182] The relatives of the bridegroom provide food for them for several days. Finally, they are given a farewell dinner consisting of baskets of millet cakes and mutton, goat, or merely some chickens. They are also given cowries.

585 431 In addition to these gifts, the sum of 444 or 1,400 cowries (the "virginity price") is sewn into a sack and sent to the girl's mother. If the bride was given by a chief, he is entitled to from 2,000 to 3,000 cowries if the husband is an ordinary Moaga, 10,000 to 50,000 cowries if the husband himself is a naba. In this last case, the women in the cortege receive skirts, and the boy, a robe.

585 152 Note. While it is true that among many peoples a girl goes to her husband joyfully, it is quite the contrary in Mossi country. There is a real struggle to separate the girl from her parents. Many lose sleep and their appetites. On the day of departure they weep bitterly, and those who do not are insulted by the old women.

Social Status of the Moaga Woman and Work Assigned to Her 562 The Moaga woman is regarded as a veritable beast of burden. Household duties and the weaving of cotton for her own and her husband's clothes are not her only occupations. [183] She helps her husband cultivate the family field, and she has her own plots for peanuts, beans, etc.

She endures wretched treatment and must always submit to her husband's whims. She enjoys no consideration whatever and is never called upon to give an opinion. The husband alone rules the home.

[842] If she is so unfortunate as to have no children, she is regarded with scorn. She carries the loads when a move is in progress. A [482] basket and a pyramid of gourds containing her effects and those of her husband are balanced on her head, while the husband canters beside her on a horse or takes his ease on a donkey. If he is afoot, he carries only his quiver, his arrows, his bow, and a club.

To be sure, the Moaga woman may express in unpleasant words her resentment of the maltreatment to which she is subjected, because the Mossi admit that she has no weapon other than her tongue. This is what is meant by the saying, "A woman's mouth is her quiver."

Conjugal Life

834 Interdictions and permissible acts. The couple is forbidden to have sexual relations at the following times.

1. For a period of not less than two years and a half after the 834 birth of a child to safeguard the baby's life. Indeed, it is believed 853 that each child comes into the world with its own supply of milk, and if another child were to be conceived during the nursing period, [184] the first would die because the milk of the newborn child would be fatal to him.

2. During the menstrual period. The reason for this prohibition 834 that the husband's fetishes and charms lose part of their "power" after 841 relations at this time.

3. A pregnant woman visits her husband during the first six or 834 seven months. All relations then cease until some time after the 843 delivery, as indicated above.

843 4. A pregnant woman must not step over her husband; this would make him ill.

833 5. The sexual act may be performed with impunity in the courtyard of a dwelling (at night). Otherwise, it is expressly forbidden to do it outside the house and in any way other than lying on a mat or Peulh secco, in any case never directly on the ground.

845 6. The delivery will be difficult and complicated if the child was conceived in adultery. If the woman is to be delivered, it is 837 absolutely necessary that she confess the name of her accomplice 847 in the presence of witnesses. In this case, if the husband demands it -- and he always does -- the newborn child is killed by the erring wife immediately after it is born (1). [185]

> 1. The procedure is as follows. Some young mothers simply twist its neck and strangle it. Others put the baby in a jar of lukewarm water. The baby instinctively drinks and finally drowns.

837 Adultery. Before the arrival of the French, adultery committed 684 by the nakomsé (descendants of naba) was punished by the death of the guilty couple. Among ordinary Mossi, the culprit was simply banished from the family.

However, if the lover was not a relative of the woman's husband, he was forbidden henceforth to come to the village where the woman lived. If he failed to observe this rule, he risked being killed.

As a general rule, a Moaga woman takes a lover in a village 837 some distance away from her husband's village and not far from her own. When she asks her husband's permission to visit her family, she profits by the opportunity to spend some time with her lover or to let him know that she is going to her parents' home.

Dissolution of Marriage. Divorce.

586 A divorce may be imposed by a husband who no longer loves his wife, but neither ill-health nor sterility may be invoked for the 842 purpose. In the latter case, it is simply assumed that God does not want the woman to have children. She is often regarded with scorn, but sometimes no attention is paid to her lack of children.

586 The new husband of a woman who has been deserted does not [186] and cannot maintain any relations whatever with the former husband. In any event, the latter would never agree to see his successor, even though the divorce had been arranged with his consent. Besides, the new marriage is often contracted in another village.

The Question of Nationality Among the Mossi

641 In Mossi country the child takes the father's nationality, and any child born of a Moaga subject is himself a Moaga.

593 Any child, male or female, is under the authority, first, of his father and, above him, of the head of the family. A mother may never, under any circumstances, give her daughter in marriage.

641 If a Moaga woman happens to marry a foreigner, she does not acquire her husband's nationality. In the same way, a foreign girl (a Bambara or a Djerma, for example) does not lose her own nationality when she marries a Moaga. In the eyes of her husband's relatives, as well as the rest of the populace, she remains a foreigner, required to practice the customs of her husband but nevertheless a foreigner.

Thus, when a Moaga subject chooses to emigrate, the nationality of his children who remain in Mossi territory, whether minor or of age, does not ipso facto change.

A legitimate child takes on his father's nationality [187] even though the foreign-born father may have a Moaga as his wife.

Children born of a Moaga father and either a Moaga or foreign-born mother are Mossi.

[848] As for illegitimate children, they take the mother's nationality unless they are recognized, and this can be done only if the mother marries before the birth of the child.

If the child has not been legitimized until after his birth, he will sooner or later suffer from the omission, since his bastard origin will not long remain a secret.

Loss of nationality. The Mossi may lose their nationality only under the following two conditions.

1. When the Moaga subject has been expelled from his village for some serious crime, sent away by his relatives, and no longer regarded 641 as part of the family.

641 2. When a Moaga emigrates and settles permanently in a for-167 eign country, either to take up trading or to study the precepts of Islam. He is forced to abandon his usual customs and to scorn ancestral ways, thus losing his personal status. If he wishes to embrace Islam, he changes his name, and if he should return to his native village, he would no longer try to be identified as a Moaga, whose customs and beliefs he no longer shares and whom he now regards as an inferior.

641 [188] As has been noted, the Moaga woman who marries a foreigner or the foreign woman who marries a Moaga subject retains her own nationality. Thus, marriage does not involve any loss of nationality. Customs may have been modified, but it is certain that even a Moaga woman who had lived abroad for a long time would soon resume the customs and practices of her own country. The same may be said of a foreign woman who might divorce her Moaga husband and return to her own land.

Naturalization. Since naturalization is unknown, children born in Mossi country of a foreign father and either a Moaga or a foreign mother remain foreign. Furthermore, since children take their father's nationality, a divorce will not affect their status.

II. Birth

842 Conception. The natives have no very well-defined idea of the 176 process of conception. In their minds, the primary cause is God (Wenam), Master of Heaven and Earth, who gives children. It seems, however, that Wendé or Wenam forces the kinkirsi (spirits) to change into a human egg when the sperm is transmitted at the time of ejaculation.

The kinkirsi are invisible beings said to resemble small children and who live near certain houses or [189] groves. Only a few favored persons can see them.

In the same connection, it is believed that ancestors or certain deceased relatives are reincarnated.

843 Pregnancy. It is known that complete cessation of menstruation and the development and darkening of the breasts are the signs of 843 pregnancy in a woman. It is also known that the woman will give birth in nine months, but since it is impossible to be sure of the date of delivery, the pregnant woman is watched over constantly and is under the surveillance of the old women. In a general way, nature is allowed to take its course, but some people prefer to con-

[787 sult the soothsayers and the priests and to give alms and sacrifices 782] to avoid a miscarriage.

During pregnancy, women are forbidden to eat honey and, in general, any sweet foods.

Seguene-vando (from seguene, "to wear a skirt," and vando, "leaves, branches"). A few months after the cessation of menstruation, the pregnant woman is sent into the kim-dogo (hut of the kimsé, manes of the ancestors) at the home of the family elder. There she is completely disrobed, and branches are tied around her loins.

844 Delivery. Delivery takes place in the woman's own hut. There is no special preparation. [190] Old women who have had much practice help the mother while others heat water in which to cleanse the newborn child of all impurities.

No one except the old women is present during the delivery.
[842] Women who have not yet borne children are sent away, and for good reason since the sight of the birth process might make them sterile.

Finally, if the afterbirth does not come out at the time of birth or soon after, there are certain special measures taken to hasten its emergence.

846 Three or four days after the delivery, depending on whether the child is a boy or a girl, the mother, who has so far remained indoors, goes out for the first time.

She carries a sickle to ward off ghosts and other evil spirits.

The new mother's co-wives and relatives bring her safandé (soap), kamé (karite butter), and kalgo (soumbala); others give her cowries. The father has a sheep or rooster killed and a millet cake prepared.

The woman who acted as midwife is sent a ball of sagbo (millet mush) and a chicken leg. The heads of the mother and child are [302] partially shaved, and there is nothing else to do but to choose a name for the child. [191]

553 Choice of a name. Among the Mossi, a child's personal name depends on circumstances which preceded the birth or on an important 553 event associated with it. We shall classify children under two headings: 1) ordinary children; 2) children especially sought.

The second category refers to children born after their parents have consulted the soothsayers, given alms and sacrifices, or employed other magical procedures.

Since the ordinary child is regarded as a spontaneous gift of God, his name is given by the father's close relatives unless some recent or remote event requires a name having particular significance.

551 Some examples of common ordinary names are Bila and Poko.

Names having special meanings are illustrated by the following examples.

Passektale (from passek, "insufficient," and talé, "resentment, hatred") means "I do not know what has caused the hatred which is felt for me."

Paratsida (from paraté, "to be unwilling," and sida, "truth") means "enemy of truth," a name intimating that people dislike the truth.

Dimpougoubnoma (literally, dima, "great chief, king"; pougbo, "to follow"; and noma, "profitable, good") is a name given to a child born of a mother given by a chief or one whose father has been given some important gift by a chief just before the child's birth.

842 [192] If a woman has no children after several years, the hus-
782 band consults the soothsayers, makes offerings and sacrifices, employs charms, and finally resorts to the tinsé ([sing.] tinkougri, from tinga, "earth," and kougri, "stone") or to the tiga (fetish tree). The woman goes with her husband to the possessor of the god. They take a rooster and some cowries. After they explain the object of their visit, the rooster is killed by the priest, and if the offering is accepted, the couple is dismissed with a formal promise that their prayers will be answered.

553 If, in due course, the wife is delivered of a child, the baby must be named Tinga, and his brothers and sisters will be named Timbila, Timpoko, etc., or if the tiga was appealed to, the baby must be called Tiga, and his siblings, Tibila, Tipoko, etc.

715 It also happens that after successive births, the babies die. Since 553 the Mossi, as we have noted, believe in reincarnation, they assume --

775 that the same baby is returning. So, in order to induce him to 553 remain on earth, they give him a significant name.

One of these is Yewayan (literally, "one who has returned"), meaning "Here he is, back again; it is he once more, and we recognize him."

The same name is used for all members of the same family.

304 Scars. When a child is a year or two old, the family calls in an old woman who draws more or less straight lines on his face (cheeks, chin, forehead, even the nose) with a razor. These marks vary according to region and are not [193] the same, for example, at Kaya as at Ouagadougou.

The design used most often, however, has three straight lines from forehead to chin and one or two horizontal lines running across the nose and joining the vertical lines on the cheeks.

853 Feeding. If a mother does not have enough milk, she goes very early in the morning to a tree, for example, the kamsaongo
782 or wédega (of the family of gohine lianas), to ask for milk. She falls to her knees, and believing that she is addressing a living person, she makes her request humbly, but with what faith! It appears that the prayer is often granted, but the woman must never again go under the tree or she will lose her milk.

853 The question of choosing a nurse does not arise in Mossi
604 country unless the mother dies. In that case, the little orphan is entrusted to a sister of the child's father. If she has been a mother, she too goes to the tree to ask for milk, as described above, even if her most recent delivery occurred years before. Finally, if the child thus nursed is a girl and survives, she becomes the property of her father's sister who will give her in marriage, later on, to the suitor of her choice.

III. Death

764 The importance of funeral ceremonies depends on the age and 554 rank of the deceased.

Nitiema (aged persons). Upon the death of an [194] old man or woman, all the relatives who live in the village are assembled.

764 554 The body is kept in the funerary chamber for a whole day, and then the burial ceremonies are begun. The eldest son and daughter in the family throw cowries in the tomb (1) so that their father

1. Different types of tombs. Among the Mossi there are several kinds of tombs. The yaobulga (tomb in the form of a well), the highly favored type, is reserved for all those, young or old, who die a natural death.

The sampogyaogo (from sampogré, "wound," and yaogo, "tomb") is rectangular in form and reserved for all those who die following a serious wound, snake bite, lightning, and drowning, or who fall on the field of battle. In these cases there is almost no kouré (funeral ceremony). Only the relatives shave their heads and receive visitors who bring them condolence. There are no celebrations or ceremonies. On the day of the second kouré, a little beer is served to visitors.

or grandfather may buy water "when he is thirsty and pay the tolls on the way to Eternity." The persons in charge of the burial take some of the cowries.

The relatives organize games and dances which go on for three or four days. Finally, everyone has his head shaved, and the date is set for the principal funeral ceremony. On that day, all of the relatives, sons, married daughters, close relatives, and grandsons, bring chickens, livestock, and cowries. All the inhabitants of the village are expected to prepare beer. Livestock and chickens are killed, and the meat is distributed to the people who come for the ceremony. Dances [195] go on for several days, and the dancers, as well as the drummers, receive cowries.

It should be noted that the grandchildren keep their chickens or livestock after slaughtering them and may dispose of them as they wish.

764 554 [187] The sinddo is performed only at the death of an aged person. It involves cutting up a living animal whose meat, as soon as it is cooked, is eaten by all the members of the bereaved family. During this operation a strong person holds the animal's muzzle shut; it is believed that a single cry from the creature means certain death for someone in the family.

The tomb of aged persons has the form of a well at the top; it is rectangular below, or at least wider, so the corpse may lie in it.

Ikanda (married man). The ceremony is much less impressive for a young husband. The deceased is simply washed, wrapped in a Peulh secco, and buried. A few chickens are killed. There are no dances at the second kouré.

Heads of families. After the deceased has been washed, dressed, wrapped in a mat or secco, and [196] laid out on the threshold of his hut (1), the lagda (undertaker) offers him the blood

1. The venré (opening). We have already seen that among the nakomsé a hole was cut through a wall of the house or through the wall surrounding the courtyard and that through this opening the body was carried to its last resting place.

In general, this is done for the father of a family. The body is laid out by the opening, and his eldest son and all his daughters (the daughters of the deceased and those of his brothers) must pass through the opening ahead of the corpse. On this occasion the girls tie branches around their hips in lieu of skirts, and the son removes his loincloth. The children of the deceased are held by the arms and legs and put by turn through the opening, in such a way that their bodies brush against the corpse.

The eldest son, by passing safely through the venré, proves to those present that he did not cause his father's death. The daughters who dare go through the opening, even those who are grown women, are greeted with bravos by the crowd. The wives receive generous gifts from their husbands. The reason for this is that no girl who had been pregnant before being led to her husband would dare to pass through the opening because the deceased and other kimsé (ancestral spirits) would strike her dead.

764
554

This is why some women disappear at the crucial moment, to the great shame of their husbands.

[824
278]

The funerary hut is fumigated by burning a certain aromatic plant known as sompiga. The Bambara and the Wolof call it benguefala or benguefira. The same plant was widely used by the Europeans during the recent outbreak of yellow fever, either in an infusion, in a tisane, or mixed with the shower water.

of chickens which are killed at his feet. He pronounces some ritual words which may be summarized as follows: "Accept these chickens and these cowries and do not return; may everything you leave behind profit your heirs!;" etc.

The body is then carried away. On reaching [197] the tomb, the bearers carry the corpse around it three times and then place the body on the ground. The undertaker goes into the tomb and arranges the sleeping place. The mat is removed, and the body is handed in to him. The members of the family and other relatives at once begin to weep as the opening is closed with a stone, and the whole is covered with earth.

The eldest daughter of the deceased and his wives cover their bodies with ashes. The pugtiéma (first wife) and the eldest daughter wrap leafy branches around their waists, and the rest of the family wear vines on their foreheads. This is the first mourning.

Forty or fifty days later the second funeral ceremony is held, accompanied by various games, the playing of tom-toms, killing

764 animals, beer, etc. (see the description above). This is the 554 second mourning.

Dakonré (bachelor). Only his father and mother shave their heads. He is wrapped in a Mossi secco and buried without further ceremony. He is not even washed.

Bi-kouré (funeral for a newborn child). If the first-born child of a young mother dies, the girl returns to her family and remains there for thirteen days. Then she comes back to her husband, accompanied by some of her relatives. The latter bring chickens and guinea fowl to be served with the millet cake brought to the girl's husband. In return, the husband has chickens and guinea fowl killed and millet cake prepared, thus making an even exchange with his in-laws.

[198] Custom requires that the girl's relatives spend a night on the road before returning to their village. Even if their village is quite near they spend the night in the bush.

It should be added that if a second child dies at birth, there is no kouré.

Pagh'sin kataré biga (childless woman). There is no ceremony. She is buried in the same manner as the bachelor.

The Existence of God, Heaven, and Hell

776 The Moaga believes in the existence of a superior being, invisible or visible (the sun has long been considered as a "god" by many of them), who created the heavens, the earth, and all living things. This being is called Wende or Wenam (from wende, "world," and nam, "chiefdom"; thus, "Master of the World").

Although the Moaga sometimes attributes his misfortunes to the evil spells of his enemies, nevertheless he recognizes that nothing can be done without the consent of God. Hence he constantly invokes the name in every circumstance of his life, especially when he makes sacrifices.

Even the makers of fetishes, magicians, and sorcerers recognize this power and frequently invoke it.

792 There are certain Mossi who make no charms or fetishes and who are neither Moslems nor Christians. They harm no one, [199] forgive those who offend them, and attribute everything that happens to them -- for good or ill -- solely to divine Providence. These are the mystics.

However, the deism of either type is not very deep. All believe that a dead person will rejoin his ancestors and dwell eternally with them. They imagine, however, that "the road to Eternity is hard and the Kingdom of God so remote from the earth that they give cowries to their dead to pay their way through difficulties, the hazards of the journey being directly related to the good or bad actions of the deceased."

This may be said to be a kind of vague notion of a hell or a purgatory. However, this hell is neither the "everlasting fire of the Christians nor the horrible sufferings of the Moslems," since the person is supposed to be with his relatives.

The Alkyoamé. One sometimes hears a Moaga say: "I cannot avenge what you have done to me, but it will be settled on the day of alkyoamé." This is a somewhat superficial notion of a Day of Judgment. The Moaga does not really believe in a final judgment any more than he believes in the end of the world or the resurrection of the body. By the words alkyoamé daré, he alludes to the day when he and his enemy will both die and God will subject one of them to a punishment -- understood to be temporary -- for the harm he has done the other. [200]

Beliefs and Superstitions Concerning the Soul After Death

What do the Mossi believe the human being to be? Man is composed of three elements: the visible body, the siga or toulé (soul), and the kima (ghost).

The siga, which may be called the soul, is the part of the man which is to return to God.

Siga. According to the Mossi, the siga or toulé is easily frightened. A great sorrow, illness, or the death of a loved one can cause it to abandon the body temporarily. It then assumes a human appearance and can be seen by the person himself or by others. In that case, charms or fetishes are used to make it return.

Its temporary absence from the body is not thought to have any serious consequences since this does not disturb the normal functions of the human organism, but, since body and soul cannot 714 761 live without each other, its prolonged absence is thought to cause death.

Kima (from ki, "to die"). This is a sort of silhouette of a 714 person who is about to die. It is visible only to certain initiates. 763 It is said, however, to be somewhat deformed, and its presence may make one's hair stand on end or cause shivers that paralyze the legs and make walking impossible.

715 The siga may be distinguished from the kima in that the latter, being already dead, has its head completely shaved, wears ashes in the form of [201] a cross or X on its forehead, or has its feet stained with blood.

As soon as the person dies, his kima roams around the house for a time and then joins his ancestors at Pilimpikou.

715 Pilimpikou. Pilimpikou is a village belonging to the ad- 718 ministrative district of Koudougou (upper Volta). On a mountain nearby, there is a grotto which is regarded as the sacred place where the kimsé of all the dead Mossi assemble.

Legend has it that any deceased relative may be found again at Pilimpikou if one were so unfortunate as not to have been present during his last moments. One can also go there to find out where the deceased has hidden part of his fortune or some valuable object.

It is said that one has only to go to the Tingsoba of Pilimpikou and ask him to use his influence to call the deceased.

The Tingsoba orders the petitioner not to shed a single tear at the sight of the "ghost," and, the legend goes on to say, if the secret of the interview with the kima is not kept, the person will die within the year.

Finally, it is believed that when the kimsé welcome new members -- they represent the whole family of all the dead Mossi for countless generations -- they organize games whose echoes are heard by the inhabitants of Pilimpikou.

715 Young people of both sexes who were unmarried at the time of their death and newborn children who have died [202] return to that place where they dwelt before coming into the world in order to "return to human form in the womb of another woman or of their former mother." As we noted in an earlier paragraph, the Mossi believe in reincarnation. [203]

Chapter 12

The Penetration of Islam into Mossi Country

Islam in the Land of the Mogho Naba

643 The Mogho Naba, like his subjects, is above all an animist, 794 and it is hard to understand how he reconciles his fetishism with 791 the complex dogmas of Islam and with the many interdictions of Christianity.

The Mogho Naba, however, is quite capable of being a Catholic or a Moslem on appropriate occasions and at the same time respecting the traditions of his ancestors. Thus, when the Christians celebrate Christmas, the emperor of the Mossi devoutly attends Midnight Mass. He keeps his cap on, however, just as the bishop wears his miter. In the same way he embraces Islam during the following three festivals: the moaghrem (the Mossi zembendé); Ramadan (nolokré, "to loosen the mouth"); and, finally, the zoulhési (the Mossi tabaski or kibsa).

791 Before describing how the Mogho Naba celebrates these Moslem festivals, we shall give a brief history of Islam among the Mossi and discuss the appointment of imams.

The Arrival of Islam among the Mossi

797 It was during the reign of Naba Doulgou, the twenty-third
793 Mogho Naba [204] after Oubri, founder of the Ouagadougou dynasty, that Islam took root in the empire of the Mogho Naba, and it was at that time that an imam was appointed at Ouagadougou.

Naba Sawadogo, who succeeded his father, Doulgou, sent his children to the Koranic school. Many of them obtained a fairly good education there, and the eldest son, who later succeeded to the throne under the name of Naba Koutou, even became a marabout. The development of Islam in Mossi country dates from his reign, as does practice of giving children of the Mogho Naba Moslem names such as Saïdou, Mahama, Moumouni, etc.

191 Gambaga Naba (chief of a vast territory in the British colony 193 of the Gold Coast) was, as we have already seen [not translated], the father of Nyennenga, mother of Ouedraogo, the real founder of the Mossi empire. As is well known, any king tends to imitate an illustrious relative and to follow his lead in all matters which might lend him distinction.

This being the case, here is how Doulgou happened to install a marabout at his side. It is said that in addition to his many ministers the king of Gambaga had an imam whose duty was to settle all complicated matters. He was, at the same time, an intimate counselor of the king. Mogho Naba Doulgou, who ruled over a large territory and who felt that he was just as powerful as his ancestor, the king of Gambaga, decided that he, too, wanted to consult only an imam for certain affairs. The emperor had a friend [205] who was a marabout in the region of Zitenga and whose name was Moustapha. Doulgou summoned him to Ouagadougou and conferred upon him the title of Imam.

It goes without saying that either the learning of this adept in Islam nor any of his other qualifications were checked and that he was not chosen by other marabouts. Thus, the Imam of the Mogho Naba is principally a court dignitary, just like the Ouidi Naba, for example, and, as such, his appointment involves certain barbaric procedures. This is why, after he has been given his turban and his burnoose (insignia of chiefdom) he is invited to a house called surbinda. In this sacred place he is handed a [271] gourdful of a loathsome beverage, tibo, a mixture of human and animal blood, which all canton chiefs, all ministers, and all court officials must drink at the time of their appointment to make them incapable of treason or lese majesty. The imam takes up the gourd and utters the following sacramental words: "I shall never, under any circumstances, betray the Mogho Naba; I shall come to his aid in time of war; I shall execute without question all orders received from my King," etc.... He then pretends to drink some of the beverage and hands it to the Ouidi Naba who puts the liquid back into the copper jar in which it has been kept for nearly a thousand years. Once these formalities have been completed, he is the Imam of the Mogho Naba. As is

797 the case for canton chiefs and ministers, this position is handed
793 down in [206] the same family. Obviously a son is not called to succeed his father unless he has been educated well enough to settle, to the satisfaction of the emperor, the few questions which will be submitted to him. In any event, the choice will always fall on a member of the family of Moustapha, the first Imam.

Celebration of the Moslem Festivals by the Mogho Naba

796 Moaghrem (the Mossi zambende). The moaghrem marks the beginning of the new year of the hegira. Every Moslem family must feast on the evening before the holiday. The next morning, that is, on the tenth day of the month of Moaghrem [Muharram], the sourata, book of the year, is read, and one learns the name of the saint who will preside over the destiny of the world for the next 360 days. Alms are stipulated. This festival, which represents a return to joy, solemnly commemorates the day on which the Patriarch, Noe [Noah] (called Nabi Nouhou by the marabouts), alone blessed by the Lord, first set foot on dry land after the flood which exterminated mankind. This was a return to life, and it was the Day of Fire.

The Mossi have never understood the meaning of the Moslem festivals and celebrate them in their own way. They did not understand that the "Day of Fire" meant a return to family life, to cooking food over a fire, but instead made up a curious custom which is more reminiscent of the taking of the Bastille. On that day they light torches, chase each other about, and burn each other. This sometimes results in [207] real injuries which fortunately are easily healed.

The Silmissi (Peulh of Mossi country) do rather better since they sprinkle themselves with cool water. This represents at least a wish for good health.

796 The tabaski (zoulhési or Mossi kibsa). In the old days the Mogho
643 Naba was required to go to the great mosque at Zoaghna on the day of tabaski.

Yamaba, chief of the Yarcé (Dioula whose ancestor, Koanda, came to Mossi country during the reign of Koumdoumié, the eighth Mogho Naba), has the duty of sacrificing the cattle and sheep 796 643 provided by the emperor. The meat is distributed among the assembled faithful. The salam took place in the mosque, and on this occasion the emperor became a Moslem whether or not he was actually a believer. He was expected to take his place among the faithful immediately behind the Imam. As soon as the Imam finished reciting verses from the sacred books, he turns toward the faithful, says, "A salama leckum," and then shakes the king's hand. When the prayer is ended, the emperor returns home, and the Imam soon follows to sacrifice the tabaski sheep. The Mogho Naba himself is required to hold the animal's tail.

Ramadan (Mossi nolokré). It is well known that Ramadan or Lent of the Moslems (the nolokré of the Mossi, from noré, "mouth," and lokré, "untie the knot, loosen") involves a series of privations and abstinences [208] during which the defenceless body is subjected to all sorts of indispositions, sometimes giving rise to real illness.

It is also obvious that the emperor is subject to so severe a regime and to so many obligations that it would be impossible for him to fast, as do the marabouts, even if he were a believer. Nevertheless, the emperor has been so thoroughly persuaded of the yelsomdé (bliss) attained by the penitent after the thirty days of suffering and since he is by no means indifferent to anything concerning the splendors of the Beyond, he asks for volunteers among his entourage who will practice abstinence in his place. On the day of the festival, they receive many gifts (robes, cowries, etc.).

What follows is a summary of the manner in which the king of the Mossi celebrated Ramadan a few years ago.

On the day of the festival, the Gare-yarga (Yarga in charge [272] of the saddle) appears early in the morning bearing hydromel in an old gourd which is said to have been used by Naba Rimba. He drinks a little of the liquid to "break the fast" and then offers a gourdful to the Mogho Naba for the same purpose. The remainder is given to the ministers and other court officials.

The emperor offers food to all present (bowls of rice and sagbo). He has had one or two cows and many sheep slaughtered in advance.

Around seven-thirty in the morning the Mogho Naba used to go with his usual entourage to Roundé-yiri (a place of prayers, a kind of outdoor mosque which [209] used to be located northwest 643 of the present house of Ouendasida, the police adjutant), and there he attended the salam presided over by the Imam.

796

After the ceremony, the Imam, surrounded by the faithful, went to call upon the emperor for the doua (a kind of benediction involving the recitation of verses from the Koran). The Imam received kola nuts and sheep or a cow.

[368] At the present time the two mosques exist in name only; the one real mosque is that of the Imam in the ward of the mohémé (marabouts). The present Mogho Naba never attends the salam on feast days. He goes to the Circle [Administration Building], then to the home of the Governor, and finally returns home to await the visit of the representative of Islam in Mossi country.

643 The only Mogho Naba who was truly a Moslem was Naba
368 Koutou, the twenty-seventh successor of Oubri. He was sent to 177 the Koranic school at Sagabtenga and is said to have made a creditable record there. When he succeeded his father, he installed a mosque in front of the women's gate. Since then a mosque has traditionally been located in the same place on the palace grounds of every Mogho Naba, even though, as in the case of the present emperor, he was not a believer.

643 Naba Koutou regularly made his salam in accordance with 177 the rites of the Moslem faith and even observed the thirty days of abstinence during the month of fasting. [210] All his children had Moslem names. All, except his eldest son who succeeded him as Naba Sanum, were sent to Koranic schools, although none did any serious work there since they were more interested in becoming naba.

643 During his lifetime, Naba Koutou himself never sentenced 696 anyone to death, even if he were guilty. He loved peace. When his ministers submitted serious cases to him, he always said: "Go and do what seems best and do not tell me what fate was meted out to the guilty." Like Pontius Pilate, he allowed his ministers to bear the responsibility for the crimes. Since he gave little credence to what the priests said of poéré (confession by the use of magic), he acquitted individuals condemned to death by that barbaric method.

The Moslem Naba

791 1. Virtually all of the inhabitants of Nobéré, Nobila, and 771 Toécé (cantons in the present province of the Gounga Naba) are converts to Islam for reasons of personal convenience. They are the descendants of Naba Saga, twenty-second successor of Oubri.

2. The inhabitants of the villages of Doundoulma (descendants of Naba Kom, twenty-first successor of Oubri), Garpinné, and Kouila (descendants of Naba Doulgou or Roulgou, twenty-third successor of Oubri) are reputed to be devout Moslems. [211]

3. Kombissiri Naba Siguiri, circle of Ouagadougou.

4. Ramongo Naba Baongo, circle of Koudougou. Both of the above were descendants of Naba Warba nineteenth successor of Oubri, and were converted to Islam.

The present chiefs of these cantons are educated Moslems and possess mosques.

5. Sao Naba, a descendant of Naba Ouédraogo, circle of Ouagadougou, was converted nearly thirty years ago. His first teacher was a pilgrim returned from Mecca and a native of the village of Nakamtenga (near Kombissiri). He continued his study of the Koran under the direction of Sayenouné Bathily, a marabout originally from Kaédi (Mauretania) who was such a formidable thaumaturge that the local administration had to send him home in 1916. Sao Naba has a mosque, but it would appear that the Moslem religion has not diminished his animistic beliefs since he continues to make sacrifices to the manes and to drink beer from time to time (on customary feast days, for example).

6. Gourpila Naba (circle of Ouagadougou) is a former samand' biga of the present Mogho Naba and his conversion to Islam is recent, within the last six or seven years.

7. Boala Naba (circle of Ouagadougou) is a devout Moslem.

8. Gaongo Naba (circle of Ouagadougou) is also a devout Moslem. [212]

In conclusion let us point out that the present emperor con-[551 tinues the tradition of giving Moslem names to his children and 771] has several of his sons in Koranic schools. There is no doubt that more of his children are being educated in these schools than in the official primary school. [213]

Chapter 13

Dwellings of the Mossi Chiefs

342 554 787 We have seen, in an earlier chapter under "Labor Duties and Obligations of Mossi Subjects to their Chiefs," how the dwelling of the naba is built and repaired. We know also that the naba like all his subjects, consults a soothsayer to select the site for his dwelling. He needs to know whether he should keep his father's establishment, build a new one on the site of his grandfather's home, or finally, if the spirits are not favorable, whether he might build on unoccupied land.

342 554 The establishment of a naba differed from those of his subjects in former times in the great number of huts included within it. Also, there was an empty ostrich egg on the roof of each hut.

The sketch which follows shows the home of a naba before the arrival of the French. Such houses exist even today in certain areas.

There were no native houses with terraces or clay roofs. To be sure, the Mogho Naba had one, but although it was copied from the Djenné style, [214] it had, aside from a few doors and tiny windows, only a single opening in the ceiling the size of a canari. This was supposed to admit air to the inhabitants, and it was blocked up during the winter.

The Ouidi Naba (first minister) and the Kamsaongo Naba (chief eunuch) also had tata, but they were smaller. The former kept the sacred water (nam-tibo) and the latter the wealth of his master, the emperor.

342 177 A description of the typical dwelling of the Moaga will be given later. At present, especially since the installation of the [French] government at Ouagadougou, virtually all of the province and canton chiefs have dwellings more or less of the European type. The present tata of the Mogho Naba, the Baloum Naba, and the Ouidi Naba at Ouagadougou, those of the Konkistenga Naba at Imasshoro and at Zoétigomdé, and that of the Lallé Naba at Koudougou -- to mention only the principal ones -- prove that real progress has been made in housing by the Mossi chiefs.

[215]

644
342

Dwelling of the Naba.

342 177 Of course, like all European houses in the region under discussion, these buildings are, unfortunately, made of mud bricks, but is that not the rule in French West Africa?

342 In the homes of those two ministers of the emperor who are most advanced, the reception rooms are arranged in such a way that callers benefit from a constant flow of fresh air through large openings. During periods of extreme heat, a punkah operated [417] by a sogoné in the middle [216] of the room provides air for the panting visitors. The wall, always whitewashed with kaolin, bears an [353] an advertisement or two, the picture of an important chief, or perhaps some family photographs, which enliven the apartments a bit. All of this shows a real anxiety on the part of the chiefs to develop along the lines of progress and civilization.

In recent years, some of the notables at Ouagadougou have built houses with clay roofs, not so much to live in as to safeguard their family valuables against fire and theft.

Finally, it should be noted that custom requires every new naba for the first three years of his reign to live in songodo, straw huts, which will be described later. Only then may he build with clay.

Dwellings of Mossi Subjects

342 787 Temporary dwelling. Before building his conjugal hut, the young man consults a soothsayer in order to make sure that the site chosen is not haunted by evil spirits and that he will have happiness and good fortune if he lives there.

342 782 Even if the soothsayer finds nothing especially alarming about the site, he always orders a chicken or other animal to be sacrificed or alms to be given. The young man arranges with the village elder [217] or, if he is a [Nioniosse], with the Tingsoba (from tenga "earth," and soba, "master"), to sacrifice the victim.

The Tingsoba goes to the site and calls for two small gourds which contain ordinary water and water mixed with flour, respectively. He invokes all his ancestors and pours the water on the ground, praying God to accept it for His wife, Tinga, who is absorbing it. Then he kills the chicken, saying: "On -- on, 342 782 mamé ka koud'ti y a niesmé yé ya saramb' boumbou, yaramb' boumbou, ti oua ta mamé" (which means something to this effect, "Accept the offering which I present in the name of X.... He appealed to me because I am the Tingsoba of the village. I do not consider myself to be more able than the other villagers, but this ceremony is a matter concerning our ancestors and I inherited the position from my predecessors").

The chicken is held with its feet up and head down, so that the blood mixes with the water having flour in it, and then it is thrown a short distance away. If the offering is accepted, the victim will fall on its back. Then it is hastily picked up, and a few feathers are pulled out and stuck into the slightly coagulated blood.

The chicken is given to the children to be plucked and roasted on the fire without salt or pepper. A leg is offered to the Tingsoba, and the rest of the meat is eaten by the family of the young man.

Part of the liver (saonré), however, is thrown onto the place of the sacrifice and thus offered to the spirits, [218] the invisible inhabitants of the place, so they will look favorably on the new household and help the couple to have children.

It should be noted that the Tingsoba may turn in any direction to make the sacrifice since no particular orientation is required.

342 A young husband's temporary dwelling is a simple straw hut made of the branches of a tree called randega. The branches are stuck into the ground, tied together at the top, walled around the base with Mossi mats (sougzakpinri), and roofed with thatch.

Permanent dwelling. After a year in the temporary dwelling the young man starts to build his permanent home if his means allow it. This is a group of clay huts, joined to each other by more or less even walls.

The earth must first be dug up, and the soil removed from the excavation must be dampened and molded into balls of mortar. A circle is laid out on the site by means of a string tied to a central stake. The foundation is built to a depth of about twenty centimeters. Mortar is put on the foundation, and construction of the walls is begun. These are always circular in form, and their dimensions vary. The mortar is allowed to dry before the work 342 is continued, and the process goes on until the hut is completed, that is, when it reaches a height of about 1.65 meters. The house is built without any openings, but when the walls are up, a [219] low door is put in, having the shape of a pointed arch. The interior of many Mossi houses is divided by a low wall, called kogré, which makes the hut very dark. A few small holes are made with the handle of a daba, and these, with the low door, are [726] the only openings. In time of war, the Moaga used to shoot his arrows through these tiny holes. Before the roof is put on, the [751] walls are daubed with wet ashes, a practice which is supposed to guarantee good health for the new inhabitants.

The roof is conical in shape. It is made with poles which are tightly tied at the top with vines. Stiff mats, zarsé, are placed on the poles. They are held in place with fibers and are covered with braided straw. Some twenty persons are needed to put up the roof. The construction of the house is then finished. Only the plastering remains to be done. For this job, the women collect a special kind of earth, boalga, which they mix with manure from cows or horses and then coat the walls with it. When this operation is completed, the women cover the floor with a ferruginous material that is sprinkled with water and tamped down with bits of flat wood called silpama. After the floor has been smoothed down, the sasgo is the next step. This involves covering the surface with a sticky material, boudou, mixed with ground charcoal. This is rubbed over and over with glass sherds or special stones called sassega. The shiny black surface obtained in this fashion prevents the ferruginous material from soiling the family's clothes. Some [824] people sprinkle the finished floor with kanmé, an infusion made of the skin of the néré fruit, in order to make it wear well.

[220] Construction workers. The master of the house is aided by his own brothers and other relatives in the same clan. He does not request help from outsiders. The women's job is to get the water needed for the mortar.

The earth used in building is taken from a hole near the house, the tan-nako (from tando, "earth," and nako, "hole"). This excavation is later filled with all the waste from the house and ordure from the courtyard. The tan-nako, well fertilized in this manner is planted with maize, and this field is called the kamanga.

342
412 Tools. The only tools used are the sitoiga (native pickaxe) and the wanka (hoe).

352 House furnishings. (a) The man's hut. The only furnishings in a man's hut are a mat or thin secco, a bolster made of cotton strips or kapok, a quiver, the club, some arrows, the bow, a large knife (zangoégo), and a spear. Small bags of charms and other amulets hang from the wall here and there, and there is a sort of oval straw basket, pilgou, in which clothing is stored.

(b) The woman's hut. From one end of the hut to the other there are billi, small pieces of wood fastened to the wall to hold gourds, bowls (lensé), earthenware basins (lassé), ladles (soutissi), etc.

In the rear of the room lumps of dried earth, [221] hollowed in the center, hold the vessels, and pots, dougdo, which serve both as storage bins for clothing and as granaries for the produce of the woman's own garden.

592 Plan of a compound. As one enters a compound, the huts to left are those of the women and the master's huts stand to the right. Completely outside the establishment, there are one or two straw huts, similar to those already described, which provide sleeping quarters for the dakompa (young men).

[585] The head of the establishment lives alone. It could hardly be otherwise, since he summons his wives in turn.

The women live with their young children or with girls betrothed to their husband, until, of course, these girls receive huts of their own.

343 Kitchen arrangements. It is exceedingly rare among the Mossi to find a hut used specifically for cooking. The wife's bedroom serves also as a kitchen.

Ordinarily the husband issues provisions to the wife who is 592 cooking for the family, but there are exceptions to this rule. At 595 Ouagadougou, for example, most of the wives provide the food for 252 the husband. The latter furnishes provisions only during the winter when the fields are being worked.

[222] The wives take turns preparing the food. The woman on duty is aided by her co-wives in grinding the millet on the millstone (néré) of the section, but she alone prepares the millet cake, sagbo.

343 Chicken house and pens. Every head of a compound has a 235 small straw hut for fowl within his establishment. There is also a 231 small round hut of clay for the sheep and goats.

Repair of houses. When an establishment is damaged by rain
356 or is in need of repair, the work is done by the residents (the head of the family and the dakompa, as well as the father's wives and brothers) with no help from outsiders. There is no pay beyond the usual meals. The head of the family merely says to the workers when the work has been completed: "N'fa nel toumtogo, imaou nian (thanks for the hard work, many thanks for the labor)."

[223] Chapter 14

Mossi Clothing

Dress of the Naba

291 In this chapter we shall examine the various modifications
554 and improvements in the dress of Mossi chiefs.
435 1. Before and during the first twenty years of the French occupation. (a) Zangoego pelga: a large robe made of narrow bands of cotton fabric, rather expertly woven. These robes, which are made and embroidered by specialists, used to cost from 70,000 to 100,000 cowries (1).

1. One hundred francs. The five-franc note is now worth 1,000 cowries. The silver five-franc piece was worth from 5,000 to 7,000 cowries, depending on the fluctuations of exchange.

(b) Karfo: a large robe, dark blue in color, made of the same material as the preceding (50,000 to 70,000 cowries).

(c) Noufa: a large robe and trousers, made of very fine fabric in a dark gray color. It had the value of two slaves or 70,000 cowries for the robe and 50,000 for the trousers.

291 554 435 (d) Zag'banko: a colored garment, varying in price between 40,000 and 50,000 cowries.

(e) Baourou ganga: a light gray blanket, valued [224] at 50,000 to 60,000 cowries, which can easily be made into robes and trousers.

[439] All these garments were imported by traveling Haoussa (Zangoéto) and a few Yarcé, the only traders at the time, who bought them in Gambaga (Gold Coast), the only known trading center at that time. As we have pointed out in an earlier chapter, the Mossi knew of no country other than their own.

There were, of course, some naba who wore only rough garments made of cotton strips woven locally.

Headgear. The inhabitants of Béré (a village of the province now ruled by the Gounga Naba) used to make caps, called manfo, which were highly prized by Mossi chiefs (priced at 2,000 to 3,000 cowries).

Some notables wore caps made at Wéogtinga (province of the Ouidi Naba) by the descendants of Naba Zombré, the twentieth successor of Oubri.

291 554 177 2. Modifications and improvements introduced since the establishment of the government of Upper Volta (1919). The various fabrics available in the European outlets and the fine white or blue bazin [fabric] are more and more being used to replace the clothing of former times. [225] These fabrics are made into robes, trousers, blouses, and forkia (this last is a kind of long blouse with wide sleeves, much prized by Senegalese [362] traders). Shirts of every conceivable color and style are hoarded in trunks and chests bought at the commissary or made locally by carpenters trained in European shops.

Many chiefs claim that garments made of cotton strips are heavy and cumbersome and impede walking.

[439] Oriental caps imported from the Gold Coast, dark red velvet hats, and even sun helmets are replacing the headgear of old.

The markatassé and mougou, rustic leather boots made by Mossi shoemakers are giving way to shoes, puttees, and leggings, [494] or to new types of boots and slippers -- the shoemakers of Djenné are now well known among the Mossi.

291 554 177 Finally, many chiefs (particularly province chiefs and dignitaries at the emperor's court) appear on feast days dressed in costumes ornately embroidered in gold and silver, products of Moroccan industry. Two of these ministers even wear with pride European costumes on these occasions.

Dress of the Mossi Subjects

292 Men. The accouterments and weapons of a Moaga who wished to be admired on festive occasions used to include the following: the koiglinga and the dandaogo (kinds of long blouses with sleeves); koursi(trousers) in dark blue; the karfo (seldom worn, [226] however, because of its high cost); a zangoégo [411] (large Haoussa knife); a manyanfo (cap); a logwaoga (quiver and arrows); and a boussan-zandé (iron club).

292 177 Today he wears the same garments made from cotton strips woven locally (except the karfo), but it should be noted that young men who return from the Gold Coast or neighboring colonies nearly always have clothing made of commercial fabrics. They may even -- and this often happens -- parade a second-hand overcoat. In the villages out in the bush, the large knife (zangoégo) is still worn, hanging from the shoulder by an albolé (ornament).

Some young men, however, usually traders in prosperous circumstances, dress in the fashion of the Sudanese who live in cities.

291 Women. A Moaga woman usually had only three skirts: (a) the skirt worn at home which was her working costume; (b) an indigo-blue skirt (fou-sablaga) which was reserved for holidays and for trips to the market; and (c) a white or dark-blue skirt cloth, trimmed with long fringes -- a kind of bambara dissa -- which she wore over her shoulders or over her head on ceremonial occasions. She replaced these articles whenever necessary.

[554 435] Only the wives of naba and of certain notables [227] were able to own, in addition to the forementioned skirts, a godé, a skirt of Haoussa origin and quite expensive (1).

1. Even today it costs between 55 and 100 francs.

301 As ornaments the Moaga woman had only red or yellow copper bracelets and the kindifou (a bright red bead). Even then only women of means could procure such ornaments. The [435] kindifou cost only 50 cowries a bead, but since cowries were monopolized by the naba, notables, and rakangba (prosperous Mossi), the beads were far too expensive for the small resources of the average Moaga woman.

Bracelets made of a special stone (a mixture of gray and white) and called manekagcé (manekaka in the singular) were worn only by the Yarbi (young Yarcé of both sexes). It is said [439] that these bracelets were peddled by the Kibissi (Habé), and they seem to have come from the Timbuktu area.

301 554 Silver bracelets were worn only by the dimbissi (descendants of dima, that is, the family of the Mogho Naba), by kombemba (canton and province chiefs) and their descendants, and, finally, by prominent persons who were in favor at court.

291 177 At the present time, especially at Ouagadougou, the women adorn themselves with garments of all kinds (skirts of native material, bazin, godé, and other fabrics, as well as skirts from stores). Some have even adopted the blouse and ample robe affected by [352] elegant Sudanese [228] women. Many now own trunks which replace the sacks formerly used to store their clothing.

291 178 The Senegalese handkerchief, a head scarf, is now considered absolutely indispensable. In rural areas there is an increasing desire to dress better. More cotton is grown. Girls and women from the bush buy glass beads of all colors when they come to Ouagadougou to work, and they wear them around their necks or around their hips in the manner of Bambara women.

416 Although the "mirror" used to be the clear water of springs and brooks, there is hardly a woman today who does not have one or two mirrors. Finally, a bit of elegance is added to the wild 301 beauty of the women by silver earrings, bracelets, and amulets sewed in a panther skin -- these are becoming a passion with Mossi peasant women.

291 It should not be inferred from the above that the Moaga always feels obliged to wear clothing at home. Any time that he has no need to go out or to visit a friend or relative at some 291 distance from his home, he wears only a benda (loincloth), which does not even cover his buttocks, and a blanket.

He goes about with torso uncovered and likes to show that he is [229] well muscled. When the women are inside their huts, especially when they are engaged in the laborious task of removing the seeds from cotton with their gourça, they pull their skirts up to the hips, making themselves half-naked.

Young girls who have not yet reached puberty and are not yet excised often go about completely nude, unless they hide their sex behind the rags of an old skirt.

Personal Grooming

Ablutions and Care of the Body

515 Married persons and women are fastidious about body cleanliness and therefore have a regular morning routine. This involves washing the face, hands, arms, and legs. During the cool season (end of November to February 15), a little karite butter is added [271] to warm water to soften the skin. Since water is scarce, people take few baths. In villages where there is abundant water, however, the inhabitants bathe two or three times a week.

Unlike their elders, young people and children are careless about cleanliness and may go about all day long without washing [164] their faces. This gives rise, incidentally, to serious cases of conjunctivitis among the children.

Sanitation

312 Drinking water. Water for general use is obtained from 271 water holes created [230] by the inhabitants with dams in order to supplement the wells which often run dry during the dry season. The natives make no effort to purify the water which they often keep for days in containers where mosquito larvae flourish. Pond water is used for drinking. In some villages, however, where the water is actually muddy, the following measure are taken to clear it.

(a) The oil is extracted from crushed peanuts, and the residue is put into the muddy water. It takes about three-quarters of an

312 hour for the impurities and the residue to settle to the bottom of 271 the vessel. Then the water is poured off into another container and is ready to be used for drinking or cooking.

[B-24] (b) It is also possible to use an additive known as missim (crushed tamarind leaves). The water becomes clear, but it is, of course, somewhat sour. Although it may be drunk, it is [252] ideally suited to cooking since the Mossi add missim (from miki, "to make sour") even to the water of springs and wells before they use it to prepare their principal food, sagbo.

744 In the town of Ouagadougou frequent visits by the sanitary officers remind the natives of the necessity of keeping fresh water
312 in their containers. They are also encouraged to fill in during the winter the low places holding water where mosquitoes might breed.

515 Laundering. There is no doubt [231] that the Moaga is care-
296 less about the cleanliness of his clothing. There is no shortage of soap -- karite butter, of which it is made, is plentiful -- but he believes that frequent laundering will wear out his clothes too quickly. He also thinks -- which is childish -- that the dirtier a garment is, the cleaner it will wash. He thinks it completely ridiculous for clothes to be ironed. It must be admitted that among the Mossi only a married man can require his wives to wash his clothes. A mother also takes care of her children's clothes, but a bachelor is forced to wash his own things. This, we think, explains the extreme negligence shown by some of them who let their clothes get dirtier and dirtier. Indolence, alas, is [46] one of the dominant defects of the native of Mossi country.

514 Toilet arrangements. In general the Mossi have no regular latrines. Men, women, in short, everyone, simply goes into the bush. The only exception is the very young children who take care of their needs on the threshold. At night, especially during the winter when the grain is fairly tall, grownups themselves go to the kamanga or karaga (millet or maize field near the living quarters).

364 When the town of Ouagadougou was made a mixed commune [Ed., smallest French territorial subdivision, with both French and native representation in the municipal council], it was possible to install, at municipal expense, a number of lavatories in certain 364 sections and especially around the market. Now formal regulations require the inhabitants [232] to dig latrine ditches in the compounds, but it will be a long time before the native loses the habit of relieving himself in the open air.

Chapter 15

Mossi Dances and their Significance (1)

1. An excerpt, revised and completed, from a lecture delivered by the author on December 24, 1926.

535 In this chapter, we shall describe the Mossi dances, explain their meaning, and tell of the old beliefs with which they are connected.

Indeed, these dances occupy a place apart in the general category of dances of indigenous peoples.

The latter, for the most part and notably among the Boussancé and the Gourma [Gurma], are only exuberant displays, sometimes exercises in suppleness, sometimes caricatures of the motions of love.

The Mossi dances, on the other hand, are actually performed in accordance with fixed rules. There are three types: 1) dances which we shall call sentimental, known as wennega; 2) dances that are part war dance and part religious, called wadngo; and finally 3) funeral dances known as warba.

535 In order of precedence, let us begin with the love dance
533 called wennega. This is executed at gatherings. The lover and 832 his sweetheart -- the latter dressed in black, the ceremonial color -- are receiving their friends. Beer is flowing, and mouths are filled with kola nuts. Soon the musicians strike up [234] their [534] rustic guitars (kondé) which are accompanied by the beating of gourds. The women sing:

539 M' Ba sida talem néré
533 Talem kan-kaïn, talemti
Pagh ka zaïd koulogh wa mandé

539
533

"My husband, keep me well,
Keep me in proper fashion,
A woman ages as quickly as gombo [okra]."

In Mossi country, indeed, married women are "kept women." Other wennega songs include the following:

Kandin bilin koamba ziyob'
Ade kandin bilin koamb' ziyob ya
La Fer-nan dambin yide
Bamb' data pagha piligh' wa rebre y a
Ti prote-mannaie yaoulin pa yaguedin
Koure yanga-yanga karin kouma
f' san katarin kont'me y é
f' san katarin kont'me bif ramodeguema

"Those who work in the circle (subdivision of the circle) (1)

1. In the old days Ouagadougou was both the headquarters for the Mossi circle and a subdivision of the circle.

do not know how to chase women. Those in the big circle, the company of the Fernands, are even more ignorant of the art of pleasing. They all want to take off the womens' skirts as though they were unrolling a mat, but they keep their pocketbooks hermetically closed. Wearers of trousers in whose folds hide [235] lice, if you have nothing to give me, at least do not try to take me by force."

F' Nian néré yetta pa nan
logh là
Fola biga ma bé ba
f' ka yi wenin nana y è

"You admire this girl,
Her beauty has won you

539
533

And you do not want to let her go!
Are you perchance this child's mother or father?
You are not the God who created her."

535
832 The wennega consists mostly of back-and-forth movements of the hips in slow rhythm. Various figures are performed, but there is always the same rhythm and the same swaying of the hips. The sweetheart herself begins to dance, a curious fact, since women do not usually take part in the men's dances.

535
776 We have noted that another form of Mossi dance is religious, the waongo. The waongo is a mysterious being, half animal, half spirit.

773
535
776 Origin of the waongo. Tradition has it that this being was one day found all alone on a plain. Those who first saw him took fright and ran away. They went to tell the village elders, who assembled a goodly number of young men, armed [236] with arrows and sticks, to overcome this strange being.

He was not found at the place where he had first been seen. He had moved some distance away. The villagers surrounded him, and the elders, who had brought him a rooster, began to question him: "If he should be taken to the village, would he hurt the villagers? Would he bring misfortune?" The chicken was then sacrificed, but it is told that the sacrifice was not accepted.

The elders returned to the village and brought back a white rooster (norapelga), a he-goat (boéga), and a dog (bâga). Then they addressed the waongo, saying: "We were perhaps mistaken just now. Perhaps you wanted an animal in addition to the rooster we offered to you? If, by becoming our guest, you can bring us happiness, good health, and children, accept these offerings!" They slaughtered the rooster and the goat and killed the dog. This time the sacrifices were accepted.

[532] What the waongo is. The waongo consists of a mask, usually representing the head of an animal, and a bindou (a kind of long cloak made from the bark of the béringa shrub which is soaked in water for a long time to blacken it or from baobab fibers).

773 According to tradition, he had beside him a toabga (a kind of 535 magic axe) and a tibo (a sacred object, fetish).
776 The people captured him and put him in a safe place. But of what possible use could he be to them? Nobody knew. [237] He was something unknown and fearful.

One day the people had gone off to hold the kouré (funeral observances) of an old man and were on their way back home. They were warba dancers. They were all singing as they approached the house of the waongo, who came out. The dancers were terrified and ran away. Only one of the singers had the courage to remain behind.

He went on with the songs and the waongo followed him right up to the house of the deceased, and there he began to dance.

From this it was concluded that the waongo had something to do with funerals. Since that time the waongo is summoned whenever an old man or woman of the Nioniossé (soukoaba) dies. He never dances for deceased young people.

Since the waongo or, rather, the soukou is considered to be sacred and to embody a sort of religion which possesses secrets that should not be made known to everyone, a special language -- [198] a deformation of the môré [Mossi] language -- has been invented. It is understood only by the initiates.

535 The waongo dances to the sound of a special tom-tom, accompanied by songs and praises in the secret language. The dance is of no special interest; it involves more or less frenetic movements, such as characterize most of the dances of the indigenous peoples.

The waongo is always accompanied by a circle of young men dressed in a narrow strip of cotton, decorated with cowries, and carrying satchels at their sides. These boys make movements with their heads which [238] are precisely like those made by circus [534] horses. In addition to the tom-tom, flute players (wissé) accompany the dances.

535 We shall now speak of the true funeral dance, called warba.
764 It is performed by men wearing skirts, a kind of net shirt dyed blue, and headdresses made of cowrie shells. A long fringe, weighted 535 764 with metal and worn around the hips, distinguishes this costume from others. The movements of the fringe follow the movements of the body. It soon is revolving so rapidly that it looks like a top.

Many people, however, do not own the special costume just described, and they merely tie a blanket around their loins. During the movements of the dance, this produces a very comical effect since it looks like the wagging tail of a monkey.

[534] The musical instruments which accompany this dance are long tom-toms (gangando); some of them are narrower at the middle and look like long, thin spools for thread.

The dancers also accompany themselves with tiny metal instruments which are like Spanish castanets.

The dance itself is performed in a circle under the direction of the chief of the warba whose costume is [239] richer than the others. All of the dancers usually wear many charms on their [789] heads (tail of an ox and heads of birds stained with the blood of sacrificed chickens).

[775] The warba proves that the Mossi believe in the immortality of the soul. They believe that the dance is necessary to enable the soul of the departed to join the souls of his ancestors. They hope in this way to earn the good favor of the new spirit.

Thus, this dance has a moral basis. However, it seems that the same cannot be said for the other dances which are performed so widely today.

535 In addition to these three national Mossi dances, there are some other dances performed only by women and girls which are actually exercises in physical culture rather than true dances. We shall speak only of the principal one, the kiguibtobo ("dance of the bumping buttocks").

The kiguibtobo. This dance is performed by a group of women, usually at the beginning of cool weather after the harvests are in. The dancers clap their hands while singers raise their melodious voices. The dance is rhythmic. Two dancers leave the group and take their places in the center of the circle. They go back and forth, and then suddenly at a given point in the song [240] they turn back to back so that their buttocks touch and bump each other in time to the music. The dancers must be equally strong 535 or there will be falls which are inevitable when one of the girls is too robust.

535 539 Here, chosen at random, is one of the kiguibtobo songs:

M'Ma ho, ka M'Ma warla y e
Lebin wa regh'big' tim boudguin
n'di Mossa yarbate ribo

"Mother, oh, my mother,
Come quickly and take my child,
For I am going to the next village
To consume pitilessly the goods of these wretched Mossé." (1)

1. Mossi.

[241] Chapter 16

Agriculture

241 787 Selection of land to be tilled. As he is wont to do in all important matters, the Moaga entrusts to a soothsayer the responsibility of choosing the land to be cultivated. In actual fact, he chooses it himself, but the diviner must tell him whether or not it is haunted by spirits and what sacrifices are advisable to protect him from evil spirits.

The soothsayer always warns him of the presence of spirits (kinkirsi) and prescribes the necessary sacrifices and alms.

241 782 Sacrifices. The new occupant calls for the head of the family or, if he is a Nionioga, for the Tengsoba, who is in charge of sacrifices. The following sacramental words are pronounced: "A zaguel tib reg' noag'la zom kom kon Naba zidwende, tib kon zig'tinguin damba, tib kon timpelem, tib kon yaramba, kon saramba, tib reg'kon zig, kinkirga ta wa me nan baou ki, on -- on tib reg'koin gnimassem, lass' pogh'banga, lasse zoug'banga, naore banga ..." Translation: "On the part of X, I offer this rooster and this water with flour to the sun god (Zidwendé), to the

241 brothers of the family heads who died childless (zig'tinguin damba),
782 and to the ancestors and grandparents. May they see to it that these offerings are accepted by the kinkirsi (spirits of the fields) and that the latter favor X with-[242] good health and large crops of millet and beans."

[787] Once these sacrifices have been made -- if they are accepted, the rooster falls on its back -- the new owner has his land cleared and awaits the winter season.

Field work. As soon as the first rains have come, the owner goes once more to the field and has another rooster killed and offered to the kinkirga [singular of kinkirsi] with a plea for gnimassem (good health) and large harvests which he will consume with new wives and new children (pog'palla, la bipalla). Afterward he sows large and small millet, peanuts, beans, etc.

If the year has been a good one and the Moaga has had fine crops, he is happy and in good time will remember the spirit of the fields. For the moment he is busy transporting the millet to the temporary granary (lourgho).

Threshing millet. Before his millet is threshed, the Moaga must make a sacrifice to the zéiga (threshing floor). The ritual words differ from those described above only in the following words: "X asks that this millet, which he will eat, be good for him and that he eat it in peace and good health with his family." (Kita ri ki wan ne lafi layelsomdé né a zak'ramba.)

241 [243] He then appeals to the young men of the village for help
476 in threshing his grain. For the occasion he has a great deal of beer prepared and quantities of beans (benga) cooked. The beans are [252] prepared with sesame (sinni). After the job is done, two children between the ages of six and seven are called, and their hands filled with the bean mixture. They must run around the threshing floor while eating some of the beans. The rest will be scattered to the winds. They must stop three times for breath and look at each other. Then the remaining beans are distributed among the workers. They are also given beer.

423 Do owners retain rights over abandoned land? In order to occupy abandoned land, permission must first be obtained from the former owner, who retains his rights over the land. He may reclaim it at 423 will, and the new occupant cannot make the slightest protest.

It should be pointed out, however, that since land is most often abandoned because it was thought to be unproductive or haunted, there is rarely a claim to it by a former owner. In any event the matter is settled by the interested parties. The local administration and the canton chief rarely intervene in such cases.

Owners' rights over fruit trees in cultivated fields. Donsé
423 or néré [locust bean] trees whose fruits contain a yellowish, sweet 263 powder that is edible and [244] whose seeds are used to make soumbala, a fetid condiment much prized by the natives, remain the exclusive property of the former occupant. On the other hand, the tamsé (karite tree) belong to the new owner.

423 This is because the karite tree is found almost everywhere in the bush, while the néré is less common.

Rights of the chiefs over cultivated land. As a general rule, 425 since the principle of right by possession is honored among the 423 Mossi, a canton chief will not confiscate without reason cultivated land belonging to one of his subjects if the land has always been occupied by the occupant's grandparents.

When the land is unoccupied, however, or newly occupied, the canton chief may, by virtue of his absolute authority over his territory, take possession, and the new owner may not claim any compensation.

Field Work

241 In principle, a family field is held in common. When a woman
562 grows old, however, she no longer does field work with her hus-
595 band. She has her own field and feeds herself as best she may, since her husband pays no further attention to her and no longer supports her. The work is done by the family as a group, and the size of the field varies with the size of the family.

241 Early in the morning, usually before [245] sunrise, the head
512 of the family wakens the young people. They go out to the field, which may be five to ten kilometers away. Around ten o'clock, the women bring the remains of last night's sagbo or, lacking that, some millet flour which is taken in water.

241 At noon (wend'to souka, "the middle of the day") the family
512 rests in the shade of a tree. There are always some fruit trees in every field. Work is resumed at about two in the afternoon. At five the women return home to prepare food, and the men stop work at nightfall.

241 The sisoaga. When the family fields are too extensive to be 476 cultivated without help, all the able-bodied young men in the village are called to help with the weeding.

At such a time the head of the family gives several baskets of sprouted millet to his wives to make large quantities of dam, millet beer. He also orders them to prepare sagbo (millet cakes).

On the day set for the work, the young men go to the fields, where their enthusiasm is aroused by singing and the beating of drums. For their work they receive sagbo and dam. This is what is known as the sisoaga.

It is a kind of mutual aid, and without this indispensable system of solidarity, many fields would remain uncultivated.

[573] It should be noted, finally, that when a person falls [246] ill during the winter, his friends arrange to cultivate his fields, sometimes without any pay and simply out of a sense of solidarity.

241 Farm implements. As is the case everywhere in French West Africa, the natives have only the most primitive implements. Among the Mossi these include: the wanka or kounri, a hoe or Bambara daba to cultivate the soil; the sitoaga (small pickaxe) for sowing; and the laré (ax) to clear the site of brush and shrubs.

463 Other types of work. Aside from work in the fields, everyone goes about his own affairs. Some make baskets, hampers, and fans, while others weave cotton strips. It is perhaps of some [564 interest to note that there is no caste distinction among the Mossi, 326] except for the blacksmiths; each person may practice the trade that suits him. This is why shoemakers mostly come from among the nakomsé (descendants of naba).

Food Crops

241 The principal foods grown by the Mossi are as follows.
Kazouf (small white or gray millet).

241 Baningha (large white millet or sorghum).

These two types are grown for food, [247] although the large white millet is especially reserved for horses in well-to-do households.

[262 273] Kazinga (large red millet). As a food the poorer Mossi prefer this to the baningha, but it is more especially grown for the making of dam, millet beer.

[556] Mouf (rice) is sought only by the chiefs, notables, and a few families of dakangba (well-to-do men).

Benga (beans).

Souma (peas of either the small green variety or large white or red ones).

Niouyan (from niouri, "yam"), grown only in certain areas.

Nangouri or sounkama (peanuts).

Pèsça (fabirama) [a tuber plant].

Sinni or sili (sesame), grown only by a few people who like it.

Bito (sorrel), used in preparing the sauce served with sagbo.

Mana (gombo [okra]) is also cultivated.

Aside from its food crops, each family has its own plot for cotton (lamdo) which provides for the clothing needed during the year.

311 178 I am told that fields are much more extensive today than in former times, in spite of the abolition of slavery. This is explained by the fact that many areas supposed to be haunted were formerly left uncultivated. It is said, however, that the Moaga used to grow larger crops since in those days he was closer to the soil.

[248] At the present time there is a lack of farm hands. As [857] recently as twenty years ago, the young Moaga followed his parents to the field as soon as he was six or seven years old. He took a liking to the work at a very young age. Before the French [484] occupation, the Moaga rarely left his village because of the dangers on the roads, frequented in those days by bandits (usually descend- [579] ants of naba). People were even afraid to go into the bush alone, for fear of being attacked, captured, and reduced to slavery.

433 178 There was little contact even between adjoining villages. At Ouagadougou, no one ventured from section to section unless he had very good reason and was armed to the teeth. In short, everyone

433 made do with what his own village could produce, and there was 178 really no trade in the ordinary sense of the word. The Moaga, essentially a stay-at-home, depended on the soil for food and clothing.

241 Only two new crops have been added since the coming of the 177 French: yams (na-niouyan, "chiefs' yams") and white potatoes.

The recent increase in the cultivation of cotton makes it easier for the natives to meet their tax, and this encourages them to grow even more.

178 The French occupation has brought many benefits in its wake (creation of a network of roads, peace and the resulting free circulation among the villages, and suppression of banditry and looting), but it has also given the Moaga a desire to leave the country.

167 The extensive recruitment of [249] laborers for the needs of other colonies in the area, for work on the roads, and for the now
464 obligatory military service -- all of which are accepted reluctantly by the Mossi -- has caused many young men to emigrate.

Some of them set out, for the Gold Coast preferably, without the slightest means of support. They go to work in the English colony in order to earn money for clothes. Since they had no money when they started out, they remain there for months or even years, and this seriously diminishes the agricultural labor force at home. It also forces their old and helpless relatives to cultivate their fields alone.

Besides, so many of them never return!

The Native Diet

262 Sagbo (millet mush) is the principal item in the Mossi diet at all social levels. Rice, regarded as a luxury food, is eaten by the naba and notables. It costs from two and a half to three francs a [435] kilogram at Ouagadougou and is therefore too expensive for most people. It may be added that it rarely is found in the diet of civil service employees.

264 Mossi chiefs usually have two main meals a day: a [250] first meal of sagbo or rice at around nine in the morning, and a second 264 meal of sagbo in the evening.

What we call breakfast is hardly known. Between the two main meals, however, the chiefs have meat grilled or roasted. They are very fond of it and have it seasoned with enough salt and pepper to make it possible to consume the endless number of [273] small gourds of beer which they drink from morning to night.

The Moaga has only one real meal a day, the evening meal. A large millet cake satisfies the day's hunger. If there is any left over, he keeps it carefully for his morning meal. If there is none left, a frequent state of affairs, he makes do with his zompanrga, crushed millet diluted with water and sometimes eaten with a bit of vegetable fat or a few peanuts.

He rarely eats any rice, and if he has no sagbo, he contents himself with benga and souma.

261 It is during the festivals that the Moaga eats his fill. At such 527 times the head of the compound kills a goat, a sheep, or some chickens and has sagbo and fabirama prepared, or beans with copious amounts of karite butter. This is the feast. The members of the family stuff themselves to the point where attacks of diarrhea are inevitable. The results of the attacks are all the more serious in that they are never cared for properly.

The only seasonings known to the Moaga are kalgo (soumbala), 263 red pepper, okra, and salt. No more than a few years ago, how-
439 ever, before the [251] development of trade in the colony, salt was brought from Timbuktu and Mopti by the Dioula and Yarcé and was so expensive that the Mossi people who lived in the countryside often went for six months without tasting salted food.

241 There is reason to believe that the time is not far off when the Moaga will devote his efforts much more intensively to cash crops, such as cotton, potatoes, peanuts, etc. In this domain, the province chiefs at Ouagadougou have made real progress.

Mogh 'Nab' Kawinré (Threshing the Grain of the Mogho Naba)

241 Sacrifices. For this ceremony, the emperor summons the 643 Mankougoudougou Tengsoba (a descendant of the autochthonous 782 Nioniossé, masters of the land) to Ouagadougou and gives him a 241 sheep to be sacrificed to the threshing floor (zéiga).

643 The work. After this sacrifice, around two-thirty in the after-782 noon, the Kam Naba (a notable in the section of the Baloum Naba) proceeds to the threshing floor with the young men from Bilbalogo and Dapoya who have been assembled for the occasion. The operation involves beating the millet stalks with tree branches cut to form an obtuse angle and called dabandé or soika.

When the job is done, the workers depart, [252] leaving the 643 grain to be gathered up another day.
241 The next morning they return to the field, preceded by the Bend' Naba (chief drummer), who plays the bouloumbougri kabse nanamsé to which the other drummers respond with bouroum-bouroum (the Bend Naba gives the names of the emperor's ministers, recalling the origins of each one, and wishes a happy new year to Oubri-yiri Naba, "master of the house of Oubri," that is, to the Mogho Naba; bouroum-bouroum has no special meaning).

Immediately thereafter, the Bend Naba invites the young men to the warba (funeral dance), which is actually only a confused stamping on the millet which in the process is scattered far and wide. Suddenly the drums stop, the signal for a rest. Then the Kam Naba from Bilbalogo divides the pile of millet into two parts by tracing a straight line across the center of the zéiga. The people from Bilbalogo (the section of the Baloum Naba) gather one half, and those from Dapoya (section of the house slaves) gather up the other half.

Whether it is a good or bad year, the emperor's harvest is expected to yield 100 baskets (péog' koabga) full of grain.

The Mogho Naba sends 50 to 70 canari of beer to the workers and shortly goes there himself. He also distributes two or three wassé (from waga, load of 1,000 kola nuts) to the ministers and to the workers.

After thanking and encouraging the workers, the [253] emperor returns to his house, escorted by his ministers and all the horsemen.

643 Mankougoudougou Tensoba then uses wet ashes to make three 241 lines on the ground in different parts of the zéiga. Then he takes 782 a lagha (small earthenware jar) and puts some water into it. He

643 241 782 pronounces a few sacramental words and lightly sprinkles the millet, saying: "Zâbre saga Ybéogo sâga, samb'da kôbo la ka toin sameb'la fi yé (the morning and evening rains may put a stop to the cultivation of the fields, but cannot injure the health of the King)." He next takes a straw broom (sagha) and pulls it apart in order to get a bit of millet to put into the lagha mentioned [343] above. He goes then to the temporary granary (lourgho, granary made of Mossi secco) and walks around it three times. An emissary of the emperor gives him a white rooster (nora-pelga), some beer (dam), and zom-kom (water with flour in it). The priest sits down in the shade of the lourgho and before making the sacrifice pronounces the following words: "Naba Siguiri bad'kom, deghin kon Naba Wogbo, tib reg, kon Naba Sanum, tib kon Naba Koutou, tib reg' kon Naba Baongo, tib kon Naba Karfo, tib reg'kon Naba Sawadogo, tib reg la be kon Nab, gnimassem, la lafi," which means literally, "I offer this rooster, this water with flour, and this beer to Naba Siguiri (father of the reigning emperor) in order that he will persuade the Mogho Nabas Wobgo, Sanum, Koukou, Baongo, Karfo, and Sawadogo, to accept them, so that the emperor may enjoy good health and happiness."

The Tengsoba then hands the small quantity of millet [254] which he took earlier to the pugtiéma (first wife of the king) to be made into a millet cake and offered to the spirits (manes of deceased emperors and other spirits of the threshing floor).

643 251 Transporting the millet to the granaries. The wives, daughters, and sisters of the Mogho Naba are alone given the duty of carrying the millet to the granaries (baoré) (1). We have already noted that there are supposed to be a hundred loads of grain, even though the harvest may not fill twenty baskets. The number of baskets required by custom is attained by putting a small quantity of millet in each basket.

1. This baoré granary is made of earth mixed with quantities of straw.

643 241 The millet intentionally left on the zéiga. A little millet is purposely left here and there on the zéiga, and the Kassiri Naba (village chief) takes it for his own use. This signal favor, however,

643 imposes a heavy obligation on the chief. He is expected to in-241 vite the emperor's principal bodyguards (samand'kamba) -- and there are many of them -- to a meal. He is also required to furnish a basket of millet for sowing the field of the Mogho Naba when the first rains come.

652 Utilization of the produce of the emperor's fields. As noted
644 in an earlier chapter [255] under Labor required of Mossi subjects by their naba," the Mogho Naba does not use the millet from his own field. The produce is used to feed the horses, to support the pages and samand'kamba, and especially to make beer on the festive days known as the tinsé and basgha of the king.

[256] Chapter 17

Inheritance and Rights of Succession among the Mossi

428 We have dealt with the question of inheritance at considerable length in the chapter on "Customs and Enthronement of Mossi Chiefs." We return to the subject because it seems necessary to clarify certain details of this question which is so important from the legal point of view.

The opening of succession. The succession is open upon the death of an individual, but property is not passed until after the funeral ceremonies (for all that concerns funerals, see the section on "Death").

Why is there a delay in taking possession of the property? As we have seen above in many chapters, the Moaga is superstitious. An old belief has it that to take possession of the property of the deceased before the funeral is celebrated will bring certain death to the heir or will cause some calamity for the whole family.

Further, since all the members of the family must be assembled for the funeral observances, the inheritance is well publicized, and [257] no one can later claim to have been defrauded.

Requirements for succession. In order to inherit, the following requirements must be met.

1. To be born before the succession is opened.

428 2. Not to be disqualified for the following causes.

a. Murder of the deceased.

b. Failure to avenge his death. In the old days the son had to avenge his father's death before inheriting his property. At present the term "vengeance" should be understood to mean that he must seek satisfaction for the crime in the courts.

c. Failure to celebrate the funeral.

If the legitimate heir is a minor, his guardian must carry out the ceremony in the child's name.

d. Existence of a will whereby the deceased disinherits the heir presumptive.

Order of succession. As a general rule, property is handed down in the direct line, that is, to the eldest son of the deceased. It is handed down in a collateral line only if there is no son. In the case of certain items, however, for example, the family fetish, the heir is the eldest brother of the deceased.

If there is no heir of the first or second degree, the estate goes to the closest relative of the person from whom the deceased inherited the property.

428 431 The eldest in the family excludes the others and has sole possession of the property. Custom demands, however, that he hand over to his brothers and uncles a part [258] of the property. Nevertheless, this is a free gift which he is not actually forced to make.

428 562 184 In the case of the estate of a naba, the eldest son alone usually inherits all the property left by the deceased because of the heavy expenses he must meet to follow custom when he becomes a candidate for the chiefdom. As far as the women are concerned -- they are a part of the property -- he selects the ones he likes, and the rest are left for the nabissi (sons and descendants of naba).

The same is not true for ordinary Mossi, who have begun to realize that there are advantages in allowing all of the children of the deceased to share in the estate. In the chapter dealing with "Marriage" we have already seen that women were allowed some choice of a husband among the sons of the deceased.

428 In any case, however, the eldest son retains the largest share of the estate, and this is easily understandable in view of the 428 custom which decrees that he likewise inherits all of his father's responsibilities as head of the family.

428 Do daughters and wives share in an estate? Daughters have no share in an estate although their brothers may give them 562 trifling gifts.

Wives never inherit from their husbands. They can only benefit indirectly as the representatives of their young sons. On the contrary, since the wife is considered a piece of property, [259] she is actually a part of the estate to the same extent as the rest of the property left by the deceased.

428 Disposition of an unclaimed estate. Only the canton chief is qualified to inherit the property of a deceased person having no known relatives.

Rights and Obligations Governing Property in the Family

421 Property is owned individually. Individual property is strictly a private matter. The head of the family has no rights over property acquired individually by the women and children or by other relatives under his rule. They may dispose of their possessions as they see fit. A mother may do some trading to provide savings for her children. The head of the family may not use such property under any circumstances without the consent of the true owner.

428 Does a husband inherit from his wife? A husband has no right to his wife's property. He cannot even claim it if she dies childless, 593 since in that case it goes to her own relatives (brothers or sisters) or, failing that, to their children.

428 Aside from their rights in their father's estate, children inherit their mother's property.

When the head of a family borrows cowries from [260] a [426] member of his compound, he must repay the loan with a given time. His own property is inalienably his as long as he lives, and then it makes up his estate, along with his wives.

768 Disposition of a house after death. When the head of a compound dies, the establishment is not destroyed. It automatically 428 passes to the heirs, that is, to his sons or, if he has no legitimate

768 heirs, to his brothers. If the deceased was the keeper and guard-
428 ian of the family fetish, it is taken to the home of his eldest brother or to a person designated by custom.

We have seen, however, that the Moaga will not live in a home without consulting a soothsayer. Therefore, if the spirits are not favorable to the heir, the home is turned over to the other sons or to the brothers of the deceased. Besides, in many cases the eldest son is already married and the head of a family and already has his own home. He then lodges his dakompa (young unmarried brothers) or one of his uncles in his father's home.

428 Acceptance or repudiation of inheritances. Consequences.
To accept and receive an inheritance involves the obligation to 426 pay the debts and claims against it. Among the Mossi, an inheri-
672 tance is never refused since a refusal does not free one from the obligation to pay the debts of the deceased. Relatives always collaborate, not because of any feeling for common property -- which [261] does not exist, as we have seen above -- but out of respect for the principle of collective responsibility which has been developed in the interests of public order. Creditors will naturally claim their due first from the legitimate heir, but if the estate cannot meet its obligations, all of the close relatives are jointly responsible.

428 The estate does not include any gifts made to members of the family by the deceased during his lifetime.

Wills. Among the Mossi, a will is always made orally.

In the presence of his relatives -- uncles and brothers -- and of his neighbors, who have been assembled for the occasion, the testator makes known his last wishes to his legitimate heir, who will have full rights as his testamentary successor. However, in the event that the will is intended to disinherit the legitimate heir and if for some reason or other he is not present, the testator will entrust the execution of his last wishes to the oldest member of the family present.

Disinheritance of the heir presumptive. In the presence of witnesses and under the conditions indicated above, the testator explains his reasons for disinheriting the heir presumptive. In the event that the reasons seem insufficient, the witnesses will seek 428 to change his mind. If, however, he absolutely refuses to heed their protests, they will not make an issue of it, but when the time comes to [262] apportion the estate, the testamentary arrangement to disinherit the heir presumptive will simply be declared null and void.

If the heir presumptive was disinherited for any of the causes for disqualification listed above or because he had committed adultery with one of his father's wives or a wife of someone in the family, the estate is given to the next in the line of succession as determined by Moaga custom.

Right to make a will. All who own property may make wills.

Revocation of wills. Wills may be revoked if the testator so desires. He has only to make a simple oral declaration of changed intention in the same manner as that described above.

Chapter 18

Circumcision. Do the Mossi Practice It?

304 Circumcision is highly esteemed among the Mossi. Some 184 colonial officials, because of their ignorance of Mossi customs, have claimed that neither circumcision nor excision was practiced. One must be able, indeed, to distinguish between the Moaga, the Boussanga, and especially the Nionioga. Although the three groups are related, they have different customs.

304 Circumcision, which is done according to precise rules, is carried out here in virtually the same way as it is among the Kassonké of Kayes.

The ceremony must originally have been imposed on the 304 Dagomba (of whom the Mossi are descendants) by Islam. Now,
626 however, young men seek to have themselves circumcised, not for any religious reason, but rather to avoid the ridicule of their friends and, especially, the scorn shown by Mossi women for an uncircumcised man.

We shall attempt to describe below the circumcision cere-304 mony among the Mossi.

After the harvest, toward the end of November, the young men state their wish to be circimcised. Since the cost of supporting 304 a boy [264] during the circumcision process is considerable for his family, the latter will not agree to it unless they have had a good harvest.

Besides, since the affair must be quite grandiose in character, thirty to fifty boys from the ages of twelve to fifteen must be ready before permission will be given for the operation. After the relatives have consulted the soothsayers (bagba), they seek out a Yarga (Dioula of Mandé origin) or a Silmimoaga (the Toucouleur [Tukolor] of Mossi country) and ask him to perform the operation.

This surgeon for the occasion is called gounni.

Kéogo. A site is selected where there are no habitations, preferably a sandy area. A circle is laid out and walled with Mossi secco (sogsak' pinri). The size of the enclosure, the keogo, is governed by the number of boys who are going to live in it.

The boys are brought to the gate of the kéogo, which is strictly guarded by zoumsi (men who have already been circumcised). Each boy assumes a serious and defiant manner to give himself courage. Inside the circle there is a milling crowd, and there is such a noise of drums and songs that the following ritual sentence is barely audible: "Moaga wanian konlebin kouli moaga (You came in a Moaga -- here meaning an uncircumcised man -- you will not be a Moaga when you go out)."

The operation. Before the boys are brought in, a hole has been [265] dug for each one. The child is blindfolded and made to sit on a stone in front of the hole. The prepuce, stretched out as far as possible and tied with a string, is placed on a block of wood and cut off with a single slash of a razor (barga). The penis is held up with a split reed to permit the blood to flow into the hole. I believe that there is a special hole into which all the severed prepuces are thrown. A string tied around the boy's hips replaces the reed after the operation to keep the penis away from the body and thus avoid painful rubbing.

304 551 Bankoensé yuiya (names given to circumcised boys). The names vary according to the rank of each boy. The first to be operated upon is called Falinga; the second, Ouanda; the third, 304 Wanzouri; and so on through Nodo, Koulwandé, Wemba, etc.

551 There is even the favorite who is called Ponsom because he is given special privileges.

Zouinsi yuiya (names of the guards of the kéogo and of those 304 who watch over the bankoensé). Seven days after the ceremony some of the zouinsi are chosen to supervise the kéogo, to take care of its organization and to arrange the games. A real hierarchy is involved, beginning with the Soré Naba ("chief of the path"), who is, so to speak, the head of the establishment, and proceeding down in order of [266] precedence through Sobila Naba, Dag'noré, and Dag'Nobila (gatekeepers). The role of the latter is to allow any zounga [singular of zouinsi] to re-enter the enclosure while preventing any of the circumcised boys from leaving the enclosure without their permission. The Galli and Gallibila are in charge of the drums. The Imam and the Imambilla ("chiefs of pardon") protect the bankoensé from ill-treatment by the zouinsi. Then there is Banzambo, a comic character who is always performing all sorts of dances to relieve the monotony of life in the kéogo and give the boys a little fun. His gyrations always amuse the company. The duty of two characters called Wagdré, "chief thief," and Wagd'billa, "little thief," is to steal the meat acquired by the newly circumcised boys during forays or the saghbo brought by the boys' parents. They compensate for their mischief, however, by putting the younger children to bed and feeding them when the games go on too long. They do this in spite of the vigilance of the guards.

The Nané and Nanebilla, along with the Bankoé, are the masters of ceremonies.

Support of the circumcised boys. As we have already pointed out, the relatives of the boys are expected to provide them with morning and evening meals during their recovery. Actually, the boys get very meager rations since more than half of the food -- after the choicest bits have been set aside by the lembré (person in charge of tasting the food)-- is reserved [267] for the many zouinsi. Since most of them are bachelors, they welcome a chance to eat their fill.

304 Care given the sick boys. A specially arranged corner of the 752 kéogo serves as an infirmary. Treatment consists of washing the 304 wound with warm water which often is not scrupulously clean 752 since the gourd in which it is kept is not always washed. The wound is dusted with a charred substance (made by burning the [278] bark or leaves of the baguem-baga plant) mixed with karite butter.

It is bandaged with a leaf from the kantonga bush, tied on with a bit of thread. Once the wound has begun to heal, it is wrapped in cotton strips. The water used to wash the wound is thrown into a hole that is covered with a stone.

304 Special language of the kéogo. In order to prevent the Moaga 198 (here meaning an uncircumcised person) from understanding what is said within the kéogo or between the boys and the guards, a special language has been developed. Some of its words are as follows:

Water (kom in ordinary Mossi language), hargo;
Millet cake (saghbo in Mossi), lâbo;
Sauce (zindo in Mossi), kirou;
Fire (bougoum in Mossi), nionom;
Beer (dam in Mossi), sonnom;
A robe or blanket (fougou in Mossi), pilli;
Mat (pinri in Mossi), wanghé. [268]

304 Distinctive attire of the circumcised boys (bankoanga). His 292 costume, wallimba or zougba, consists of a fringed loincloth with pockets. He carries a rough stick (zâbré) with which he hunts rabbits and other small game.

He accompanies his evening dance with an instrument called 304 wassimba, a curved stick on the end of which are strung four or 293 five pieces of gourd, roughly circular in shape, with holes bored through them.

Tom-toms. The bankoensé (newly circumcised boys) dance
304 to the beat of two drums like those used in the warba and waongo
534 (see the chapter on native dances). The drums are called 535 gangango when they accompany other dances, but here they are called gallyans.

304 Prohibitions in the kéogo. A Moaga (1) is strictly forbidden

1. "Moaga" is used here in a pejorative sense and means an uncircumcised man.

304 to look into the enclosure. If he should commit such an indiscretion which is considered a gross blunder, he at once suffers the consequences. He is immediately dragged into the circle undressed, and circumcised without any consultation with his relatives.

It is strictly forbidden to enter the kéogo, with néoda (shoes), a pougla [269] (red fez), and kandé (spears). If a canton chief should take it into his head to visit the circumcised boys -- an unlikely situation -- he would have to leave all his insignia of rank outside.

304 834 Since it has been observed that young men who have had sexual intercourse before their circumcision had difficulty in being healed after the operation, they are advised to avoid sexual intercourse for the first few months after the scars form.

304 262 They do not eat wagha sauce (a sauce made of the immature fruit of the wagka, a tree of the kapok family).

Required exercises for the bankoensé. The bankoensé are 304 required to perform painful and tiring exercises, which consider- 526 ably retards their recovery. We shall describe the principal ones below.

Very early in the morning when it is very cool -- we have pointed out that the ceremony takes place at the beginning of the cool season -- the boys are awakened and forced to lie prone on the cold sand without any covering. This is the bourga. Naturally enough, the limbs become a bit stiff, so they are roundly whipped with berrella (branches of certain trees), ostensibly to give them warmth and strength. Then, to the beat of the tom-toms, they must do the exercise called guella. This difficult feat involves jumping like a frog from a crouching position [270] and at intervals making a circular movement with the legs. They may also be required to do the even more difficult nagda, an exercise which involves walking on the hands with the legs in the air. Another exercise requires the boys, starting from an erect position, to bend backwards until the hands touch the ground. This is called kaougsèga, "back breaker." The unfortunates whose hands fail to reach the ground get a bump on the head. There are also movements of the head called zouanka, like those made by Kassonké girls and the Wiskamba of Mossi country.

304 Release. The stay in the kéogo lasts from 90 to 100 days. Around the eightieth day, when all the boys have recovered, their heads are shaved and they are told that they will be released a week later. Chickens (koug'nossé, "chickens of the stone") are killed, and each boy is given half a chicken.

Actually, the ceremony of liberation will not take place until fourteen days after this ceremony. All of the boys' belongings (loincloth, bandages, sticks, etc.) are burned by the zouinsi in a great fire near the kéogo. The bankoensé, completely naked, must jump over the fire and run straight to the house of the Bankoé without looking back. A new enclosure has been built there, and the boys are given skirts, robes, trousers, and caps of various colors which their relatives bought or [271] had made for them. Everyone on this occasion wants his son to be distinguished by the richness of his costume. The procession of the circumcised boys is a motley and picturesque sight. One or two days after this, the boys must go back toward the kéogo at nightfall for the last time. They stop before reaching it, however, and return to the house of the Bankoé with their backs slightly bent; this is called lé'ssé-bourgou.

The boys enjoy a veritable festival for a week. They are in high spirits from the admiration they receive, from being able to perform dances other than those peculiar to the circumcision ceremony, from drinking beer, and especially from eating their fill, since their parents have sacrificed chickens and sheep for the occasion.

Finally, very early one morning, some zouinsi collect the boys' handsomely decorated sticks (wangha or dibissi) and go off to bury them in holes dug outside the village. This is the end of the cremony, and now the boys may return to their homes.

304 572 All of the boys have undergone the same rough treatment and have led the same life for about 100 days. During this time of trial, friendships and lasting attachments have been formed. They will henceforth call each other by their "circumcision names" and will help each other since they are now friends.

304 In order to forestall possible reprisals -- since in the kéogo no distinction is made between the son of a naba and a peasant's son -- custom forbids the [272] new initiates to hold a grudge against the zouinsi for the ill-treatment to which they were subjected.

304 184 The Nioniossé and the Soukoaba do not practice circumcision, and that is why they are called Mossé. In villages inhabited solely by Nioniossé, a kéogo may not be set up. At present some boys of Nionioga origin ignore the prohibition and go to their mother's village (Yastenga) to have the purifying operation (1).

[775] 1. Apparently the Moslems believe that those who are circumcised will not go to hell.

304 832 626 Among the Mossi many Christians voluntarily have themselves circumcised; women -- even Christians -- feel a certain repugnance for the touch of the "Moaga."

Finally, excision is also esteemed among the Mossi, except among the Nioniossé who do not practice it. Girls who are not excised are scorned by their friends and will have no lovers.

1: Delobsom--144 I-5 (no date) 1933 FA28 Mossi FA28

000

The Author Mr. Dim Delobsom.

1: Delobsom--145 I-5 (no date) 1933 FA28 Mossi FA28

643
292

Mogho Naba Kom Ruler of the Mossi.

From the Mission of the White Fathers at Ouagadougou.

1: Delobsom--146 I-5 (no date) 1933 FA28 Mossi FA28

142
291

A Mossi Type.

From the Mission of the White Fathers at Ouagadougou.

1: Delobsom--147 I-5 (no date) 1933 FA28 Mossi FA28

142
534

Drummer (bendré).

From the Mission of the White Fathers at Ouagadougou.

1: Delobsom--148 I-5 (no date) 1933 FA28 Mossi FA28

142
291
301
302

Mossi Girl.

From the Mission of the White Fathers at Ouagadougou.

1: Delobsom--149 I-5 (no date) 1933 FA28 Mossi FA28

643
644
516
293

1: Delobsom--150 I-5 (no date) 1933 FA28 Mossi FA28

Ministers of the Mogho Naba and their Servitors.
(From left to right, the First, Third, and Fourth Ministers.)

From the Mission of the White Fathers
at Ouagadougou.

1: Delobsom--151 I-5 (no date) 1933 FA28 Mossi FA28

643
644
576

Mogho Naba
The Ruler of all the Mossi and a Servitor.

From the Mission of the White Fathers
at Ouagadougou.

1: Delobsom--152 I-5 (no date) 1933 FA28 Mossi FA28

000

The Mogho Naba and Three of his Ministers.

From the Missions of the White Fathers
at Ouagadougou.

1: Delobsom--153 I-5 (no date) 1933 FA28 Mossi FA28

492
291
645

G unga N: Gounga Naba
Third Minister of the Mogho Naba.

From the Mission of the White
Fathers at Ouagadougou.

1: Delobsom--154 I-5 (no date) 1933 FA28 Mossi FA28

714
701

Tansoba
Mossi Minister of War.
From the Mission of the White Fathers at Ouagadougou.

1: Delobson--155 I-5 (no date) 1933 FA28 Mossi FA28

The Baloum Naba on horseback among his Courtiers.
From the Mission of the White
Fathers at Ouagadougou.

1: Delobsom--156 I-5 (no date) 1933 FA28 Mossi FA28

326
516

Native Blacksmith.
From the Mission of the White Fathers at Ouagadougou.

1: Delobsom--157 I-5 (no date) 1933 FA28 Mossi FA28

648
5/6
241

The Third Minister of the Mogho Naba (Gounga Naba) among his Servitors.
(The latter wear Christian medals)
From the Mission of the White Fathers at Ouagadougou.

1: Deloborm--158 I-5 (no date) 1933 FA28 Mossi FA28

142
291

Three Mossi Girls.

From the Mission of the White Fathers at Ouagadougou.

1: Delobsom--159 I-5 (no date) 1933 FA28 Mossi FA28

283
576.
301
291

Mossi Woman Spinning.

From the Mission of the White Fathers at Ouagadougou.

1: Delobsom--160 I-5 (no date) 1933 FA28 Mossi FA28

The Home of the Gounga Naba.

From the Mission of the White Fathers at Ouagadougou.

1: Delobsom--161 I-5 (no date) 1933 FA28 Mossi FA28

286
516

Mossi Weaver.

From the Mission of the White Fathers at Ouagadougou.

1: Delobsom--162 I-5 (no date) 1933 FA28 Mossi FA28

535
292

Mossi Warba Dancers.

From the Mission of the White Fathers at Ouagadougou.

1: Delobsom--163 I-5 (no date) 1933 FA28 Mossi FA28

343

Large Mossi Granaries.

From the Mission of the White Fathers at Ouagadougou.

1: Delobsom--164 I-5 (no date) 1933 FA28 Mossi FA28

415

Making Saghaibo.
Millet Mush, Food of the Mossi.

From the Mission of the White
Fathers at Ouagadougou.

1: Delobsom--165 1-5 (no date) 1933 FA28 Mossi FA28

291
293

A Canton Chief (Doulougou Naba) and his Servitor.

From the Mission of the White Fathers at Ouagadougou.

1: Delobsom--166 I-5 (no date) 1933 FA28 Mossi FA28

102

French West Africa
The hatching indicates the area inhabited by the Mossi.

From the Mission of the White Fathers at Ouagadougou.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

L'auteur.
M. Dim Delobsom.

[Frontispiece]

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

INSTITUT DE DROIT COMPARÉ

ÉTUDES DE SOCIOLOGIE ET D'ETHNOLOGIE JURIDIQUES

publiées sous la direction de

RENÉ MAUNIER

Professeur à la Faculté de Droit de l'Université de Paris.

XI

A. A. DIM DELOBSOM

L'EMPIRE DU MOGHO-NABA

Coutumes des Mossi de la Haute-Volta

PRÉFACE

DE

ROBERT RANDAU

PARIS

LES ÉDITIONS DOMAT-MONTCHRESTIEN

F. LOVITON et Cie

160, RUE SAINT-JACQUES

1932

[Title Page]

Tous droits de reproduction, de traduction et d'adaptation réservés pour tous pays.

Copyright by Éditions Donat-Montchrestien,
160, rue Saint-Jacques, Paris.

[title page (A)]
[2 blank pages follow and are omitted]

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

PRÉFACE

M. Dim Delobsom, auteur de cet ouvrage, est un fonctionnaire noir de l'Afrique occidentale, homme très distingué et l'un des plus sympathiques représentants de la jeune génération indigène élevée dans nos écoles. Les meilleurs de cette élite sont les partisans agissants de nos méthodes et acquirent, à notre contact, le goût de l'observation et de la recherche scientifique. Une classe de plus en plus nombreuse d'intellectuels se groupe dans les villes et assemble les employés de l'administration et du commerce ; ils sont de culture française, parlent couramment entre eux le français et forment le parti qu'ils appellent eux-mêmes celui des noirs évolués. Ces novateurs qualifient volontiers de sauvages les gens qui obéissent intégralement à la coutume ethnique. Ils lisent nos journaux et nos livres, sont au courant de nos idées et parfois collaborent à des publications européennes littéraires ou sociologiques.

Ces amis du progrès sont le plus souvent des gens très raisonnables. Ils savent que les Français qui vivent auprès d'eux n'ont pas le préjugé de la couleur et traitent avec courtoisie les noirs qui veulent se rendre leurs égaux par l'esprit. Tous nos établissements d'instruction leur sont ouverts. Qu'on songe aux efforts que doit multiplier, pour s'instruire en français, un noir. Sa langue native est essentiellement différente de la nôtre; il a vécu dans un milieu social étroit, sectaire, voué à des mœurs farouches et cruelles. Tout de nous lui est d'abord incompréhensible, de notre mode de vie à nos idées les plus simples. Alors, auprès de ses maîtres, il apprend sans rien oublier; son savoir, acquis et retenu grâce à une mémoire prodigieuse, demeure d'ordinaire superficiel. Plus rarement, servi par une intelligence plus grande, il adopte, au moins en partie, nos façons de penser. Ce fut le cas de Dim Delobsom.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

*Fils du chef de canton de Sao, il appartient à la caste des nabas, ou nobles, du pays Mossi en Haute-Volta. Il fut instruit en français à l'école régionale de Ouagadougou et à celle des fils de chefs à Kayes, entra de bonne heure dans l'administration et fut affecté à divers bureaux de finances. Bientôt, à la demande de ses chefs, il rédigea quelques rapports sur des points d'ethnographie qu'il leur fallait connaître pour régler de façon équitable des affaires délicates. Ces travaux parurent intéressants et furent publiés dans les revues consacrées aux choses d'Afrique. Encouragé de la sorte, Dim Delobsom se livra, sans négliger sa besogne professionnelle, à des recherches approfondies sur l'histoire et la coutume de son pays, interrogeant sans cesse les vieillards et les griots gardiens des traditions. C'est ainsi que nous possédons à ce jour des renseignements très précis sur les mœurs, si ignorées jusqu'alors, des Mossis. Dim Delobsom témoigne, dans ses ouvrages, d'un amour légitime de son sol natal et a le respect le plus profond de son grand chef, le Morho Naba, qu'il appelle couramment l'*empereur des Mossis. A vrai dire il s'agit d'un potentat qui a à la fois un caractère religieux et temporel, est entouré d'une cour, d'un cérémonial méticuleux, mais se trouve lui-même sous l'influence despotique de la coutume et ne peut se soustraire à ses tyrannies sans risquer de mécontenter la population. Avant notre occupation du Mossi, le Morho Naba était en guerre avec une bonne partie des chefs de province révoltés contrs son autorité. Celle-ci s'est affermie depuis notre arrivée en même temps qu'elle fut contenue dans des limites raisonnables. Le Morho Naba actuel est un personnage considérable et cordial, d'un loyalisme parfait et a été un des meilleurs auxiliaires de l'administration française dans la boucle du Niger.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Dim Delobsom est fier de sa noblesse. Il est le descendant de Naba Kouré (le mot kouré signifie tuerie, et doit être distingué de son synonyme qui signifie funérailles), fils de Ouédraogo et oncle d'Oubri, fondateur de la dynastie qui règne depuis le XIIIe siècle de notre ère à Ouagadougou. Kouré se réserva le fief de Sao où, après lui, dix-sept nabas de sa famille se succédèrent et où se trouve la sépulture de la famille. En conformité de la coutume mossi, chaque naba n'exerçait un pouvoir légitime, absolu et incontesté qu'après avoir été désigné et intronisé par un collège électoral comprenant un chef de village, un chef de quartier et le baloum naba de Sao, chef des pages ou maire du palais. Le Morho Naba était alors avisé de l'avènement et recevait sa part de coutumes. Lors de l'annexion du Kipirsi, qui fut très longue et très difficile, le naba de Sao fut chargé par l'autorité française d'une mission pacifi-

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

catrice qui dura plus de quatre ans et au cours de laquelle il exposa plusieurs fois sa vie à notre service[1].

La société Mossi est hiérarchisée à l'extrême ; il y a là une organisation très serrée dont l'importance est essentielle, et qui a l'avantage, quand on sait l'utiliser, de faciliter le maintien de l'ordre et le respect des décisions. Notre administration française l'a estimée utile et n'a cessé de l'utiliser. Je dois ajouter que les nabas, seigneurs féodaux entourés de gens qui leur sont dévoués, nous ont prêté leur concours entier dans diverses circonstances[2]. Ils mobilisaient alors leur cavalerie et se conduisaient avec bravoure à la tête de leurs contingents.

On m'a fréquemment posé la question : Pensez-vous que les noirs soient susceptibles de notre civilisation ? A ceci je réponds sans hésitation : oui ! Mais en ce point comme en toutes choses il faut de la mesure et l'esprit de méthode.

Nous nous attachons à constituer une élite et, à côté

---

1. Voici, d'après Dim Delobsom, l'énumération des dignitaires de la cour de son père, à Sao :

1° Le tinguin'naba, chargé du règlement de toutes les affaires concernant les nabissi et nakomsé (la noblesse); 2° le tanlili-naba qui s'occupe plus spécialement des petits chefs dépendant de Sao-naba ; 3° le dapoya-naba, autrefois chargé des hautes œuvres et qui procède aux sacrifices sur les tombeaux des nabas défunts ; 4° le baloum-naba intendant et chef des pages, qui règle les affaires des Mossis n'appartenant pas à la noblesse.

A ces ministres il faut adjoindre : le poe-naba qui surveille et dénonce, par procédé magique, les mœurs des femmes et des pages du naba, le bend'naba, et le loun'naba, chefs des tambourinaires, le teng'soba qui procède aux sacrifices aux fétiches et aux lieux sacrés à l'exclusion des tombes des nabas.

2. En particulier lors de la révolte, en 1916, du Kipirsi et des pays samoros, et en 1914, lors de l'occupation du Togo.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

de celle-ci, une foule qui a des notions plus ou moins étendues de notre langue. Puis nous employons ces éléments au mieux de l'intérêt général. Le principal obstacle auquel se heurte notre action civilisatrice n'est pas dans la croyance mystique, dans les tabous divers, dans les usages légués par les ancêtres. Il est uniquement dans l'esclavage où le noir tient la femme. Il ne s'agit même plus de polygamie, au Mossi, mais d'êtres humains ravalés au rang de bêtes de somme et qui sont estimés à moindre prix qu'un cheval ou une vache.

Tant qu'aux pays d'Afrique nous n'aurons pas donné à la femme la place légitime qu'elle occupe dans une société policée, notre œuvre demeurera incomplète et boiteuse. Qu'on ne croie pas un instant que la difficulté soit mince et qu'on puisse la surmonter par quelques mesures administratives. Les Français ont hérité, de leur culture latine, le goût et le respect de la loi. Or légiférer, en l'espèce, est frapper à coup sûr la société noire dans le vif de la chair. On ne doit attendre de progrès que par l'évolution progressive des mœurs. Ce progrès ne s'accomplit que du fait des individus et à l'intérieur de la masse indigène. Notre action n'a d'efficacité que si elle tend à organiser ce progrès de conscience, et avec prudence. D'autre part, la croyance mystique nous aide à l'occasion dans cette voie ; les diverses missions chrétiennes s'emploient avec zèle, quoique parfois avec indiscrétion, à modifier la mentalité de l'Africain et à le rendre monogame. Elles obtiennent des résultats imprécis. Si le noir accepte le dogme, il n'admet, sinon avec peine, qu'on le trouble dans ses habitudes familiales.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Voici des millénaires qu'il vit dans la grande peur. Dans le passé il entretint guerre quotidienne avec ses voisins, eut à redouter les pillages de ses maîtres, les massacres exterminateurs, se serra dans son habitation dont il fit une forteresse, prépara les siens à fuir dans la brousse à la moindre alerte. Il était fatal que la femme, alors que l'homme combattait, s'occupât des cultures. Piocheuse de terre, elle était aussi faiseuse de mâles, qui accroissaient la force offensive et défensive du groupe guerrier. Des expéditions qu'ils formaient les guerriers ramenaient des femmes, j'entends de nouvelles faiseuses de mâles. Et c'est pourquoi, dévouées aux travaux pénibles et ravalées au rang de femelles, les femmes constituaient, chez les chefs de guerre, un troupeau qui, à l'occasion, servait de monnaie d'échange entre les groupes, et d'où l'on éliminait sans pitié les faibles, les inutiles, les vieilles.

Cette habitude de vie inquiète a pris fin il y a un petit nombre de lustres, du fait de notre intervention. Ce qui a été construit par des milliers d'années ne peut être démoli en quelques jours ; la coutume ethnique qui lie les hommes entre eux est plus solide que le ciment romain. De nouvelles conditions de vie sociale, l'assurance où sont les noirs de la sécurité du lendemain, l'abolition des tyrannies féroces qui pesaient sur eux, la multiplicité des voies de communication, la fréquentation des Européens, sont les puissances qui interrompront les fatalités ancestrales.

Améliorer l'existence matérielle de l'autochtone, le conduire au bien-être, lui permettre avant tout de manger à sa faim, ménager ses forces en matière fiscale, l'arra-catrice qui dura plus de quatre ans et au cours de laquelle il exposa plusieurs fois sa vie à notre service [1].

La société Mossi est hiérarchisée à l'extrême ; il y a là une organisation très serrée dont l'importance est essentielle, et qui a l'avantage, quand on sait l'utiliser, de faciliter le maintien de l'ordre et le respect des décisions. Notre administration française l'a estimée utile et n'a cessé de l'utiliser. Je dois ajouter que les nabas, seigneurs féodaux entourés de gens qui leur sont dévoués, nous ont prêté leur concours entier dans diverses circonstances [2]. Ils mobilisaient alors leur cavalerie et se conduisaient avec bravoure à la tête de leurs contingents.

On m'a fréquemment posé la question : Pensez-vous que les noirs soient susceptibles de notre civilisation ? A ceci je réponds sans hésitation : oui ! Mais en ce point comme en toutes choses il faut de la mesure et l'esprit de méthode.

Nous nous attachons à constituer une élite et, à côté

---

1. Voici, d'après Dim Delobsom, l'énumération des dignitaires de la cour de son père, à Sao :

1° Le tinguin'naba, chargé du règlement de toutes les affaires concernant les nabissi et nakomsé (la noblesse); 2° le tanlilinaba qui s'occupe plus spécialement des petits chefs dépendant de Sao-naba ; 3° le dapoya-naba, autrefois chargé des hautes œuvres et qui procède aux sacrifices sur les tombeaux des nabas défunts ; 4° le baloum-naba intendant et chef des pages, qui règle les affaires des Mossis n'appartenant pas à la noblesse.

A ces ministres il faut adjoindre : le poe-naba qui surveille et dénonce, par procédé magique, les mœurs des femmes et des pages du naba, le bend'naba, et le loun'naba, chefs des tambourinaires, le teng'soba qui procède aux sacrifices aux fétiches et aux lieux sacrés à l'exclusion des tombes des nabas.

2. En particulier lors de la révolte, en 1916, du Kipirsi et des pays samoros, et en 1914, lors de l'occupation du Togo.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

cher au sort misérable qui fut le sien dans le passé adouciront la barbarie. Tel est le but de notre politique indigène. Les noirs des hautes classes sont dans cet immense travail nos premiers collaborateurs. Tout jeune engagé dans notre voie, Dim Delobsom non seulement connaît à fond notre langue, mais, familier de notre idéologie, pense en Français de race.

Il n'y a pas à insister, je pense, sur l'extrême intérêt que présente une documentation d'ethnographie présentée par un noir intelligent et profondément instruit de tout ce qui concerne les gens de son pays.

ROBERT RANDAU.

[p. viii is blank]

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Communiqué par la Mission des Pères Blancs à Ouagadougou.

MOGHO-NABA KOM.
Grand Chef du pays Mossi.

[facing p. viii]

INTRODUCTION

Les Mossi, objet de cette étude, habitent la Colonie de la Haute-Volta, en Afrique Occidentale Française, dans les cercles de Ouagadougou, Kaya, Koudougou, Tenkodogo et une partie du cercle de Ouahigouya.

Avant l'arrivée des Mossi, le pays était occupé par des Ninissi, des Kibissi et des Gourounsi. — Chassés par les conquérants, réduits à l'esclavage, les Gourounsi se réfugièrent dans la région de Pô et de Léo (Subdivisions administratives du cercle de Ouagadougou) et dans une partie du cercle de Koudougou. — Quant aux Kibissi ils se seraient retirés dans les montagnes — dans la falaise de Bandiagara — et forment aujourd'hui la race connue sous le nom de Habès. — Les Ninissi, ainsi qu'on le verra plus loin, appelés Tinguinbissi (fils de la terre ou, proprement, premiers habitants du pays) n'ont pas été chassés du territoire par Naba Oubri, fondateur de la dynastie Mossi de Ouagadougou. — Leurs patriarches « les Tingsoba (maîtres du pays et de la terre) sont chargés de sacrifier les victimes offertes aux « dieux » (Tenkouga, pierres) soit pour la bonne-santé des habitants, soit pour demander la pluie, etc... et surtout ils veillent à la conservation des « dieux fétiches ».

Il ne nous a pas été possible de savoir quels étaient, avant les Ninissi, Kibissi et Gourounsi, les premiers habitants du pays Mossi actuel. Toutes les recherches faites dans ce but sont demeurées sans résultats.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

On nous a bien parlé de certaines grottes — aujourd'hui refuges de porcs-épics — qui servaient autrefois de repaires aux premiers habitants, mais aucun de nos informateurs n'a pu dire avec certitude à quelle race appartenaient ces individus [1].

Nous allons donc nous contenter dans ce qui suit de donner un rapide aperçu historique de la formation de la race Mossi.

APERÇU HISTORIQUE DE LA FORMATION DE L'EMPIRE MOSSI

Tout d'abord il convient de dire que le mot « Mossi » n'existe pas dans la langue moré ; ce terme est une déformation française du mot « Mossé » pluriel de « Moaga » habitant du « Mogho » (pays des Mossé).

I. — Les origines de la formation de l'empire

On rapporte que vers le xe siècle, une fille du Roi de Gambaga (Gold-Coast), la nommée Nyennega (c'est-à-dire : la Mince) ayant passé l'âge de puberté

1. Le Tingsoba de Goupana (cercle de Ouagadougou), nous a affirmé cependant qu'au moment de l'arrivée des Ninissi (Nioniossé) dans le pays, il y avait d'autres individus sur lesquels il ne peut donner aucune précision. Ces premiers habitants étaient cependant sûrement, déclare-t-il, des forgerons parce qu'on retrouve dans les ruines de leurs anciennes habitations des morceaux de fer.

l: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

sans que son père s'occupât de la donner en mariage, — car, dit-on, c'était une amazone de qualité dont ce dernier ne voulait pas se séparer, résolut de donner une leçon à son père; elle fit devant le palais un champ de gombo qu'elle ne récolta pas. Le Roi de Gambaga lui en ayant demandé la cause elle répondit : « Comment, tu trouves que le gombo vieillit ? Que dira-t-on d'une grande fille sans mari ? — Son père ne se fâcha pas mais continua à ne pas s'occuper de son mariage. — NYENNEGA eut alors des relations intimes avec un tiers dont il ne nous a pas été donné de connaître le nom et devint enceinte. — Le Roi son père, mis au courant du fait, trouva là un moyen de se venger d'elle; il promit de la mettre à mort. — Mais la fille, prévenue par quelques courtisans des intentions de son père, s'empara d'un cheval et s'enfuit du domicile paternel, accompagnée d'une suite nombreuse.

La course à cheval provoqua l'avortement en cours de route. Elle continua son chemin toujours accompagnée de ses fidèles et atteignit la région actuelle de Yanga, alors habitée par une population peu dense de Boussancé. — NYENNEGA s'arrêta dans la brousse, devant une case qu'elle croyait solitaire et abandonnée et qui était, en réalité, une des demeures d'un chasseur d'éléphants, le nommé RYALLÉ ou RYARÊ.

Quand ce dernier revint de la chasse, il réserva un accueil chaleureux à ce « puissant étranger »; déjà, il se comptait au nombre de ses courtisans. C'est que NYENNEGA était habillée en homme, donnait des ordres comme un Roi le ferait à ses sujets et était très respectée ; il était dès lors difficile de deviner son sexe. — Un jour cependant, elle fit introduire auprès d'elle RYALLÉ et lui confia en secret qu'elle était la fille du Roi de Gambaga. Elle se donna à RYALLÉ et leur mariage fut célébré solennellement.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

De cette union naquit un fils. Comme RYALLÉ voulait lui donner un nom, NYENNEGA s'y opposa et nomma l'enfant « OUEDRAOGO » (littéralement : étalon) en souvenir du cheval avec lequel elle s'était enfuie du domicile paternel. C'est à lui qu'elle devait d'avoir trouvé un mari à son goût.

Lorsque OUEDRAOGO eut atteint quinze ans, sa mere l'envoya rendre visite à son grand-père à Gambaga. On rapporte que celui-ci combla de richesses son petit-fils (il lui donna entre autres biens 4 chevaux et une cinquantaine de bœufs). Le pays Dagomba étant à cette époque surpeuplé, lorsque OUEDRAOGO repartit de Gambaga plusieurs Dagombas s'attachèrent à sa fortune. Il fonda avec cette bande, sur un emplacement abandonné à son approche par les « Boussancé », un village qu'il nomma « Tankourou » (actuellement Tenkodogo : litt. vieux pays). Depuis, sa puissance ne fit que s'accroître par l'arrivée continuelle de Dagombas qui venaient par milliers se grouper sous son autorité. D'un autre côté les populations voisines très peu denses et surtout très divisées durent se soumettre à OUEDRAOGO et reconnaître son autorité.

Entre temps, OUEDRAOGO s'étant marié avec la nommée « POUIRKETA » (litt. il reste encore quelque chose à partager), eut de nombreux enfants. Lorsque ceux-ci furent grands, il les installa comme chefs dans les régions voisines pour imposer ainsi par la force des armes son autorité à ceux qui ne voulaient pas se soumettre. On rapporte que l'aîné, DIABA LOMPO, fut envoyé pour prendre le commandement du pays de Fada N'Gourma; un autre, RAOUA (litt. Homme) aurait été envoyé dans la région de Ouahigouya où il fonda le vaste royaume de Zondema — aujourd'hui écroulé et remplacé par celui du Yatenga actuel — et enfin un troisième, ZOUNGRANA, resta auprès de son père et devint plus tard son successeur.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Le tingsoba (litt. tenga : terre, soba : maître) de Guilingou, de la famille des Ninissi autochtones, étant parti à Salaga (Gold-Coast) rapporta à ses collègues qu'il avait vu dans la région de Tenkodogo ce qu'on est convenu d'appeler le « Panga » (litt. la force, la puissance) et que s'ils obtenaient que le Naba leur envoie un de ses enfants ils se débarrasseraient sans peine de leurs ennemis les Gourounsi et les Kibissi (Habès).

C'est pourquoi, ZIRI, le chef d'une agglomération composée de 7 villages formant à peu près le canton de Oubrytenga actuel, envoya offrir en mariage à OUEDRAOGO une fille de sa race. OUEDRAOGO accepta et donna la fille « POUGTOENGA » (ainsi surnommée parce qu'elle avait de la barbe) à ZOUNGRANA qui en eut un fils nommé OUBRY.

Quelques années plus tard, un envoyé des Ninissi demandait à OUEDRAOGO de prendre leur pays sous sa protection et d'en confier le commandement à un de ses fils. OUEDRAOGO se rendit lui-même chez les Ninissi pour prendre possession du pays, mais il succomba, au cours de cette reconnaissance, au village de Sagabtenga, après une courte maladie.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

ZOUNGRANA lui succéda mais demeura à Tenkodogo.

Les Ninissi firent de nouvelles démarches auprès de ZOUNGRANA. Celui-ci réunit tous ses enfants. Les envoyés Ninissi choisirent OUBRY, peut-être parce qu'ils reconnurent en lui un de leurs descendants. OUBRY était en effet, nous l'avons déjà dit, l'enfant de la fille de race « Niniga » donnée en mariage par OUEDRAOGO à ZOUNGRANA. Mais l'enfant était petit, il fallait encore attendre quelques années avant de l'envoyer chercher. La tradition rapporte que, pour mieux le reconnaître, les Ninissi employèrent un sortilège pour le rendre boiteux, ceci dans le but d'éviter que ZOUNGRANA ne leur présentât plus tard un autre enfant.

Enfin, lorsqu'il eut atteint un âge raisonnable et sur les instances des Ninissi, ZOUNGRANA envoya OUBRY prendre possession du pays de sa mère. Le village où il s'arrêta et qui d'ailleurs porta son nom, est situé à 35 kilomètres environ de Ouagadougou.

OUBRY entreprit la conquête du pays qu'il pacifia. Il étendit son commandement au delà de la région de Boussouma, et plongea plus au Nord vers Yako, puis il commença l'organisation politique et administrative de son royaume.

Il prit le nom de Mogho-Naba[1] (litt. Mogho : pays des Mossi; Naba : chef) et par extension, maître du

1. Dans le texte nous avons employé fréquemment le mot Mogho-Naba : prononcer Morho-Naba.
De même Sogoné devra être prononcé sorhoné.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Monde. Il est, dit-on, le fondateur de la dynastie Mossi de Ouagadougou.

A cette époque, la région était occupée par des Ninissi, des Kibissi et des Gourounsi qui vivaient les uns à côté des autres dans un perpétuel état de guerre. Les groupements dont le chef se nommait « Waregoninga » voulaient asservir les autres et leur imposer son autorité. Aussi bien, lorsque OUBRY prit possession du pays, son premier soin fut de chasser tous les partisans de Waregoninga qui se réfugièrent loin, très loin dans les montagnes. (On croit savoir qu'il s'agit de la falaise de Bandiagara.) Les Habès qui habitent en effet cette falaise sont appelés par les Mossi des « Kibissi »).

OUBRY mourut au cours d'une tournée à Koudougou dans le Kippirsi. Mais à cette époque les bases de l'organisation politique étant jetées, ses successeurs n'eurent qu'à continuer son œuvre. Chacun d'eux résida d'ailleurs dans la région où il apparaissait que sa présence fût nécessaire. C'est à partir de NABA ZANA, 15e successeur de OUBRY, que Ouagadougou devint la capitale des Empereurs Mossi.

Sous le règne de Koumdimié (litt. Je pleure tout seul), 5e successeur de OUBRY, nous assistons à la formation d'un certain nombre de petits états soi-disant indépendants. Tels sont : Boussouma, Yako, Konquizitenga, Risiam et Lâ. En réalité, ces états étaient seulement confiés à des fils ou frères de Naba Koumdimié. Mais Boussouma Naba, profitant de la mort de l'Empereur et sur les conseils de sa mère, s'est peu à peu affranchi des liens de vassalité qui l'unissaient au successeur de OUBRY, et prit le titre de « Dima » c'est-à-dire de Roi.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Par ailleurs, à la suite de l'autorisation, qui a été donnée au Boussouma Naba par l'Empereur, de nommer certains chefs de canton (Kombemba) en raison de l'éloignement de Ouagadougou, ce roitelet s'annexa un certain nombre de ces cantons et finit par s'en croire le maître absolu. Ses frères de Riziam, Konquizitenga, Yako et Lâ, l'imitèrent et se crurent eux aussi indépendants. Ainsi se constituèrent ces états dissidents.

C'est également sous le règne de Naba Koumdimié — déclare-t-on — que se forma l'état absolument indépendant de Yatenga (Ouahigouya) créé par YADIGA.

Il y a lieu cependant de remarquer que si, en fait, les états dissidents de Boussouma, Konquizitenga, Riziam, Yako proclamèrent leur indépendance, le Mogho-Naba de Ouagadougou, successeur légitime de OUBRY, et, par conséquent, le « Dima des Dima » (Roi des Rois), n'a jamais cessé de se considérer comme le maître incontesté de l'Empire Mossi puisque les Nabas susvisés ont toujours été placés sous la suzeraineté du Roi des Mossi. Du reste, si jusqu'à présent ces Nabas sont nommés par leur propre collège électoral, sans que le Mogho-Naba intervienne, ils sont tenus d'aviser l'Empereur de leur avènement et de lui offrir à cette occasion des présents. C'est au Mogho-Naba qu'il appartient de leur envoyer la « chechia rouge » et les chaussures (insignes de la chefferie) — ce qui, à franchement parler, revient à dire que l'Empereur ratifie leur nomination.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Le Chef d'État de Tenkodogo, qui a également droit au titre de Mogho-Naba parce que successeur de Zoungrana et, pour employer le terme indigène, « père du Mogho-Naba de Ouagadougou » a été, jusqu'à présent, considéré à tort par l'autorité française comme un vassal du Mogho-Naba. En réalité, il est Roi au même titre que le sont les Nabas de Ouahigouya et de Fada N'Gourma. En raison de l'origine commune le Tenkodogo-Naba se considère comme frère et allié du Mogho-Naba de Ouagadougou et comme tel peut demander à ce dernier, si la nécessité s'en fait sentir, le concours de ses armes. C'est ainsi d'ailleurs que le Naba de Fada N'Gourma, descendant de Ouedraogo, envoya demander à OUOBGO (BOUKARY KOUTOU), peu avant la pénétration française, des guerriers pour l'aider à combattre un village rebelle contre lequel il luttait vainement depuis des années.

Pour ne pas gêner le lecteur par une énumération rebutante nous donnons, en appendice, la liste des Mogho-Naba depuis l'origine à nos jours, c'est-à-dire depuis Naba OUEDRAOGO. On pourra consulter ce tableau avec intérêt. Il donne, en effet, pour chaque Empereur, la liste de ses descendants.

Il nous a semblé logique, contrairement à l'usage établi par ceux qui ont entrepris des études sur le Mossi, de dresser cette liste à partir de Naba OUEDRAOGO, berceau du royaume Mossi; un certain nombre de descendants de ce Roi sont encore chefs de canton dans différents cercles de la Colonie. D'après les renseignements que nous avons recueillis c'est, paraît-il, le seul roi dont la lignée n'ait pas été altérée jusqu'ici, c'est-à-dire que les chefs de canton, ses petits-fils, se sont toujours succédé de père en fils, aucun des candidats n'ayant été évincé au profit d'un descendant d'un autre Mogho-Naba.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

II. — Formation de la race Mossi

On peut se demander pourquoi, si les Mossi sont des « Dagombas », on ne les appelle pas de ce nom ?

Nous nous sommes livrés pour cela à une enquête; nous avons consulté les vieux et les notabilités de Ouagadougou dont le Baloum naba, Ministre de l'Empereur. Nous avons recherché si le terme « Mossé » était le nom donné par les envahisseurs aux autochtones, ou si, au contraire, ce terme avait été employé par ces derniers pour désigner les premiers.

Voici l'explication qui nous paraît la plus plausible.

La race « Moaga » est formée, on le sait, de l'amalgame des « Dagomba » (conquérants) avec les « Ninissi », « Kibissi » et « Gourounsi » (autochtones du pays avant l'arrivée des envahisseurs). Le « Moaga », au pluriel, « Mossé » — serait, croyons-nous, l'individu issu de ce métissage et ce terme plutôt péjoratif signifiant produit « impur », est de nos jours encore employé par les « Nabas » et « Nakomsès » pour désigner tout individu qui n'appartient pas à la noblesse.

Le terme « Mossé » des « Dagombas » serait alors synonyme de « métis », le père et la mère étant de deux races différentes il ne faut pas oublier, en effet, que les premiers autochtones n'ont pas tous été chassés du territoire. Chaque fois que les successeurs de

l: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

OUEDRAOGO soumettaient les groupements rebelles, ils ne massacraient que ceux qui fomentaient les révoltes et ne refoulaient vers d'autres régions que ceux qui ne voulaient pas se soumettre ; ils se gardaient bien de changer quoi que ce soit aux institutions des « Tengsoba » (maîtres de la terre). On en peut d'ailleurs juger par le nombre considérable des « Nioniossés » qui vivent encore dans le pays Mossi actuel.

« Moaga » signifie aussi « homme non circoncis ». Or, le « Nionioga » ignorait la circoncision. D'autre part, ce serait faire une grave injure à un Naba, à un descendant quelconque de la noblesse que de l' « appeler « Moaga ». Les appellations qui lui conviennent sont : « Bourkina (noble), homme libre, mot qui a, à peu près, le même signification que « Horon » (bambara), Nabiga, Nakombga, Naba.

En définitive, on peut donc dire que les termes « Moaga » et « Mossé », sont des mots « Dagomba » pour désigner les « Ninissi » sauvages, incirconcis et par extension les enfants métis issus de l'union des « Dagombas » avec les filles des conquis.

La deuxième explication est la suivante : on croit que les mots « Moaga » et « Mossé » ont été employés par les autochtones pour désigner les Dagomba au moment de leur arrivée dans le pays, tout comme les Mossi appellent les Blancs des « Nansarba » en distinguant les Français : « Francé » des « Guemba » (Allemands) des « Anguilissi » (Anglais).

Il est aujourd'hui malaisé, pour ne pas dire impossible, de faire une sérieuse discrimination entre les éléments de la langue des conquérants et ceux de celle des conquis. Le peuple « Niniga » tout en ayant conservé intactes ses institutions au sein de l'actuel territoire Mossi, a cependant adopté le parler et certaines mœurs des envahisseurs.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

***

C'est dans le but de faire connaître cette race « Mossi » issue de divers éléments, que nous avons entrepris ce travail.

Nous avons étudié tour à tour l'organisation politique et administrative de la Cour du Mogho-Naba et de ses vassaux avant et après la pénétration française, les coutumes locales et expliqué les « mille petits riens » de la vie indigène qui tous ont une signification, se rattachent le plus souvent à une vieille croyance ou à des superstitions.

Etant originaire du pays, nous avons eu recours à l'information directe et à nos observations personnelles et ne nous sommes inspiré d'aucun auteur. Nous avons repris, en les complétant, nos deux précédentes études « Le Mogho Naba et sa Cour » (Bulletin du Comité d'Études historiques et scientifiques de l'A. O. F. 1928) ; les Nioniossés de Goupana (n° 4, 1929. Revue Outre-Mer, et n° 1, 1930 de la même Revue). Nous avons cependant consulté la monographie du cercle de Ouagadougou (1908) pour fixer certaines dates chaque fois que la mémoire de nos informateurs faisait défaut ; de même nous avons emprunté une citation et puisé quelques renseignements dans l'intéressant travail de M. André de

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

BEAUMINY « Une Féodalité » (Bulletin de l'Afrique Française, 1924).

Nous souhaitons que ce modeste travail destiné, avant tout, à renseigner le plus exactement possible l'Administration locale sur la race Mossi, une des plus importantes de l'A. O. F., soit accueilli favorablement par tous ceux qu'intéresse l'étude des races indigènes des possessions coloniales françaises.

A. D. D.

[p. 14 is blank]

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

CHAPITRE PREMIER

Situation avant la pénétration française. Les guerres intestines ou le commencement de la décadence de l'Empire Mossi.

GUERRES DES MOGHO-NABA SANUM ET WOBGO CONTRE LALLÉ (12 ANS) OU CAUSES DE L'INIMITIÉ QUI EXISTE ENTRE LES MOGHO-NABA ET LES CHEFS DE LALLÉ.

Naba « Wobgo » (éléphant), fut nommé chef de canton de Lallé par Naba Sanum, Empereur des Mossi, malgré son jeune âge et le nombre considérable de ses concurrents. Aussi ne cessa-t-il, les années qui suivirent son avènement, d'exprimer, par tous les moyens en son pouvoir, sa reconnaissanse au Mogho-Naba.

Il envoyait toutes les semaines à Naba Sanum, entre autres présents, une cinquantaine de moutons et une dizaine de bœufs. De plus il distribua près de 200 femmes aux principaux notables de Ouagadougou.

Ces nombreux cadeaux attirèrent vite l'attention sur lui à un tel point que les autres chefs de canton, ses voisins, presque éclipsés, avaient conçu à son égard une haine farouche.

Un jour cependant, Naba WOBGO se brouilla avec le sogoné SAMBO — celui-là même qui apportait à Ouagadougou des cadeaux pour l'Empereur — et décida de le faire périr. Sans doute, ce sogoné aimé de son chef et du Mogho-Naba se croyait-il autorisé à violer certains interdits des sogonés tels que « coucher avec des femmes, piller la population dans les marchés où il se rendait ». On l'accusait aussi de détourner une partie des présents qu'il avait pour mission de distribuer à Ouagadougou.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Ainsi menacé de mort, SAMBO vint se confier à l'Empereur. Se voyant bien reçu, festoyé même, il en profita pour accumuler mensonges sur mensonges et parvint à mettre en désaccord son chef avec le Mogho-Naba à qui il déclara notamment : « Depuis longtemps « je sers d'intermédiaire entre Lallé-Naba et vous ; « je veux vous apprendre quelque chose d'impor- « tant : j'ai toujours eu peur mais aujourd'hui je vais « tout vous dévoiler : Lallé-Naba vous injurie jour- « nellement. Vous n'êtes chef, dit-il, que pour emma- « gasiner les cadeaux que l'on vous envoie ; il déclare « à qui veut l'entendre que grâce à lui vous avez pu « vous constituer de nombreux troupeaux de bœufs. « Bref, n'était votre titre d'Empereur, il n'aurait aucun « égard pour vous. D'ailleurs si vous êtes Mogho- « Naba par naissance, c'est-à-dire par succession, lui « l'est par sa façon d'agir et sa bravoure. Dieu l'a « désigné, déclare-t-il, pour vous détrôner. »

Mogho-Naba Sanum, au comble de la colère, dépêcha aussitôt un messager à Naba-Wobgo pour lui dire : « Sambo vient de me rapporter tes prétentions. Je n'avais jamais pensé que « le simple petit TANGA « (c'était le vrai nom de Lalla-Naba) que j'ai nommé « jeune malgré des concurrents cependant dignes « d'intérêt, oserait se dire mon égal. J'ai eu de l'es-

Communiqué par la Mission des Pères Blancs à Ouagadougou.

Type Mossi.

[facing p. 16]

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

« time pour toi et je t'ai préféré à tous tes collègues « de l'Ouest. En quoi es-tu mon égal ? Comment peux- « tu croire que j'aie besoin de tes maigres cadeaux pour « vivre ? Sache que ma fortune personnelle et les tri- « buts que je reçois de mes vassaux me suffisent lar- « gement ! »

Lallé-Naba écouta l'envoyé de l'Empereur puis il lui posa les questions suivantes : « Ai-je, oui ou non, d'autres sogonés que SAMBO ? Et ai-je le droit de le remplacer par un autre si je ne suis pas content de lui ? L'Empereur préférerait-il un sogoné à un kombéré ? Maintenant libre à lui de choisir ! S'il aime SAMBO, qu'il le garde, car désormais c'est d'autres sogonés qui nous serviront d'intermédiaires ! »

A quoi l'Empereur répondit « qu'il garde dorénavant ses bœufs et autres présents ! Je n'en ai plus besoin ! »

Lallé-Naba dépêcha auprès du Ouidi-Naba un émissaire pour le mettre au courant du différend existant entre lui et l'Empereur. En ce qui concerne SAMBO, cause de ce fâcheux malentendu, il ajouta « peut-on croire qu'un sogoné gardien des femmes d'un Naba couche avec des femmes en ville sans qu'il touche, un jour, à celles dont il a la garde ? »

. . . . . .

Cependant, dans sa colère, Naba Sanum avait déclaré devant témoins — et parmi eux WOBGO de Lallé comptait de nombreux amis — qu'il détrônerait celui-ci et le remplacerait bientôt par un autre candidat moins prétentieux.

Naturellement cela fut rapporté à Lallé-Naba. On sait combien les indigènes aiment l'exagération. On amplifia si bien que Naba Wobgo fâché, écœuré à son tour, décida de ne plus mettre les pieds à Ouagadougou et de ne venir saluer l'Empereur que lorsque celui-ci ordonnerait la mort de Sambo.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Ouidi-Naba, de qui dépendait le canton de Lallé, en présence de cette grave situation, conseilla à Naba Wobgo de ne pas venir à Ouagadougou où vraisemblablement il essuierait un affront ; mieux valait au contraire qu'il se rendît chez le « Oubri-Yaogo-Naba » (gardien du Tombeau de Naba Oubri) pour lui exposer son « affaire » afin que ce dernier vînt demander pardon au Roi, car, ajouta le Ministre du Mogho-Naba, il « vaut toujours mieux éviter des conflits quand on le peut ». Naba Wobgo de Lallé écouta les conseils du Ouidi-Naba. Il se rendit à Wavoughé (près de Zibako canton de l'actuel petit Lallé) et, aissant là une trentaine de cavaliers, des serviteurs et quelques femmes il partit accompagné d'un seul sogoné à « Oubri-Yaoghin » cependant qu'on rapportait à Naba Sanum la nouvelle que Lallé-Naba levait une forte armée pour assiéger Ouagadougou. Pensant qu'il s'agissait, en réalité, d'une déclaration de guerre, l'Empereur réunit quelques intimes et à l'insu de ses ministres donna l'ordre qu'on lui ramenât mort ou vivant Wobgo de Lallé.

La petite expédition n'eut que la peine d'arriver à Wavoughé pour ramener chevaux, femmes et suivants du Lallé-Naba qui, comme nous l'avons déjà dit, était absent. Seul un petit palefrenier réussit à s'échapper en se dissimulant dans les broussailles.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Il gagna Oubri-Yaoghin et mit son chef au courant de ce qui s'était passé : « Comment, lui dit-il, vous êtes là demandant pardon tandis que les gens de Ouagadougou nous ont surpris à Wavoughé, qu'ils ont tout pris y compris vos propres femmes ! »

Wobgo dit alors au Yaogho-Naba : « Puisqu'il en est ainsi je ne peux plus rester, je vais regagner Laï et attendre la suite des événements. Si le Mogho-Naba lâche mon monde je reviendrai. »

A son retour à Wavoughé, Lallé-Naba envoya près de Ouidi-Naba s'informer du sort réservé à sa suite. Les chevaux avaient déjà été distribués, les sogonés, palefreniers et femmes avaient été vendus à vil prix, en échange de colas, boubous achetés à des haoussas et Ouidi-Naba lui fit savoir qu'il n'avait été prévenu de rien et qu'il n'y pouvait rien ; telle avait été la volonté de l'Empereur.

Lallé-Naba Wobgo, en arrivant à Laï, convoqua tous les vieux du village, les mit au courant de ce qu'il appelait une catastrophe et leur dit : « si vous « acceptez un tel affront, une telle humiliation, vos « enfants, vos femmes seront vendus par le Mogho- « Naba et ses courtisans. Je n'ai rien fait à Naba « Sanum, je lui ai donné des biens innombrables : « (bœufs, chevaux, moutons, femmes, habits) et voilà « que le Mogho-Naba pousse l'ingratitude jusqu'à se « servir de mes propres femmes pour payer ses dettes ! « Ce qui me froisse le plus c'est qu'il a prêté foi aux « mensonges d'un chien de « sogoné » (SAMBO) et tous « ici vous savez ce que faisait ce serviteur perfide et « ce dont il aurait été capable si je ne l'avais chassé. »

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Et les vieillards de crier tous ensemble : « Kiffou, Kiffou ! » en levant la main sur la tête de leur Naba comme pour signer un pacte sacré. Et ils ajoutèrent : « Rapa, la pagba ninga Naba Sanum sin kossan la « tek'bala ton winna me ed'kon sak abada » (les hommes et les femmes que l'Empereur a fait prendre seront les derniers, nous le jurons sur la tête de nos aïeux).

Satisfait de la confiance que lui témoignaient ainsi ses administrés, Wobgo de Lallé fit capturer immédiatement une centaine de bœufs — appartenant aux peuples impuissants du Mossi —, les fit abattre et distribua la viande aux futurs guerriers.

A Kindi, Nanguela, Siguellé, où il se rendit ensuite, la population lui donna des marques de confiance ; là encore il fit tuer bon nombre de bœufs et de moutons, puis il continua sur Koudougou où il fit part aux Gourounsi, ses administrés, des intentions du Mogho-Naba. Féroces par nature, insouciants de la mort, ceux-ci furent plus catégoriques, dans leur déclaration de sauver l'honneur de leur chef : ils se donneront jusqu'aux os « Abapa kiki agué ba kimé ».

Alors Lallé-Naba appela son tambour du nom de « WELEBRE » et il se donna d'autres « zab-yuiya (surnoms) que ceux qu'il s'était choisis au moment de son avènement. Voici le plus important : « kiparinlourga taked kagang tib soak' da winda » (ceux qui sont chargés de mettre le piment au grenier ont hâte d'en finir à cause de la toux qui les tracassera, à fortiori ceux-là qui seront employés à battre ce piment).

Ce nouveau surnom était une menace grave contre l'Empereur qui répondit « Na také, na win » (on le mettra au grenier, ce piment, et on le battra sans aucune difficulté). Le Tampsoba ou Tansoba (ministre de la Guerre) fut tout aussitôt mandé.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

« Je veux, lui dit le Mogho-Naba, que tu réunisses « tout de suite une armée composée uniquement « d'hommes courageux, que tu te rendes à Lallé pour « me ramener « vivant » le nommé TANGA (montagne, « prénom de Naba Wobgo de Lallé), chef de ce canton.

Quelques milliers d'hommes avides de gloire furent levés. L'armée ainsi constituée se porta sur Lallé. Elle réussit à brûler Siguelé, la résidence de Naba Wobgo, qui s'enfuit à Koudougou. Il ne fut pas poursuivi dans ce dernier point car on était au début de l'hivernage et il fallait songer aux cultures. L'armée royale se replia, rapportant à Ouagadougou un butin considérable.

L'Empereur réserva un bon accueil à son ministre de la Guerre car il entrevoyait la soumission prochaine de son irréductible ennemi. « Allez, dit-il à ses guerriers, cultiver vos champs, mais dès que les récoltes seront rentrées, souvenez-vous que vous avez « Tanga » à capturer et qu'il me le faut coûte que coûte, dussiez-vous tous périr ! »

L'année ne s'écoula pas si paisible car les propos comminatoires tenus par Wobgo de Lallé parvenaient chaque jour aux oreilles de l'Empereur qui, lorsque l'armée se reforma, voulut se rendre lui-même à Lallé. Son entourage, qui connaissait l'adresse de ces « tireurs de flèches » qu'étaient les guerriers de Wobgo, l'en empêcha, promettant de faire seul bonne besogne.

. . . . . .

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Chassé de Laï, poursuivi à Siguelé, obligé d'abandonner Koudougou, son seul repaire jusqu'alors inviolé, Wobgo se réfugia chez les Gourounsi, ses courageux administrés. Les gens de Ouagadougou firent de nombreux esclaves, ravagèrent les villages traversés, brûlèrent tout sur leur passage et s'emparèrent d'un immense butin. Au comble de la joie ils reprirent le chemin de Ouagadougou, sans hâte, afin de se reposer des fatigues des dures journées de combat.

Mais contrairement à ce que l'on croyait, Wobgo ne s'était pas tenu pour vaincu. Il savait que l'armée royale ferait de petites étapes pour regagner Ouagadougou et qu'elle séjournerait fort probablement à Laï (33 kilomètres de Ouagadougou). En bon technicien, Wobgo sut réunir 1.000 guerriers de choix et 170 cavaliers montés sur de rapides coursiers; il les disposa lui-même sur la route de Ouagadougou dans les environs immédiats de Laï, de façon à surprendre l'ennemi et à lui faire subir la plus terrible des défaites.

Cet ingénieux stratagème lui assura un brillant succès.

Tout le monde — guerriers, esclaves, animaux — était au repos à Laï quand on vit sur la route de Ouagadougou une trentaine de cavaliers tous habillés en blanc. On crut tout d'abord qu'il s'agissait d'un chef peulh venant renforcer l'armée du Mogho-Naba ou simplement acheter des bœufs. Mais ce qui parut surprenant, sans toutefois éveiller encore des soupçons, c'était la présence parmi les peulhs d'un tambour « lounga. »

Communiqué par la Mission des Pères Blancs à Ouagadougou.

Tambourinier (bendré).

[facing p. 22]

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Ce qui causa une surprise générale c'est, quand arrivé au milieu de la foule, Wobgo de Lallé s'adressant à Wélébré, son griot, lui ordonna de sonner[1] ainsi : 1° Noag'niedg kon tounsin san pame pirin a samda me, a pam tenga a sanda me (la poule ne choisit pas d'endroit pour déposer sa fiente, elle fait ses besoins aussi bien par terre que sur la natte).

2° Ki parin lourgh'taked ka gang tib soakda winda[2].

Surpris, fascinés, troublés, les guerriers désarmés ne savaient que faire. « Comment, se disait-on de toutes parts, c'est donc Wobgo, c'est donc lui!... » La foule se ruait tumultueuse.

Embarrassés de leur butin et dépourvus de leurs chevaux qui étaient alors à l'abreuvoir, les gens du

---

1. Les batteries de tambours des griots mossi (Bendré, lounga) ne sont pas de sons conventionnels et fantaisistes. Soit avec la main dont les deux paumes frappent la peau du tambour lorsqu'il s'agit d'un bendré, soit à l'aide d'un bâtonnet lorsqu'il s'agit d'un lounga, nos griots parlent aux Nabas et chantent leurs louanges comme le ferait avec la bouche un griot soudanais ou wolof.

Avec leurs tambours, les griots peuvent demander des cadeaux, solliciter des faveurs, annoncer l'arrivée dans la cour du Naba d'un personnage important, remercier pour un cadeau reçu, nommer distinctement les chefs défunts. Il est facile à tout individu originaire du Mossi, surtout aux descendants des Nabas, de comprendre en peu de temps la signification des batteries de tambours. Avant la pénétration française les griots mossi enflammaient le courage des guerriers en chantant leurs louanges et lorsqu'un « noble » osait prendre la fuite devant l'ennemi les griots n'hésitaient pas à le dénigrer publiquement en sonnant par exemple ainsi : « Houille ! Houille ! f'ba yi wibg'n'dog'koutre kou ». Ce qui veut dire « Ton père a été un brave mais il a donné le jour à un couard, à un oiseau faible ». On pourrait multiplier les exemples à l'infini.

2. Voir signification page 20.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Mogho-Naba se trouvaient en triste posture. Ce fut un sauve-qui-peut général; les cavaliers s'emparaient de leurs chevaux à la hâte, les montaient sans selle ni mors; c'était une vraie débandade dont profita Naba Wobgo. Plus de la moitié des guerriers du Mogho-Naba périrent à coups de lance (kandé), de casse-têtes (goulgo et zandé), de couteau (zangoego).

On raconte que Tampsoba (ministre de la Guerre) lui-même s'en tira avec 300 flèches et le Kamsogho-Naba (chef eunuque) avec 150 environ. Cela n'a peut-être rien d'exagéré ainsi que nous le verrons dans un prochain chapitre; l'accoutrement du Tansoba chamarré de gris-gris le sauvegarde le plus souvent de l'atteinte des flèches.

Enfin ceux des guerriers qui purent revenir indemnes à Ouagadougou n'y rapportèrent aucun butin, d'aucuns ayant dû même abandonner leur propre monture.

Au contraire Wobgo de Lallé fit d'heureuses captures : c'est ainsi qu'il prit deux serviteurs de l'Empereur, les nommés NOUFOU et AMADOU. Et dans un esprit de représailles il envoya dire à Naba Sanum de garder pour toujours, s'il le désirait, le nommé Sambo, le trait d'union fâcheux et la cause de leurs brouilles, car lui Wobgo avait, pour le servir, deux jeunes sogonés du Mogho-Naba.

. . . . . .

. . . . . .

Une semaine s'était écoulée; Lallé Naba, qui n'avait pas de bien mauvaises intentions, se décida à libérer les sogonés et à les laisser regagner Ouagadougou.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Il donna à chacun d'eux un beau cheval, échangea leurs habits dépenaillés contre des neufs et leur distribua des « godés »[1] comme couvertures. Il les chargea en outre de nombreux cadeaux. Mais avant de les congédier il leur confia la mission suivante : « Vous direz à votre Roi — (ce n'était plus le sien), que je désire faire la paix avec lui. S'il s'agit de faire la guerre, je ne pense pas qu'il y ait un « moaga » avec des cicatrices capable de me tenir tête. »

Comme bien on le pense, ces paroles n'ont pas été sans remuer profondément Naba Sanum. L'Empereur fit appeler Ouidi-Naba son premier ministre et lui dit : « Tu enverras une commisssion à Lallé, dire à tous les Nabissi qui briguent la place de « Tanga » de venir à Ouagadougou. »

Rigue, oncle de Naba Wobgo, seul candidat ayant quelque peu d'influence sur une partie de la population, fut nommé chef de canton de Lallé. Il descendit chez Wedranga-Naba à Ouagadougou. Quand Wobgo apprit cette nouvelle il envoya dire à Mogho-Naba « Pagh' vinbré kon pous 'bagha » (on n'abandonne pas un avorton aux chiens).

Un an s'écoula ; Wobgo de Lallé ne venait pas à Ouagadougou, Rigué ne pouvait pas non plus gagner ses nouveaux états. L'armée du Mogho-Naba se constitua sous les ordres de Rigué qui promit, jura même avant son départ à Naba Sanum que Wobgo serait pris. Mais à peine arrivée à Kindi, l'armée royale fut repoussée avec une telle vigueur qu'elle

1. Pagne d'un haut prix au Mossi.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

ne put aller plus loin. L'infortuné Rigué et sa suite durent rentrer à Ouagadougou.

L'année qui suivit ne fut pas heureuse. Naba Sanum tomba malade. Il ne voulait pas engager de bataille avant d'être rétabli. Son état de santé ne faisait cependant qu'empirer. Sanum succomba le cœur ulcéré par un double mal : d'un côté l'irréductible ennemi Wobgo de Lallé, de l'autre la présence dans son territoire de son frère BOUKARY, qu'il avait lui-même chassé et qui cependant avait des prétentions au trône puisque Sanum, pour comble de malheur, n'avait eu avec ses 500 femmes qu'une seule fille, la nommée AMINATA, encore vivante à ce jour.

Nous verrons plus loin dans quelles conditions ROUKARY KOUTOU fut nommé Empereur des Mossi et prit nom « WOBGO. »

VELLÉITÉS DE RAPPROCHEMENT OU LA GUERRE ENTRE WOBGO DE LALLÉ ET WOBGO DE OUAGADOUGOU

Quand Wobgo monta sur le trône, il envoya le message suivant à son homonyme de Lallé : « Naba Sanum qui vient de succomber a été mon plus grand ennemi, il m'a chassé du Mossi et je dus séjourner dix-sept ans parmi les Gourounsi. L'Empereur n'avait rien à me reprocher sauf qu'il voyait en moi son successeur éventuel puisqu'il n'eut de son vivant aucun enfant mâle. Dans ces conditions, puisque nous fûmes tous deux ses grands ennemis, soyons des amis. Venez donc me voir et oublions le passé ! »

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Un nommé « Tenga » frère du Koumbi-Naba actuel se rendit à Lallé suivi d'une bonne escorte.

Wobgo de Lallé leur fit un accueil des plus chaleureux. Pendant les sept jours qu'ils passèrent à Laï, il fit abattre 7 bœufs pour leur servir des repas copieux.

Mais, fait remarquable, le jour même de l'arrivée des envoyés de l'Empereur et sitôt que la commission lui fut faite, Lallé-Naba dénomma un de ses chevaux « Payanga » (litt. je ne suis pas un enfant). Il dit à Tenga « mon cheval payanga » est actuellement malade, il s'est blessé l'autre jour ; quand il sera rétabli je vous suivrai volontiers à Ouagadougou ! »

On comprend aisément qu'une maladie aussi imaginaire trouve difficile médication. Aussi bien, le septième jour, Wobgo dit aux envoyés de l'Empereur : « Payanga » mon cheval préféré n'est pas guéri, néanmoins je vous accompagnerai tout de même au delà de Laï. Il fit seller un autre cheval. A mi-chemin et avant de quitter les envoyés du Mogho-Naba il dit à « Wélébré » son lounga (tambour) de sonner ainsi : « Pousgh'lui n'kila t a missim yde koudme » (litt. un tamarinier tombé mais dont les racines tiennent encore au sol produit des feuilles et des fruits ; ce n'est pas parce qu'il est couché qu'il perd son aigreur. »

Il demanda à Tenga et à sa suite s'ils avaient entendu ce que disait Wélébré et lui-même le leur répéta : « Pousgh lui n'kila t a missim yde koudme. »

Quand Tenga, l'envoyé de l'Empereur, revint rendre compte de sa mission il insista sur ce point particulier : « Lorsque nous sommes arrivés, Lallé-Naba

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Wobgo nous a demandé si son concurrent RIGUÉ vivait toujours et à notre réponse affirmative il répliqua : alors pourquoi m'appeler à Ouagadougou pour une réconciliation qui ne saurait durer ? Si réellement l'Empereur veut que notre amitié soit durable, qu'il supprime, au préalable, RIGUÉ, car un seul canton ne peut avoir deux chefs ! »

L'Empereur Wobgo ordonna aussitôt la mort de Rigué. Ce fut fait : Lallé-Naba promit alors de venir saluer le Mogho-Naba. Cependant deux jours plus tard il y renonça formellement et envoya quelqu'un dire à Boukary-Koutou : « Puisque vous n'avez pas hésité à tuer votre ami Rigué, que ne ferez-vous pas de moi qui suis l'ennemi de tout Ouagadougou ? » L'Empereur n'était-il lui-même le remplaçant de Naba Sanum, par conséquent un adversaire pour lui ?

La haine s'alluma dans le cœur du terrible LION [1], l'esprit de vengeance prit le dessus. Il envoya tout aussitôt un messager à son homonyme de Lallé lui dire : « Nous sommes deux « Wobdo » (pluriel de Wobgo), mais qu'il ne me voie pas du même œil que mon prédécesseur Sanum. Je lèverai une armée contre lui et le ferai venir ici à Ouagadougou où il sera tué et son corps abandonné aux vautours et aux chacals.

Tansoba, ministre de la Guerre, fut appelé. Il leva une forte armée qui mit en déroute celle de Wobgo de Lallé. Siguelé, la capitale du Naba, fut brûlée. Le chef dut se réfugier à Nanguela puis à Wili mais ces villages furent également incendiés. Il ne restait à

1. Mogho-Naba Wobgo, Boukary-Koutou.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Lallé-Naba qu'une dernière ressource, c'était de se rendre chez les Gourounsi. C'est, en effet, ce qu'il fit. Il ne fut pas poursuivi. C'était pendant l'hivernage, l'armée royale fut dissoute. Mais Mogho-Naba Wobgo maintint 200 cavaliers à Ramongo, et ils reçurent pour mission de piller les administrés de Wobgo de Lallé et de réduire un grand nombre d'entre eux à l'esclavage en attendant qu'après les récoltes une nouvelle armée vînt achever leur défaite.

Lallé-Naba revint à Siguelé dès la cessation des pluies. Il fit tirer des coups de fusil toute la nuit pour signaler sa présence non loin de Ouagadougou et jeter encore du trouble dans les esprits poltrons car il se savait très redouté.

L'Empereur envoya quelques jours plus tard une armée à Boussé (canton de Sao). Cette armée essaya mais en vain de chasser Wobgo de Lallé de sa capitale Siguelé. Au contraire l'armée royale fut mise en déroute. Le ministre de la Guerre (Tansoba) dut rentrer à Ouagadougou où Mogho-Naba lui exprima tout son mécontentement, l'accusant même d'intelligences avec l'adversaire et promit de se venger.

Wobgo de Ouagadougou envoya El-Hadj Tassere demander aux Songhaïs de venir au Mossi où ils auraient à combattre un terrible ennemi ; ils conserveraient tout ce dont ils s'empareraient : biens et esclaves.

Cette offre fut acceptée par les Songhaïs qui connaissaient déjà Naba Wobgo, encore Nabiga, lorsque, chassé par son frère Naba Sanum, il s'était refugié à Bassawarga en territoire Gourounsi. Mais les Songhaïs ne vinrent qu'un an plus tard lutter contre Koudougou. Ils établirent leur quartier général à Ramongo ; ils poussèrent les ravages au delà des territoires qui leur étaient assignés. C'est ainsi qu'ils brûlèrent une partie des cantons de Kokologho et d'Ipala. L'Empereur Wobgo les laissa faire disant qu'il n'y voyait aucun inconvénient puisque tous ces individus malintionnés et poltrons n'avaient pas voulu l'aider à vaincre Wobgo de Lallé. L'essentiel pour lui était que les Songhaïs ne dépassent pas Zagtouly (village situé à 12 kilomètres de Ouagadougou).

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

L'armée Songhaï elle-même finit par se disloquer car la discorde régnait entre maîtres et esclaves (ces derniers composés uniquement de Gourounsi).

Les combattants allaient se retirer quand on apprit l'arrivée prochaine des Français en pays Mossi.

Dans un prochain chapitre nous étudierons la fuite de Naba Wobgo, le départ des Songhaïs pour le Dagango (pays des Dagombas).

. . . . . .

. . . . . .

Wobgo de Lallé fut pris par les Français, fusillé à Ouagadougou et enterré dans un grand fossé actuellement comblé. C'est là que sont installés aujourd'hui les bureaux du cercle et de la police.

***

Conclusion. — L'insécurité du pays mossi pendant ces guerres intestines, d'abord entre l'Empereur et le Boussouma-Naba et peu après avec le Lallé-

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Naba Wobgo, ne laissa pas les Mossi indifférents. D'autre part, l'aide demandée aux Songhaïs était non seulement une imprudence, mais un véritable danger pour le pays tout entier, car on connaît l'esprit guerrier des Songhaïs. Il y a tout lieu de croire que sans l'arrivée des Français un grand nombre de chefs de canton, las de fournir des subsides et du renfort aux armées du Mogho-Naba, se seraient alliés à Lallé-Naba Wobgo contre Ouagadougou. La débâcle était à prévoir.

L'Empereur — qui se nommait SANUM ou WOBGO, — n'aurait pas eu à compter sur le secours de Boussouma, Ouagadougou étant déjà entré en conflit avec le « Dima » (Roi) de ce pays, non plus que de Boulsa dont le Naba avait été tué peu avant par Naba Sanum. — Or, les seuls vrais guerriers de l'Empereur étaient plutôt les tireurs de flèches des Nabas vassaux que les habitants de Ouagadougou dont la couardise est passée en proverbe.

Comment alors l'autorité du Mogho-Naba aurait-elle pu se rétablir ? A cette époque remonte le commencement de la décadence de l'Empire Mossi.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

CHAPITRE II

La pénétration française racontée par un vieillard de 70 ans notable du village de Koulweoghin.

Il y a quarante-cinq ans environ, un Français traversa, pour la première fois, le pays Mossi [1]. Il rendit visite à l'Empereur et vit de même BOUKARY-KOUTOU, le futur Naba Wobgo à Bassawarga. On le considéra comme un simple passager et il partit. Il a été hébergé ici par une vieille femme du nom de Ygré (pierre) aujourd'hui décédée.

Lorsque Naba Sanum mourut et que Naba Wobgo monta sur le trône, un second Français, venant du côté de Tombouctou, arriva à Ouagadougou avec des ânes chargés de cadeaux pour l'Empereur du Mossi [2]. Il déclara qu'il avait été envoyé par son chef pour rendre visite à l'Empereur et lui remettre des présents. Tout aussitôt, Wobgo fit venir ses ministres pour les consulter sur la décision qu'il devait prendre à l'égard de l'étranger. A l'unanimité les ministres répondirent qu'il fallait refuser les présents et chasser l'étranger, ajoutant « qu'ils commençaient à s'inquiéter du passage dans leur pays des hommes blancs ».

Un nommé ZOUGDBA, alors Samandé du Mogho-Naba, se rendit escorté de quelques suivants auprès du Français pour lui intimer l'ordre de quitter le pays

1. Visite de Binger en 1887-1888, probablement.
2. Visite du docteur Crozat en 1890, probablement.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Communiqué par la Mission des Pères Blancs à Ouagadougou.

Jeune fille Mossi.

[facing p. 32]

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

avec les présents que l'Empereur refusait et, tandis que l'explorateur était sous un « néré » avec sa petite suite, le Samandé attendait lui aussi sous un tamarinier que l'ordre reçu fût exécuté.

Le chargé de mission attendit jusqu'au soir mais il dut partir tout de même et sous la pluie : c'était pendant l'hivernage. Sa vie était entre les mains des envoyés de l'Empereur. D'ailleurs, il n'était pas venu avec l'intention de faire la guerre.

Il alluma des lampes pour se guider et alla passer la nuit à Ourgou (dans les champs de l'Imam).

Entre temps, le fils de Naba Wobgo fut nommé Djiba-Naba ; trois ans s'étaient écoulés. Un troisième Français se rendit directement à Djiba saluer le fils de l'Empereur. Il avait des présents pour ce dernier, mais comme les Français avaient été éconduits la première fois, il venait demander au Djiba-Naba d'être son guide et d'intervenir auprès de son père pour qu'il acceptât les présents qui lui étaient offerts au nom de la France.

Cette fois, détail important, l'Européen avait une escorte composée de 70 hommes armés.

Djiba-Naba les laissa dans son canton où ils furent bien traités — et se rendit seul auprès de Naba Wobgo s'acquitter de sa mission. L'Empereur ne voulait rien refuser à son fils car il l'affectionnait beaucoup, mais la situation était grave, il ne pouvait seul se décider. Aussi, pour la deuxième fois, il convoqua ses ministres. Ceux-ci furent implacables : ils démontrèrent les dangers qu'il y avait dans toutes ces « manœuvres » et ils décidèrent l'Empereur à refuser les présents et à donner l'ordre au Djiba-Naba de renvoyer l'étranger et ses suivants.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Le prince héritier dut rapporter cette réponse au représentant de la France qui ne se tint pas pour battu. Il remit, en effet, 20 pièces de un franc en argent (c'était une fortune alors) à l'Imam de Ouagadougou afin qu'il intervînt dans le même but auprès de l'Empereur.

Mais ce nouveau délégué ne fut pas plus heureux. Naba Wobgo et surtout ses ministres opposèrent un refus catégorique.

Un an s'écoula. Déjà à cette époque quelques dioulas Mossi commerçaient avec Tombouctou ; beaucoup s'y rendaient pour acheter du sel. Les militaires qui étaient installés dans cette région et qui espéraient s'établir un jour au Mossi firent venir un des dioulas les plus connus. C'était le nommé PASSOUM de Andem, qui n'allait pas à Tombouctou sans aviser l'Empereur et à qui le Ouidi-Naba confiait son sogoné du nom de RAKISWILGUIDA (litt. écoute toujours le bon conseiller).

PASSOUM se rendit donc auprès d'un militaire français qui convoqua tous ses suivants de quelque importance. Devant 40 militaires, 40 gardes (sic) et 4 Européens, et une dame, s'adressant à PASSOUM il lui tint ce langage : « Tu diras au Mogho-Naba que dans six mois au plus tard, je serai à Ouagadougou. Puisque je n'ai pu réussir par la douceur, j'emploierai les armes. Le jour de mon arrivée à Ouagadougou j'occuperai la maison de l'Empereur; c'est là où je logerai ma compagnie, et si le village ne fait pas sa soumission, je le brûlerai... »

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

PASSOUM resta pensif. Il était inquiet. Comment pouvait-il lui, simple « Yarga », rapporter de telles paroles au terrible Lion qu'était Naba Wobgo. Il exprima ses regrets au Français et on demanda au sogoné s'il voulait faire la commission. Comme celui-ci n'avait pas plus d'audace que Passoum, on dut adresser une lettre à l'Empereur, écrite en arabe, comme c'était la coutume. Cette lettre fut confiée à Passoum et à ses suivants.

Dans l'intervalle qui sépare les deux missions, les Anglais envoyèrent aussi un représentant au Mogho-Naba. Je ne possède aucune précision sur le moyen employé par l'Anglais pour obtenir la faveur de l'Empereur, toujours est-il que l'étranger remit à Naba Wobgo des drapeaux qui devaient, — mais ne le furent jamais, — être présentés aux Français en même temps que le Naba dirait à ces derniers : « Mon pays est sous le protectorat des Anglais. » On reviendra plus tard sur la question [1].

Donc au retour de la caravane la missive fut remise au Mogho-Naba qui la fit lire par des marabouts et interpréter en conseil.

Certains ministres conseillèrent la mise à mort de Passoum qu'on soupçonnait d'intelligences avec les blancs, le Ouidi-Naba demanda qu'on lui pardonnât

---

1. Un mulâtre anglais du nom de FERGUSSON avait réussi à faire accepter au Mogho-Naba Wobgo, BOUKARY KOUTOU, un imprimé qu'il lui avait présenté comme étant un bon gris-gris et qui constituait en réalité un traité d'alliance et d'amitié avec l'Angleterre.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

car il n'était qu'un simple envoyé du « Nansara » (blanc) et comme tel, innocent.

Nous étions vers le mois de la chaleur « Toulogho' wakato » (mars), personne ne s'en inquiéta. On crut qu'il s'agissait d'une simple menace qui ne serait pas suivie d'effet et l'on décida la mise à mort du premier blanc qui pénétrerait à Ouagadougou.

Au mois du Maïs (septembre[1]) un certain mardi l'expédition annoncée arriva.

Nous étions renseignés depuis longtemps sur son compte, parce que le lieutenant et sa suite passèrent par Ouahigouya[2]. Ils ne trouvèrent pas grande résistance en route. A Yako la colonne dispersa la petite armée qui s'était formée pour lui barrer la route ; à Niou le chef de canton fut tué et elle occupa sa maison. En arrivant au village de Dabaré (canton de Sao) Naba YIOGO alors chef de canton, venait de mourir, — c'est le grand-père de celui qui trace ces lignes, — SEDDO, un vénérable vieillard dont les petits-enfants avaient eux-mêmes blanchi — Dieu veille sur ses cendres ! — se rendait à Tiendpalogo pour les funérailles, quand tout à coup devant lui, il aperçut l'expédition. Il avait un mouton et un coq. On ne peut sans doute pas décrire tout ce qui s'était agité à ce moment dans sa pauvre tête de centenaire. Il ne se sauva pas ;

1. Le 1er septembre 1896 à 5 heures du soir, jour de grand marché à Ouagadougou.

2. La route la plus directe était celle de Yako, Niou, Boussé, Laï, Ouagadougou, mais à Laï résidait Wobgo de Lallé. L'expédition suivit un itinéraire irrégulier, renseignée qu'elle était sans doute par le guide.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

il attendit et dès que la colonne fut proche de lui, il se présenta à l'Européen et s'exprima ainsi : « J'ai appris « que vous veniez dans le pays et que probablement « vous passeriez dans ce village ; beaucoup de gens se « sont enfuis, mais j'ai préféré vous attendre » et (qui sait, peut-être de bon cœur), il lui offrit le mouton et le coq. Le lieutenant le remercia vivement, lui rendit ses bêtes et le pria seulement de lui servir de guide. Le vieillard retourna chez lui, ordonna à un de ses fils d'aller offrir sa part de coutume au Naba défunt et se mit ensuite à la tête de la colonne. Quand ils arrivèrent à Goupana le soir tombait. La tornade menaçait. Une pluie cinglante tombait drue. Force fut de passer là la nuit, Ouagadougou étant encore assez éloigné. C'est au vieillard que revint le devoir de prévenir la population de Goupana de l'arrivée des « blancs » et de faire chercher bois de chauffage, eau et surtout des seccos pour former une enceinte dans laquelle la colonne devait camper. Mais il faisait une nuit sans étoiles. Les nuages obscurcissaient le ciel. Seddo le guide, l'aimable vieillard, fut vainement attendu.

Il avait profité de l'obscurité pour filer droit sur Ouagadougou et annoncer à l'Empereur et à ses administrés l'arrivée de l'expédition pour le lendemain.

Le conseil de l'Empereur se réunit. D'aucuns dirent qu'il fallait attendre l'arrivée du lieutenant et lui montrer les drapeaux de l'Anglais. Or ils étaient en lambeaux ; plusieurs de ces drapeaux avaient été employés par Naba Wobgo à confectionner des costumes bariolés pour ses sogonés ; d'autres, les intimes du Roi, lui donnèrent des conseils de prudence : « Comment ! Vous attendrez les Français. Et si en leur montrant le drapeau ils répondaient par une fusillade, alors il sera trop tard pour sauver votre vie; vous serez pris, maltraité, humilié devant tous et sans doute tué; le mieux à notre avis, c'est de partir. » Ce conseil fut celui que suivit naturellement l'Empereur.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Arrivé à Napamboumbou, le lieutenant dépêcha 8 tirailleurs ayant pour guide BIRAM MOSSI (un esclave gourounsi engagé volontaire à Tombouctou) pour voir si le Mogho-Naba avait levé une armée pour la défense. Rien n'avait été fait. Aussi les envoyés arrivèrent-ils jusqu'au marché de Ouagadougou sans rencontrer d'obstacle. Mais la vue des chechias rouges et d'un drapeau autre que celui des Anglais provoqua un gros émoi. A cette époque le collecteur du marché de Ouagadougou se nommait WANDA : c'était un sourd. Pensant, sans doute, que tout le monde allait faire des préparatifs de guerre, il se rendit directement chez lui, fit seller son cheval, prit un fusil et suivit de près les envoyés du lieutenant ; il avait l'impression, le pauvre diable, d'être suivi par une forte armée; l'idée ne lui était pas venue de regarder derrière lui. Il fit feu. Personne ne fut atteint. Les tirailleurs continuèrent leur chemin. A Toudibweoghin (banlieue de Ouagadougou) WANDA descendit de son cheval, visa bien cette fois, fit feu et abattit le cheval d'un des tirailleurs; le cavalier lui-même fut indemne. La riposte ne tarda pas. On tira sur lui à bout portant, il s'affaissa pour ne plus se relever.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Une armée à la tête de laquelle se trouvait le Kamsogho-Naba Koabga — alla au-devant de la colonne ; la rencontre eut lieu entre l'Imamweoghin — Dapoya et Ouagadougou. C'est alors que profitant du désarroi général et aussi à la faveur des hautes tiges du mil, Naba Wobgo, l'Empereur des Mossi, quitta sa maison pour ne plus la revoir jamais.

Les guerriers, en nombre certes, n'avaient pour toutes armes que des flèches empoisonnées, des casse-têtes et de simples fusils à pierre. La colonne n'eut pas à soutenir de bataille. Quatre coups de fusil tirés en l'air suffirent à mettre en déroute l'armée royale terrifiée par la vue des chéchias rouges des tirailleurs.

Ce fut une véritable débandade, un sauve-qui-peut général dans toutes les directions; les guerriers ne cherchaient même plus à regagner leur maison.

La colonne campa dans la maison de l'Empereur devenue vacante ; les ministres eux-mêmes n'avaient pas pour la plupart suivi leur Roi ; chacun alla loin, bien loin, là où il croyait trouver un asile sûr.

Des Haoussas — seuls grands commerçants de l'époque — profitèrent du désordre général pour s'installer dans le quartier « Mohémé » (marabouts) aussi désert que les autres quartiers de la ville et commirent pendant la nuit de nombreux vols qu'ils payèrent fort cher. Le chef de la mission avait fait exercer une surveillance discrète et le lendemain matin, tous les Haoussas furent passés par les armes. Leurs têtes déposées dans des corbeilles furent exposées longtemps dans les rues de Ouagadougou.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Cinq jours après son évasion de la capitale, l'Empereur put réunir une forte armée.

C'est sur la route de Kamsoghin qu'arrivèrent les premiers guerriers. Le lieutenant avait disposé le peu de tirailleurs que comptait la colonne si ingénieusement qu'elle défit l'armée royale.

De Ponsomtenga où il s'était réfugié, Wobgo se rendit à Kounda. Dans la même nuit la colonne quitta Ouagadougou à la poursuite de l'Empereur. Les personnes chargées de guider l'expédition furent les nommés LASSÉ et HALYARÉ. Lorsque le lieutenant et sa suite arrivèrent à Kounda, Wobgo qui avait aussi sa police secrète, était déjà parti pour Bangaré. Là on lui assura qu'étant dans le « Oubritenga » (pays de Naba Oubry), il était à l'abri de toute attaque ennemie. Wobgo, trop avisé pour se laisser surprendre, après s'être un peu reposé, reprit la fuite.

Arrivée à Sagabotinga où elle fut bien reçue par l'Imam de ce village, la colonne abandonna toute idée de poursuivre Naba Wobgo, mais manifesta le désir d'aller dans le Gourounsi livrer bataille aux « Zambaramba » (Songhaïs). Mais l'Imam de Sagabotinga leur persuada qu'ils auraient affaire à des adversaires redoutables plus nombreux et mieux armés qu'eux.

Dans ces conditions la mission rentra le seizième jour à Ouagadougou. C'est alors seulement que les maisons furent incendiées.

La colonne repartit ensuite à la poursuite de Naba Wobgo mais en vain; elle continua sa route sur Mané où elle fut attaquée mais où elle n'eut pas de difficultés pour mettre les guerriers en fuite ; il y eut cependant de nombreuses victimes ; poussant sur Boussouma elle incendia la maison du Boussouma-Naba et celles des habitants de la ville et des environs. L'expédition n'ayant plus de munitions et de vivres repartit pour Tombouctou. Wobgo croyant que toute guerre était terminée avait ordonné la réfection de sa maison. Les gens de Ouagadougou revenaient par centaines réparer leurs cases brûlées. Trois mois s'étaient écoulés. Il ne restait à Naba Wobgo qu'à faire son entrée triomphale dans sa capitale ; il était déjà à Tiguedalgué — (c'est lorsqu'il revint à Kounda que le père de celui qui écrit ces lignes se rendit auprès de lui pour se faire nommer chef de canton de Sao à la place de Naba Yiogo dont nous avons connu la mort au début de cet exposé) — quand il apprit en route que les Français revenaient, mais cette fois accompagnés de toucouleurs du Macina et de nombreux partisans de la région de Ouahigouya (on sait que le Yatenga avait été occupé l'année précédente par le capitaine DESTENAVE (1895).

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Le jour où la colonne campa à Zitenga, Wobgo partit de Kounda pour Ganzourgou. Le lieutenant, chef de mission, apprit que l'Empereur était à Koupéla. Une petite expédition fut lancée à sa poursuite mais déjà le trop avisé Wobgo avait traversé rapidement le Boussanga et était venu se réfugier à Nobéré.

Las enfin de rechercher l'Empereur qu'il ne pouvait atteindre, le lieutenant se rendit à Kombissiri et ordonna de faire venir le nommé MASSI, frère de Naba Wobgo (mais aussi son plus grand ennemi).

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Malheureusement MASSI était gravement malade et presque mourant. Le lendemain du jour où il fut ramené chez lui, le lieutenant alla lui rendre visite. Il constata avec regret que MASSI était sur le point de mourir. Aussi fit-il dire par ses gens : « Dès qu'il sera mort, si c'est la nuit, allumez des torches et venez me trouver à Kounda. »

Dans la nuit, en effet, MASSI mourut et ses courtisans allèrent trouver le lieutenant comme il le leur avait indiqué.

Le lieutenant leur demanda si MASSI n'avait pas laissé d'enfants. On lui répondit qu'il avait des enfants mais que tous étaient en bas âge. Il leur déclara alors qu'en se rendant auprès de leur maître, il avait l'intention de le nommer Mogho-Naba pour que le pays se tranquillisât et que la paix revînt. Alors on lui apprit que MASSI avait un frère utérin qui habitait le village de Badnogo. Un autre candidat était aussi en présence. Le lieutenant avait entendu parler d'un certain TARBIGA, autre ennemi de Wobgo, mais celui-ci, lui avait-on déclaré, était dans le commandement du chef de canton de Manga.

La chance favoriserait le premier des Nabissi (fils du Naba) qui se présenterait. Les serviteurs de Massi furent envoyés à Badnogo avec mission d'inviter le futur Naba Siguiri (Hivernage) à répondre à l'appel du lieutenant, tandis que d'autres émissaires se rendaient auprès de Tarbiga.

Il ne fut pas facile d'emmener l'un et l'autre ; cela se conçoit d'autant plus facilement que chacun croyait à un traquenard du blanc. Aussi ne se décidèrent-ils que lorsqu'on leur eut expliqué que leur propre intérêt était en jeu et que plus ils agiraient vite, plus ils auraient de chances d'être nommés Empereur du Mossi.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

KOUKA-KOUTOU arriva le premier. Le chef de mission lui apprit que son frère Massi était mort. Il lui dit d'aller remplir les formalités prévues par la coutume et de revenir dans trois jours, qu'il avait l'intention de le désigner comme remplaçant de Naba Wobgo. Ce qui fut fait.

Mais, demanda alors le lieutenant, comment procède-t-on pour nommer l'Empereur ? KOUKA-KOUTOU lui répondit que c'était le Ouidi-Naba, premier ministre, qui seul avait qualité pour nommer le chef de l'État Mossi. Ouidi-Naba Koabga s'était enfui et s'était refugié à Bazoulé; on dut l'aller chercher et il arriva à Ouagadougou dans un état qui faisait peine à voir tant il croyait que sa fin était prochaine. Il fallut du temps et de la patience pour lui faire comprendre qu'il était convoqué dans un but pacifique.

La nomination de Naba Siguiri fut faite dans les formes réglementaires.

Quelques jours après le lieutenant français posa au Ouidi-Naba la question suivante : « Maintenant que l'Empereur est désigné que me reste-t-il à faire pour que le pays soit tranquille et pour que tout le monde se soumette ?

— Voici ce que tu as à faire, répondit Ouidi-Naba. Il y a douze ans que nous luttons en vain contre Lallé-Naba Wobgo. Eh bien ! si tu réussis à t'en emparer et à le mettre à mort tout le monde saura que rien ne peut te résister et on se soumettra. » Et tandis que

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Ouidi-Naba retournait à Bazoulé ramener à Ouagadougou tout ce qu'il y avait laissé, une petite expédition partait pour Lallé (Laï 33 km. de Ouagadougou).

On cerna la maison du terrible « Wobgo » qui, surpris, ne put résister longtemps. C'est sur un poulain sans selle qu'on le conduisit à Ouagadougou où il fut tué et son corps jeté dans un grand fossé qui fut comblé ensuite à l'endroit où sont installés aujourd'hui les bureaux du cercle et de la police.

Naba Siguiri installé à Goughin fit appeler les autres ministres, les fugitifs.

C'est le cinquième jour de la nomination de Siguiri qu'arriva Tarbiga, autre candidat dont nous avons parlé plus haut.

Tarbiga fut reçu comme il convenait par le lieutenant français.

. . . . . .

On dut nommer Tarbiga chef du grand canton de « Zitenga » où il mourut, d'ailleurs, le cinquante-neuvième jour. Son fils lui succéda.

A l'heure actuelle c'est un fils de Massi qui est chef de canton de Zitenga.

. . . . . .

Lorsque les Anglais apprirent que les Français avaient occupé le pays, ils envoyèrent un ambassadeur. Quand celui-ci arriva à Tenkodogo, Wobgo le rejoignit et le mit au courant de la situation, sans doute pour justifier comment il n'avait pas pu présenter le drapeau. L'Anglais confia l'Empereur à quelques gardes pour l'amener en Gold-Coast. Les résultats de la mission anglaise n'ayant pas été fructueux, Wobgo fut installé à Zangoe 'yiri » où il reçut une forte pension avec la liberté de réduire en esclavage les Gourounsi.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Il y vécut trois ans. Enfin, pour la deuxième fois les Anglais décidèrent de venir le réinstaller Empereur Mossi. De nombreux Anglais et des soldats indigènes l'accompagnaient.

Le capitaine alors chef de poste à Ouagadougou se rendit à la rencontre de la mission anglaise à Kombissiri. Là s'engagea une vive discussion. Le capitaine fut catégorique, il l'emporta sur les Anglais qui durent rebrousser chemin avec Wobgo déçu.

Cinq ans après, Wobgo mourut. On fit ses funérailles à Ouagadougou. Un an après lui, Naba Siguiri succomba; c'était en 1905. Son fils lui succéda la même année (le 5 mars 1905). C'est Naba Kom, l'Empereur actuel.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

CHAPITRE III

Organisation politique, administrative et judiciaire de l'Empire Mossi.

I. — Organisation politique et administrative L'Empire Mossi de Ouagadougou était gouverné avant l'occupation française par un Chef suprême, le Mogho-Naba, vénéré de tous ses sujets comme un « dieu » et dont le territoire, pour ses administrés, n'avait pas de limites. Il avait droit de vie et de mort sur tous ses sujets.

Si Mogho signifie pays des Mossi, il signifie par extension : Le monde ; le Mogho-Naba était pour ainsi dire considéré comme le maître du monde.

Il avait, dit-on, sous ses ordres 333 chefs ou Nabas parmi lesquels ses ministres, les trois sogon'kassemsé (grands serviteurs) et une quarantaine de petits chefs insignifiants appelés « Kougzindba » pour faire allusion à des tas de pierres désignant dans la cour de l'Empereur la place de chaque ministre ou petit Naba.

a) Autorité du Mogho-Naba sur ses vassaux. — Contrairement à ce qu'affirmait un fonctionnaire colonial, dans le but d'affranchir de la tutelle du Mogho-Naba, les chefs de cantons d'une des circonscriptions administratives de la colonie, le pouvoir de l'Empereur du Mossi n'a jamais été nominal. S'il l'est devenu c'est à la suite de l'immixtion de l'autorité administrative française dans la politique du pays, — immixtion qui a eu pour conséquence de donner à certains chefs un pouvoir trop étendu.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

[facing p. 46]

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Je ne veux pas dire par là qu'il n'y a pas eu parfois, avant la pénétration française, de véritables dissidences, de guerres ou de simples escarmouches [1], mais les chefs qui essayaient par ce moyen de se soustraire à l'autorité de l'Empereur étaient généralement punis de leur témérité.

b) Ministres et fonctionnaires de la cour de l'Empereur des Mossi. — Nous donnerons plus loin, dans un chapitre spécial, la liste des personnages composant la Cour de l'Empereur des Mossi.

Attributions des ministres

Les quatre ministres : Ouidi-Naba, Larallé-Naba, Gounga-Naba et Baloum-Naba, procédaient à la nomination des « Kombemba » (pluriel de Kombéré chefs vassaux) avec l'assentiment du Mogho-Naba. A l'heure actuelle les mêmes attributions leur sont dévolues, sauf ratification par l'autorité administrative. Ces ministres assistaient en outre l'Empereur dans le règlement de certaines affaires importantes sur lesquelles il jugeait utile de les consulter et transmettaient les ordres du Mogho-Naba à

1. Nous avons relaté dans ses moindres détails au chapitre Ier, la guerre des Mogho-Naba Sanum et Wobgo contre Lallé. Nous avons dit aussi que Sanum avait eu également affaire au Boussouma-Naba et qu'il était également entré en conflit avec Boulsa.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

ses vassaux. A l'heure actuelle le Mogho-Naba ne s'occupe plus du règlement des affaires, qui incombe à ses ministres et à l'autorité française. Cependant les grands dignitaires de la Cour lui soumettent toujours les affaires qui ont quelque importance; ils lui rendent compte de toutes les questions d'intérêt général ; ils le tiennent au courant des entretiens qu'ils peuvent avoir avec l'Administrateur du cercle, représentant du Gouvernement de la Colonie.

ORGANISATION DES COMMANDEMENTS TERRITORIAUX

Chaque ministre de l'Empereur avait sous son autorité — nous verrons plus loin dans quelles conditions — un groupe de cantons. A la tête de chaque canton était placé un Naba « Kombéré ». Au début et jusqu'au règne de Naba Sanum le commandement du Baloum-Naba groupait les « Dimbissi » (chefs de canton descendants des récents Mogho-Naba), les autres cantons, exception faite pour les cantons les plus peuplés et par conséquent les plus riches, Zittenga, Manga, etc... étaient répartis entre les autres ministres. Ces cantons importants étaient confiés au Kamsaogo-Naba, chef eunuque. Cela s'expliquait par le souci qu'avait l'Empereur de récupérer la fortune laissée par ce ministre à sa mort, ce dernier, simple gardien des femmes du Roi, n'ayant pas d'héritier légitime. L'eunuque qui était appelé à le remplacer devait, à son tour, se constituer une fortune personnelle. Seuls les chevaux, les femmes que le chef défunt avait

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Communiqué par la Mission des Pères Blancs à Ouagadougou.

Ministres du Mogho-Naba et leurs serviteurs.

(De gauche à droite les premier, troisième et quatrième ministres.)

[facing p. 48]

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

donnés de son vivant aux gens de son quartier étaient laissés à ces derniers.

Pouvoirs des ministres sur les chefs vassaux du Mogho-Naba

On a grand tort de croire qu'avant l'occupation française, les ministres de l'Empereur avaient une grande autorité sur les chefs de canton. Le rôle véritable des ministres, nous l'avons déjà dit, était de servir d'intermédiaires entre l'Empereur et les Chefs de canton, mais ils ne pouvaient, à aucun titre et sous aucun prétexte, s'immiscer dans les affaires du canton, le « Kombéré » étant le seul seigneur dans le territoire dont le commandement lui a été donné en apanage par le Mogho-Naba.

C'est ainsi qu'on a pu constater que tel chef de canton, mécontent du ministre de qui il dépendait, pouvait de son propre gré descendre désormais dans le quartier d'un autre ministre sans d'ailleurs que le Mogho-Naba y vît d'inconvénient. L'expression mossie « Gansobend'ka sambiri n'tont vigri yé » (litt. l'hospitalité n'est pas une parenté, on peut s'en défaire), démontre surabondamment l'exactitude de ce qui précède. Si à cela on ajoute qu'avant la pénétration française, les Nabas ne venaient à Ouagadougou qu'une fois par an rendre visite à l'Empereur et lui apporter les tributs annuels, on comprendra sans peine l'insignifiante autorité que pouvait exercer sur eux un ministre.

Sans doute, cela ne revient pas à dire qu'on pouvait

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

se passer de ces intermédiaires, mais on pouvait librement les choisir. Au reste, une des raisons de l'obéissance qu'on leur devait reposait uniquement sur ce fait : c'est sur leur proposition que l'Empereur nommait les chefs de canton, mais le Mogho-Naba était trop haut placé pour connaître les enfants des Nabas défunts; aussi pour s'assurer de son vivant la certitude qu'il serait remplacé par son fils aîné, le « Kombéré » affectait un certain respect vis-à-vis des ministres de l'Empereur, et il offrait des présents aux principales notabilités de Ouagadougou.

Situation actuelle. — La réorganisation politique et administrative actuelle qui date déjà de dix-huit ans environ (1912), je crois, ne semble avoir tenu aucun compte de la hiérarchie existant entre les ministres pour la répartition des commandements territoriaux. Ainsi, tel ministre doit traverser de nombreux villages dépendant d'un autre ministre pour se rendre dans une région ressortissant de son commandement. Il semble d'ailleurs, si l'on examine de près la question, que l'unique préoccupation de l'Administration ait été, à cette époque, de récompenser certains ministres jeunes et capables au détriment de ceux qui étaient trop âgés.

Mais c'est en réalité à 1908 qu'il faut remonter pour rechercher les causes d'une telle désorganisation : l'envoi en mission du regretté Larrhallé-Naba PAWITRAOGO, chef de province, à Koudougou, laissait un commandement vacant à répartir ; plus tard le renvoi par l'Empereur du Kamsogho-Naba et son remplacement par un « incapable », détermina l'Administration locale à confier à un autre ministre plus apte la province de ce dernier.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Il serait désirable qu'une nouvelle réorganisation soit effectuée et qu'il soit procédé : 1° à la suppression progressive de certains cantons insignifiants pour en former de grands; 2° à la constitution de cantons formés des villages soi-disant indépendants : 3° à l'octroi, aux chefs de province d'identiques avantages matériels. Question qui ne peut être réglée que par une juste répartition des cantons. L'Administration française a accordé aux chefs de province les mêmes appointements — elle a par conséquent établi une égalité qui n'existait pas. Déjà trois de ces auxiliaires sont lettrés; ils jouissent d'une même considération, ils ont les mêmes besoins, rendent tous de bons services; il faut leur accorder les mêmes avantages si on ne veut pas créer de jalousies et faire des mécontents.

Enfin, pour en revenir aux « Kombemba » disons que les vassaux du Mogho-Naba à Koudougou et à Kaya, jouissent d'une certaine indépendance, puisqu'ils peuvent communiquer directement avec les commandants de cercle sans autre intermédiaire que l'interprète — auxiliaire encore indispensable tant que les chefs n'auront pas passé par les écoles — tandis que l'autorité des chefs vassaux restés rattachés à la circonscription administrative de Ouagadougou est sinon totalement effacée, du moins considérablement diminuée.

Leur action est, en effet, contrariée par celle des ministres, chefs de province, de qui, peut-on dire, ils reçoivent parfois des ordres déformés ou amplifiés par des intermédiaires en mal de gloire.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Une telle situation, il faut bien l'avouer, peut avoir — elle a eu —, une fâcheuse répercussion sur l'évolution de ces Nabas. Il y a là un malaise auquel il convient de remédier sans retard.

L'Administration locale a commis la lourde faute de n'avoir pas cherché à tenir compte, dès le début, de l'importance des chefs de canton dont la plupart (voir la liste en appendice), sont les descendants des Mogho-Nabas. Par contre, la quasi-totalité des ministres et autres fonctionnaires de la Cour, malgré le respect qu'on leur doit et la considération dont ils jouissent, sont de basse extraction (voir au chapitre IV, les origines du Ouidi-Naba et du Larrhallé-Naba par exemple).

***

LES ROITELETS (petits Dima). a) ce qu'ils étaient; b) ce qu'ils sont aujourd'hui.

Ainsi qu'il a été dit au chapitre introductif, un certain nombre de chefs se sont peu à peu affranchis de la tutelle du Mogho-Naba et ont pris le titre de Dima, c'est-à-dire de Roi. Ce sont :

B[illegible]SOUMA-NABA, cercle de Kaya; CONQUIZITENGA-NABA, cercle de Koudougou; YAKO-NABA, cercle de Koudougou (subdivision de Yako); RIZIAM-NABA, cercle de Ouahigouya.

Ces chefs étaient, en quelque sorte, des « Gouverneurs » indépendants, du fait que la suzeraineté de l'Empereur ne pesait pas lourdement sur eux puis-qu'ils jouissaient d'une indépendance presque absolue. Certains d'entre eux, le Boussouma-Naba, le Yako-Naba, par exemple, ont sous leur autorité des chefs de canton qu'ils investissent comme ceux du Mogho-Naba. Ces Dima possèdent des Cours semblables, à quelques exceptions près, à celle de l'Empereur des Mossi.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Ils étaient nommés directement par leurs propres ministres sans que le Mogho-Naba y prît aucune part effective.

Aujourd'hui. — L'Administration locale en a fait de simples chefs de province et parfois même, — comme c'est le cas du Konquizitenga Naba —, de simples chefs de canton.

Respect dû au Mogho-Naba. — Chaque année les petits « Dima » envoyaient au Mogho-Naba de nombreux cadeaux (chevaux, bœufs, cauris).

***

Une erreur. — TENKODOGO-NABA [1], contrairement

1. Il ne faut cependant pas croire que le commandement du Tenkodogo-Naba comprend tous les cantons de cette circonscription administrative.

Plusieurs cantons Boussancé dépendaient du Mogho-Naba avant l'occupation française. Sur 14 qui forment actuellement ce qu'on nomme la province « Boussanga », 11 cantons relevaient de l'autorité de l'Empereur des Mossi. Les chefs de ces cantons étaient nommés par le Mogho-Naba. Ils étaient tenus comme tous les chefs vassaux de venir rendre visite à l'Empereur et lui apportaient des tributs annuels.

Depuis que Tenkodogo a été transformé en subdivision d'abord à ce qui a été admis jusqu'ici, est un véritable Roi dans ses États et comme tel absolument indépendant du Mogho-Naba de Ouagadougou, au même titre que le sont le Chef de l'État de Yatenga (Ouahigouya) et le Chef de FADA N'GOURMA.

1: Delobsom .FA28 Mossi

Ainsi qu'il a été dit dans un précédent chapitre, TENKODOGO-NABA est le descendant de NABA-ZOUNGRANA, fils de OUEDRAOGO et par conséquent l'aîné du Mogho-Naba, descendant de NABA-OUBRI fondateur de la dynastie Mossie de Ouagadougou.

BOULSA-NABA. — Descendant direct du « Kourita »

---

puis en cercle autonome, les chefs boussancé dont il s'agit sont nommés directement par l'administration locale avec l'assentiment de la population, le Mogho-Naba n'étant plus consulté. Ce n'est qu'à la suite de difficultés soulevées à l'occasion de la nomination d'un chef de canton que le Mogho-Naba a dû intervenir et c'est de là qu'était née la nécessité de placer un parent de l'Empereur à la tête de ces cantons constitués en province. Le choix se porta sur le frère utérin de Naba Kom, le nommé MOUSTAPHA KONGO.

Ce dernier a été révoqué en 1930, après avoir exercé le commandement pendant trois ans seulement, certes pour fautes commises dans l'exercice de ses fonctions mais aussi parce que les Boussancés restés trop longtemps indépendants ne voulaient plus souffrir de maître.

Ainsi comme il a été dit au début de ce chapitre, l'administration locale s'est trop immiscée dans l'organisation de l'Empire Mossi ; on a complètement faussé la physionomie et diminué le prestige du Mogho-Naba ; ce sont autant de causes qui ont permis au fonctionnaire mal renseigné auquel nous avons fait allusion, de dire que l'autorité de l'Empereur du Mossi sur les chefs vassaux était nominale.

Liste des cantons Boussancé relevant de l'autorité du Mogho-Naba :

1° Canton de Niaogo ; 2° Niarba ; 3° Lenga ; 4° Gon Boussougou ; 5° Komtoéga ; 6° Beguedo ; 7° Ouanragou ; 8° Sanogo ; 9° Toalla ; 10° Zourga ; 11° Yakala.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

de NABA-OUBRI n'est pas un « Dima » mais un simple Kombéré. Il a sans doute un vassal, le chef de Koupéla dans le cercle de Tenkodogo, aujourd'hui considéré à son tour comme un chef de province, mais Boulsa-Naba est lui-même vassal du Mogho-Naba.

II. — ORGANISATION MILITAIRE

L'armée proprement dite avec ses cadres et ses hiérarchies n'existait pas au Mossi.

En cas de guerre, le Tansoba ou Tampsoba (ministre de la Guerre) prévenait les chefs de canton qui accouraient avec tous les hommes valides et le plus de cavaliers possible.

Les villages étaient chargés de nourrir les soldats.

III. — ORGANISATION JUDICIAIRE

La justice était rendue conformément aux coutumes locales transmises de génération en génération et aux usages locaux.

1° Par les chefs de village assistés de quelques vieillards : petites affaires, larcins, injures ;

2° Le Chef de canton assisté des dignitaires de sa Cour et le Ministre réglaient entre autres les questions de vol, d'adultère, de coups et blessures ;

3° Le Mogho-Naba connaissait de toutes les affaires d'ordre général, notamment les crimes : assassinats et meurtres. Il pouvait seul, en principe, prononcer la peine de mort pour les Nakomsé. Mais contrairement à ce qu'on croit généralement, le Kom-béré — chef de canton — lui aussi avait droit de vie et de mort sur ses sujets. Combien de personnes ont été mises à mort uniquement parce qu'elles étaient fortunées! Combien de chefs de village ont été tués par les chefs de cantons dans leur territoire sans que le Mogho-Naba soit intervenu! Seuls les Nakomsés n'étaient mis à mort que pour fautes graves, par exemple l'adultère avec une femme de la noblesse. Le coupable était conduit dans la brousse par les vieux Nakomsés qui lui remettaient une corde et il lui appartenait de se rendre justice par la strangulation.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

La justice était gratuite; aucune taxe n'était prévue, ni perçue; néanmoins, le plaignant faisait présent au Naba d'un coq blanc ou bengré (gris clair) qu'accompagnait toujours la traditionnelle sacoche de cauris (200 à 1.000 cauris).

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Communiqué par la Mission des Pères Blancs à Ouagadougou.

MOGHO-NABA.
Chef de tous les Mossi et un serviteur.

[facing p. 56]

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

CHAPITRE IV

La Cour du Mogho-Naba. — Tributs et redevances dues. — Obligations auxquelles les sujets Mossi étaient astreints vis-à-vis de leurs Nabas.

I. — Les honneurs du matin a l'Empereur des Mossi

Devant une antichambre appelée « zango », qui donne sur une très vaste cour, se tient chaque matin le Conseil de l'Empereur des Mossi.

Les Mossi ont longtemps considéré le soleil comme un « dieu ».

Wend'Pous Yan (Dieu se montre), indique le lever du soleil, mais, dans un sens figuré, puisqu'il s'agit de la sortie du Mogho-Naba. Ceci démontre la considération qu'a le peuple Mossi pour son chef, qu'il compare à l'astre du jour, par conséquent à un « dieu ».

Le Mogho-Naba sort, le matin, vêtu d'un grand boubou rouge, d'un « gourmousga » rouge (sorte de burnous replié que le chef jette sur les épaules) et coiffé d'un bonnet « Fez » surmonté d'un « wazourfou sebré » (littéralement : argent papier) autrement dit amulette d'argent). Le rouge représente la lumière qu'il fait lors de l'apparition du soleil et l'argent sur le bonnet l'éclat de l'astre lui-même.

Avant l'heure indiquée, les trois sogon'kassemsé (les grands serviteurs) apportent dans la cour le coussin « nagpouré » et tous les insignes de la chefferie. Dès que le Mogho-Naba se montre, ils se mettent debout, frottent le pouce contre le majeur, faisant ainsi entendre un claquement qui prévient le public que le Naba va venir.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

« Wend'pous yan » est aussi annoncé par les « gagando », les « luinsé » (tambours) sitôt que Sa Majesté s'assied. Seul le Bend'Naba ne joue pas, il passe et repasse le doigt sur la partie recouverte de cire de son tambour, imitant ainsi le rugissement du Lion. Quatre ou cinq jeunes gens porteurs de fusils chargés se placent devant l'Empereur.

C'est dans l'ordre suivant que sont rendus les honneurs :

1° Le Samandé-Naba, le Baloum-Naba, le Wedranga-Naba et le Simandé-Nabila, en même temps que le « Zusoabin' kassanga » (chef eunuque, gardien de le maison de l'Empereur) vont les premiers saluer Sa Majesté et s'enquérir de ses nouvelles ;

2° Viennent ensuite le Ouidi-Naba, le Larralé-Naba, le Kamsaogo-Naba, le Gounga-Naba, le Nemdo-Naba et le Poé-Naba.

3° Le vendredi ou autre jour férié musulman, l'Imam, représentant de l'Islam à Ouagadougou, vient donner la « doua », sorte de bénédiction qui consiste en la récitation de quelques versets du Coran, le matin aussi bien que le soir.

Lebeg'sonre : Sitôt ces honneurs rendus, le Mogho-Naba rentre dans sa maison ; c'est pour prendre un autre costume de couleur moins voyante. Peu après, en effet, il sort à nouveau dans la cour.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Viennent alors le saluer le Baloum-Naba et sa suite, comme nous l'avons indiqué plus haut. Le Ouidi-Naba et sa suite sont dispensés de cette obligation, à moins qu'ils n'aient des étrangers à présenter à Sa Majesté.

Le Bend'Naba, les Gangando, les Luinsé et les Doudissi (tambours et violons) jouent alors ensemble les louanges du Mogho-Naba.

A noter qu'avant de faire sa première sortie du matin, le Mogho-Naba ne parle à personne. Ce n'est que lorsque ses devoirs sont terminés et qu'il regagne ses appartements que ses « tampa » (sœurs) lui donnent le bonjour.

Avant que les fonctionnaires et ministres de la Cour regagnent leur domicile et sitôt que le Mogho-Naba s'est retiré, le Sogon'kassanga, c'est-à-dire le premier serviteur, leur envoie du « dam » (connu sous le nom de dolo ou bière de mil fermenté).

1° Un canari de « dam » est offert au Baloum-Naba, qui donne obligatoirement une calebassée au « zusoaba », au Wedkim-Naba (chef palefrenier) et une au « soré-Naba (Bendré, chemin-chef).

2° Un canari de « dam » au Ouidi-Naba qui est tenu de donner une calebassée au Poé-Naba (chef confesseur des femmes et pages du Mogho-Naba) et un « koré » au Bend'Naba. Il boit le reste avec les autres ministres ses suivants.

3° Le vendredi de chaque semaine et les jours fériés des kolas « gouré » sont offertes à l'Imam, après qu'il a donné sa « doua » et avant que le Mogho-Naba se rende au Gouvernement renouveler l'expression de son attachement à la France, au représentant de la République en Haute-Volta.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Le Mogho-Naba passe le reste de la journée à recevoir les particuliers venus lui rendre visite, à recevoir les « poussoums » (cadeaux offerts au chef), et à donner du « dam », des « gouré », des « foutous » (habits), etc... et à entendre les louanges de ses courtisans.

II. — Mogho-Naba na tough'la [1]
le Mogho-Naba s'en va a Là.

La tradition raconte qu'un Mogho-Naba, nommé Naba Warga, avait une favorite qui, seule, connaissait sa nourriture préférée, le « léla (fruits d'un arbuste « léhinga » (en français prunier sauvage). Il n'est pas superflu de dire que d'ordinaire un rien pour eux est pris pour le repas préféré, et il ne faut pas s'imaginer que le Mogho-Naba ne vit seulement que de bons mets; la nourriture, évidemment, ne manque pas de succulence, mais il ne touche pas à tous les plats. Un jour, cette femme lui demanda la permission de se rendre chez elle à Là, et ne revint pas. Le Mogho-Naba fatigué d'attendre et privé de son aliment préféré, fit seller son cheval, un matin, et voulut aller rejoindre son épouse. Ses Ministres le supplièrent de rester, lui demandant de ne partir que le lendemain... Chaque matin, c'étaient les mêmes préparatifs de départ et toujours la même supplication jusqu'à la mort du

1. Village dépendant de la circonscription administrative de Yako, dans le cercle de Koudougou.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

chef. Son fils, qui lui succéda, voulut suivre son exemple. Voici comment cette coutume se pratiquait encore il y a quelques années.

Quand le Mogho-Naba sort le matin, un de ses chevaux à demi harnaché avec une selle à étriers d'argent mais dont la sangle n'est pas bouclée, est amené dans la cour. Le Mogho-Naba, après avoir répondu aux saluts de ses Ministres et de toute sa Cour, réglé quelques petites affaires, déclare qu'il veut aller à Lâ. Les fonctionnaires de la Cour et notamment le Kamsaongo-Naba se présentent et lui disent : « Sire, ordonnez qu'on desselle votre cheval, vous partirez demain. » Le Mogho-Naba naturellement accepte, mais rentre vivement comme un peu courroucé de cette entrave à l'accomplissement de sa volonté et, au même instant, la selle est enlevée et le cheval reconduit aux écuries.

Notons que chaque matin aussi la Pougtiéma (première femme) fait apprêter sa corbeille et un panier dans lesquels elle entasse tout ce qui est nécessaire à un voyage, et cela dans le but d'accompagner son mari se rendant à Lâ.

Mais sitôt que le Mogho-Naba remet au lendemain son voyage à Lâ, la Pougtiéma, prévenue, défait aussi sa corbeille.

Actuellement, le souffle de la civilisation a passé par-dessus ces vieilles pratiques et le Mogho-Naba actuel se contente de voir son cheval, qu'on promène pendant qu'il reçoit ses ministres dans la cour, et l'animal est aussitôt ramené aux écuries lorsque le

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Roi rentre dans son palais, et cela sans même qu'il ait essayé de le monter : à fortiori de recevoir des supplications du Kamsaongo-Naba.

Koaga basgo

Chaque jour, au coucher du soleil, le Baloum-Naba se rend chez le Mogho-Naba pour le « Koaga ». N'assistent à cette opération que le « zusobin-kassanga » (chef eunuque) et le « Sogon'kassanga » (premier serviteur). Le « Koaga » est une sorte de cuvette en terre pétrie dans laquelle on met un peu de feu et... mystère. Le grand serviteur dépose le Koaga dans la cour face à l'antichambre, souffle sur le feu qui s'allume et s'éteint rapidement. Le « bendré » (tambour) pendant ce temps, passe et repasse la main sur la cire qui recouvre une partie de son tambour.

Pendant toute la durée de l'opération, il n'est permis à personne d'entrer dans la maison du Mogho-Naba ni d'en sortir. Et personne venant du dehors non plus ne passe dans la cour à cette heure-là. La personne surprise à avoir assisté au « Koaga basgo » était sévèrement punie de coups de corde ou même tuée. L'opération terminée, le Zusoba et le Baloum-Naba, qui, chacun, étaient assis à une place indiquée, se lèvent, se rencontrent, se saluent, puis attendent que du « dam » leur soit servi avant de se quitter pour le reste de la nuit ; parfois aussi ils vont saluer le Mogho-Naba avant de rentrer chez eux.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Communiqué par la Mission des Pères Blancs à Ouagadougou. P

Le Mogho-Naba et trois de ses Ministres.

[facing p. 62]

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Ministres et fonctionnaires de la Cour du Mogho-Naba

I. Ministres. — a) Ouidi-Naba (littéralement : « chevaux chef » (surveillant général des chevaux des écuries de Sa Majesté). C'est au Ouidi-Naba qu'incombait autrefois le soin d'indiquer la robe et l'espèce de cheval qui convenait au Mogho-Naba. C'est généralement à lui que revenait la garde des chevaux des chefs morts.

Si un Kombéré (chef de canton) vient à mourir et s'il possédait de son vivant des chevaux, un de ceux-ci est envoyé à Ouagadougou, au Mogho-Naba, comme porteur de la mauvaise nouvelle. On attache à la queue de l'animal quelques feuillages de « tahnga » (arbre à karité) autour desquels est enroulée une corde blanche.

---

1. A l'origine, le Gounga-Naba était premier ministre et ce titre lui revenait de droit, étant donné que ce fut le compagnon de Naba-Oubri. Un jour, étant allé faire ses besoins, il fit la rencontre d'un garçon fort beau à qui il proposa son amitié ; ce dernier accepta. Il le fit conduire plus tard à Naba-Oubri qui l'adopta, l'installa et lui donna la charge de ses écuries. Gounga-Naba dit alors au Mogho-Naba, « puisque je suis venu avec toi, donne la première dignité à cet homme. Je lui montrerai ce qu'il doit faire pour te plaire : C'est le Ouidi-Naba ».

« Un homme de Tansobongo, ayant appris que le Ouidi-Naba vivait dans l'aisance, vint le voir. C'était également un garçon bien taillé. Il fut présenté au Mogho-Naba (Naba-Oubri) par le Gounga-Naba qui proposa sa nomination comme deuxième ministre, lui se réservant le troisième emploi, c'est Larrhallé-Naba.

C'est ainsi que le Gounga-Naba est le troisième ministre de l'Empereur.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Le cheval ainsi présenté au Mogho-Naba est ensuite remis à un des représentants du Ouidi-Naba, qui, à l'aide d'un couteau, défait les feuillages, qu'il laisse dans la Cour du Mogho-Naba, emmène le cheval à Ouidin.

A moins que le Mogho-Naba ne donne le cheval à quelqu'un, le Ouidi-Naba est libre d'en disposer.

b) Larrhallé-Naba. — Deuxième ministre du Mogho-Naba; accompagnait autrefois le « Tansoba » ou « Tampsoba » en guerre.

Dans le quartier qu'habite actuellement le Larrhalé-Naba existaient autrefois des arbres géants dont les feuillages s'agitaient constamment. Nommé Ministre, le Larrhallé-Naba dit qu'il voulait aller habiter à l'endroit où « tisse vand'sin y a lag, lag zighin wan » (là où les feuillages des arbres s'agitent continuellement). D'où le nom de Larrhallé, pour désigner le quartier.

c) Gounga-Naba. — Troisième ministre. Quartier installé en un endroit où existaient autrefois des « goumsé » (de gounga, fromager) d'où le nom de Gounga-Naba.

Frère d'armes du « Tansoba » qu'il accompagnait toujours en guerre, acceptait plutôt la mort que la retraite, surtout si le Tansoba perdait la vie.

d) Baloum-Naba. — Grand intendant du palais et chef des serviteurs du Mogho-Naba, ne va jamais en guerre. Est toujours aux côtés du Mogho-Naba. C'est au Baloum-Naba que revient le soin de faire les sacri-

Communiqué par le Musée des Pères Blancs à Ouagadougou.

GOUMGA-NABA.
Troisième Ministre du Mogho-Naba.

[facing p. 64]

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

fices tels que l'égorgement de poulets ou d'animaux offerts aux mânes des ancêtres ou aux esprits, prescrits par les devins ou autres charlatans, pour la bonne santé et le repos du Mogho-Naba.

e) Kamsaogho-Naba. — Autrefois allait en guerre avec le « Tansoba ». Le Kamsaogho-Naba est un eunuque. De là vient qu'on l'appelle couramment « Mogho-Naba na poug'tiéma » (première femme de Mogho-Naba).

II. Autres personnages (non Ministres). — Samandé-Naba. — Chef de tous les gens de la Cour extérieure du Mogho-Naba, frère d'armes du Larrhallé-Naba.

Poé-Naba. — Autrefois confesseur des pages et des femmes du Mogho-Naba; sa fonction consistait, par des procédés magiques, à dénoncer la femme ou la personne convaincue de trahison ou de tentative d'adultère. Le « Poéré » a fait des victimes et sa suppression, avec l'arrivée des Français, a rendu bien des services aux Mossi qui étaient tués pour un rien. Une œillade à la femme d'un chef méritait la mort. Un homme qui rencontrait une femme du Mogho-Naba sur une route était tué aussi bien que la femme. Quand on rencontrait une « Napagha » on abandonnait le chemin, on prenait la brousse. La femme elle-même prenait le trot et ne regagnait la route que lorsqu'elle voyait que l'homme était bien loin.

Il n'en est plus évidemment de même aujourd'hui et les femmes du Mogho-Naba allant au marché de Ouagadougou n'ont pas la prétention de ne pas être toisées, ni même bousculées, mais, je m'empresse de l'ajouter, les Mossi gardent encore beaucoup de respect pour elles et supportent sans broncher des injures graves, comme « tampiri » (bâtard) venant des « Napagha » s'ils ont eu tant soit peu le malheur de les avoir offensées.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Daporé-Naba. — Chef de quartier des esclaves libres ou des esclaves de case. C'était au Daporé-Naba et à ses gens qu'incombait le soin de massacrer les pages et autres coupables dont le Mogho-Naba ordonnait la mort.

Bend'-Naba. — Chef des tambourinaires du Mogho-Naba.

Soré-Naba (littéralement : chemin-chef) Tambour accompagnant toujours les guerriers; c'est pour cette raison que, même en temps de paix, on lui donne un cheval.

Si, au cours d'une bataille, les ennemis semblent prendre le dessus, Soré-Naba enflamme le courage des guerriers du Mogho-Naba et demande constamment qu'une tête lui soit donnée, « m'data zougou ». Cela veut dire qu'il demande à chacun de ne plus se compter et de n'avoir qu'une seule pensée : la victoire. Or, pour avoir la victoire, il faut que l'ennemi subisse des pertes qui le décident à prendre la retraite ou à se soumettre; « m'data zougou » suppose donc une tuerie impitoyable.

Le « Tansoba » ou « Tampsoba » (chef de guerre). Le « Tansoba » du Mogho-Naba habite un petit village (Moussa) dans la province de Baloum-Naba.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Communiqué par la Mission des Pères Blancs à Ouagadougou.

TAUSBOA.
Ministre de la Guerre Mossi.

[facing p. 66]

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Quand il y a désaccord entre le Mogho-Naba et un de ses vassaux et qu'aucune entente ne paraît possible, le Mogho-Naba envoie demander des « logdo » (guerriers porteurs de flèches) au « Tansoba ». Ce dernier se rend aussitôt à Ouagadougou et descend à Baoghin. L'Empereur réunit ses ministres et les principaux notables de sa cour et leur dit : « je ne croyais pas que tel chef à qui j'ai offert la « pougla » (la chéchia rouge) oserait se mesurer à moi. Je demande donc que sa chéchia me soit rendue. « Enlever le bonnet d'un Naba c'est le détrôner, c'est le mettre sur le même pied que ses sujets.

Les fonctionnaires de la Cour, le Tansoba y compris, envoient tout aussitôt des émissaires au chef fautif pour lui demander de choisir entre la mort volontaire (les uns avalent un poison appelé « sounadré » d'autres se donnent la mort à l'aide d'une flèche empoisonnée) ou la guerre avec le Mogho-Naba.

Si le chef ne s'attendait pas à une pareille sommation, il se tue et les envoyés rapportent la nouvelle.

Si au contraire, il déclare qu'il veut le « Pouwega », c'est-à-dire la guerre et la mort noble, il renvoie les représentants des ministres du Mogho-Naba, et, peu de jours après, tambours battants, toute la bande guerrière, ayant en tête le « Tansoba », chef d'armée, arrive devant ses murs.

Le Tansoba dépêche le Samandé-Naba auprès du chef pour lui demander confirmation de ses déclarations. Si le Naba veut toujours la guerre, il répond ordinairement : « ya yingri bala la ka sakénian ».

Le Tansoba se replie et fait dire au chef de l'attendre tel ou tel jour (sept à huit jours plus tard) pour lui permettre de réunir lui aussi ses guerriers. Et le jour enfin arrivé, c'est la bataille sans pitié, le massacre.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Bien souvent les gens du Mogho-Naba triomphent. Les esclaves, les animaux et autres biens reviennent à ceux qui s'en sont emparés. Les cadavres, seuls, appartiennent au Tansoba.

Si une flèche, même empoisonnée, atteint le Tansoba, il ne doit en aucun cas l'arracher. Il doit d'ailleurs, dans bien des cas, supporter la soif et la faim et ce n'est qu'au repos que, dans un enclos, on lui enlève les flèches qui se sont enfoncées dans son corps. A noter que le costume du Tansoba, tout couvert d'amulettes et autres gris-gris, permet difficilement à une flèche de pouvoir sérieusement l'atteindre. Cela n'ôte rien naturellement à sa bravoure et au sang froid qu'il conserve devant le danger, puisqu'aussi bien il ne doit pas accepter la retraite et bien souvent préfère, si l'ennemi est vainqueur, perdre la vie que rapporter au Mogho-Naba la nouvelle d'une défaite.

Il existe, par ailleurs, une infinité de petits nabas dont le rôle n'est du reste pas nettement défini, et dont il nous semble inutile de parler.

***

Redevances coutumières payées a leurs chefs par les Mossi

1° Au Mogho-Naba. — a) Autrefois. — Avant la pénétration française, les Kombemba (chefs de canton) et les Nakomsé (descendants des Mogho-Naba), étaient tenus chaque année de venir à Ouagadougou saluer le Mogho-Naba et de lui remettre à cette occasion des présents (bœufs, chevaux, moutons, cauris et charges de mil).

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Cela représentait, pour ainsi dire, une redevance fixe, dont l'importance variait, bien entendu, avec la capacité des contribuables (les chefs de canton et les Nakomsé) et le nombre des sujets dont l'administration était confiée aux premiers.

Si, en effet, les chevaux, les bœufs et moutons, étaient la part personnelle du Kombéré, les cauris et le mil étaient fournis par les sujets Mossi. Le chef de canton fixait la quantité de cauris et de céréales à prélever dans chaque village en tenant compte du nombre d'habitants.

Ordinairement c'était, 100 cauris par homme marié, 50 cauris par célibataire (adultes) et pour le mil : 10 paniers pesant en moyenne 40 kilos chacun.

De même, chaque année, une sorte de redevance qui consistait en cauris et en bétail, était payée au Djiba-Naba, — prince héritier — ceci pour demeurer dans les bonnes grâces de l'Empereur son père.

b) Aujourd'hui. — Les chefs de canton (Kombemba), qui viennent plus souvent que jadis à Ouagadougou à l'occasion des principales fêtes ou événements, ne s'en retournent jamais dans leurs états qu'après avoir été présenter leurs respects au Mogho-Naba et lui avoir remis la sacoche traditionnelle (cauris et bétail). Les cadeaux deviennent plus fréquents, mais n'ont pas leur importance d'autrefois. D'une manière générale, certains chefs de canton exigent encore de la population la petite redevance en cauris quand ils viennent à Ouagadougou pour les fêtes du 14 juillet, mais quelques-uns, soit par peur des sanctions administratives, soit parce que les charges qui pèsent sur les sujets Mossi leur paraissent lourdes, préfèrent donner le peu qu'ils ont acquis personnellement en se livrant à certaines cultures rémunératrices (coton, patates, etc.), ou à quelques transactions commerciales.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Quelques-uns, les chefs vassaux du Mogho-Naba, mais qui ne dépendent plus de Ouagadougou, depuis la scission du cercle du Mossi en plusieurs circonscriptions administratives, envoient encore chaque année des cadeaux importants au Mogho-Naba (cauris, bœufs et une quantité considérable de céréales, mil et riz).

2° Redevances payées aux Kombemba (Chefs de canton) — a) Autrefois. — Chaque canton célébrait annuellement une ou plusieurs fêtes rituelles — les sujets Mossi (tengsoba : vieux des villages, notables et gens aisés apportaient régulièrement des présents au chef de canton (cauris, chèvres, moutons et coqs). Les peuhls donnaient des bœufs.

Les chefs de canton conservaient aussi une partie de la redevance payée par la population au Mogho-Naba.

b) A l'heure actuelle encore ces cadeaux coutumiers subsistent, mais les coqs blancs ou bengré (gris clair) font de plus en plus place aux bestiaux.

1:. Delobsom FA28 Mossi

3° Redevances payées aux ministres du Mogho-Naba. — Pour entretenir de bonnes relations avec les Ministres, fonctionnaires de la Cour et intermédiaires entre l'Empereur et ses vassaux, les chefs de canton en venant saluer le Mogho-Naba, apportaient autrefois des cadeaux dont la nature n'était pas déterminée aux grands dignitaires de la Cour. Une certaine quantité de cauris était donnée à la Pougtiéma (première femme du Mogho-Naba) (500 cauris = 2,50 en monnaie française) (autrefois 50 centimes).

Le Chef de canton convoqué pour affaire à Ouagadougou peut se passer d'aller voir l'Empereur, mais apportera obligatoirement des cauris, un mouton ou un coq au Ministre, chef de province de qui il dépend.

4° Droits coutumiers. — a) Droits de place sur les marchés. — Avant la pénétration française, les droits du marché de Ouagadougou étaient perçus au profit du Mogho-Naba par un collecteur à ses gages.

Dans les villages importants, les droits étaient prélevés par les captifs gourounsi pour le compte des chefs de canton (Kombemba).

b) Chasse. — Autrefois, avant le désherbage de leurs champs pour les semences nouvelles, les Mossi se livraient par groupes de villages à des battues ; le menu gibier (perdreaux, pintades, lièvres, etc...) était laissé aux chasseurs. Il était par contre prélevé sur tout quadrupède abattu (biche, gazelle, coba), etc..., un gigot pour le chef de canton.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

c) Pêche. — La pêche dans les grands marigots ne pouvait avoir lieu que sur autorisation des chefs de canton. Le jour de la pêche était assimilé à un jour férié. Tous les jeunes gens du village et leurs voisin, même si ces derniers ne dépendaient pas du canton, accouraient au jour fixé par le chef de canton et procédaient à la pêche pour le compte du Naba. Tous les gros poissons lui étaient réservés; le menu poisson était laissé à l'ensemble de pêcheurs.

Cette règle se pratique encore.

5° Autres droits coutumiers. — On sait qu'en pays Mossi les divinités sont nombreuses. Les bosquets, les champs, les montagnes, etc..., ont leur « dieu ». Il arrive assez fréquemment que le Naba (chef de canton), sur les conseils des diseurs des choses cachées, offre un animal : chèvre, mouton ou même un bœuf à telle ou telle divinité, soit dans son intérêt personnel, soit dans celui de ses administrés, soit encore pour demander la pluie. Le Naba envoie des sogonés ou des Samand' kamba dans un des villages de son canton chercher la victime. L'animal est pris sans que le propriétaire puisse proférer aucune parole de mécontentement ou réclamer la moindre indemnité de compensation. Ne dit-on d'ailleurs pas au Mossi que : « Talagh gounda Naba' gninga » (le serf élève du bétail pour les besoins de son Naba).

Pour les sacrifices prescrits au Mogho-Naba les victimes sont fournies soit par les habitants de la ville de Ouagadougou ou des environs, soit par les chefs de canton.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Les corvées coutumières auxquelles étaient astreints les Mossi vis-a-vis de leurs chefs

Les corvées obligatoires étaient : la culture des champs des Nabas et la réfection ou construction de leurs maisons.

I. Mogho-Naba. — a) Culture des champs. — La culture des champs du Mogho-Naba incombait totalement aux bilbalsé (habitants de Bilbalogo, quartier du Baloum-Naba) et à tous les anciens serviteurs ou descendants d'anciens serviteurs. Le Kamnaba (chef des jeunes gens) chargé de convoquer les travailleurs faisait crier dans les marchés importants que tel jour les bilbalsé étaient conviés à se rendre aux champs de l'Empereur. Au jour indiqué le Mogho-Naba faisait abattre un ou deux bœufs et préparer une grande quantité de « sagbo » (gâteau de mil) pour les travailleurs. Si ces derniers convoqués deux ou trois fois dans les conditions sus-indiquées ne parvenaient pas à labourer tous les champs, le travail était continué par les samand'kamba (gens de la cour extérieure du Mogho-Naba).

Mais l'Empereur ne touchait pas au mil de ses propres champs qui n'avaient pas, d'ailleurs, leurs limites actuelles. Ce mil était exclusivement réservé à la préparation des aliments pour les étrangers et à l'entretien des chevaux [1].

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Il appartenait aux chefs de canton et aux ministres de fournir des charges de mil au Mogho-Naba pour sa propre consommation et celle de son harem (il faut entendre par harem toutes les femmes jeunes ou d'âge moyen, à l'exclusion des vieilles femmes qui doivent pourvoir personnellement à leur nourriture et qui possèdent chacune un champ particulier).

b) Réfection des maisons du Mogho-Naba. — Les travaux de construction et de réfection des maisons proprement dites de l'Empereur incombaient exclusivement aux habitants de :

Bilbalogo (quartier du Baloum-Naba).

Kamsaonghin (quartier du chef eunuque).

Dapoya (quartier des esclaves du Mogho-Naba).

Les dépendances dites « Wédanga » composées de quatre cases rondes couvertes en chaume, situées à l'extérieur de la maison de l'Empereur et qui servaient d'écuries aux chevaux offerts au Mogho-Naba par les chefs de canton ou autres personnages, étaient construites et entretenues par les trois ministres ci-après :

Ouidi-Naba, Larrhallé-Naba, Gounga-Naba (avec le concours des gens de quartier).

Le damage du sol et de l'argamasse incombait totalement aux femmes des personnes chargées de la

1. Pour la cérémonie du battage du mil de ce champ (Kawinré), voir plus loin le chapitre spécial.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

construction ou de la réfection, c'est-à-dire aux femmes des ministres et à celles des habitants de leurs quartiers.

II. Corvées coutumières dues aux chefs de province, ministres de l'Empereur. — a) Culture des champs. — La culture des champs des ministres du Mogho-Naba était faite par voie de prestations en nature dans les conditions suivantes :

1° Pour le Baloum-Naba, le travail était fait par tous les bilbalsé.

Le Kamnaba fixait le jour où devait avoir lieu le « Sekka » (c'est-à-dire la rencontre). Tous les jeunes gens et hommes valides étaient obligés de s'y rendre. Ils recevaient du Baloum-Naba de la nourriture en quantité suffisante.

Le nombre de journées de prestations n'était pas déterminé. Le « sekka » pouvait avoir lieu une ou plusieurs fois suivant la superficie du champ.

2° Pour les autres ministres : Ouidi-Naba, Gounga-Naba, Larrhallé-Naba, les travaux des champs étaient assurés par les gens de leur entourage (c'est-à-dire de leurs quartiers respectifs) et des villages environnants, qui dépendaient d'eux avant la constitution du canton de Ouagadougou et de sa banlieue, aujourd'hui placé sous l'autorité exclusive du Baloum-Naba (quatrième ministre de l'Empereur).

Cependant si les champs étaient très vastes et si les travaux de culture ne pouvaient être assurés par la seule voie de prestations — les prestataires devant s'occuper aussi de leurs propres champs — les mi-nistres demandaient le concours volontaire des jeunes gens des villages voisins et, comme rétribution de leur travail leur fournissaient le boire et le manger. C'est le « sissoaga » en usage partout chez les Mossi.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

b) Construction et réparation des maisons. — D'une manière générale la réfection de la toiture des cases composant la maison des chefs de province incombait aux habitants de leur quartier et des villages environnants qui en dépendent.

III. Chefs de canton. — La culture des champs et la réparation des cases de la maison des Naba incombaient exclusivement à leurs sujets. Chaque village avait un nombre déterminé de cases à réparer ou à couvrir ; c'était le « sough'pilli » encore en usage chaque année.

Aujourd'hui, par souci de tranquillité peut-être, les chefs de canton se contentent de faire cultiver leurs champs par leurs sogonés ou samand'kamba et parfois même ont recours eux aussi au « sissoaga ».

L'Administration locale, soucieuse du respect des coutumes locales, pratique la politique de mise au point qui aura pour effet, croyons-nous, tout en sauvegardant l'intérêt de l'indigène écrasé sous le poids des charges, dû au laisser-aller des chefs de province, de rehausser le prestige des chefs Mossi.

Aucune autre prestation en nature n'est due au Naba. La construction des barrages pour l'alimentation en eau des villages ne saurait être considérée comme une prestation puisqu'il s'agit là de travaux intéressant la collectivité.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Installation d'un marché

Comme dans bien des circonstances de la vie, pour installer un marché au Mossi, on a tout d'abord recours aux diseurs des choses cachées. Le Moaga a la conviction que partout derrière sa maison, sous les arbres, dans les champs, les bosquets aussi bien que dans les endroits inhabités, vivent des esprits invisibles et il tient avant tout à se concilier les bonnes grâces de ces êtres dont les colères sont redoutables. Ce n'est donc qu'après avoir consulté un certain nombre de devins employant des procédés différents (pierres, cauris, sable, etc...) que le chef de village fait sacrifier des poulets et animaux sur le lieu où il désire installer le nouveau marché. Le Naba choisit deux ou trois candidats parmi les gens de son entourage et les devins doivent désigner celui d'entre ceux-ci qui a plus de chance et un bon destin. C'est cette personne qui sera chargée d'immoler les victimes. Celles-ci sont fournies, en principe, par le chef de village ou le canton à moins que ce dernier ne préfère demander le concours de la population ; en ce cas une petite cotisation versée par quelques notables sert à l'achat des poulets, chèvre ou mouton.

En tout cas le chef de canton ne doit pas faire prendre ces bêtes dans les villages ou quartiers dépendant de son commandement comme s'il s'agissait de ses sacrifices à faire dans l'intérêt général du pays.

L'individu désigné par les bagba se rend sur les lieux accompagné d'une foule plus ou moins nombreuse suivant l'importance du village. Les femmes portent des beignets et autres provisions de bouche.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Les paroles sacramentelles prononcées sont les suivantes : « Ya sida Ting' Naba yeta nan lougoul dagh, Naba zidwendé Bad kom deghin kon zigh tinghin damba, tib kon yaramba, tib regh kon saramba, tiya gnimassem lad ratta, tib regh lass zim-yellé, tiya nogoam la tigue koada soaba lad zoïta. » Traduction littérale : « C'est la vérité, le chef de canton veut installer un marché en ce lieu. Dieu soleil voilà l'eau et les victimes pour les transmettre à zigh'tinghin damba (les personnes décédées sans laisser d'enfants) aux grands-parents et aux pères. Nous demandons le bonheur et la santé. Évitez toute effusion de sang dans ce marché. Nous craignons aussi les querelleurs et les grands parleurs, provocateurs du désordre. » La poule est égorgée la première et si l'offrande est agréée elle doit d'abord tomber sur le dos et se retourner ensuite la face contre terre (cela signifie : la protection des dieux du terrain au chef et aux personnes qui viendront animer le marché) ; on tue ensuite la chèvre ou le mouton.

Immédiatement après les sacrifices, le nouveau marché doit se tenir. Les assistants achètent les beignets. Généralement les marchés se tiennent au Mossi tous les trois jours ; aussi la nouvelle se répand assez vite que tel village possède son marché. C'est ainsi que le marché prend peu à peu de l'importance.

Perception des droits. — Ce n'est que plus tard — un ou même deux ans après son installation suivant son développement que le chef de canton désigne un « yaguinga » (petit-fils ou proprement en terme indigène fils de la sœur (neveu) ou fils du fils (petit-fils) du Naba ou d'un membre de sa famille) ou un captif gourounsi comme collecteur des droits de marché (nous donnons plus loin la nomenclature des droits de place sur les marchés tels qu'ils étaient perçus avant l'arrivée des Français au profit des Nabas Mossi.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Transfert du marché. — Au décès du Naba (Empereur ou chefs vassaux ou même du chef de village où se tient le marché) on installe provisoirement le marché dans un autre endroit. Dans les grandes villes comme à Ouagadougou par exemple, il peut même y avoir autant de marchés qu'il y a de quartiers. Ces marchés provisoires prennent le nom de « Kim' dagha » (marché de kimsé, autrement dit des défunts).

Lorsque le nouveau Naba est désigné, le marché est de nouveau transféré à l'endroit qu'il occupait précédemment et cette réinstallation donne lieu à de nouveaux sacrifices de volailles et d'animaux. C'est ce qui explique la raison pour laquelle en 1897, lorsqu'on rétablit le marché de Ouagadougou, l'Empereur demanda au capitaine chef du poste, un bœuf pour être sacrifié en même temps qu'un mouton et un coq fournis par lui-même.

De même lorsqu'une hyène traverse un marché (on peut le savoir soit en voyant sur le sol l'empreinte laissée par les pattes, soit en consultant les devins), il faut comme au décès du Naba transférer ailleurs pour quelques jours le marché. On prétend que si des rixes avaient lieu après le passage du fauve, il y aurait certainement décès.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

TARIF DES DROITS SUR LES MARCHÉS TELS QU'ILS ÉTAIENT PERÇUS PAR LE MOGHO-NABA ET LES CHEFS DE CANTON AVANT L'OCCUPATION FRANÇAISE.

A Ouagadougou, deux collecteurs étaient chargés de percevoir les droits de place sur le marché de Ouagadougou :

C'était : 1° Le Kos-naba (de Kossé : vendre ; Naba : chef). Pour tout animal abattu et dont la viande était vendue sur la place du marché les droits étaient perçus par Kosnaba ;

2° Ragh'Naba (Ragha : marché ; Naba : chef). Les droits sur tous les autres produits étaient perçus par le Ragh'Naba.

Ces droits étaient les suivants :

Captifs. — 1.000 cauris par captif vendu ; droit acquitté par le vendeur.

Gros bétail. — a) Bœufs. Pour tout bœuf abattu : 250 cauris.

Vaches. Pour toute vache abattue : 250 cauris.

(La bosse de tout bœuf abattu était prélevée en sus et apportée le soir au Mogho-Naba.)

b) Anes. 200 cauris par âne vendu, payés par le vendeur.

c) Chevaux. Aucune taxe n'était perçue; les chevaux, animaux de luxe, recherchés seulement par les

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Communiqué par la Mission des Pères Blancs à Ouagadougou.

Le BALOUM-NABA à cheval au milieu de ses courtisans.

[Facing p. 80]

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Chefs et quelques « Rakangba « (hommes aisés) n'étaient pas exposés au marché.

d) Dam (dolo). Aucune imposition. La marchande était tenue d'apporter chaque fois qu'elle préparait du dolo, une gourde ou un canari au chef de son quartier (ministre de l'Empereur). C'est le « lenga » (c'est-à-dire le goûter).

Cette obligation explique sans doute pourquoi aucune taxe spéciale n'était payée par les marchandes de dolo.

Petit bétail. — Moutons, chèvres, aucune taxe spéciale.

Bandes de coton. — Droits acquittés suivant la grosseur des rouleaux de bandes, de 20 à 100 cauris.

Coton. — Prélevé en nature d'abord et paiement d'une taxe de 20 cauris après la vente.

Céréales et oléagineux. — Petit mil, sorgho, riz, arachides, mil germé pour dolo, haricots, pois.

Pour ces sortes de produits le Ragh'Naba et ses aides possédaient des mesures spéciales, sortes d'écuelles en bois pour prélèvement en nature. Toutes ces céréales étaient gardées ainsi que le mil germé pour la fabrication du dolo, par le Ragh'Naba, dans des greniers à la disposition de l'Empereur.

Habits confectionnés et marchands de perles, aucune taxe n'était prévue.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Soumbala (kalgo, en Mossi) paiement en nature : une boule par marchand).

Autres condiments. — Aucun droit acquitté.

Beurre de karité. — Prélevé à l'aide de « soutga » (espèce de louches) le beurre de karité était presque exclusivement destiné à l'entretien des chevaux du Mogho-Naba.

Beignets et autres produits alimentaires cuits. — En réalité aucun droit n'était prévu pour ces sortes de produits mais les aides collecteurs exigeaient le paiement d'une taxe en nature pour leur propre nourriture ou celle des sámand'kamba serviteurs de le cour extérieure.

Sel. — Bœufs ou ânes chargés de sel : 300 cauris par animal.

Pioches, haches. — Chaque marchand remettait un daba ou une hache pour les travaux des champs des Nabas. Il n'était rien prélevé aux marchés suivants si tous les instruments n'avaient pu être vendus en un seul jour.

Bijouterie. — Aucune taxe n'était perçue ; les bijoutiers chargés de la fabrication des bracelets et autres bijoux de femmes des Nabas ainsi que divers objets de harnachement étaient exonérés de toute taxe.

Autres marchés. — Droits perçus pour les chefs de canton. Les tarifs étaient à peu près les mêmes que ceux payés au marché de Ouagadougou. Mais pour les marchés de faible importance les droits étaient acquittés en nature. Les produits vivriers servaient à la nourriture des collecteurs, captifs gourounsi pour la plupart, qui, à cause même de leur situation sociale, étaient célibataires et n'avaient donc personne pour préparer leur nourriture.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

CHAPITRE V

De l'esclavage au Mossi.

Dans les lignes qui vont suivre nous allons essayer de donner une idée de l'esclavage tel qu'il était en usage au pays Mossi avant la pénétration française.

Nous savons que depuis fort longtemps l'esclavage a été pratiqué au pays du Mogho-Naba, mais à cause de l'absence de toute date dans l'histoire des Mossi — transmise du reste de génération en génération par les griots des Nabas — il est malaisé de fixer l'époque de la pénétration de l'esclavage dans ce pays.

On sait cependant que les premiers esclaves des Mossi étaient tous d'origine « Boussanga ». Le canton de Garango, dans le cercle actuel de Tenkodogo, constituait le réservoir (lambagré, stock de coton, sens figuré) dans lequel les guerriers de l'Empereur et de ses vassaux allaient puiser par centaines de jeunes esclaves. C'est que Garango ne reconnaissait alors aucune autorité : il ne dépendait ni du Mogho-Naba de Ouagadougou ni du Roi de Tenkodogo. On rapporte à ce sujet que les guerriers des chefs Mossi surprenaient toujours les habitants de Garango le jour de marché. C'est pourquoi en souvenir de ces pillages, les marchés de Garango ne se tiennent que de 6 heures du matin à midi, même à l'heure actuelle.

Les Mossi entre eux se reconnaissaient pour des hommes libres. Nul, pas même le Naba, n'avait le droit de réduire un sujet moaga à l'esclavage. Les tatouages qu'il porte sur la figure permettent d'ailleurs de distinguer facilement le moaga de l'étranger.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Comme il y avait peu de relations entre les villages voisins il était difficile même aux « barreurs de routes » de vendre certains jeunes gens des régions limitrophes. Il ne faut pas en conclure qu'il n'y a pas eu tout de même à cette époque des captifs d'origine moaga. Les pillards quittaient Ouagadougou pour se rendre à cheval à Boussouma par exemple. Ces bandits avaient, toujours, pendues à la selle, de grosses outres dans lesquelles ils enfermaient les enfants ou les femmes surpris par eux dans la brousse à la cueillette des fruits. Les captifs dont ils s'emparaient par ce moyen étaient ensuite vendus loin de leur village natal. Bien entendu de tels procédés étaient sévèrement réprimés par les Nabas. Naba-Wobgo chassa de son territoire le chef de canton de Bilgotenga Warongo parce que ce dernier réduisait les Mossi à l'esclavage. Warongo dut se réfugier dans le Yatenga et ne revint dans son pays qu'à l'arrivée des Français.

Les esclaves ramenés de Garango étaient en partie conservés par l'Empereur, les autres partagés entre les guerriers. On n'avait jusqu'alors songé qu'à les utiliser pour les travaux des champs et les corvées domestiques.

Naba Baongo, vingt-sixième successeur d'Oubri, eut le premier l'idée de vendre des esclaves. Il s'exprima ainsi : « id kossi bazas kamba tib boude nan wa saï (littéralement : vendons ces chiens d'esclaves, peut-être qu'un jour n'en existera-t-il plus). C'est comme si l'Empereur avait pressenti la suppression de l'esclavage et la mise en liberté des captifs.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

A l'heure actuelle on rencontre peu d'anciens captifs de race « Boussanga ». Ils ont dû sans doute rejoindre leurs villages depuis l'arrivée des Français. Leurs descendants (esclaves de case) (dogyiri) doivent porter maintenant les mêmes marques faciales que les Mossi.

Les seuls esclaves restés fidèles à leurs maîtres, ou plus exactement qui ont préféré habiter le Mossi après leur mise en liberté, sont presque tous des Gourounsi.

Les captifs Gourounsi

Des Sonrhaïs conduits par Alpha Haïnon, Gazeré et Babato ont envahi le pays gourounsi. Ils réduisirent un grand nombre de Gourounsi en esclavage ; les plus dégourdis étaient aussitôt transformés en soldats pour guerroyer contre leurs compatriotes, le reste était vendu ou échangé contre des chevaux. Le pays Mossi a été de tout temps un réservoir de chevaux. Aussi les Mossi se rendaient-ils à Léo troquer leurs bêtes contre des esclaves ou échangeaient tout simplement ceux-ci aux Sonrhaïs contre des cauris.

Les chefs de bande Sonrhaïs vivaient en bonnes relations avec l'Empereur des Mossi, Naba Sanum. C'est ainsi qu'ils épargnèrent des chefs de villages Gourounsi qui étaient venus se mettre sous la protection du Mogho-Naba.

Boukary-koutou, futur Naba Wobgo, avait l'es-

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

time et l'amitié des Sonrhaïs qu'il aidait à combattre les Gourounsi à la condition de garder une bonne partie du butin et des esclaves. Nous avons vu que le nombre considérable de Gourounsi qu'il emmena avec lui à Ouagadougou a puissamment contribué à sa nomination comme Empereur des Mossi.

Sous le règne des Naba Koutou, Sanum, Wobgo, il y avait, attenant aux marchés ordinaires de Ouagadougou et des grands centres, des marchés spéciaux pour la vente des esclaves. Un droit de 1.000 cauris était perçu au profit des Nabas pour tout captif vendu sans distinction de sexe.

Lorsque les propriétaires désiraient vendre leurs esclaves, ils leur rasaient d'abord la tête et c'est seulement quand les cheveux commençaient à repousser qu'on les amenait au marché. La coupe des cheveux dérive d'une croyance superstitieuse dans le Mossi.

Suivant que le point qui termine les cheveux est au milieu de la tête, sur le front ou situé près des oreilles, l'interprétation est différente : l'esclave est considéré comme un être dangereux, porte-bonheur ou porte-malheur dans une famille.

Nous n'entrerons pas dans des détails maintenant, ces croyances devant faire l'objet d'une étude spéciale.

Nous distinguerons plusieurs sortes de captifs :

1° Le Yemdaogo proprement dit d'origine étrangère (Boussanga et Gourounsi) acheté ou pris à la guerre) ;

2° Les « Daporé ou Dapobi » descendants d'esclaves (esclaves de case) ;

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

3° Les « Bengaré » anciens esclaves des peulhs qui ont renié leurs maîtres pour se soumettre à la seule autorité du Mogho-Naba ;

4° Les Kamboiensé.

Les différentes variétés de captifs

Daporé (habitants derrière la maison).

a) Daporé du Mogho-Naba. — Il y a à Ouagadougou un quartier qu'on appelle Dapoya. Les habitants de ce quartier sont des « Dapobi ». On les prend et ils se prennent eux-mêmes à tort pour des captifs. D'origine Kibissi (on sait que les Kibissi, Ninissi et Gourounsi ont primitivement occupé l'actuel territoire Mossi) ils sont venus d'eux-mêmes chez Obri-Bangrenaba (chef de Bangré de Oubri) qui les présenta à l'Empereur. On n'a pu nous dire sous le règne de quel Naba ils sont venus. Le Mogho-Naba les installa d'abord à Wavoussé et ensuite derrière sa maison pour en être les gardiens en même temps qu'il les chargeait de l'exécution des hautes œuvres.

Ce sont des captifs volontaires. Ils ne sont donc pas des « yemsé » dans l'acception complète du mot, puisqu'ils n'ont été ni achetés, ni vendus et l'Empereur, s'il ne leur accordait pas les mêmes droits qu'à ses propres sujets, parce qu'étrangers, ne leur fit aucun mal. Les « dapobi » ne pouvaient pas contracter une union valable avec une fille d'origine Mossi. Ils devaient se contenter des captives et c'est peut-être la raison pour laquelle on les considère comme des captifs, puisque les enfants issus de ces unions « dog, yiri » (nés à la maison) sont ce qui constitue la « catégorie des esclaves de case ».

I: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

b) Daporé de Kamsaoughin et Daporé des chefs de canton. — A côté des « Dapobi » d'origine étrangère à qui nous venons de faire allusion, il y a les véritables « Dapobi » qui sont des captifs pris soit à la guerre, soit achetés. Les premiers sont les esclaves du Mogho-Naba confiés au Kamsaougho Naba, chef eunuque, chargé du gardiennage d'une partie du sérail de l'Empereur. Les « Dapobi » des chefs de canton « Kombemba » sont de même origine. Tandis que le Mogho-Naba ne pouvait vendre les « Dapobi » d'origine Kibissi, l'Empereur et les Chefs de canton pouvaient disposer librement des seconds ; ils étaient vendus pour la moindre faute commise et leurs femmes et enfants suivaient leur sort ou étaient confiés à d'autres captifs méritants.

Captifs de la couronne

Les Bangarés.

Il s'agit de captifs peulhs qui se sont affranchis peu à peu de l'autorité de leurs maîtres et qui sont venus se soumettre volontairement à celle du Mogho-Naba.

On appelle un troupeau de bœufs « nab'bangaré ». C'est de là que vient probablement le mot « Bangaré » (troupeau) pour désigner cette catégorie d'esclaves. Mais les « Bangarés » ne se composent pas uniquement d'anciens esclaves peuhls, il y a aussi des personnes libres qui ont commis quelque lourde faute dans leur village d'origine et qui craignant des représailles sont venues grossir le « troupeau ».

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Une fois présentés au Mogho-Naba ils étaient considérés désormais comme des esclaves et dès lors, hors de toute atteinte.

Les principaux villages « Bangaré » connus généralement sous le nom de « villages indépendants » sont : Kaïbo (province du Gounga) ; Manghin, Zaanga (canton de Zorgongo), Zaon'pighin, Payaobtinga (canton de Boudry) ; Nabasnoghin (canton de Nedogo) Bangar'Nabilin (canton de Zorgo) ; Gandaogo (canton de Zoungou) ; Boumintoré, Sidtenga, Mandié, Bougoumbarga, etc., etc...

L'Empereur était libre de puiser dans ces « troupeaux » chaque fois que le besoin s'en faisait sentir. Il vendait ou faisait castrer comme eunuques les « Bangaré » qui se rendaient coupables de quelque faute grave ou qui lui étaient signalés comme des individus dangereux semant le désordre dans le village ou se livrant à des pillages.

Les « Bangaré » se marient entre eux, aucun Mossi libre ne consentant à leur donner sa fille. Cela repose uniquement sur ce fait que si l'Empereur se décidait à vendre le « Bangaré », sa famille suivait le même sort que lui. L'intervention du père de la conjointe devenait d'autant plus inopérante qu'elle pouvait être pour lui une cause d'insécurité. Et on comprend sans peine que personne ne tient dans ces conditions à engager l'avenir de sa fille.

Bangaré-Naba. — Les chefs des villages Bangaré

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

sont nommés par le Mogho-Naba. Ces villages échappent entièrement au contrôle des chefs de canton dans le territoire desquels ils sont placés. Les habitants ne devaient aucune redevance au Kombéré; à plus forte raison ce dernier ne pouvait exiger d'eux aucune prestation, comme de participer par exemple à la culture de ses champs ou à le réfection des toits de sa maison. Ils ne reconnaissent pour chef que le Mogho-Naba.

Kamboinsé. — Venus de l'ouest sous le règne de Naba Waraga (19e successeur d'Oubry). Les Kamboinsé véritables ne sont pas des Mossi. Comme les « Dapobi » du quartier Dapoya, les Kamboinsé sont venus avec des fusils — leur chef avait même un siège — se soumettre à l'autorité du Mogho-Naba. Gambaré, c'est ainsi que se nommait leur chef, dit à l'Empereur qu'ils étaient venus s'offrir comme soldats et esclaves pour aider le Mogho-Naba à pacifier son territoire. Les Kamboinsé habitent un quartier de la ville derrière la mission catholique à droite de la route de Pô.

Jaloux de se voir concurrencer par des étrangers, les artilleurs du Mogho-Naba firent aussi nommer un chef qui prit le nom de Kamboin-Naba. Ils sont cependant différents des premiers et habitent à une douzaine de kilomètres de Ouagadougou dans les villages de Kamboinsé et de Wobrigré.

Mais tandis que les premiers sont des esclaves volontaires, les autres sont de vrais captifs capturés sur les divers champs de bataille ou achetés par l'Empereur.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Mise en gage des captifs. — Les captifs pouvaient servir au paiement des dettes contractées. Il convient de remarquer que le privilège de posséder des captifs ne revenait pas uniquement à l'Empereur et à ses vassaux et que tout « Moaga » dakangré (homme aisé) pouvait en posséder.

Si un père de famille venait à mourir en laissant des dettes on vendait quelques captifs pour payer celles-ci. Mais si le créancier désirait des captifs on mettait ces derniers en adjudication et on les prisait tout comme s'il s'agissait d'animaux.

De même on échangeait librement les captifs contre des chevaux, des boubous et même des charges de kolas.

Les captifs maltraités par leurs maîtres, lorsque ceux-ci n'appartenaient pas à la noblesse, pouvaient venir se confier au Naba. Dans ce cas ils cessaient d'appartenir à leur véritable propriétaire. D'autre part quand un Moaga se permettait de tuer un captif il devait verser immédiatement 100.000 cauris à son chef de canton, comme prix du sang.

D'une façon générale les captifs ramenés comme butin de guerre étaient aussitôt vendus à des Haoussas, Yarcés qui eux-mêmes les revendaient aux Achantis contre des kolas ou les échangeaient à Tombouctou contre des barres de sel. Bien qu'on leur fît faire maints détours pour qu'ils ne sachent plus quel chemin prendre pour regagner leurs foyers, un certain nombre d'entre eux arrivaient tout de même à s'échapper.

Les Nabas faisaient des jeunes « Yemdado » des soronés ou des palefreniers, de même qu'ils pouvaient prendre comme épouses les jeunes et belles « Yempoksé ».

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Ventes d'hommes libres. — L'Empereur des Mossi et les vassaux ne vendaient pas leurs sujets. Les individus dangereux étaient tout simplement mis à mort à moins que pour éviter la peine capitale les coupables ne se réfugiassent dans un « bangaré », comme il a été dit ci-dessus. On envoyait aussi certains d'entre eux à l'Empereur pour en faire des eunuques.

Les marques faciales des Mossi permettaient de les distinguer des autres races indigènes voisines. Mais si par accident ou pressé par le besoin un Naba vendait un homme libre qui était réclamé par ses parents, le chef était tenu de racheter l'esclave ou d'indemniser les parents de celui-ci. Nous avons déjà dit plus haut dans quelles conditions un chef de canton a été renvoyé du Mossi par l'Empereur pour avoir vendu des Mossi.

Ventes déguisées des femmes et d'enfants. — Dans le chapitre traitant du mariage au Mossi nous démontrerons que l'indigène moaga n'exigeait pas de dot précisément parce qu'il n'entendait pas vendre sa fille. Cette règle n'est sans doute pas sans exception. Nous exposerons, en effet, que le non-paiement d'une dette, l'état d'ébriété, un service reçu étaient autant de raisons pour engager la vie d'une fille, celle-ci quelquefois petite n'ayant même pas conscience du sort qui lui était réservé. Dans tous les cas elle n'a pas d'avis à exprimer, n'étant même pas consultée. Pendant les disettes — qui sévissent presque régulièrement depuis quelques années — un petit panier de mil reçu suffit pour qu'un père de famille promette sa fille. De même, — c'est très regrettable de le dire, — un grand nombre de filles sont engagées pour des sommes insignifiantes au moment du paiement de l'impôt de capitation.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Droits de l'esclave. — Considéré comme un être inférieur le « Yemdaogo » (esclave) n'a pas de droits bien définis. Il est soumis à toutes les corvées domestiques et à une obéissance passive vis-à-vis de son maître et des membres de la famille de celui-ci. Mais en dehors de ses obligations impérieuses il a le droit de se livrer à certaines cultures personnelles, à quelque artisanat ou à l'élevage du bétail dont le produit constitue sa fortune personnelle. La gestion de celle-ci lui est entièrement laissée et si son maître contracte des dettes, il se doit de les rembourser dans les délais fixés.

Le rachat de l'esclavage. — Comme il a été dit dans le paragraphe précédent, l'esclave peut par son travail se constituer une fortune personnelle. Ainsi en versant une somme de 100.000 cauris à son maître il pouvait se rendre libre. Il pouvait dès lors soit retourner dans son village natal, soit se fixer dans le village de son maître. Des captifs ont pu par leur travail non seulement se racheter, mais aussi devenir eux-mêmes propriétaires d'esclaves.

Cependant si les esclaves contractent mariage avec des captives données par leurs maîtres et deviennent pères de famille, ils ne quittent généralement plus ceux-ci. On a alors pour eux certains égards, et ils comptent dans la famille. Il demeure entendu qu'ils n'ont pas le droit de disposer de leurs enfants qui sont des « dogyiri » (esclaves de case).

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Travail non rémunéré dans ses différentes formes. — A l'exclusion des corvées et autres obligations coutumières auxquelles les sujets Mossi sont astreïnts, vis-à-vis de leurs Naba, — nous avons décrit ces corvées dans un chapitre spécial — on peut dire que d'une manière générale aucun travail, même celui fait par des captifs, n'est exigé sans rémunération. Ici, dans un centre particulièrement agricole, il ne saurait être question de rémunération en argent comme dans les entreprises privées ou officielles, où les clauses du contrat d'engagement règlent les droits et les devoirs de l'employeur vis-à-vis de l'employé. Dans le domaine purement indigène la rémunération d'un travail repose uniquement sur l'obligation pour l'employeur de nourrir l'employé.

En somme quelles sont les obligations du Moaga ?

1° Culture des champs familiaux ;

2° Construction et réfection des cases et toitures ;

3° Travaux personnels : vannerie, cordonnerie, tissage de bandes de coton, travaux de couture, poterie, etc., etc.

Pour la culture des champs familiaux aussi bien que pour la construction et la réfection des cases d'habitation, le chef de famille est tenu pendant la durée des travaux de fournir à manger aux travailleurs. Nous verrons dans un autre chapitre que lorsque les membres de la famille ne pouvaient suffire seuls à la tâche, on faisait appel à d'autres jeunes gens du village. Dans ce cas, on tuait des bêtes, on préparait du dolo (bière de mil) et du sagbo (bouillie de mil) ou du benga (haricots).

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

D'autre part si les « Yemdado » étaient astreints à de durs travaux il convient de dire qu'ils étaient très bien nourris et qu'ils recevaient même une double ration.

Les captifs faisaient-ils partie de la succession ? — Au Mossi les femmes font partie de la succession au même titre que les autres biens du défunt. Il en est de même des captifs (yemsé) ou dogyiri (esclaves de case) qui font partie intégrante de la succession. Ils constituent un patrimoine transmissible de père en fils dans l'ordre successoral prévu par la coutume. Ils demeurent la propriété exclusive de l'héritier légitime et ne suivent pas le même sort de partage que les femmes du défunt.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

CHAPITRE VI

Djiba-Naba prince héritier de l'Empire Mossi.

Préliminaire

En écrivant sur ce sujet nous n'avons pas cherché à savoir si le canton de Djiba était autrefois indépendant ou s'il était sous l'administration directe du Mogho-Naba.

Les événements qui ont bouleversé le monde en 1914 ont amené l'incorporation du Djiba-Naba d'alors, frère du Naba Kom, Mogho-Naba actuel, et on dut en confier l'intérim à un autre frère de l'Empereur. L'administration de l'intérimaire fut en bien des points critiquable; aussi lorsqu'il fallut envoyer le Djiba-Naba revenu du front à Doulougou remplacer un fils de Naba Wobgo décédé, le Mogho-Naba conserva, pendant que son fils aîné revenu de Tunis et nommé Chef de Djiba, faisait son service militaire à Salonique, l'administration directe du canton. On peut donc dire que le canton de Djiba était, avant de devenir l'apanage du fils aîné de Naba Zombré, placé sous l'autorité de ce dernier.

1° C'est du temps de Naba Zombré, vingt-troisième Mogho-Naba, que date la désignation du premier fils de l'Empereur au commandement du canton de Djiba. Naba Zombré après Naba Niandeffo est un de ceux qui resta longtemps au trône. Il régna en effet soixante ans.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Une vieille tradition veut que, lorsque l'Empereur a trente ans de règne, il se rende à Oubritenga pour y célébrer le Zom'bika (litt. monter sur le bika).

Bika. — Lorsque l'Empereur se rend à Oubritenga, on fait creuser une fosse assez spacieuse dans laquelle on met toutes sortes de provisions de bouche, puis on introduit parmi elles un homme vivant. Des perches ferment l'ouverture du sépulcre où gît l'homme étouffé. On recouvre le tout de terre. On élève un guéré (trône) sur la tombe. C'est là que l'Empereur reçoit, sans grande cérémonie, ses fidèles pendant son séjour à Oubritenga. Dans la pratique, l'Empereur est considéré comme mort et ressuscité... Aussi lorsqu'après une absence qui peut durer des années, il revient à Ouagadougou la population lui réserve-t-elle un accueil on ne peut plus chaleureux, tandis qu'il est lui-même soumis à toutes les obligations coutumières comme aux premiers jours de son avènement.

Cette coutume est naturellement appelée à disparaître. En tout cas si on était obligé de la pratiquer de nos jours, l'homme serait vraisemblablement remplacé par un coq.

Donc Naba Zombré alla à Oubritenga monter sur le « Bika » et y séjourna trois ans. Son fils aîné faisait son intérim à Ouagadougou et ne manqua pas d'acquérir quelque gloire et l'estime de la population.

Quand son père revint il fallut bien donner à ce prince qui avait déjà goûté la « joie » de régner et acquis de sérieuses qualités au commandement, un poste de choix. Djiba fut choisi. A dater de cette époque dès que le premier fils du Mogho-Naba atteint l'âge de raison il est nommé Djiba-Naba et l'on comprend aisément que Naba Kom intronisé assez jeune ait été un moment très inquiet de l'absence de ses deux enfants envoyés au Sénégal puis en Tunisie.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

La nomination de Djiba-Naba diffère très peu de celle des autres chefs de canton, mais ce Naba est soumis à certaines obligations que nous allons essayer de retracer ci-après :

Avant sa nomination

Avant d'être nommé, le prince héritier de l'Empire Mossi se rend d'abord au village de Zango où il doit séjourner une semaine. Il doit apporter avec lui : un mouton, un coq blanc, un bœuf qu'il remet au Zango-Naba pour être offerts au « tenpelem » (à la terre) afin de lui donner santé, bonheur, etc... Il remet en outre une barre de sel destinée à être distribuée aux vieilles femmes.

De passage à Nonsin, il donne un mouton, un coq blanc et du sel pour les mêmes offrandes.

Le septième jour il revient à Ouagadougou et descend à Bilbalogo en principe chez le Kam-Naba (chef des jeunes gens) dont il devient l'hôte. Le Mogho-Naba prévient ses ministres et on fixe le jour de la nomination.

Les formalités d'usage sont à peu de choses près celles exigées pour la nomination des chefs de canton (Kombemba).

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Après la nomination

Le lendemain de sa nomination, le Djiba-Naba vient rendre visite à son père; on pose alors un « nagpouré » (coussin) près d'un hangar situé dans la cour de l'Empereur au pied d'un piquet spécial appelé « zandaogo du Djiba-Naba ». Le Djiba-Naba devient l'hôte du Gounga-Naba dans le quartier duquel il descendra désormais chaque fois qu'il viendra à Ouagadougou (à cause de l'inimitié qui existe entre l'Empereur et ses frères, le Djiba-Naba descend actuellement à Kamsaoghin, non loin de la maison de son père).

Il lui reste à rendre visite aux Ministres de son père. A tout seigneur, tout honneur; c'est au Ouidi-Naba, premier ministre qu'il doit sa première visite. Dès qu'il est prévenu de l'arrivée du Djiba-Naba celui-ci lui fait offrir : un mouton, du dam (dolo), des gouré (colas).

Le prince héritier se rend ensuite chez le Larrhallé-Naba qui doit lui faire les mêmes cadeaux et de là chez le Kamsogo-Naba, chef eunuque, où les mêmes honneurs lui sont rendus et où il reçoit également un mouton, du dolo et des colas.

Il rend ensuite visite aux Gounga-Naba, Poé-Naba, Samandé-Naba, en enfin au Baloum-Naba où il reçoit de nombreux présents.

Le troisième jour il finit ses visites en allant voir l'Imam représentant de l'Islam à Ouagadougou. Là on lui présente de l'eau de farine dans laquelle on a mis du miel. On lui offre aussi des colas.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

On remarquera que la calebasse d'eau de farine sur laquelle flottera nécessairement un peu de beurre de karité est très en honneur en pays Mossi et ce n'est ni saluer ni recevoir comme il convient un étranger que de lui offrir à son arrivée de l'eau pure.

Le quatrième ou le cinquième jour, le Djiba-Naba se rend à Zoanghna (village situé à 2 ou 3 kilomètres derrière les bâtiments du Gouvernement) et il remet un mouton, un bœuf, destinés à servir d'offrandes à la « chose sacrée » des aïeux, pour le protéger contre les esprits malfaisants et les mauvaises gens. Il ne passe pas la nuit dans ce village et revient dès que le sacrifice est consommé.

Quelques jours plus tard on décide d'aller installer le nouveau Naba dans ses états. C'est tout un cortège de soronés, de tambours, de suivants, etc... C'est aussi une sorte de pèlerinage que le Djiba-Naba est tenu d'effectuer. C'est ce que nous allons résumer succinctement.

L'itinéraire emprunté est le suivant :

Le Djiba-Naba se rend d'abord à Badnogo et y couche. Le lendemain il va à Samba ; là on lui offre de l'eau de farine et, de son côté, il donne du sel pour être distribué aux vieilles femmes du village.

On se demandera sans doute pourquoi ces offres de sel aux vieilles femmes et non au reste de la population. Les Mossi appellent les vieilles des « nough' pouk ramba » c'est-à-dire des personnes qui, tout en vous souhaitant des bénédictions, tapent les deux mains comme si une puissance supérieure devait entendre leurs prières et les exaucer.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Le lendemain il va à Tensobitenga et y séjourne trois jours. On lui prépare du dolo, on lui donne un bœuf pour ses suivants, une femme pour lui-même. A Nakamtenga où il se rend ensuite, le chef de ce village le rencontre avec un mouton et de nombreux paniers et cuvettes de gâteau de mil (sagbo).

Il n'y passe pas la nuit et se rend à Koubri (c'est le village où les eunuques subissaient autrefois la rude opération de la castration[1]); le chef de canton va à sa rencontre, l'amène dans sa maison, le fait asseoir à ses côtés et déclare à la population qu'il vient de recevoir la visite de son fils (Koubri-Naba est descendant des Mogho-Naba).

Il offre ensuite au Prince héritier un bœuf, beau-

---

1. Les Eunuques. — Les brigands, les voleurs, les assassins, les captifs ou les soronés (serviteurs) convaincus d'adultère avec une femme de la noblesse, étaient seuls envoyés à Koubri, canton dans le cercle de Ouagadougou), pour subir l'opération de la castration. Celle-ci consistait, au début, dans l'extraction des glandes testiculaires jusqu'au moment où un eunuque réussit, on ne sait trop comment, à abuser de certaines femmes dont la garde lui était confiée. Dès lors l'ablation totale de la verge parut un moyen efficace, mais pour faciliter l'évacuation des urines on introduit dans l'orifice de la verge une douille de cartouche en cuivre.

Dès que la personne a subi l'opération elle s'évanouit, on profite de son état pour préparer une sorte de mixture dont la composition ne nous est pas connue. Sitôt que le malade recouvre ses sens il est pris d'une soif ardente et absorbe d'un trait la drogue qui a pour effet, dit-on, d'abêtir le nouvel eunuque au point de le rendre incapable de vengeance, eût-il même des armes à sa portée.

C'est après guérison complète que l'opéré est envoyé au Mogho-Naba. Celui-ci le charge de la surveillance d'un harem ou du gardiennage d'une sépulture royale.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

coup de dolo, puis avant de le quitter, le Djiba-Naba a libre accès dans la maison du chef où il prend pour femme la première fille pubère qu'il rencontrera sur son passage. Le séjour à Koubri était de sept jours, mais il pouvait être ramené à deux ou trois jours en raison des lourdes dépenses qu'occasionne le passage d'un prince de l'importance du Djiba-Naba, à l'heure actuelle surtout où les chefs de canton n'ont plus leur prestige d'autrefois.

Le Djiba-Naba continue sur Kombissiri où il doit être à la charge du chef de ce canton. Pendant une semaine, indépendamment de la nourriture qui doit être copieuse, et le dolo abondant, le prince héritier de l'Empire Mossi reçoit un bœuf, un mouton et avant le départ pour Doulougou, une femme.

Le chef de ce dernier canton dont il devient l'hôte pendant une semaine lui donne également du dolo, un mouton, un bœuf, un boubou et enfin une femme.

A Bagamini où il se rend ensuite il recevra du chef de ce canton, un bœuf, une femme, un carquois et des flèches avec ces paroles significatives « ad locko la pema taon widi, laf ra taon neb'yé ti ya f'ba yemsé (littéralement : prends ces flèches pour tirer sur les chevaux et non sur les hommes car ces derniers sont les esclaves de ton père et le pays est aussi à lui par conséquent à toi).

Sept jours après il quitte Bagamini pour se rendre à Ipelsé où il reçoit le même chaleureux accueil ; il emportera à son départ un bœuf et une femme.

Le séjour à Ipelsé est aussi de sept jours ; de passage à Bedgo chez le chef peulh, le Djiba-Naba choisit lui-même dans le troupeau de bœufs qui lui sera obligatoirement présenté, le meilleur taureau et prendra dans la maison de ce chef une jeune fille qui deviendra sa propriété. Il continue sur Guirgo où il devient l'hôte du chef de canton pendant une semaine entière. Avant son départ il recevra de ce dernier, un bœuf, un boubou et une femme.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Les habitants du village de Kakamsé où Djiba-Naba ne sera que de passage lui apporteront beaucoup de gâteau de mil (sagbo) et un cadeau dont le libre choix leur est laissé (mouton, chèvre, bœuf, cauris, dolo, etc...).

Le prince héritier continue sur Kondrin et y demeure trois jours. Outre le sagho et le dam, le chef de Kondrin est tenu de lui offrir avant son départ, un bœuf et une femme.

Il se rend ensuite à Béré. Le chef de Béré appelé « Rimbissi kasma » (l'aîné des descendants des Mogho-Naba) donnera au Djiba-Naba, un bœuf, un boubou et une femme et l'hébergera pendant une semaine entière.

Le septième jour dans la nuit, les notables du canton de Djiba viennent à Béré chercher le Naba. Il se laisse emmener n'ayant pour tout compagnon qu'un serviteur et un palefrenier et laissant là toute l'escorte de Ouagadougou qui devra le rejoindre seulement le lendemain matin [1].

---

1. Pourquoi ce départ nuitamment et cette sorte d'évasion ? Sur la route qui mène dans ses états le Djiba doit passer sous un arbre dont il devra, étant à cheval, pouvoir toucher les branchages. Tout son avenir en dépend. C'est de ce jour que

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Au préalable, on a eu soin de chercher une jolie demeure susceptible de loger le prince, fils aîné de l'Empereur. A cet effet on choisit une maison bien bâtie et assez grande appartenant à un « dakangré » (homme aisé) d'un village et l'on y conduit Son Altesse. Dès que le Djiba-Naba descend de cheval et s'avance son hôte obligé quitte sa concession pour aller demander l'hospitalité à un de ses voisins ; il a soin de réunir sa fortune ; argent (liguidi) et femmes dans une partie de la maison ; le reste devient désormais la maison du Naba. En effet, peu après l'installation la maison est agrandie, et quelques cases brisées pour faire place à des constructions plus somptueuses.

L'hôte ainsi congédié reçoit dès que le Djiba-Naba est installé quelques cadeaux et des femmes, sorte d'indemnité de déguerpissement et on lui construit à quelques centaines de mètres plus loin une maison convenable.

Pendant plusieurs jours c'est la fête dans le canton de Djiba ; tous les notables et chefs de village, voire les chefs de canton les plus proches, qui n'ont pas eu la joie de recevoir le prince héritier, viennent saluer le nouveau Naba et lui apporter des cadeaux importants.

L'escorte de Ouagadougou est ensuite renvoyée le prince aura longue vie et remplacera son père. En effet cet « arbre » a un don magique et ses branchages s'éloigneront d'eux-mêmes au passage du Djiba-Naba si celui-ci, bien que premier fils de l'Empereur, n'est pas le successeur désigné par « Wendé » (Dieu).

---

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

avec de nombreux cadeaux. Les plus importants « Nayirdamba » reçoivent des femmes et des habits.

On a pu remarquer qu'indépendamment des femmes que le Djiba-Naba a pu recevoir avant sa nomination, il s'est constitué pendant son voyage une sorte de sérail; c'est une partie de ces femmes qu'il donnera à ses suivants, se réservant les plus jolies.

Autrefois Boulsa-Naba, Boussouma-Naba, Konkisitenga-Naba et tous ceux qui étaient en quelque sorte « Gouverneurs » indépendants de leurs États n'apportaient pas leur tribut annuel au Mogho-Naba sans envoyer des cadeaux à son fils aîné à Djiba.

De même les chefs de canton étaient tenus de faire au Djiba-Naba à peu près les mêmes cadeaux annuels qu'à son père.

A noter aussi que les chefs qui se brouillaient avec le Mogho-Naba et que celui-ci se proposait de mettre à mort, pouvaient obtenir facilement le pardon en achetant l'amitié du Djiba-Naba, l'Empereur ne voulant pas après tout mécontenter son fils en faisant périr un de ses intimes.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

CHAPITRE VII

Le salut mossi. — Le respect de la maison des Nabas. La question du bonnet. — Hiérarchie entre chefs. Une légende sur l'origine de la chefferie Mossie.

SALUT DES NABAS. — (NAB'POUSGHO)

Les « Kombemba » (chefs de canton), les Nayir-damba (Ministres et autres personnages de la cour), sont tenus, lorsqu'il vont rendre visite au Mogho-Naba, d'enlever leur bonnet en arrivant sur le seuil de la porte. Ils remettent alors leur bonnet à leurs soronés (serviteurs) ou suivants. S'ils ne sont pas venus à cheval, ils doivent confier leurs « néoda » (chaussures) à un page et marcher pieds nus. En un mot ils se débarrassent de tout ce qui pourrait gêner l'exécution du salut si compliqué des Mossi.

Nous empruntons au R.-P. MANGIN les passages suivants sur la façon de saluer des Mossi.

I. — SALUT MOSSI

« Le « Moaga » dépose tout, charge, chapeau, bonnet, « sabre, retire ses savates, s'asseoit à terre ; replie « légèrement ses jambes, porte le buste en avant, les « coudes appuyés à terre et aussi écartés que possible « l'un de l'autre, les avant-bras repliés devant la « poitrine et les deux mains à demi fermées, le pouce « levé en l'air, frappant ensemble la terre trois ou

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

« quatre fois puis l'individu se relève un peu et frotte « ensemble la paume de ses deux mains. Jamais il ne « regarde en face celui qu'il veut saluer, mais les yeux « légèrement baissés. C'est vraiment une attitude « très humiliée, surtout quand le chef ainsi salué reste « debout, ou se trouve à cheval et dominant son su- « bordonné, daigne à peine lui accorder un regard.

« Les femmes, au lieu de frapper la terre avec les « avant-bras, la frappent avec les coudes et relèvent, « à hauteur des épaules, les mains ouvertes et les « doigts allongés.

« Le grand salut[1], très rarement employé d'ailleurs, « consiste, après le salut ordinaire, à se retourner, à « prendre de la poussière avec ses deux mains et à « s'en couvrir le front puis à revenir saluer son inter- « locuteur.

« Deux indigènes qui se connaissent, se croisent-ils, « dans un chemin, le plus jeune s'accroupit à peine « et commence le salut auquel l'autre répond en s'ac- « croupissant à son tour. S'ils portent des charges, « ils les déposent à terre, puis se saluent. Ils ne sont « jamais pressés. Les serviteurs et les femmes passant « devant un chef, s'inclinent légèrement et joignent « les mains devant la poitrine. Si compliqué que soit « le salut mossi, les indigènes le font avec grâce et « aisance ; ils y sont habitués dès leur plus jeune

1. Là le R. P. Mangin a oublié de donner une petite explication, c'est que ce salut n'a lieu que lorsque le chef ou le personnage salué a donné une femme, un boubou ou un cadeau à la personne qui salue. Du reste toutes les personnes présentes se couvrent le front de poussière.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

« âge, et en tout cas ne sont pas alors gauches et « empruntés comme lorsqu'ils s'essaient à ébaucher « le salut militaire. »

II. — Le respect de la maison des Nabas

Le « Kombéré » est maître absolu sur son territoire. Ses sujets doivent lui témoigner la même déférence que celle qu'il témoigne lui-même au Mogho-Naba.

Cependant, bien que n'appartenant pas à la noblesse, un Ministre de l'Empereur n'ôtera pas son bonnet pour répondre au salut d'un Kombéré. Au contraire celui-ci doit s'humilier, s'effacer devant lui comme chez le Mogho-Naba.

Il est formellement défendu au Nabiga (fils de Naba) et aux « Nakomsé » (descendants des Nabas) et qui plus est, au Moaga vulgaire, de se chausser et de porter le bonnet dans la cour du Naba — cette règle ne souffre d'exception que lorsque le sujet est converti aux principes de l'islamisme, mais même dans ce cas il abandonne à la porte ses chaussures; il garde seulement son bonnet ou le turban. Il ne leur est permis de reprendre les savates et de remettre la coiffure que lorsqu'ils se trouvent à plus de 300 mètres de la maison du Naba et parfois même, dans les centres où la coutume est suivie rigoureusement, lorsqu'ils sont hors de la vue du Naba.

Toute infraction à la règle était sévèrement punie de plusieurs coups de corde, sans préjudice de la confiscation des biens par les samand'kamba du Naba, lorsque le délinquant n'appartenait pas à la noblesse, c'est-à-dire n'était ni Nabiga ni Nakombga.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Il n'est peut-être pas sans intérêt de dire que la chéchia, étant à l'origine un des insignes de la chefferie, le port en était défendu au Nabiga et à plus forte raison au « talga » (Moaga vulgaire). Aujourd'hui elle est portée par les hommes et les jeunes gens, la multiplication et l'installation des comptoirs européens ayant répandu cet article autrefois très rare.

Serrement de mains. — Il est rare de voir un Naba tendre la main à un de ces sujets, et plus particulièrement à ses frères ou à ses confrères (Nakomsé).

Cet interdit repose sur deux fondements : 1° Le Naba doit tenir une distance entre lui et ses administrés, ce qui est très normal ; 2° une croyance superstitieuse admet que les individus mal intentionnés à l'égard du chef s'enduisent la main de poudres magiques, qui ont pour effet de provoquer des enflures susceptibles de se transformer en de véritables abcès.

Ainsi donc le Mogho-Naba ne voit aucun inconvénient à serrer la main d'un « bambara » ou d'un « Djerma » mais s'étonnera qu'un indigène d'origine « moaga » — fût-il même fonctionnaire —, lui tende la main.

Dès qu'ils atteignent un âge raisonnable, les enfants des Nabas ne peuvent plus jouer avec leur « papa », à fortiori lui serrer la main. Ils sont obligés de se plier à la règle générale qui consiste à faire des « kantissé » (salut mossi).

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

***

A l'heure actuelle les Nabas (Kombemba) et Nayiridamba (Ministres de l'Empereur) comprennent l'inutilité de pareilles marques de méfiance; aussi, s'ils continuent à se montrer moins familiers avec leurs parents (frères, oncles et fils — parce qu'ils les considèrent comme des concurrents), ils tendent les premiers la main aux autres Mossi de quelque condition et aux étrangers.

Les réceptions chez les Nabas. — 1° Chez le Mogho-Naba. — Jusqu'à présent et malgré près de trente-cinq ans d'occupation française, la façon de recevoir chez l'Empereur, — qui échoit, empressons-nous de le dire, à ses serviteurs — a très peu varié. — Les fonctionnaires de l'administration et du commerce originaires du pays sont encore traités sur le même pied que leurs compatriotes moins évolués. Non seulement ils sont tenus de faire le « kantissé » (salut mossi) tel qu'il est décrit par le R. P. Mangin, mais encore ils doivent après cela s'asseoir par terre, ce qui n'est guère commode pour des costumes européens. Les étrangers (Bambaras, Djermas, voire même les Gourounsi) reçoivent des sièges : c'est que les soronés ne reconnaissent pas en eux des compatriotes.

2° Chez les Ministres. — Tous les Ministres de l'Empereur possèdent à l'heure actuelle des maisons très confortables et de magnifiques salons avec fauteuils « morris » et chaises pliantes. Ces sièges sont offerts avec empressement aux visiteurs de quelque considération tandis que des bancs mesurant de 2 à 3 mètres de longueur sont réservés aux « petits messieurs » (boys, cuisiniers, gardes de cercle, notables, etc...).

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

3° Chez les Kombemba. — Aux visiteurs de marque sont toujours réservés des bancs ou à défaut des nattes, Quelques-uns d'entre eux possèdent même quelques chaises ordinaires et une à deux chaises pliantes.

IV. — Les hiérarchies entre Ministres et fonctionnaires de la Cour du Roi des Mossi

1° — Les Hiérarchies.

Il existe une sorte de hiérarchie entre Nabas. Tel chef doit se décoiffer pour saluer tel autre parce qu'il est le « petit frère » (Yaoua) ou parce qu'il se trouve en présence d'un chef plus considéré que lui (par exemple les petits « Dima ») (petits rois).

Il est excessivement difficile d'établir la hiérarchie qui existe entre les Kombemba en raison même de leur nombre, mais ils la respectent encore aujourd'hui ; il serait malaisé d'entreprendre de pareilles recherches qui, si elles peuvent avoir un intérêt local, grossiraient sans profit notre travail.

Ce qui va suivre ne concernera exclusivement que les Ministres et autres fonctionnaires de la Cour de l'Empereur.

a) Avant la pénétration française, les rapports des Ministres entre eux.

Ouidi-Naba. — Premier ministre. Chef de la cava-

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

lerie. Dès sa nomination, le Ouidi-Naba n'est tenu de rendre visite qu'au Mogho-Naba seul. Il appartient aux autres Ministres ses collègues et aux notables de Ouagadougou d'aller le voir chez lui. Naturellement, — noblesse oblige, — Ouidi-Naba est tenu de leur offrir du dolo en grande quantité et de tuer des moutons ou même d'abattre des bœufs en leur honneur.

Larrhallé-Naba. — Même Ministre (gardien des sépultures).

Contrairement à ce qui s'est passé tout dernièrement (mars-avril 1929) Larrhallé-Naba ne doit rendre visite qu'au Ouidi-Naba et, — mais seulement s'il le désire — au Gounga-Naba. Il ne va pas chez les autres Ministres ou fonctionnaires.

Gounga-Naba est tenu de rendre visite aux deux premiers Ministres, Ouidi-Naba et Larrhallé-Naba. Les autres fonctionnaires de la Cour doivent aller le voir chez lui et comme il a été déjà dit pour le Ouidi-Naba, il leur offre du dolo et de la viande.

Baloum-Naba. — Intendant du Mogho-Naba et Grand Chef des pages, est tenu dans les premiers jours qui suivent son avènement de rendre visite au trois principaux Ministres et à l'Imam. Là s'arrêtent ses visites; il ne va pas chez les autres personnages de la Cour.

Ceci dit, passons au fait principal.

2° — Les Ministres et autres fonctionnaires chez le Mogho-Naba

Dans la cour où se donnent les audiences de l'Em-

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

pereur du Mossi se trouvent des tas de pierres indiquant la place des Ministres et de leur suite.

Ouidi-Naba, Larrhallé-Naba, Gounga-Naba et Kamsaongho-Naba se mettent ensemble avec leur suite ; le Baloum-Naba, le Zusobinkassanga ont aussi leur place, etc... Avant d'avoir rendu les honneurs au Mogho-Naba il n'est permis à aucun d'entre eux de se déranger pour aller saluer un confrère.

***

Seuls le Baloum-Naba, le Zusoaba, le Kamsaogho, les serviteurs et les palefreniers étaient autrefois admis à rendre visite à l'Empereur dans la cour de son palais. Les autres Ministres ou fonctionnaires de la cour (Ouidi-Naba, Larrhallé-Naba, Gounga-Naba, etc...) ne pouvaient, sous aucun prétexte et dans aucune circonstance, pénétrer dans la cour intérieure de la maison du Mogho-Naba. — Ils faisaient annoncer leur présence par des « soronés » et attendaient sous un hangar (benda zandé) situé dans la cour où se donnent les audiences. Il y a à peine quelques années, quand le Gounga-Naba actuel a été appelé à prendre la succession de son père, il demanda la cause de cette interdiction et comme aucune raison valable ne lui fut donnée il sollicita de l'Empereur l'autorisation d'enfreindre la règle et depuis, ses autres collègues ont suivi son exemple.

3° — La question du bonnet

Nous savons qu'au moment de sa nomination tout

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Ministre, fonctionnaire de la cour et tout chef de canton, reçoit du Mogho-Naba un bonnet. Sans doute il ne peut conserver un seul bonnet toute sa vie durant; aussi ceux qu'il peut être appelé à acheter par la suite sont tous aussi sacrés que le premier. Il est formellement interdit à un particulier, fût-il fils de Naba, de porter ce bonnet.

Nous avons vu d'autre part, qu'il était défendu autrefois à tout « Moaga » de porter la chéchia rouge [1] (c'était en effet un bonnet Fez que Mogho-Naba offrait au chef de canton).

Sauf Tenkodogo-Naba, et plus récemment Boussouma-Naba, qui ne rendent pas les honneurs au Mogho-Naba, tous les chefs de cantons du Mossi : Ministres et autres petits « Dima » doivent ôter le bonnet pour saluer l'Empereur.

a) Entre ministres. — Ouidi-Naba conserve son bonnet devant n'importe lequel de ses confrères.

Larrhallé-Naba, Gounga-Naba, Kamsaongo-Naba, sont des égaux et se saluent le bonnet sur la tête.

Baloum-Naba, Samandé-Naba, sont aussi des égaux; ils ne se décoiffent pas pour se saluer.

Par ailleurs ces deux derniers étaient tenus d'ôter le pougla (bonnet) et même de faire « les kantissé » lorsqu'ils se trouvaient en présence des trois principaux Ministres.

---

1. Chez les Habès seul le Hogon a le droit de porter la chéchia. Les jeunes Habès incorporés comme tirailleurs ne portent plus la chéchia rouge après leur libération, s'ils regagnent leurs foyers.

1: Delobson FA28 Mossi

Viennent ensuite par ordre d'importance : Nemdo-Naba, chef de la viande ; Poé-Naba, confesseur des femmes de l'Empereur ; Bend-Naba, chef des tambours et toute la kyrielle de petits chefs insignifiants qu'on ne peut distinguer du vulgaire et qu'il serait inutile d'énumérer ici.

***

Lorsqu'il se trouve chez le Baloum-Naba ou le Samandé-Naba, Poé-Naba peut garder son bonnet, mais il l'ôte obligatoirement chez les autres Ministres et doit même se prosterner pour faire le « kantissé ».

A l'époque, encore récente, où les chefs de province de Ouagadougou ne possédaient ni maisons confortables, ni mobilier, les Ministres se rendaient rarement visite. J'ai même vu, certain jour, un Ministre s'asseoir par terre pour céder son siège à un de ses confrères.

Au reste, lorsqu'ils avaient des questions à trancher et étaient obligés de se réunir ils se rendaient la nuit, à l'insu du public, chez l'un d'entre eux.

Aujourd'hui les principaux Ministres possèdent de véritables salons de réception. Ils peuvent donc garder leur siège quand un confrère plus important vient les voir ; ils se contentent seulement de désigner au visiteur une chaise pliante ou un fauteuil « morris ».

Le Ministre de la Guerre. — Le Tensoba ne se décoiffe jamais chez un Ministre ou un chef de canton. Il ne se décoiffe que devant l'Empereur. Autrefois, quand une guerre éclatait et qu'il était convoqué à Ouagadougou, le Tansoba réunissait chez son hôte les principaux Ministres du Mogho-Naba et sa parole était seule prépondérante.

En dehors de ce cas spécial, il pouvait rendre visite à un Ministre, mais dans ce cas un serviteur portait toujours le coussin sur lequel il devait s'asseoir en attendant que le Ministre le reçoive dans ses appartements particuliers (il ne peut être reçu en public).

Là le Tansoba occupe la meilleure place et le Ministre se met à terre et le salue à la manière des mossi.

En définitive, le Tansoba jouit d'une considération plus grande que tous les autres personnages de la cour du Roi.

b) Aujourd'hui. — A l'heure actuelle les Ministres se rendent de continuelles visites. En raison des moyens de locomotion rapides dont ils disposent, ils se déplacent sans escorte. Ils se voient le plus souvent pour le règlement des questions d'intérêt général.

Quand un Ministre se rend chez un autre Ministre il conserve son bonnet, ne se déchausse plus et ne fait pas de « kantissé ». Ils sont des égaux. Cette égalité a été établie par l'administration locale qui leur a attribué les mêmes droits et les mêmes appointements. Il serre la main de son confrère et prend un siège ; on lui sert force calebasses de dolo, puis il prend congé.

Il y a, quoi qu'on dise, une désorganisation politique de l'Empire mossi. C'est de là que sont nées les erreurs commises par l'administration locale et les fautes qu'on reproche aux Ministres du Mogho-Naba auxquels on a laissé pendant longtemps des pouvoirs trop étendus.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

5° — L'ORIGINE DE LA CHEFFERIE MOSSI (LÉGENDE) OU LA FAÇON DONT LES PEULHS, LES YARCÉS ET LES FORGERONS SALUENT LES CHEFS MOSSI

Les peulhs, les yarcés, et dans une certaine mesure, les forgerons ne font pas le « kantissé » (salut mossi). Ils saluent différemment les Nabas. Une légende curieuse explique ce phénomène. Pour bizarrre qu'elle puisse paraître, elle ne manque pas cependant d'intérêt : nous la raconterons donc telle qu'elle nous a été transmise.

***

Origine de la chefferie. — DIEU créa d'abord quatre frères. Comme ADAM et ÈVE dans le paradis terrestre, ils vivaient désœuvrés, sans souci du lendemain. Ce que voyant DIEU fit aussi quatre couffins « hâpidgou » dans lesquels il plaça quatre miracles. Ces couffins n'avaient ni le même poids ni la même forme. Il appela ensuite les quatre frères et leur dit : « Le sort de chacun de vous dépendra de la part qu'il choisira. » L'aîné s'empara du couffin le plus lourd, le second imita son frère aîné, le troisième prit le couffin le plus volumineux, enfin le plus jeune s'empara du dernier et plus petit couffin.

DIEU leur dit « allez par le monde (sous-entendu le

Communiqué par la Mission des Pères Blancs à Ouagadougou.

F'orgeron indigène.

[facing p. 118]

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

pays Mossi) et que chacun bâtisse sa maison dans une plaine.

Dès le lendemain les quatre frères se mirent en route. Ils découvrirent une vaste plaine : l'aîné y demeura ; les trois autres frères désolés se séparèrent de lui et continuèrent leur chemin jusqu'à ce que chacun ait trouvé un endroit pour s'y installer.

C'est alors que s'opérèrent les miracles suivants :

1° Le forgeron (sayan en Mossi). — Dès son réveil le lendemain de son installation, l'aîné se trouva en présence d'une modeste famille, de fer en abondance et d'une enclume; c'était le contenu du « kapidgou » choisi. L'homme comprit dès lors qu'il devait tirer de ce fer quelque chose d'utile : il se mit au travail et DIEU aidant découvrit la pioche (wanka) et la hache (laré) nécessaires à la culture des champs. C'est le forgeron (sayan).

2° Le peuhl (silmiga en Mossi). — Le deuxième frère se vit, au réveil, au milieu de nombreux troupeaux de bœufs et de vaches gardés par des jeunes gens de sa race. Il n'avait pour toute demeure que des sortes de « songdo » (huttes), mais était lui-même très propre. Ses habits étaient de toile blanche et il était coiffé d'un bonnet de même couleur entouré d'un large turban. Il comprit qu'il était le maître de tous les êtres qui l'entouraient car il lui suffisait de donner un ordre pour qu'on lui apportât des calebasses pleines de lait. C'est le « silmiga » (peulh).

3° Le yarga. — Le troisième frère trouva à son réveil des ânes, des charges de sel, des charges de kolas et autres articles de trafic. Comme son aîné le peuhl il portait un grand boubou blanc, mais son bonnet était de couleur plus foncée. C'est le yarga ou commerçant.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

4° Le Naba. — Quant au puîné quelle ne fut pas sa stupéfaction de se trouver à son réveil dans une splendide maison composée de nombreux « tatas », entouré d'une véritable Cour, de centaines de courtisans, de chevaux et de palefreniers. Il vit venir à lui tout un peuple se prosternant et faisant le salut mossi tel qu'il est pratiqué aujourd'hui. Il possédait en outre un sérail. Il se reconnut le maître incontesté de ce peuple entier. C'est le Naba.

***

Mais ces quatre frères ne pouvaient rester ainsi sans nouvelles l'un de l'autre. L'aîné, le forgeron, se dit un jour : « Je vais entreprendre un voyage en vue de « retrouver mes frères et de savoir ce qu'ils sont devenus ». Il se mit en route, ayant eu soin au préalable de se munir de quelques outils de sa fabrication. A son arrivée dans le village, il eut grand'peine à se frayer un passage au milieu des troupeaux de bœufs et de leurs gardiens. Il réussit à se faire présenter au maître du logis, propriétaire de tant de richesses et reconnut son frère le peulh. Celui-ci le reçut comme il convient et lui fit servir des mets copieux dans la composition desquels le lait entrait pour une grande part.

Après s'être reposé, le forgeron fit part au peulh de l'objet de son voyage. Le peulh décida d'accompagner son frère. Ils partirent donc dès l'aube, le forgeron avec sa charge de « dabas » (wanksé) et le peuhl suivi de quelques bœufs et de nombreux porteurs de calebasses de lait pour la route. A la nuit tombante ils arrivèrent au village de leur frère le « yarga », qu'ils eurent peine à reconnaître. Ils croquèrent pour la première fois le « cola » (gouré) qu'on leur dit provenir de « Komnoré » (bord de grandes rivières). Bref le « yarga » réserva à ses aînés une réception digne.

Lorsque le forgeron et le peuhl eurent fait connaître à leur frère qu'ils étaient seulement venus s'enquérir de sa santé et qu'ils avaient l'intention de poursuivre leur route le lendemain matin à la recherche de leur plus jeune frère, le « yarga » décida à son tour de se joindre à eux. Ils se mirent donc tous trois en route avec de nombreux suivants. Le « yarga » chargea un âne de sel dans le but d'en vendre une partie aux gens qu'il rencontrerait et de donner le reste à son jeune frère.

Ils furent saisis d'admiration et de crainte à la fois en arrivant devant la maison du « puîné ». Ils avaient appris en route — sans y ajouter foi — que leur frère était devenu « grand Naba », qu'il commandait à de nombreux sujets et qu'il leur serait difficile de s'approcher du trône sur lequel il était assis. Contrairement à ce qu'ils pensaient, tout se passa comme cela leur avait été prédit. Ils éprouvèrent de sérieuses difficultés à s'affranchir du protocole sévère de la Cour, furent repoussés par des « sogonés », bousculés par des palefreniers et durent attendre des heures entières que Sa Majesté le « Naba » daignât enfin leur donner audience comme au plus humble de ses sujets, car malgré leurs affirmations les courtisans du Naba ne crurent pas un seul instant qu'un lien de parenté pût exister entre ces étrangers et celui qu'ils adoraient comme un « dieu ».

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Des roulements de tambours annoncèrent enfin la sortie du potentat. Quand il s'assit sur son trône (guéré), bien que saisis d'admiration pour sa grandeur, la « jalousie » naquit dans le cœur des trois aînés. Ils se questionnèrent du regard; devaient-ils s'abaisser jusqu'à imiter les sujets de leur frère ? Voici ce qui se passa : le forgeron s'assit à terre mais il n'imita pas le salut mossi : il se contenta de frapper le sol avec son « zanré » : le peulh plus fier s'accroupit, tendit le bras droit en avant, ferma le poing puis prononça légèrement ces paroles : « lafibé raoua, gang'bélafi (litt. bonjour homme, est-ce que tu te portes bien ?). Il avait gardé son bonnet sur la tête mais avait abandonné à la porte d'entrée ses « néoda » (chaussures) à la fois par peur et par respect; quant au « yarga » plus voisin du Naba, il s'assit à terre, ploya un peu les jambes, s'inclina légèrement et frotta doucement les deux mains l'une contre l'autre en guise de salut. Il avait lui aussi laissé, en entrant, ses néoda, mais avait conservé le bonnet sur la tête comme son aîné le peulh.

Le Naba les fit conduire chez un de ses Ministres et pendant plusieurs jours il leur fit servir des repas copieux et leur distribua de nombreux cadeaux.

En retour le forgeron remit au Naba une charge de wanksé (pioches) pour la culture des champs, le peulh lui fit don de quelques bœufs et le yarga d'une barre de sel.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Enfin ils se décidèrent à quitter leur jeune frère pour se rendre dans leurs villages respectifs. En cours de route ils tinrent conseil et prirent le parti de s'installer sur le territoire du Naba. Ils s'assureraient ainsi sa protection. Le « peulh » multiplierait ses bœufs en devenant le gardien de ceux appartenant aux Mossi, le yarga pourrait écouler plus facilement son sel et vendre ses kolas : quant au forgeron il fabriquerait beaucoup d'instruments aratoires pour la défrichement des vastes domaines incultes ou insuffisamment cultivés faute d'outils.

Ils fixèrent la date de leur retour. Le Naba les reçut à nouveau très chaleureusement mais ils ne se montrèrent pas plus déférents que la première fois envers le « Naba ».

Et la légende de conclure que c'est la raison pour laquelle le « peulh » et le « yarga » ont conservé leur esprit d'indépendance. Quant au forgeron, demeuré plus pauvre, il se plie à certaines règles coutumières communes à tous les Mossi, sans jamais quitter cependant son atelier de travail pour saluer le Naba lorsqu'il passe ; il se contente, comme il a déjà été dit, de frapper son « zanré » contre l'enclume, comme autrefois il frappa le sol en guise de salutation.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

CHAPITRE VIII

Les coutumes. — Intronisation du surnom.

Décès d'un Mogho-Naba

Le décès d'un Mogho-Naba est gardé secret jusqu'à l'arrivée à Ouagadougou du « Tansoba », qu'on prévient à temps sitôt que la maladie s'aggrave. A l'arrivée du Tansoba, on prévient le public que le « Bougsaré kimé », c'est-à-dire que le « feu s'est éteint ».

Les personnages chargés de l'enterrement sont :

Pazany'ting'soba (croque-mort), Tampouy-Naba, Kassiri-Naba, Benghin-Naba, Toghin-Naba, Ganin-Naba, Tanghin-Naba.

Aménagement du tombeau. — La fosse destinée à recevoir les restes mortels du Roi est une véritable case souterraine.

Avant d'amener le Roi à sa dernière demeure [1], on met dans le tombeau :

Deux peaux de moutons ou « gando », des « nagpouya » ou coussins, des « fourkamsé » ou traversins, et un zoukougré, tout en cuir; le tout est disposé et arrangé comme pour recevoir le chef au repos.

Après avoir baigné le défunt (Naba-Siguiri, père du Mogho-Naba actuel, a été baigné par des mara-

1. Le corps est placé dans une ou plusieurs peaux de bœuf.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

bouts, étant fils d'un Naba qui fut croyant), on l'habille tout en blanc. Il y a dans la maison de tout Mogho-Naba un coin de mur orné d'assez jolis dessins, c'est par là que le Mogho-Naba mort passe pour aller au tombeau. La vision de ce coin peu fréquenté rappelle au chef vivant la fin de tout être mortel et lui fait savoir que, s'il a remplacé quelqu'un, on le remplacera lui aussi un jour, puisque le coin doit devenir une ouverture destinée à laisser passer son corps à la fin de ses jours.

Indépendamment des habits dont on le revêt, on met à côté de lui dans la fosse :

Un boubou blanc replié (fou yorgo).

Une culotte (kourga).

Une couverture (fou gobga).

Une paire de babouches (néoda).

Un petit couteau (souga).

Un sabre (zangoégo).

Une gourde de dolo (dam), une calebasse recouvre le goulot de celle-ci, un petit « leppré » (dessus de plat).

Une barre de sel (yamsem).

Une calebasse de cent kolas (gouré wamdé).

Un sac cousu renfermant des cauris (liguidi ne yolmoumdi).

Des parements de « napaga » (« douamba » et « zuyan).

Voire du tabac, si le chef était fumeur ou s'il chiquait.

Le croque-mort, avant de se retirer, peut prendre le sel, des kolas et de la viande.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

L'enterrement terminé, on fait le tour de la maison du défunt.

Il convient de dire qu'avant l'enterrement, et même dès que la nouvelle du décès du Roi est connue, toutes les femmes qui ont des enfants prennent la fuite, de peur que leur fils ne soit fait « kourita. »

Le « kourita » est un enfant du défunt qui doit porter le nom de ce dernier, qu'on exile et qui ne doit pas voir durant sa vie le nouveau Mogho-Naba. Avant que l'Empereur soit représenté sur la terre par son kourita, on ne peut désigner son remplaçant. C'est ce qui explique le sauve-qui-peut général de toutes les femmes-mères.

Le kourita

Ainsi que nous venons de le voir, l'enfant qu'on fait « kourita » est exilé, il ne compte plus dans la famille. Il est Naba lui-même et ne peut voir le nouvel Empereur.

Ses autres frères peuvent lui rendre visite, comme à son tour il peut aller les voir.

1° On baigne le kourita avec le reste de l'eau qui a servi à laver le Roi défunt ;

2° On le fait passer par le même « vonré » (ouverture) que le corps du Naba mort ;

3° On lui donne la femme avec laquelle le chef a eu ses dernières relations avant que la maladie ne le terrasse.

4° Le cheval que le Roi défunt montait tous les vendredis lui est également offert ;

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

5° On l'habille des derniers vêtements du mort.

On lui donne un ou deux serviteurs, autant de palefreniers et on le remet à Kilwin-Naba (chef d'un hameau à côté de Bissiga) à 3 kilomètres de Ouagadougou) qui doit l'héberger pendant un mois environ.

Autrefois, la puissance d'un kourita était presque sans limite. En effet, pendant son séjour à Kilwin, il avait le droit de piller, de tout ravager et de vivre en véritable potentat. Il ne manquait naturellement pas de bonnes volontés pour l'aider à spolier les biens des malheureux Mossi. Le « kourita » faisait des tournées dans beaucoup de cantons où les « Kombemba » (pluriel de Kombéré), lui rendaient tous les honneurs dus au Mogho-Naba et c'est au cours de ces randonnées qu'il se choisissait une résidence définitive.

Le nouveau Mogho-Naba est tenu de donner satisfaction aux désirs du « kourita », sous peine de recevoir la visite de ce dernier, présage de malheur.

Les Mossi croient, en effet, que si le « kourita » rendait visite au nouveau Mogho-Naba, ce dernier mourrait.

XI. — De l'intronisation. — Avant et après

Nous l'avons déjà vu, l'enterrement achevé, on fait le tour de la maison du Roi défunt. On fait ensuite convoquer à Ouagadougou :

1° Loumbila-Naba.

2° Saponé-Naba.

3° Ouagadougou-Naba (ce dernier réside à Ouagadougou).

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

4° Zagtouli-Naba.
5° Bingo-Naba.
6° Gnimdi-Naba.
7° Sabtenga-Naba.

Tous ces personnages sont accompagnés de quantité d'hommes armés de fusils et de flèches. Ils font halte devant le « paghnoré » (porte des femmes) et s'y couchent. Ils sont devenus les surveillants de la maison royale.

A ce moment, les candidats à la dignité de Mogho-Naba sont tous présents à Ouagadougou; chacun rend des visites aux Ministres et leur fait force cadeaux. Le cas est assez fréquent où il y a concurrence, mais en principe, c'est le premier fils du Roi qui est appelé à remplacer son père.

Le jour de la nomination, on mène le « Nabiga » (de Naba : chef, biga : fils) chez le Samandé-Naba où les ministres tiennent conseil. S'ils sont unanimes à nommer un « Nabiga » on le fait sortir de la case où il attendait anxieux et on lui annonce que le Oubritenga, le Zound'wéogo, le Koudtenga, etc... sont sa propriété (c'est-à-dire qu'il est reconnu seul détenteur du pouvoir) et qu'il commande seul à tous les territoires que nous venons d'énumérer. Ceci se passe d'ordinaire le soir. Le matin le nouveau Mogho-Naba s'habille et monte à cheval devant le « paghnoré » (porte des femmes); le Kalzi-Naba prend la bride du cheval et amène le nouvel élu devant le Loumbila-Naba et dit à ce dernier et à ses suivants : Oubritenga Ramba, adi Naba, adi Kouda » (Gens de Oubritenga, voici votre maître).

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

On l'amène ensuite au Saponé-Naba et on dit à ce dernier et à ses suivants : « Koud'tinga Ramba, adi Naba, adi Kouda (gens de Koud'tinga, voilà votre maître).

Le nouveau chef est présenté au Zagtouli-Naba et au Ouagadougou-Naba, à qui on dit : « Naba Rimba Tenga Ramba, adi Naba, adi Kouda » (Gens de Rimbatenga, voilà votre maître).

Enfin aux autres chefs qui restent on dit : Zound'-wéogo ramba, adi Naba, adi Kouda (voilà votre maître).

Le Mogho-Naba rentre dans la maison. Il est Roi.

Peu après, il sort et s'asseoit à l'ombre d'un arbre chez le Samandé-Nabila. Les « doudissi » jouent ensemble et la population entière pousse des cris de joie.

Le Ouidi-Naba, le Tansoba et les autres Ministres et personnages importants viennent présenter leurs hommages et lui jurer fidélité et soumission. Chacun fait profession de foi.

Le soir, le nouveau Naba quitte la maison de Samandé-Nabila et va passer la nuit chez Ouagadougou-Naba.

Le lendemain il va à Passepanga (littéralement : passé : ajouter, augmenter; panga, force, pouvoir).

Là, tous les descendants des Mogho-Naba et les autres chefs vont le saluer.

A Passepanga, le Mogho-Naba s'asseoit sous un arbre, ayant à sa droite et à sa gauche des milliers d'hommes armés de fusils alignés comme des tirailleurs à l'exercice et laissant une sorte d'avenue permettant de bien distinguer le nouveau Naba. Chaque

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Naba, avec sa suite, vient jurer fidélité et faire profession de foi. Les frères de l'Elu, même ceux qui ont été ses concurrents, viennent faire leur soumission. Le Mogho-Naba se retire chez son « Gansoba » (hôte) et fait donner à tout ce monde suffisamment de « dam » et fait tuer des « nissi » (bœufs) pour eux.

Le Mogho-Naba séjourne à Passepanga pendant une semaine, après quoi il vient s'installer à Dimvoussé (repos du Roi).

Enfin, deux ou trois ans plus tard, il choisit le lieu où il désire bâtir sa maison définitive.

XII. — De quelques noms et leur signification

Tout chef nommé perd son prénom et il est même défendu de le prononcer. Il se donne lui-même un surnom à sa nomination.

Nous allons essayer d'étudier quelques noms et de dégager la moralité qui en résulte ;

1° Mogho-Naba Wobgo (de son propre nom : Boukary).

Le Mogho-Naba Sanum (littéralement : or) ayant chassé de son territoire son frère Boukary, celui-ci se réfugia à Bassawarga où il conquit les Gourounsi, dont il fit des esclaves et qui sont devenus par la suite ses sofas.

Au décès de Naba Sanum, plusieurs candidats se présentèrent pour être nommés Mogho-Naba.

Boukary vint aussi, suivi d'une bonne escorte de Gourounsi armés de flèches, de fusils et de casse-têtes. Il fit des cadeaux aux Ministres ainsi que tous

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

ses concurrents. Mais voyant qu'on tardait à désigner le successeur de son frère défunt, il dit un jour au Ouidi-Naba : « Désigne celui que tu veux voir prendre la place et j'irai l'arracher à ce dernier. »

La nuit du jour de la nomination arrivée (nous l'avons déjà dit, on met chaque candidat dans une case chez le Samandé-Nabila) le futur Naba Wogbo réunit tous ses Gourounsi et leur tint à peu près ce langage : « C'est ce soir qu'on va désigner le nouveau Mogho-Naba; quand je me rendrai chez Samandé-Nabila, tous, vous viendrez, armés, cerner la maison. Et si, par hasard, je n'étais pas nommé quand je sortirai, je vous dirai : En avant ! N'épargnez personne, pas plus les Ministres, les autres Nabissi, que le nouvel élu. »

La nuit du fameux jour, les Gourounsi, fidèles exécuteurs des ordres de leur chef, firent comme il leur avait ordonné.

Pendant que les Ministres discutaient sur le point de savoir lequel des « Nabissi » devait être désigné (bien entendu le futur Naba Wogbo était d'office évincé), le Larrhallé-Naba sortit pour faire ses besoins. Sa stupéfaction fut grande quand il remarqua, dans la demi-obscurité, des gens armés de fusils, de flèches et de gourdins; aussi ne dissimula-t-il pas son inquiétude au Ouidi-Naba, qui sortit également pour constater le fait. Tous savaient que seul Boukary était capable d'organiser un tel complot; dans la crainte d'être tués, les Ministres, à l'unanimité, le désignèrent comme Mogho-Naba.

Quand vint le moment pour lui de se donner le nom qui devait lui rester jusqu'au tombeau, il dit ceci :

« Kim missi laguem koabga kon bougouss'Wobgo ». Ceci signifie que « cent revenants réunis ne peuvent pas faire peur à un éléphant ». Je crois savoir qu'ici il s'adresse à ses concurrents. Puis il ajouta : « Ni Tiem Koudré Banghe pouiré taloug'pa salga » (un vieillard ayant su bien partager s'est ainsi évité la déchirure des côtes). Ici il s'adresse aux Ministres. Il savait qu'il n'était pas aimé; aussi avait-il préparé la guerre. Les Ministres ne voulaient pas le nommer mais, craignant d'être tués, ils l'ont désigné malgré eux.

II. Mogho-Naba Kom (litt. Naba : chef, kom : eau). — Très jeune encore, le Mogho-Naba Kom, celui qui règne aujourd'hui, succéda à son père, Naba Siguiri, au grand étonnement de ses ennemis.

Il prit nom : Naba Kom.

1° Kom sound Tambdo ti koulg'king lad moaghana. « Pendant la saison pluvieuse, quand il tombe beaucoup d'eau, cela ajoute de la joie aux fleuves et aux mers qui voient leurs eaux grossir. »

2° Neb san toul béogo bi a balem Wendé. C'est-à-dire « qui rêve à demain doit reposer sa confiance en Dieu ».

3° Sandib, laguem koabga ti pigh'pam nionré. Trop jeune à sa nomination, beaucoup lui en voulaient, aussi employait-on des sortilèges pour le faire périr. Ce troisième surnom signifie : « Cent charlatans, faiseurs de gris-gris, ne peuvent rien contre le pigha (roc, rocher), le chef s'étant comparé à ce corps ».

4° Gonpaniendégha kon nies niédga. « On ne se

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Communiqué par la Mission des Pères Blancs à Ouagadougou.

Le troisième ministre du Mogho-Naba (Gounga Naba), au milieu de ses serviteurs.

Ces derniers portent au cou les médailles des adeptes du christianisme torche pas le derrière avec des épines et des ronces. » Fait allusion à ses ennemis, et signifie que, malgré eux, il règne quand même.

[Facing p. 132]

5° Tang'niebga belem mogré pamé wek'balbo. « Le caïman ne pouvant réellement vivre et procréer qu'autant qu'il habite aux abords d'un marigot, que doit faire un caïman de montagne s'il désire avoir beaucoup d'enfants ? C'est de se déplacer de son habitat et d'aller au marigot. »

III. Ouidi-Naba (de son nom Rabi) Naba Boulga (litt. puits).

1° Baning sorr'yoagba n'tilig kinsé la wamsé. « Le gros mil blanc ou sorgho poussé sous un « strophantus » ne craint d'être mangé ni par les oiseaux ni par les singes. »

2° Yel somd'boulgh'tont niédbo. « Le puits du bien ne peut être comblé. »

IV. Gounga-Naba. — (de son véritable nom : Namébrogo Ilboudo) Naba Yemdé (littéralement : hippopotame). Yem deng kouilga ti zimbi datin dem yaré. Littéralement : « L'hippopotame, arrivé le premier au marigot, les poissons s'amusent à volonté ; ou bien, quand les poissons s'amusent aux alentours d'un hippototame, ils sont certains de n'être dérangés ni par les gros poissons ni par les pêcheurs. »

V. Baloum-Naba (Tenga Ouédraogo) Naba Tanga (littéralement : montagne). Une montagne sur le sommet de laquelle se trouvent des arbres est bien vite remarquée. Autrement dit : pour être bien considéré, il faut avoir un bon appui, un bon piston.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

2° Kata laghem koagb'kon sirigh tanga. « Cent hyènes réunies ne peuvent, en aboyant, faire écrouler une montagne ».

VI. Kamsoro-Naba (Ouene Nongué) Naba Niouga (chat) (eunuque). Nioug'nok wendé na pa ne Sabelem Littéralement : « Un chat qui se confie à Dieu estsûr de conserver toujours sa noirceur. » Autrement dit : Protégé par le Mogho-Naba, son « Dieu », il ne peut avoir faim de rien, tout devant lui venir comme par enchantement.

***

Naba GNIGHNEMDO (Mogho-Naba). Naba Oubri, fondateur de la dynastie de Ouagadougou, étant devenu amoureux d'une de ses propres filles, eut avec elle des relations intimes. La fille devint enceinte et accoucha d'un garçon. Les femmes de Naba Oubri voulurent mettre l'enfant et la mère à mort. On demanda à la fille le nom du père de l'enfant. Elle répondit : « Demandez-le à mon père, il doit être renseigné. » Oubri, consulté, répondit : « Bassi yan ya mam lam gnighnemdo. » (Ne faites rien, c'est moi avec ma propre chair.)

L'enfant de cette union incestueuse fut donc nommé Gnighnemdo et, plus tard, remplaça sur le trône son parent Naba Nasbiré.

DU DÉPOT DES STATUES A LOUMBI-RAOGO

Ganlougdou. — Autrefois, au décès d'un Mogho-Naba ou quelque temps après, on appelait un bijou-

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

tier pour faire une statuette en cire, assez ressemblante, qui devait l'être plus tard en bronze, à la figure du chef défunt. Le bijoutier faisait également un soroné, une napagha, un bendré, un lounga et tout ceci était déposé chez le Loumbila-Naba. Cette pratique a été supprimée avec l'arrivée des Français, et Naba Siguiri, père de Naba Kom, le Naba actuel, n'a pas, paraît-il, de statuette à Loumbila.

Le Mogho-Naba en fonctions ne doit pas voir ces statuettes, pas plus que le bijoutier qui a fait la statue de son père. On donnait au bijoutier 100.000 cauris, un cheval, un âne, un bœuf, une femme, un grand boubou, 1.000 kolas et on le chassait d'Ouagadougou où il ne devait plus venir, ne devant désormais plus voir le nouveau Mogho-Naba.

Ces dons qui représentaient jadis, et même de nos jours, une assez forte somme, devaient aider le bijoutier à consulter les devins et charlatans pour prolonger un peu son existence, la tradition racontant que s'il n'obéissait pas aux pratiques qu'ils lui enseigneraient il ne survivrait pas un an à son travail.

Le « kombéré ». Décès, intronisation, etc.

1° Décès. — Au décès d'un « kombéré » on dépêche deux représentants du canton en deuil à Ouagadougou, pour porter la mauvaise nouvelle au Mogho-Naba. On confie à ces deux envoyés un cheval ou un mouton, suivant l'importance du Naba. On attache à la queue de l'animal des feuillages de tanga (voir plus haut, Ouidi-Naba).

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Le premier émissaire, en arrivant dans la cour du Mogho-Naba, s'asseoit en ayant soin de poser une main par terre et en allongeant le bras. La vue du cheval étant significative, et avant même qu'aucune explication soit donnée, le « Zusoaba » entre dans la maison du Mogho-Naba, d'où il sort avec une calebasse d'eau de farine, « zom kom » qu'il verse sur le bras de l'envoyé.

Le cheval est ensuite pris et remis à un représentant du Ouidi-Naba, qui défait les feuillages et conduit l'animal à Widhin.

Le Zusoaba rapporte la calebasse et c'est alors seulement que le Ouidi-Naba dit au Mogho-Naba : « Naba zagl yka sambga le tongalamé ». (Tel chef atteint de telle maladie y a succombé). Il convient de dire qu'avant d'aller voir le Mogho-Naba les envoyés mettent d'abord les Ministres au courant du décès du « kombéré ».

Le Mogho-Naba pose quelques questions de circonstances et envoie les représentants faire le « kouré ». Le jour de la cérémonie arrivé, le Nabitienga (le fils aîné du chef défunt) fait préparer abondamment du dolo, du saghbo, fait tuer des moutons et des bœufs pour nourrir les gens venus en nombre pour la circonstance.

On fait le tour de la maison, comme nous l'avons déjà dit pour le Mogho-Naba.

a) Koupéogo (panier de kouré). — Le « koupéogo » est un panier artistement façonné et dans lequel on met les « foutou » (habits du défunt), des « koursi » (panta-lons), sa « pougla » (chéchia rouge), ses « néodas » (babouches), le « zandé » (casse-tête), le « wed'zouré » (queue de cheval), et qu'on dépose sur un « pé'gaongo » (peau de mouton) dans le « zaongo » (antichambre).

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Une des sœurs du Nabitienga, généralement la plus âgée des filles du défunt, porte le « péogo » dehors et s'asseoit à l'endroit où le chef mort donnait autrefois ses audiences journalières (guéré). On bat du tambour (benda) liunsé, gangando se confondent. Alors, chacun donne ce qu'il a. A commencer par le Nabitienga, ses frères et sœurs, les proches parents, les frères et sœurs du de cujus, en un mot celui qu'une parenté même éloignée rapproche du chef fait offre de quelque chose; généralement on donne des cauris.

Le « koupéogo » est ensuite rapporté dans le « zaongo ». On verse à la porte de l'antichambre du « zom kom » (eau de farine) et du « dam » (dolo ou bière de mil fermentée).

Les « bendas » et autres tambours ramassent tous les cauris devenus leur propriété et s'éloignent un peu de la maison du défunt pour en faire le partage.

Les « Bendas » sont tenus de donner quelques cauris à tout « yarga », « silmimoaga » et « sayan »[1] qui passerait à côté d'eux au moment du partage.

b) Fado. — C'est la part qui revient de droit au Mogho-Naba dans la succession de tout Kombéré décédé.

---

1. Yarga, Dioula de race mandé.
Silmimoaga. Individu qui a adopté les coutumes des peuhls.
Sayan, forgeron.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Le Mogho-Naba envoie des représentants auxquels il remet : 1° un coq ; 2° un mouton ; 3° selon l'importance du chef, un bœuf et 5 à 10.000 cauris.

Une fois présenté au Nabitienga, le premier envoyé du Mogho-Naba lui dit : « Nab'kayé ti Mog' naba yel tid wa pous' nabitiengh'togo (tel chef est mort, le Mogho-Naba nous envoie porter l'expression de sa douleur au Nabitienga) « lad reguib' lokon'wa tib laguemb taba ti ya yel koudgo » (et demande à ce qu'on nous remette le carquois du Naba pour être déposé à côté de ceux de ses aïeux comme c'est la coutume).

Le Nabitienga les remercie et ordonne la sortie immédiate du « loko ». On pose le loko par terre et on égorge, à tour de rôle, la poule, le mouton, voire même le bœuf, envoyés par le Mogho-Naba.

Tous ces préliminaires qui ne sont qu'une entrée en matière, étant achevés, le premier envoyé de l'Empereur ordonne au Nabitienga d'aller se mettre au soleil pour qu'il puisse lui réclamer le « fado ». Le Nabitienga s'y soumet et voilà ce que le premier délégué du Mogho-Naba lui fait dire par un envoyé : « Mogh' Naba yé tid wa reg fado, ya nig'tousri (1.000 bœufs), pissi tousri (1.000 moutons) bouss'tousri (1.000 chèvres), foutou tousri (1.000 habits), etc... Le Nabitienga répond : « Tond ba sin ki a ka bas roumsi ne arzek'yé » (notre père mort ne nous a laissé ni bestiaux, ni autres richesses susceptibles de satisfaire aux exigences du Mogho-Naba).

L'envoyé rapporte la réponse aux représentants de l'Empereur. Les descendants du Nabitienga s'en vont chercher une wanka (une pioche), une laré (une hache), une « goégo » (une faucille) et disent aux Nayiridamba (représentants) d'aller dans l'antichambre où toute la richesse se trouve entassée. Les « Nayirdamba » envoient des Soronés qui reviennent leur rendre compte de ce qu'il y a. Ils demandent pour la deuxième fois au Nabitienga les fado ; cette fois, on leur remet :

Un boubou, une culotte, des bracelets, des fodo, des rouamba (parements des Napagha), un grand boubou, une paire de babouches, un couteau (zangoégo), du sel, des cauris, kalgo (soumbala), nemdo (viande sèche), du mouï (riz), etc...

Pendant une semaine entière ils sont hébergés par le Nabitienga, aidé par les habitants et ses parents.

Le huitième jour, et avant de congédier ses hôtes, le Nabitienga tue un bœuf, fait préparer beaucoup de saghbo, de dolo, tue des moutons, distribue des habits à tous les envoyés du Mogho-Naba, offre près de 50.000 cauris selon leur importance, etc...

Il fait harnacher un cheval avec la selle dont son père se servait de son vivant et on attache l'animal à un piquet devant l'antichambre.

Un des Nayirdamba détache l'animal et fait trois fois le tour de la maison du Naba défunt. A la personne qui monte le cheval, on donne des liguidis (cauris), des habits et la chéchia du Naba, qu'il conserve même à son arrivée à Ouagadougou après compte rendu aux autorités. Le cheval appartient au Mogho-Naba et est confié au Wedranga-Naba (écuyer personnel du Roi).

Le Nabitienga envoie dire à tous les habitants du canton que son père étant mort, il veut aller à Ouagadougou chercher sa nomination. Il demande donc le concours de tout le monde (Ykanda) « chef de carré », 100 cauris, dakonré (célibataire), 50 cauris. Satisfaction lui est donnée aussitôt, sauf lorsqu'il y a concurrence. En ce cas, les villages donnent leur aide à la personne qu'ils veulent voir désigner.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

A son arrivée à Ouagadougou, le Nabitienga rend des visites et fait de multiples cadeaux.

Il offre : 1° au Ministre du Mogho-Naba de qui il dépend 10.000 cauris, un mouton : 2° au Mogho-Naba lui-même 50.000 cauris à 100.000 cauris, selon son importance, un cheval et parfois même un bœuf ; 3° aux autres Ministres et personnages importants, des cauris dont la quantité varie avec la personne visitée ; 4° le lendemain matin, il rend visite au Zusoaba (chef eunuque) à qui il offre également quelque chose (1.000 à 2.000 cauris, un coq); 5° pendant tout le reste de son séjour, il fait largesse aux « bonsramba » (griots), « benda », « luinsé », doudissi », et « gangando », et autres courtisans.

Nomination. — Le séjour à Ouagadougou d'un candidat kombéré varie entre vingt et trente jours (quelquefois même plus). La veille de la nomination, le Mogho-Naba fait appeler le Baloum-Naba et le charge de faire dire au Nabitienga de remettre un poulet et un mouton pour qu'on fasse son « sacrifice ». C'est la preuve certaine qu'il sera nommé le lendemain ; aussi récompense-t-il bien le sogoné qui vient lui faire cette commission.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Le mouton (pesgo) et le coq (noraogo) sont envoyés au Mogho-Naba qui les fait égorger dans la cour.

Le lendemain, le Mogho-Naba, dès sa sortie, fait appeler le Ouidi-Naba, le Larrhallé-Naba, le Kamsoro-Naba, le Gounga-Naba et le Baloum-Naba, et leur dit; « Je voudrais laisser aujourd'hui les « koubissi » (enfants de kouré, de funérailles); quelle est la personne parmi les candidats en présence qui est réellement capable de succéder à tel chef décédé. » Le Ouidi-Naba répond : « Sire, faites comme il vous plaira. » Après quoi le Mogho-Naba dit : « Dans ces conditions, je désigne le Nabitienga, car son père ne m'a pas oublié un seul instant durant toute sa vie, et il serait illogique d'évincer son fils. » Le Mogho-Naba réintègre après son palais.

Le Ouidi-Naba regagne sa place et appelle le Baloum-Naba, le Bend-Naba, le Poé-Naba et leur confirme la volonté du souverain. Ces trois personnages remercient le Ouidi-Naba, et le Baloum-Naba à son tour regagne sa place où il convoque le Sogonékassanga (chef des sogonés) à qui il ordonne de lui faire venir un bon sogoné, qu'il envoie accompagné d'un bilbalga (habitant de Bilbalogo, quartier du Baloum-Naba), répondre à l'appel du Ouidi-Naba.

Le Ouidi-Naba leur dit: « Yelé Nakomsé, Nabaoudba tib leb saonrin » (dites aux candidats Naba de sortir au soleil). « Laï soki Nabitienga diessé à ba sin nan ki a yela mé ti niondi kon and nam » (et demander au Nabitienga : avant sa mort, quel est celui de ses fils ou parents que son père désigna pour le remplacer). Le Nabitienga répond : « Yamb yam m'ba ka niak ned yé » (faites selon votre désir, mon père n'a désigné personne).

Le Ouidi-Naba envoie demander encore : « Là ting ramb yé la me tib kon anda » (Quel est le candidat choisi par les habitants du canton ?), question à laquelle le Nabitienga répond encore : « Ting ramb ka niak ned tib kon yé » (Les habitants n'ont de choix que le vôtre). Cette réponse rapportée au Ouidi-Naba, celui-ci ajoute enfin : « Allez donc investir des pouvoirs le Nabitienga, c'est l'Élu du Mogho-Naba » (Toughin kon nabitieng'nam, ti Mog'Naba yella me tib kon nien). Les envoyés viennent alors lui arracher la peau de mouton qu'il portait en bandoulière et dont ils cornent un coin. On porte le Nabitienga en triomphe devant le tom-boko (litt. trou de la poussière) et le voilà élu Naba aux acclamations de la foule. On l'amène ensuite successivement devant le Ouidi-Naba, le Zusoaba, le Baloum-Naba. Enfin on le conduit sous le hangar où se trouve le Bend' Naba (Chef de tous les tambours du Mogho-Naba) et celui-ci le salue au son de son tambour.

La Zabyouré (littéralement : nom de guerre). Surnom que tout nouveau chef se donne et qui doit remplacer le véritable prénom qu'on ne doit plus prononcer pendant toute l'existence du Naba.

Le Nabitienga, devant le Bend'Naba, dit « Tout le monde m'a honoré, m'a considéré, le Mogho-Naba m'a désigné pour remplacer mon père. Je n'ai pas de « zabyouré » (surnom) mais il ne peut cependant en manquer », et c'est alors qu'il commence à en énumérer quelques-uns (pour l'étude des surnoms, se reporter au chapitre spécial). Toutes ces formalités terminées, le nouveau Naba monte à cheval et accompagne le Ministre dont il dépend, qui lui fait donner du « zomkom » (eau de farine) et ensuite il l'appelle dans la cour, où il lui offre un canari de dam, des gouré (dolo et kolas). On le fait ensuite accompagner chez son « gangsoba » par une bonne escorte (tambours, cavaliers, etc...).

Tous les candidats évincés doivent se raser la tête immédiatement et venir faire acte de soumission dès que le nouveau Naba revient chez son gangsoba (hôte). Il convient de dire que les candidats portent leur chevelure depuis le jour du décès du Naba jusqu'au jour de la désignation de son remplaçant.

Le nouvel élu fait donner du dam, du saghbo, des cauris aux nayiridamba. Il offre également du dam, des Kolas, des cauris aux tambours.

Le lendemain il accompagne le Ministre chez le Mogho-Naba. A la deuxième sortie (le beg sonré) du Monarque, le ministre l'appelle pour saluer le Mogho-Naba. Le nouveau Naba se rend au « Tomboko », crie trois fois (cris de joie) et vient faire ensuite les « kantissé » (façon de saluer les Mossi). Le Ouidi-Naba dit alors au Mogho-Naba : « Tel chef que vous avez bien voulu honorer hier tient à venir vous exprimer toute sa reconnaissance. » Le Mogho-Naba répond à ses saluts et lui fait donner, pour la première fois, un canari de dam.

Il rend ensuite visite aux Ministres et hauts personnages (Ouidi-Naba, Larrhallé-Naba, Gounga-Naba,

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Poé-Naba, Kamsoro-Naba, Samandé-Naba, l'Imam, Daporé-Naba ; le lendemain au Zusoaba.

Sept jours plus tard, le Mogho-Naba lui donne : un boubou, une pougla (chéchia rouge), un nagpouré (coussin), des néoda (babouches).

Le nouveau Naba se défait de ses vieilles hardes (je dis hardes, car la coutume défend de changer d'habits avant de recevoir ceux du Mogho-Naba) qu'il donne à un parent et s'habille du boubou du Mogho-Naba ; se coiffe du pougla (chéchia) et devient véritablement Naba.

Quelques jours après il demande l'autorisation de regagner ses états. De nombreux représentants ou Nayirdamba l'accompagnent. C'est à ceux-ci que revient le devoir de réunir les notables des villages et de leur dire de se soumettre au seul nouveau Naba reconnu par le Mogho-Naba.

La population, pour marquer sa joie, fait préparer du dolo en abondance et organise des jeux qui peuvent durer plusieurs jours. Les notables des villages viennent se soumettre et jurer fidélité et apportent en même temps des cadeaux (cauris, moutons, etc.), variant avec l'importance des villages et la richesse des habitants.

Au départ des Nayirdamba pour Ouagadougou, le Naba donne : une femme, un boubou, au Bilbalga ; au Soroné du Mogho-Naba : une femme, un boubou ; au Soroné du Baloum-Naba : une femme, un boubou ; à l'enfant du Bend'Naba : une femme, un boubou, etc...

Les enfants issus du mariage avec les femmes ainsi

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

données appartiennent respectivement aux maîtres de ces représentants.

Enterrement. — A peu près comme pour le Mogho Naba, sauf en ce qui concerne les personnes. L'aménagement du tombeau est sensiblement le même, avec naturellement moins de pompe.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

CHAPITRE IX

Les deux grandes fêtes des Mossi.

LES FÊTES DU PEUPLE MOSSI

En réalité, il n'existe qu'une seule fête annuelle connue sous le nom de « TINSE » ou « TINGANA » célébrée par les Mossi. Une seconde fête, plutôt familiale, est celle de la « basgha ». Celle-ci prend diverses appellations suivant les régions : C'est le « M'barengma » du Mogho-Naba, la « basgha » pour le vulgaire Moaga, le « Kinkirga » dans certaines régions, etc... Mais tandis que la première est fixée par le Mogho-Naba, la seconde est célébrée par chaque chef de canton, de village, chaque « Ikanda » (homme marié) le jour qui lui convient, de préférence après les récoltes.

A côté de ces principales fêtes chaque village important a sa fête annuelle : c'est une sorte de grand marché. Ce jour-là en effet, il y a du dam (dolo) dans toutes les maisons, la viande abonde, les habitants des villages voisins se rendent à la fête.

Nous ne parlerons ici que des deux fêtes « TINSÉ » et « BASGHA ».

TINSÉ (FÊTE RITUELLE MOSSI) OU NABA OUBRI MA KOURÉ (LES FUNÉRAILLES DE LA MÈRE DE NABA OUBRI).

Origine. — NABA OUBRI, fils de ZOUNGRANA et fondateur de la dynastie de Ouagadougou, célébra brillamment le « kouré » (funérailles) de sa mère. Le « kouré » revêtit l'allure d'une grande fête en raison du grand nombre de bêtes sacrifiées, de l'abondance des aliments préparés et de la quantité de dolo (dam) fabriqué. Comme OUBRI était très puissant, il ordonna qu'on célébrât chaque année, même après sa mort, les funérailles de sa mère « POGH'TOE HINGA » (litt : femme portant barbe).

C'est en mémoire de cela et aussi pour obtenir la santé pour son monde et des pluies abondantes pour les cultures que le Mogho-Naba célèbre assez régulièrement cette fête annuelle connue sous le nom de « TINSÉ » (de Tinga : terre). Elle n'a pas lieu à une date fixe; on la célèbre quand on le peut, ordinairement après les récoltes.

Sacrifices préparatoires. — Avant de fixer le jour de « TINSÉ » le Mogho-Naba fait égorger des bestiaux (bœufs, moutons) et des coqs sur la tombe de ses prédécesseurs.

A tout seigneur, tout honneur; les sacrifices commencent par Naba ZOUNGRANA, père de OUBRI, dont la tombe se trouve à KOMTOEGA, dans le cercle de TENKODOGO. Mogho-Naba fait remettre à LOUMBI-RAOGO-NABA un bœuf pour être sacrifié sur la tombe de Naba OUBRI. Oubriyaogo-Naba (gardien du tombeau d'OUBRI) est chargé de sacrifier la victime.

Les autres animaux sont sacrifiés par OUAGADOUGOU-NABA, représentant la famille des Ninissi (premiers habitants du pays) accompagné des eunuques, gardiens des sépultures (Yad'Nanamsé).

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Pour les Empereurs dont les tombes se trouvent dans divers endroits de la Colonie, des représentants du Mogho-Naba sont chargés d'amener les victimes, mais les envoyés doivent fêter le « TINSÉ » dans ces villages avant de revenir à Ouagadougou.

Anciennement les bêtes destinées aux sacrifices étaient capturées dans les cantons par les cavaliers commis à cet effet. Mais de nos jours le Mogho-Naba les fait demander à ses vassaux.

Il convient de signaler que certains chefs peulhs fournissent d'eux-mêmes et sans aucune contrainte des bœufs. Ce sont :

Komtam-Silmanaba ;
Gombogo-Silminaba ;
Kourgou-Silminaba ; Barkoundba-Silminaba.

Fixation du jour de la cérémonie. — Une semaine après les sacrifices, l'Empereur convoque le TANSOBA (Ministre de la Guerre) ou, en cas d'empêchement (maladie ou autre cas fortuit), KONKOSÉ-NABA. Ce personnage doit répondre à la convocation le jour même où elle lui est transmise.

Le Roi réunit alors ses principaux ministres et fixe le jour de la célébration du « TINSÉ » ; ce délai varie entre vingt et vingt et un jours. Mogho-Naba remet au TANSOBA des nœuds de corde (yoda) qui doivent être distribués par le Ministre de la Guerre aux chefs suivants :

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

SAPONE-NABA ;

TUILI-NABA ;

LOUMBILA-NABA.

Ce dernier passe sa corde à DAPELGO-NABA et à Méguet-Naba.

Il est fait autant de nœuds qu'il y a de jours séparant cette opération de la date fixée pour la fête.

TANSOBA doit repartir immédiatement pour son village dès la remise des nœuds.

Les personnes qui ont reçu les cordes sont chargées de les transmettre aux « kombemba » (pluriel de kombéré, chef de canton) qui défont chaque jour un nœud.

Célébration de la fête. — Le jour de la cérémonie, un vendredi (« arzouma »), les Ministres et autres fonctionnaires de la Cour se présentent de bonne heure chez le Roi pour lui souhaiter le « Tabo » (la bienvenue).

Mogho-Naba remet une barre de sel (yamss'néré) (litt : meule de sel) pour être distribuée aux dignitaires ci-après :

Ouidi-Naba, Larrhallé-Naba, Gounga-Naba, Kamsaongho-Naba, Bougretenga-Naba, Benga-Naba, Poé-Naba, Tampoui-Naba, Bend'Naba et à leur suite.

La moitié d'une barre de sel est offerte également aux :

Baloum-Naba, Dapoya-Naba, Samandé-Naba, Wedranga-Naba.

Ceux-ci prélèvent une petite part pour le Zussoba (chef eunuque) et les Bilbalsé (habitants de Bilbalogo-quartier du Baloum-Naba.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Le lendemain matin, c'est-à-dire le samedi, le Roi fait abattre un grand nombre de bœufs, préparer des boules de sagbo qu'on empile les unes sur les autres pour former des « tahinsés » (montagnes) dans la cour où se donnent les audiences journalières.

Sur ces montagnes de sagbo on place des quartiers entiers de moutons.

A côté du gâteau de mil sont alignées de nombreuses écuelles de riz cuit.

Le Larrhallé-Naba, deuxième Ministre, qui commande le « Samandé » (la Cour), va se placer devant une des montagnes de sagbo, prend une boule dont il fait trois parts qu'il jette au hasard dans différentes directions de la Cour, offrant ainsi à manger aux esprits invisibles et aux mânes des précédents Ministres qui fréquentent ces lieux. Il prononce pendant cette cérémonie des paroles qui peuvent se traduire ainsi : « Prenez ce sagbo et donnez la paix et le bonheur à l'Empereur et à son monde. »

Après quoi le Larrhallé-Naba regagne ses « kouga » (pierres) pour faire place au Gand'Naba. Celui-ci prend à son tour une boule de gâteau et un pied de bœuf. Les gardes du corps du Roi, les suivants des Ministres, les bilbalssés et les serviteurs de l'Empereur se précipitent sur les montagnes de « sagbo » et de riz et c'est à qui emportera le plus gros morceau. Inutile de dire qu'ils en sortent barbouillés de sauce tandis que la moitié des victuailles se répand sur le sol.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

C'est ensuite le départ général des Ministres et de leur escorte.

Chaque « Ikanda » (chef de famille) appelle le vieux de la famille (le patriarche), lui remet un coq et une chèvre — à défaut d'un mouton — pour être sacrifiés aux mânes de ses ancêtres. Les paroles prononcées par le vieillard sont les suivantes : « Youmd yelle n'ta, « ta zagla yel t'm konfo, tif reg kouin gnimassem, la « sounogo, ta pam kodo, la rogom ». « Accepte ces « offrandes de la part de X... et donne-lui bonne santé, « bonheur et prospérité. Protège sa famille. Donne-lui « de bonnes récoltes et des enfants. »

Il n'est pas sans intérêt de dire que, cuite ou grillée, la viande n'est jamais assaissonnée de piment (tiparé) car le TINSÉ peut se courroucer contre celui qui commet une si grande imprudence et le rendra aveugle, à moins qu'il ne soit affligé, dans les années qui suivront, de violents maux d'yeux.

Chacun célèbre le « TINSÉ » chez lui en faisant préparer toutes sortes d'aliments (sagbo, riz, maïs, haricots, etc...) On s'empiffre à plaisir jusqu'à l'indigestion.

Trente jours après la célébration des funérailles de la mère d'OUBRI, TANSOBA (Ministre de la Guerre) rapporte à l'Empereur les nœuds qui ont servi à la fixation du jour de TINSÉ.

Vers le quarantième jour, c'est-à-dire une semaine après le départ du Tansoba, Loumbila-Naba vient saluer l'Empereur. Celui-ci lui offre un bœuf pour le tuer à Widin (Quartier de Ouidi-Naba).

Une semaine après le départ de Loumbila-Naba,

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Guilingou-Tengsoba rend visite au Mogho-Naba — on sait déjà que c'est un ancêtre de ce Tengsoba qui a demandé à Naba Zoungrana son fils OUBRI pour administrer le pays et l'aider à chasser du territoire les Habés aujourd'hui refoulés dans les falaises de Bandiagara (Soudan). Le Mogho-Naba est tenu d'offrir à ce Tengsoba un bœuf et du sel.

C'est enfin le tour de Saponé-Naba (nayrdin) (représentant de Naba KOUDA) et de sa suite qui reçoivent un bœuf et du sel et de Bonsa-Naba Kamsaonguin Tengsoba, Pazani-Tengsoba. Pour ces derniers le Mogho-Naba fait tuer un mouton qu'il fait servir accompagné de nombreux plats de sagbo.

A notre que lorsque les Tangsob-ramba se présentent chez l'Empereur — qu'ils déposent leur « laya » (haches magiques) il leur est tout aussitôt apporté des coqs blancs qu'ils doivent égorger dans le Timpelem (cour).

Comme on le voit cette fête n'a rien d'extraordinaire. Elle a uniquement pour but de concilier les vivants avec les morts et de permettre à chacun de faire bonne chère.

BASGHA DU MOGHO-NABA OU LES DÉCOUCHERS DE L'EMPEREUR M'BA (RARENGMA)
(Que mon père n'arrive pas avant moi.)

BASGHA. — Avant de se nourrir des nouvelles récoltes de ses champs, le « moaga Ikanda » (homme marié, chef de famille) tient à offrir ces produits nouveaux à ses ancêtres. A cet effet il fait préparer avec le gros mil rouge, préalablement germé, du « dam (dolo) ou bière de mil et du gâteau avec du millet ou du sorgho. Il tue des coqs et une chèvre — ou un bouc — et convie ses voisins et parents au repas. Il a la certitude que les mânes de ses ancêtres participent à ce festin.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

L'Empereur des Mossi ne fait pas exception à la règle. La « Basgha » du Mogho-Naba est célébrée avec plus de pompe et c'est ce nous allons essayer de relater brièvement ci-après :

Il convient de noter tout d'abord que le jour de Basgha aussi bien pour le Mogho-Naba que pour le vulgaire Moaga n'est pas fixé par la coutume. Chacun la célèbre quand il le peut après les récoltes.

Sotasgo. — (L'achèvement de la route.) Avant la pénétration française et la construction des routes par l'Administration, chaque Ministre avait une route, ou, plus exactement, un large sentier, qui conduisait droit à la Cour du Roi et dont l'entretien et la réfection lui incombaient. Comme pendant l'hivernage tout le monde s'occupe de la culture de ses champs, on comprend aisément que ces chemins soient un peu négligés à cette époque de l'année. Quand le Mogho-Naba désire se mettre en règle avec ses ancêtres, il en informe le Ouidi-Naba, premier dignitaire de sa cour et celui-ci prévient les autres Ministres d'avoir à faire débrousser leurs « soyans » (de soré : chemin). Les Ministres font entreprendre les travaux par les habitants de leurs quartiers respectifs mais attendent, pour les pousser jusque devant la cour « Samandé » du Mogho-Naba, que le jour du « Sotasgo » soit connu.

C'est un samedi qu'a lieu le « Sotasgo ».

Ouidi-Naba fait un gros tas de plusieurs charges de mil (Kaguindi), et choisit une quarantaine de jeunes gens bien constitués pour aller les porter dans la cour du Roi. Ses autres collègues : Larrhallé-Naba, Gounga-Naba, Baïoum-Naba en font autant. (Nous avons déjà vu dans un précédent chapitre : « Redevances dues au Mogho-Naba » que c'est le mil que lui apportent ses Ministres et ses vassaux qui doit servir à la nourriture de l'Empereur et de ses femmes, les récoltes de ses propres champs étant destinées à la nourriture des étrangers et à la fabrication du dolo pour la « basgha »).

Pour donner du courage aux jeunes gens, des tambours les accompagnent en jouant « pang'rog'kamga, kamba komsomba » (la force a fait naître ces gens, ils sont dignes de leurs parents).

A la première sortie du Monarque (Wend' pous yan) (Dieu se montre), et après que les Ministres ont rendu les honneurs, les charges de mil sont présentées à l'Empereur. Soré-Nab (litt. : chemin-chef se plaçant devant le Mogho-Naba, mais lui tournant le dos invite au son du tambour les jeunes gens à achever le travail de désherbage des chemins des Nabas jusqu'à la cour du Roi. On sait déjà que le travail était presque achevé : c'est donc question de pure forme.

Les suivants des Ministres, les porteurs des charges de mil, qui s'étaient préalablement munis de haches, de dabas, voire de bâtons, font semblant de se livrer à un sérieux travail. Ils gesticulent, ils crient, ils chan-tent. Soré-Naba se rend ensuite sous le hangar qui lui est réservé et là les jeunes gens le rejoignent.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Ouidi-Naba, Larrhallé-Naba, Gounga-Naba, Kamsaong'-Naba vont saluer l'Empereur et c'est alors seulement que celui-ci leur fixe le jour de la célébration de sa « basgha. »

Le jour de la cérémonie étant connu, les gardes du corps du Mogho-Naba (Samand'Kamba) qui ont pour chefs « Samandé » et Rakogdo reçoivent l'ordre de procéder sans délai à la réfection des hangars situés dans la cour des audiences journalières.

Les découchers. — Trois jours avant la fête des Morts, dès qu'il a remis à sa Pugtiéma (première femme) du mil germé pour la fabrication du dam (dolo) le Mogho-Naba est dans l'inquiétude. C'est que les « Kimsé » (mânes des ancêtres) fréquentent sa maison. Force est qu'il se choisisse une demeure plus tranquille.

Il se rend donc le mercredi soir chez Samand'Naba de Kamsaoghin où il couche, mais rentre chez lui dès les premiers chants du coq, y passe la journée, se rend la nuit suivante à Gounghin et descend dans une maison contiguë à celle de Gounga-Naba, son troisième Ministre : le vendredi il va passer la nuit chez Bangr'Naba Sambo. Enfin le samedi matin de fort bonne heure, il réintègre sa maison à temps pour être présent lorsque le Bend' Naba (chef des Tambours) viendra lui souhaiter heureuse année, longévité et demander à « Wenam » (Dieu) de lui permettre de donner de nombreuses « Bascé (plur. de Basgha) à ses prédécesseurs.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Inutile de dire qu'au cours des nuits qu'il passe hors de chez lui, l'Empereur reçoit de nombreux visiteurs et d'importants cadeaux et que les personnes chez qui il descend lui font un accueil on ne peut plus chaleureux.

Sacrifices préparatoires. — Il se passe dans l'intérieur de la maison du Mogho-Naba des choses qui ne sont connues que des quatre personnes ci-après :

Mogho-Naba, Empereur des Mossi;

Baloum-Naba, Grand Intendant et Chef des pages;

Zussoba-Kassanga, Chef eunuque, gardien du sérail;

Pugtiéma, première femme du Mogho-Naba.

Il est procédé à des sacrifices de bétail où le Mogho-Naba lui-même doit tenir la victime et prononcer des paroles sacramentelles et peut-être aussi à l'adoration de certains fétiches sacrés. Quoi qu'il en soit, nous avons acquis la certitude que ces pratiques n'avaient rien de contraire aux principes de la civilisation française puisqu'il n'est nullement question de sacrifices humains. Sans doute nous aurions aimé pouvoir décrire ces vieilles habitudes, mais le secret en est jalousement gardé.

. . . . . .

Célébration de basgha. — Dès que le Mogho-Naba se montre devant le « Zango » (antichambre) Bend'Naba roule du tambour en citant le nom des Nabas défunts à partir de Naba Oubri, fondateur de la dynastie de Ouagadougou.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Dès que Bend'Naba cesse de jouer on lui apporte ainsi qu'à ses suivants du sagbo (gâteau de mil), du mouï (riz), du « dam » (dolo ou bière de mil) et du nemdo (viande).

De même les Ministres et autres fonctionnaires de la Cour qui viennent saluer le « Tabo » (la bonne arrivée) reçoivent du Mogho-Naba du dam, du sagbo, du riz et de la viande. Le partage est fait par ordre de dignitaires, le reste est réservé aux bilbalessé et aux autres suivants des Ministres.

Vers huit heures et demie, les Ministres, les fonctionnaires de la Cour disent « Wennatassé » (Que Dieu nous accompagne, ce qui signifie : Au revoir) et retournent chez eux.

Bend'Naba et les autres tambourinaires restent dans la cour jusqu'à ce que le Sogon' kassanga (premier serviteur) et le « Zussob' kassanga (chef eunuque) leur apportent de la part de l'Empereur une charge de 10.000 cauris et du dolo. (Autrefois un jeune captif accompagnait ces cauris — on le plaçait assis au milieu des cauris) — et leur disent : « Nab'yet b'wa poustabo » (Le Roi nous envoie vous faire ces présents à l'occasion de sa fête de Basgha).

Le chef des tambours verse à boire au Zussoba et ordonne à ses suivants de jouer ensemble « Tompaongo, Wend'kaouss'Naba nioré, Wenna wilig'vinré (litt : Nous remercions le Roi des cadeaux reçus, que Dieu donne longue vie au Mogho-Naba et nous permette de revenir jouer ici l'an prochain).

Avant de les congédier le Mogho-Naba est tenu de donner un « karfo » (boubou teint en noir importé par les Haoussas) au Bend'Naba et un boubou au Loun-Naba (chef des luinsé). On fait également apporter de l'eau de farine au Bend'Naba qui doit la répandre dans la cour. L'Empereur est contraint par la coutume de marcher sur cette eau de « gnimassem » (de bonne santé) pour regagner ses appartements.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Toutes ces formalités accomplies, Bend'Naba accompagné de ses bardes prend congé. La fête est terminée. Les jours qui suivent ils vont rendre visite aux Ministres et autres dignitaires de la Cour et reviennent chargés de cadeaux (cauris et bétail).

Tous ces cadeaux sont conservés par le Bend'Naba ou par toute personne désignée par lui et le partage se fait ensuite en tenant compte de la hiérarchie qui existe entre les griots, la part des vieux étant toujours plus considérable que celle des jeunes.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

CHAPITRE X

Les femmes des Nabas. — Les sogonés.
La Pogslouré.

NABA WARGA ET ORIGINE DES SOGONÉS

Naba Warga était en conflit constant avec le Riziam-Naba, celui qui porta le nom de Mamzi (moi, je ne sais pas). Il dut se porter lui-même sur le champ de bataille, et, pendant cinq ans, ne put vaincre son ennemi retranché sur une montagne et bien secondé par les habitants du lieu.

Warga, après avoir employé vainement tous les moyens en son pouvoir pour vaincre son ennemi, fit couper à ras du sol toutes les récoltes qui arrivaient presque à maturité, capturer tous les animaux qui se hasardaient à descendre de la montagne ; en un mot il ravagea le pays.

Il fit si bien qu'à la fin, pressés par la famine, les habitants de la montagne durent choisir entre la vie du chef qu'ils avaient sous leur toit et la leur : Mamzi fut donc livré et mis aux fers à SAPONÉ [1].

Pendant les cinq années que dura cette rude campagne, Naba Warga, les guerriers mis à part, n'avait pour le servir qu'un jeune garçon, n'ayant pas été accompagné de femmes. Cet enfant lui servait de cui-

1. Chef-lieu de canton dans la circonscription de Ouagadougou.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

sinier et de boy ; en un mot il remplissait l'office de femme, si bien que Warga conclut qu'il était digne d'intérêt et se promit de le récompenser.

Rentré dans ses états, il libéra ce fidèle serviteur après lui avoir, au préalable, donné une femme. Mais, il pensa que plusieurs enfants dans sa cour pouvaient lui rendre les mêmes services ; aussi ordonna-t-il leur recrutement en grand : ce furent les « sogonés ».

Tout garçon recruté comme sogoné s'attend à recevoir une femme, fût-elle de petit prix, à sa libération.

Les « sogonés » sont considérés au même titre que les femmes « Napagba » dont ils portent les ornements. Une rangée de bracelets aux poignets distingue en effet la « napagba » et le « sogoné » de la femme libre.

Leur rôle consiste à servir le Naba. Ce sont eux qui forment un demi-cercle autour du Naba à ses sorties ; l'accompagnent dans ses petites promenades, portent le sceptre et tous les signes distinctifs de la chefferie. Ils servent également à boire au Naba, l'éventent pendant ses siestes à l'aide d'éventails appelés « fika » ; ils font le lit ou plutôt la couchette et enfin quelques commissions. Aussi bien ne voit-on jamais un Naba envoyer une autre personne qu'un sogoné faire une commission à ses femmes.

Le sogoné n'a pas le droit de porter la culotte. Il porte une sorte de petit caleçon appelé « benda ». Tous les Nanamsé (plur. de Naba) ont suivi l'exemple de Naba Warga et, de nos jours, le moindre « kombéré » n'a pas moins d'une dizaine de « sogonés ».

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Le napogré. — Conditions générales. — Nombre actuel des femmes du Mogho-Naba. Parures, etc...

Selon que la « Napagha » (femme de Naba) est destinée au Chef lui-même, à un de ses frères ou fils, les leçons de « Napogré » se donnent soit chez la « Pugtiéma (première femme du Naba) soit chez un des vieux « Nabissi ».

On fait chauffer de l'eau, dans laquelle on met un peu de beurre de karité et d'autres ingrédients et, après avoir fait complètement raser par des vieilles femmes la tête, les aisselles et même les poils du sexe de la jeune fille, la pugtiéma ou le vieillard trempe la main dans l'eau, prononce quelques paroles cabalistiques en même temps qu'il ou qu'elle cite le nom des chefs qui se sont succédé jusqu'au nom du père de celui qui règne.

L'eau est ensuite remise aux vieilles femmes qui baignent la jeune napagha. On lui dicte à ce moment-là les devoirs et obligations du napogré, ce qu'elle peut faire et ce qu'il faut éviter.

La nouvelle femme est ensuite parée de bracelets, de « kouaba » (plur. de kobré) et de « rouamba » ou de bracelets seulement. Le chef peut immédiatement après l'épouser ou, selon le cas, l'envoyer à qui elle est destinée.

La napagha ne doit pas connaître d'autres hommes que son mari durant sa vie; jadis elle était tuée sans pitié si elle enfreignait cette règle.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Comme nous venons de le voir, la « napagha » ne porte pas de chevelure, c'est le premier signe distinctif, ensuite elle porte une rangée de bracelets aux poignets parfois même aux bras, quelques-unes des « rouamba » aux pieds — (ce sont souvent les favorites), d'autres enfin des « kouaba ». Ce dernier ornement est plutôt réservé aux vieilles femmes.

Le nombre des femmes ou « napagha » est variable selon l'importance du Naba et surtout les désirs des Nabas. D'après les recensements effectués en août 1926 le nombre des femmes du Mogho-Naba actuel était de 37 unités.

Il convient de dire d'abord que la napagha étant considérée comme un bien mobilier, fait d'office partie de la succession du chef défunt. Le nouveau Naba prend quelques vieilles femmes et des jeunes et le reste est réservé à la famille des « Nabissi ». C'est ainsi qu'il n'est pas extraordinaire de trouver dans la maison d'un Naba des femmes qui ont été épousées par deux ou même trois chefs morts. Si elles n'ont pas dépassé l'âge des plaisirs, elles peuvent donner naissance à des enfants du chef sous le toit duquel elles vivent en deuxième ou troisième noce.

La maison d'un Naba est souvent divisée en trois quartiers :

1° La zagkas sanga (la grande maison) : c'est là qu'habitent toutes les vieilles femmes, les indésirables, et qui ont pour maîtresse et surveillante la « Pugtiéma » propriétaire de la maison où se trouvent les « Kimsé » ou mânes des ancêtres.

2° « Zagbilin » ; là se trouvent les femmes d'âge moyen

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

qui reçoivent encore de temps en temps la visite de leur époux;

3° « Dogoundba » c'est la réunion de plusieurs jeunes et belles femmes groupées autour de la préférée et qui portent le nom de « Dogoundba » (gardiennes de la case du Naba). Ce sont celles à qui toutes les faveurs sont accordées, qui portent les plus brillantes parures et sont vêtues de « godés » [1]. Les Dogoundba habitent la plupart du temps une ou plusieurs cases selon leur nombre.

Chacune des femmes des deux autres quartiers a sa propre case.

Le Naba ayant trop de femmes pour s'occuper de toutes, ce sont elles-mêmes qui pourvoient à leur habillement et à leur nourriture. Elles sont obligées pour cela de cultiver et de vendre une partie de leur récolte. Chaque Napagha a son petit champ de mil, d'arachides, de haricots et de petits pois.

Les « Dogoundba » ont un champ collectif. Elles aident leurs maris qui, non seulement doivent les nourrir, mais encore sont obligés de pourvoir à la subsistance des « sogonés » et des samand'kamba (ces derniers « gens de la Cour extérieure », autre catégorie de serviteurs qu'on envoie faire des commissions dans les villages ou qui servent de palefreniers.)

Chez les « kombemba » (plur. de kombéré) c'est aux « Dogoundba » qu'il appartient de préparer la cuisine pour les sogonés et les étrangers hébergés par le Naba.

1. Pagne d'un haut prix au Mossi.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Chaque sogoné ou samanbiga se choisit une mère parmi les femmes du Naba (dans les deux premiers quartiers seulement).

Il aide celle-ci dans la culture de ses champs et reçoit en revanche un peu de nourriture en sus de la ration de sagbo donnée à l'ensemble des « Sogonés ».

A Nanoro [1] par exemple, une femme apportant à son enfant adoptif du sagbo n'avait pas le droit autrefois de remettre la nourriture de la main à la main. On avait creusé dans la Cour du Naba des trous dans lesquels la femme mettait le sagbo et la sauce. Le jeune prévenu venait manger et la femme venait reprendre ses cuvettes.

Enfin, il est défendu actuellement encore de jouer de la guitare quand une napagha passe, à moins que le joueur ne soit le Naba lui-même ou quelqu'un appelé par le Naba. Il convient de noter, en effet, que le Moaga joue de préférence de la guitare quand il a une réception intime, aussi faire de la musique, quand une napagha passe, serait la courtiser.

De la question de la Pogsiouré ou du recrutement des « sogonés » et des « saman'kamba »

En dehors des cas limitativement prévus par la coutume et que nous allons essayer de décrire ci-après, le Naba ne peut dans aucune circonstance disposer des filles de ses administrés soit pour en faire

1. Canton de la circonscription administrative de Koudougou.

ses propres femmes soit pour les donner en mariage à des tiers sans le consentement des parents.

POGSIOURÉ : de POG' diminutif de Pagha (femme) et SIOURÉ diminutif de SIOUBO (donner dans l'attente d'un profit à retirer).

***

A la suite de querelles de famille ou même volontairement, le Moaga « peut donner ses filles, celles de ses frères et proches parents au Naba ». On comprend aisément que celui-ci ne peut garder toutes ces filles; aussi en distribue-t-il une partie à ses frères, oncles, enfants ou à de simples Mossi qui lui ont rendu quelques services.

De même, et c'est le cas le plus fréquent, tout « sogoné » (page) ou Samand'biga (garde du corps ou palefrenier) qui a servi convenablement son Naba, reçoit au moment de sa libération une jeune fille, parfois pubère, d'autres fois encore en bas âge.

Dans l'un comme dans l'autre cas, l'ancien serviteur est tenu de rendre visite de temps en temps au Naba et de lui remettre des cadeaux (cauris, coqs). Si la fille habite chez ses parents, outre les menus présents faits au Naba, le fiancé peut faire quelques cadeaux à ses beaux-parents, mais il n'y est pas obligé.

Pogsiouré. — La première fille issue du mariage d'un sujet moaga (ancien serviteur, fils, frère ou oncle du Naba, etc...) avec la femme qui lui a été donnée par le Naba devient de plein droit « propriété » de ce dernier. C'est ce qu'on nomme « la fille de la « pogsiouré » et qui est appelée à devenir plus tard « pogsiouré » à son tour.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Si le premier-né est un garçon, le Naba peut le prendre à sa Cour dès qu'il atteint l'âge de raison, pour en faire soit un sogoné soit un samand'biga sans que son père puisse faire la moindre objection.

Cela ne revient pas à dire qu'en droit mossi les sogonés et les samand'kamba doivent être forcément les enfants de la « Pogsiouré ». Le Naba, maître absolu de tous ses sujets, recrute ses serviteurs dans les villages de son commandement au fur et à mesure de ses besoins sans que les Mossi fassent aucune opposition à ce recrutement.

Le sort des filles des pogsiouré. — Les filles sont enlevées à leurs parents dès qu'elles commencent à pouvoir rendre quelques services et sont confiées par le Naba à ses propres femmes.

Celles-ci deviennent, en fait, les mères adoptives de ces enfants et comme telles pourvoient à leur nourriture et à leur habillement. Cela n'exclut pas cependant la faculté pour la mère véritable d'apporter des cauris et des habits à sa fille et même, pour que cette dernière soit bien traitée par la « napagha » (femme du Naba), elle apportera aussi de temps à autre à celle-ci du soumbala (kalgo) et du beurre de karité (kamé).

Lorsqu'elles deviennent pubères, le Naba fait son choix, les plus jolies deviennent ses fiancées et les autres sont distribuées à quelques-uns de ses administrés ou à ses propres parents.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Droits des parents sur leurs filles. — Les parents tout en gardant la faculté, comme il a été déjà dit, de rendre quelques services à leurs filles, ne peuvent, sous aucun prétexte et dans aucun cas, provoquer la rupture des fiançailles ni empêcher leur mariage. Ils ne peuvent, à plus forte raison, promettre des filles à des tiers ni attendre des cadeaux de quelque nature que ce soit du Naba.

Plus tard et dans le cas seulement où il y a entente entre eux, les maris pourront faire à leurs beaux-parents, des cadeaux de faible importance d'ailleurs puisqu'il n'y a ni obligation, ni contrainte.

Exceptions. — Les filles données aux marabouts par les Nabas constituant une sorte de « saraka » (aumône), les enfants qui naissent de ces mariages appartiennent à leurs véritables pères et le chef n'a pas le droit d'en disposer.

Le sort des garçons. — Quant aux garçons recrutés comme Sogonés, ou Samand'kamba, s'ils sont tenus de remplir leurs devoirs de serviteurs auprès du Naba, ils ne cessent pas cependant d'appartenir effectivement à leurs propres parents de qui ils reçoivent chaque année des cauris et notamment le « fougoïbga » (couverture).

C'est qu'en effet, si les sogonés reçoivent régulièrement du Naba la nourriture et les habits — cela est dû à la nécessité qui s'impose à chaque Naba de paraître entouré d'un nombre considérable de pages — il n'en est pas de même des Samand'kamba qui dans bien des cantons et surtout à Ouagadougou à la Cour de l'Empereur, ne reçoivent qu'une maigre pitance tous les deux, trois, quatre ou sept jours, leur rôle de « vagabond » ou de palefrenier devant leur permettre de voler ou plutôt de piller les indigènes. Pendant l'hivernage les palefreniers et les autres Samand'-kamba se rendent la nuit ou le matin dans les champs de maïs ou de mil des particuliers et c'est la rafle; quant aux poulets et pintades qui s'attardent dans le « karaga » (champ de mil à l'entour des habitations), ils leur tordent le cou et les dissimulent dans les bottes de paille destinées à la nourriture des chevaux. Cette règle n'est pas sans exception : quelques ministres de l'Empereur et chefs de cantons assurent au moins une fois par jour — (la nuit) — la nourriture des Samand' kamba et pendant l'hivernage — mais précisément parce qu'ils s'occupent de la culture des champs — ils reçoivent à midi soit des haricots cuits, soit du sagbo (gâteau de mil).

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

D'une manière générale, on peut dire que cette catégorie de serviteurs n'est pas entretenue par le Naba. Le Samand'biga comme le sogoné se choisit une mère dans la Cour du Naba. Il aide celle-ci dans la culture de ses champs particuliers et lui rend quelques petits services (tissage de ses vêtements par exemple) et en revanche cette mère adoptive lui donne un peu de nourriture en sus de la ration commune.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Devant une telle situation ceux qui ne sont pas retenus chez le Naba par la surveillance des chevaux ou par quelques fonctions spéciales, passent la moitié de l'année chez leurs parents.

Il n'est peut-être pas sans intérêt de dire que, pour la plupart, les Samand'kamba sont les fils des chefs de villages des Nabissis (fils du Naba), des Nakomsès (descendants des Nabas et Nabissis) et parfois même les enfants des chefs de canton à la cour du Mogho-Naba. Il y a, sans doute aussi, l'enfant du vulgaire Moaga qui n'a pas été fait sogoné parce qu'il n'en a pas été jugé digne. Pour les premiers la mesure de rigueur qui leur est appliquée a pour effet de leur apprendre à « souffrir pour pouvoir commander ».

Libération anticipée. — Si le garçon (sogoné ou Samand'biga) est l'aîné de sa famille et s'il est en âge de prendre femme au moment du décès de son père, le Naba est tenu de le libérer alors même que la durée de son service ne serait pas achevée.

***

Une autre coutume. — Le ZAN-BOKO. Il y a une autre coutume un peu bizarre au Mossi. Si au cours de ses tournées le Naba séjourne dans un village et que pendant ce temps les femmes des Mossi accouchent de filles, celles-ci appartiennent de plein droit au Naba s'il a été mis au courant de ces événements

Bien souvent cependant il n'en sait rien et le Moaga se garde d'en parler et dispose de son enfant comme bon lui semble.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Mais c'est plus particulièrement entre Mossi que cette coutume trouve son application intégrale. Le « Sana » (l'étranger) Moaga de passage, est invité par les vieux du village à venir creuser le « zan-boko » (trou dans lequel doit être enfoui le placenta) c'est son « zounogo » (sa chance). Il remet un peu de cauris (100 à 200) au chef de la famille et devient le fiancé de la fillette. Plus tard lorsqu'elle sera pubère l'homme fera les quelques cadeaux prévus par la coutume et rien ne s'opposera plus à leur mariage.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

CHAPITRE XI

Du mariage, de la naissance, de la mort.

I. — Du mariage

Nous allons dans ce chapitre nous contenter de passer en revue tous les aspects du mariage dans l'ensemble du pays Mossi. La coutume est partout la même, depuis le mariage des filles élevées chez le Naba jusqu'au concubinage. Nous parlerons d'abord des formes de mariage les plus fréquentes, nous étudierons ensuite comment est réglée la question dotale et nous conclurons enfin par un exposé de la condition sociale de la femme moaga.

***

Les filles ont au moment du mariage de dix-sept à dix-neuf ans. Sauf d'assez rares exceptions la fille de seize ou de dix-huit ans n'est jamais envoyée à son mari, car cet âge est considéré comme très défavorable à la procréation et on prétend même que les enfants nés de femmes trop jeunes ne survivent pas.

L'âge des jeunes gens du sexe masculin varie de dix-huit à vingt-cinq ans.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

A. — Mariage d'une fille élevée chez un Naba.

Les filles issues du mariage d'une femme donnée à un ancien serviteur par les chefs de province ou de canton devenaient d'office propriété de ces derniers. Ces filles sont enlevées à leurs parents quand elles commencent à pouvoir rendre quelques services et sont confiées par le Naba à ses femmes. Elles sont, dès lors, considérées comme étant les fiancées du Naba et sont obligées de se plier à toutes les conditions de servitude imposées aux autres femmes.

Lorsqu'elles atteignent l'âge de mariage, elles peuvent être données sans leur consentement ni celui de leurs parents à d'autres serviteurs libérés ou même à des individus quelconques qui auraient rendu service au Naba.

Première forme de mariage forcé.

B. — Mariage d'une fille donnée par ses parents.

La fille étant considérée comme un simple objet, comme un être sans volonté, peut être promise dès sa naissance. Bien souvent la reconnaisssance provoquée par l'hospitalité ou l'existence d'une dette ancienne suffit pour qu'une fille soit promise.

Lorsque celle-ci atteint l'âge de mariage, elle se trouve la plupart du temps en présence d'un homme quelquefois plus âgé que son propre père, qu'elle ne peut vraiment pas aimer et sous le toit duquel cependant, puisque telle est la volonté paternelle, elle est obligée de vivre.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Le fiancé fait quelques cadeaux (poulets, cauris, bière de mil) et demande sa femme. La jeune fille est envoyée au domicile conjugal sans qu'aucune cérémonie soit accomplie.

Second cas de mariage forcé avec consentement des parents.

C. — Mariage par succession.

Lorsqu'un père de famille meurt, les femmes faisant partie de sa succession suivent le même sort de partage que les autres biens. Elles sont réparties entre les enfants du défunt ou ses frères, si les enfants ne sont pas en âge de prendre femme. Mais, contrairement à ce qui se passe pour la succession des chefs, où la femme est un objet quelconque, elles peuvent choisir elles-mêmes leur mari parmi les membres de la famille.

Mariage demi-libre.

***

A côté de cette forme de mariage que nous appelons plus loin « mariage libre » et qui est très fréquente — car elle compte des femmes de mauvaise vie qui peuvent avoir au cours de leur existence jusqu'à neuf maris — elles ne se contentent du dernier sous le toit duquel elles finissent leurs jours que parce que le retour d'âge leur est une entrave —, il y a aussi le remariage pour cause de veuvage successif. Des femmes ont quelquefois le malheur de perdre plu-

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

sieurs fois de suite leur époux. Elles finissent par être fuies comme des « pestiférées, » car elles ont la réputation de personnes sur qui est tombée la malédiction divine : c'est le « kombwinga » mossi ou le « térédiougou » bambara.

D. — Mariage après demande régulière.

Lorsqu'un jeune homme désire demander la main d'une jeune fille non encore fiancée, il choisit comme intermédiaire une personne en bonnes relations avec les vieux du village de la fille. Si la réponse est favorable, le jeune homme apporte une poule, un secco (dagnopinri) pour fermer la porte, des fagots de bois. Il repart dans son village et revient par intervalles apporter du mil germé ou de la bière de mil et une poule pour le chef de famille. Ce dernier déclare enfin à l'envoyé : « Dites à X... que nous l'agréons comme notre enfant et que nous tâcherons de lui donner satisfaction dès que possible. »

Quelque temps après, le jeune homme revient encore avec une poule, du mil germé ou du dolo pour les vieux du village. Il rend des visites et fait quelques petits cadeaux. Cette situation dure une ou plusieurs années. Enfin, le chef de famille réunit son petit conseil et fait connaître son intention de donner la fille de Tel à X... de tel Village. Rarement il y a refus car il est seul qualifié pour donner les filles en mariage. On envoie alors le jeune homme faire connaissance avec ses beaux-parents. Aussitôt qu'il a été présenté le jeune homme fait un petit cadeau. (Ordinaire-ment on donne des cauris : de 100 à 1.000 cauris.)

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Si la fille donnée est l'aînée de sa famille, le fiancé est tenu d'apporter : Un mouton, une pioche, une pintade, de la bière.

On fixe au jeune homme la date à laquelle il pourra envoyer chercher sa fiancée. Il n'a plus qu'à faire quelques préparatifs et à attendre. Lorsqu'on lui amène sa fiancée, il tue des poules, une chèvre s'il en a, fait préparer à manger pour les personnes composant l'escorte. Il doit donner à celles-ci des cauris dont la quantité varie avec sa fortune.

Dans beaucoup de villages les filles ainsi données ne quittent jamais leur mari dans la crainte d'être maudites par leurs parents et condamnées à ne plus revoir leur pays natal.

Enfin si la femme accouche, le mari envoie une poule à la basse-cour du vieux du village et la femme va rendre des visites.

E. — Les filles ennemies des maris.

Il s'agit des filles que les devins disent être ennemies des maris.

Promises dès leur jeune âge comme les autres filles, elles doivent ignorer qu'elles sont fiancées, et lorsque d'aventure les futurs viennent rendre des visites, ils sont considérés comme de simples individus de passage qui reçoivent l'hospitalité.

Lorsqu'elles atteignent l'âge de dix-sept ans, les fiancés s'entendent avec les parents qui les envoient soit au marigot, au puits ou au marché le plus proche.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Le fiancé choisit parmi ses camarades les plus forts leur fait boire de la bière et leur donne pour mission d'enlever sa fiancée au passage. Celle-ci, accompagnée d'une femme ou d'autres filles, est cernée au moment où elle s'y attend le moins; elle est saisie par des bras vigoureux malgré le résistance parfois sérieuse opposée par ses compagnes ou ses frères, et amenée au domicile conjugal.

Quelques jours plus tard, on désigne des personnes qui se rendent chez le mari pour apporter les bagages de la fille et recevoir les cadeaux d'usage.

F. — Forme de mariage libre.

Le seul mariage qu'on puisse dire libre parce qu'accepté par les deux parties, est celui de la femme qui, n'ayant pu s'entendre avec son premier mari, quitte son village dans l'intention de se prostituer. Assez rarement il y a eu divorce, car le divorce est difficilement accepté par le Moaga. De passage dans un village, elle demande l'hospitalité et vite la nouvelle se répand qu'un femme « libre » est descendue chez une Telle; les jeunes gens accourent cherchant à se faire aimer. On lui envoie des cadeaux et on charge sa logeuse de commissions. Neuf fois sur dix elle accepte le candidat préféré de son hôtesse. Après quelques questions de circonstance sur son origine et ses désirs, un des jeunes gens est agréé comme amant provisoire. Les camarades de ce dernier lui viennent en aide et, pendant quelques jours, c'est une véritable fête au village. On change un peu l'or-

Communiqué par la Mission des Pères Blancs à Ouagadougou.

Trois fillettes Mossi.

[facing p. 176]

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

dinaire; on ajoute à la bouillie de la viande; les poules péniblement élevées servent à préparer ces mets. On célèbre ce semblant de mariage. Mais comme nous l'avons dit il n'y a pas eu divorce et le mari abandonné s'informe de tous côtés du sort de sa femme. Aussitôt qu'il connaît le village où elle se trouve — ce village fût-il même éloigné de 100 kilomètres — il n'hésite pas à se mettre en route, en ayant soin de mettre dans une peau de bouc du mil écrasé qui lui servira de nourriture pendant le trajet et 500 à 1.000 cauris; il emporte aussi un coq; l'animal et les coquillages sont destinés au chef de canton de qui dépend l'amant de sa femme et auquel il soumettra sa réclamation.

Ces sortes d'unions donnent naissance aux trois quarts des différends qu'ont à trancher les dirigeants mossi dans leur canton ou province. Aussi le jeune Moaga soucieux de sa tranquillité, s'il ne résiste pas au plaisir d'héberger pendant plusieurs jours la femme qui a déserté le domicile conjugal, ne régularise-t-il jamais par un soi-disant mariage des situations qui se dénouent d'ailleurs facilement, la femme avide de changement ayant, tôt ou tard, le désir de quelque autre amant.

***

On peut donc dire que si le mariage forcé présente un gros inconvénient : celui de marier la jeune fille sans lui demander son consentement, il a aussi ses avantages et ses garanties du fait que la femme crai-

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

gnant la colère de ses parents quitte rarement son mari. D'autre part ce mariage est de beaucoup préférable au point de vue même de la tranquillité à cette sorte de concubinage qu'est le mariage libre tel qu'il se pratique au pays Mossi.

Position des futurs durant les fiançailles

D'une manière générale, le fiancé ne peut avoir un entretien avec sa future avant le mariage. Tous deux conservent vis-à-vis l'un de l'autre une certaine réserve timide.

A l'exclusion des cadeaux faits aux vieux du village et des cauris données aux futurs beaux-parents lors de sa première visite, le fiancé ne doit plus aucune prestation.

Il est formellement interdit au jeune homme d'avoir une intrigue avec une femme du village de sa fiancée. Le fait entraîne non seulement la rupture des fiançailles, mais encore l'interdiction à l'amant de mettre le pied dans le village sous peine de mort.

Rupture des fiançailles

La rupture des fiançailles n'entraîne pas la restitution des cadeaux reçus. D'autre part, le décès de la fille promise n'est pas cause de la rupture des fiançailles, la famille se faisant un devoir, tôt ou tard, de donner une fille au jeune homme à la place de la défunte.

La rupture des fiançailles peut être prononcée

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

d'office dans le cas d'adultère relaté ci-dessus ou pour cause de brouille entre les deux familles.

Mariage entre cousins germains

Cette forme de mariage n'est pas admise. Il ne peut y avoir union valable entre les enfants d'un frère et d'une sœur, entre un homme et la fille du frère de son père ou de sa mère.

Néanmoins, il arrive parfois — le cas est accidentel — qu'une jeune fille donnée en mariage dans un village fort éloigné ait pour époux un descendant d'un arrière-grand-parent (maternel, paternel) de la même famille qu'elle. Le fait, s'il avait été connu, aurait entraîné la rupture du mariage. D'ordinaire la parenté éloignée n'est découverte que fort longtemps après à la suite de recherches remontant à une généalogie fort éloignée. Dans ce cas l'un des conjoints — d'ordinaire c'est l'épouse — porte un bracelet fait de cuivre et de fer intercalés, appelé « kalembanga ». et destiné à conjurer tout sort pouvant naître de ce mariage, en principe, non autorisé. Le « kalembanga » a aussi pour effet de préserver les enfants issus de ce mariage contre la mort subite.

***

Polygénie. — La polygénie est la règle commune dans tout le pays Mossi. Sans doute le nombre de femmes varie suivant la fortune et la considération de chacun. De simples chefs de carré un peu aisés, comp-tent de 5 à 8 femmes et de nombreuses fiancées. Ces dernières, pour la plupart, sont réservées aux « dakompas » (fils âgés et frères cadets du chef de famille), à condition qu'ils rendent, en retour, de réels services et soient très dévoués au maître de la maison.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Les raisons de la polygénie sont nombreuses, mais la principale est celle de la procréation. L'indigène sous-alimenté ne disposant pas de moyens pour nourrir ses enfants autrement que par le lait maternel est obligé, en effet, d'attendre deux ans ou même trois ans, avant de reprendre ses relations sexuelles avec une femme mère d'un enfant. Aussi préfère-t-il avoir plusieurs épouses.

***

Consommation. — La jeune fille conduite chez son mari est confiée à une femme qu'elle traitera désormais de « mère ».

Quelques jours après le départ du cortège — sur la composition duquel nous reviendrons tout à l'heure — l'homme demande sa fiancée. Celle-ci est introduite la nuit dans la case nuptiale, qui ne sera pas spécialement aménagée, et aucune personne n'assiste à l'acte qui doit s'accomplir. Les Mossi n'ont pas de ce côté la même conception que les Bambaras qui enferment en même temps que les deux fiancés, un griot ou une vieille femme, qui doit aider, si c'est nécessaire, le jeune homme à vaincre la résistance de la jeune fille.

Il va de soi que si la fiancée a été trouvée vierge, le mari est comblé de joie. L'absence de la virginité diminue fort l'amour qu'il pouvait avoir pour sa fiancée avant de l'avoir possédée. L'homme manifeste d'ailleurs son mécontentement à la fille, certain que celle-ci en rendra compte à sa mère tout au moins.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Le lendemain matin la nouvelle femme regagne la case de sa « mère » et elle est rappelée plusieurs nuits de suite par le mari, avant que celui-ci reprenne à l'égard de ses autres femmes, le tour de rôle quotidien.

La question dotale. Le panier de la fiancée

Dot. — La coutume moaga ne prévoit pas de dot. Si elle exige seulement un ou plusieurs milliers de cauris selon la fortune du fiancé, des poulets, un mouton et de la bière, c'est qu'on n'entend pas toucher de dot à proprement parler ni « vendre les filles ». On n'exige donc que ce qu'on pourra un jour restituer sans trop de gêne.

Panier de la fiancée. — Le panier de la fiancée contient les vêtements de la jeune fille, du savon, du beurre de karité, des cauris, des calebasses et des louches. Il est porté par une des femmes chargées de constituer le cortège.

Cortège. — Le cortège de la fiancée se compose ordinairement d'une jeune fille, d'une femme-mère et d'un garçon.

Il se dirige vers la maison du vieux du village.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Les parents du fiancé préparent à manger à ces personnes pendant quelques jours. Enfin on leur offre le dîner d'adieu : gâteau de mil dans des paniers, viande de mouton ou de chèvre ou simplement quelques poules. On leur distribue aussi des cauris.

Indépendamment de ces cadeaux, on remet pour la belle-mère, dans un sac cousu 444 ou 1.400 cauris (prix de la virginité). S'il s'agit d'une femme donnée par un chef, la part lui revenant est de 2 à 3.000 cauris pour un vulgaire Moaga, de 10.000 à 50.000 cauris quand le mari est un Naba lui-même. Dans ce dernier cas les personnes composant le cortège reçoivent : les femmes des pagnes, le jeune homme un boubou.

***

NOTA. — Tandis que chez beaucoup de peuples, la fille part chez son mari le cœur joyeux, c'est tout le contraire en pays Mossi. C'est une véritable lutte pour arriver à séparer la fille de ses parents. Beaucoup d'entre elles perdent le sommeil et l'appétit. Le jour du départ elles pleurent à chaudes larmes et celles qui ne le font pas sont injuriées par les vieilles femmes.

CONDITION SOCIALE DE LA FEMME MOAGA ET TRAVAUX QUI LUI SONT ASSIGNÉS

La femme moaga est considérée comme une véritable bête de somme. Les travaux du ménage, le filage du coton pour la confection de ses vêtements et ceux de son mari, ne sont pas ses seules occupations.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Elle aide son mari à cultiver le champ de la famille et personnellement elle possède des parcelles de terre pour ses arachides, ses haricots, etc...

Elle subit de mauvais traitements et est sans cesse tenue de se plier aux caprices de son mari. Elle ne jouit d'aucune considération et n'est appelée à formuler aucun avis. Seul le mari commande au foyer.

Si elle a le malheur de ne pas avoir d'enfants, elle est regardée avec mépris. Au cours des déplacements elle est chargée de fardeaux. Un panier et une pyramide de calebasses contenant ses effets et ceux de son mari se balancent sur sa tête, pendant qu'à ses côtés son époux caracole sur un cheval ou se prélasse sur un âne ; s'il va à pied, il n'aura pour tout bagage que son carquois, ses flèches, son arc et un casse-tête.

La femme moaga peut, il est vrai, traduire par quelques paroles désagréables son mécontentement des mauvais traitements qu'elle subit, car les Mossi admettent que la femme n'a d'autre arme que sa langue; c'est ce qu'ils expriment en disant : « La bouche d'une femme est son carquois. »

La vie conjugale

Interdictions et choses permises. — Il est interdit aux conjoints d'avoir des relations sexuelles :

1° Après l'accouchement, pendant un délai qui ne peut être inférieur à deux ans et demi pour sauvegarder la vie de l'enfant. On prétend, en effet, que chaque enfant vient au monde avec son lait et que le fait de concevoir un autre enfant pendant la période de l'allaitement entraîne la mort du premier à qui le lait du « nouveau sera d'un effet funeste ».

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

2° Pendant la période des règles. La cause de cette défense est qu'après les relations, les fétiches et gris-gris appartenant à l'époux perdent une partie de leur « puissance »;

3° Une femme en état de grossesse rend des visites à son époux pendant les six ou sept premiers mois. Toute relation cesse à partir de ce moment jusques et après l'accouchement comme il est indiqué ci-dessus;

4° La femme enceinte n'enjambe pas son mari : ce geste aurait pour effet d'indisposer celui-ci;

5° L'acte charnel peut avoir lieu impunément dans la cour des habitations — la nuit s'entend. — Par ailleurs il est formellement interdit de l'accomplir à l'extérieur des maisons ni dans une autre position que celle couchée sur une natte ou un secco peulh, en tout cas jamais par terre;

6° L'accouchement devient difficile, compliqué lorsqu'il s'agit d'un enfant adultérin. Pour que la femme soit délivrée il est absolument nécessaire qu'elle confesse le nom de son complice en présence de témoins. En ce cas si le mari l'exige — et il l'exige toujours — le nouveau-né est tué par l'épouse adultère sitôt après l'accouchement [1].

---

1. Voici le procédé employé : Quelques jeunes mères tordent purement et simplement le cou du nouveau-né : d'autres mettent l'enfant dans une jarre remplie d'eau tiède. Il finit par boire de l'eau à satiété et meurt asphyxié.

Communiqué par la Mission des Pères Blancs à Ouagadougou.

Fileuse Mossi.

[facing p. 184]

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

***

Adultère. — L'adultère commis par les Nakomsé (descendants des Nabas) était puni, avant l'arrivée des Français, par la mort des deux coupables. Chez les Mossi vulgaires on se bornait à chasser seulement le complice de la famille.

Mais si l'amant était un individu sans relations de parenté avec le mari de la femme, on lui défendait de venir dans le village où habitait la femme ; s'il ne tenait pas compte de cet avertissement, il risquait d'être tué.

Généralement, la femme moaga a son amant dans un village éloigné de celui de son mari et assez proche du sien. Lorsqu'elle demande à son mari la permission d'aller voir ses parents, elle profite de son voyage pour passer quelques jours auprès de son amant ou pour envoyer prévenir celui-ci qu'elle se rend chez ses parents.

Dissolution du mariage. Divorce

Il peut y avoir divorce imposé par le mari qui n'aime plus sa femme. Mais ni la maladie, ni la stérilité ne peuvent être invoquées pour cela. Dans ce dernier cas on considère simplement que Dieu n'a pas voulu donner d'enfants à la femme. Souvent celle-ci est regardée avec mépris, d'autres fois on ne tient aucun compte de ce fait.

Le nouveau mari d'une femme abandonnée n'en-

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

tretient et ne peut entretenir aucune relation avec le précédent époux qui, en aucun cas, ne consentirait à le voir, alors même que le divorce serait intervenu de son propre consentement.

Du reste la nouvelle union se fait souvent dans un autre village.

De la question de la nationalité au Mossi

L'enfant suit en pays mossi la nationalité de son père. Tout enfant né d'un sujet moaga est par cela même Moaga.

Tout enfant, garçon ou fille, dépend uniquement de son père et, par-dessus ce dernier, du chef de famille. Dans aucun cas, la mère ne peut donner sa fille en mariage.

La femme d'origine moaga qui par suite d'une circonstance quelconque, épouserait un étranger n'acquiert pas pour cela la nationalité de son mari. De même l'étrangère (une Bambara, une Djerma, par exemple) qui se marierait à un Moaga ne perdrait pas sa propre nationalité. Au regard des parents du mari aussi bien que du reste de la population c'est une étrangère, obligée de pratiquer les coutumes de son époux, mais qui n'en demeure pas moins une étrangère.

Ainsi donc le fait par un sujet moaga de s'expatrier n'entraîne pas ipso facto un changement de nationalité pour ses enfants majeurs ou mineurs restés dans le pays d'origine.

L'enfant légitime prend d'office la nationalité de son père alors même que celui-ci, étranger, aurait pour femme une « Moaga ».

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

De même sont mossi les enfants issus d'un père moaga et d'une femme moaga ou d'une mère étrangère.

Quant à l'enfant illégitime, sauf le cas de reconnaissance qui ne peut d'ailleurs avoir lieu que s'il y a eu mariage antérieurement à sa naissance — il suit la nationalité de sa mère.

Si la légitimation avait lieu seulement après la naissance, l'enfant en souffrira tôt ou tard, son origine bâtarde ne devant pas rester longtemps cachée.

Perte de nationalité

La perte de nationalité ne peut se poser au Mossi que dans les deux cas suivants :

a) Lorsque le sujet Moaga a été expulsé pour faute grave de son village, chassé par ses parents et considéré comme ne faisant plus partie de la famille ;

b) Lorsqu'un Moaga s'expatrie, se fixe définitivement en pays étranger soit pour y faire du commerce, soit pour y étudier les préceptes de l'islamisme. Il est obligé d'abandonner ses habitudes, de faire fi des coutumes ancestrales, il perd ainsi son statut personnel. S'il veut embrasser l'islamisme il change de nom, de prénom et si par hasard il revenait dans son village d'origine, il ne tiendrait plus à être comparé au Moaga dont il n'a plus ni les habitudes ni les croyances et qu'il considère d'ailleurs comme lui étant désormais inférieur.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Ainsi qu'il a été déjà dit, la femme moaga mariée à un étranger ou la femme étrangère mariée à un sujet moaga conserve chacune sa propre nationalité. Le mariage n'entraîne donc pas perte de nationalité. Seules les habitudes peuvent avoir été modifiées, mais il est certain que la femme moaga, même après un long séjour à l'étranger, reprendrait en peu de temps les pratiques et les habitudes de son propre pays; il en est de même de la femme étrangère divorcée d'avec son mari moaga qui retournerait dans son pays.

Naturalisation. — La naturalisation n'étant connue ni admise, les enfants nés sur le territoire mossi d'un sujet étranger et d'une Moaga ou d'une étrangère restent des étrangers. D'autre part, les enfants suivant la nationalité du père, en aucun cas le divorce ne peut avoir d'effet sur leur statut.

II. — De la naissance

Phénomènes de la conception. — Les indigènes n'ont pas une idée bien définie du phénomène de la conception. Pour eux, comme cause première il y a Dieu (Wenam), Maître des Cieux et de la Terre, qui donne des enfants. Mais il semblerait que Wendé ou Wenam oblige des « kinkirsi » (esprits) à se transformer en œuf humain dans la transmission du sperme au moment de l'éjaculation.

Les « Kinkirsi » sont des êtres invisibles qu'on dit ressembler à des petits enfants et qui habiteraient à proximité de certaines maisons ou de certains bosquets. Ils ne sont visibles que pour quelques personnes favorisées.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

On croit aussi accessoirement à la réincarnation des ancêtres ou de quelques parents décédés.

***

Grossesse. — On sait que la cessation complète des règles, le développement des seins et leur noirceur sont signes de la grossesse chez la femme. On sait aussi que l'enfant doit venir à neuf mois, mais l'impossibilité dans laquelle on se trouve de pouvoir préciser la date probable des couches, fait que la femme enceinte est l'objet de soins incessants, et est constamment surveillée par les vieilles femmes. D'une manière générale on laisse agir la nature, mais d'aucuns préfèrent consulter les devins et les prêtres, faire des aumônes et des sacrifices, pour éviter l'avortement.

Durant la grossesse il est défendu à la femme de manger du miel et d'une façon générale, tout aliment sucré.

Seguene-vando (de seguene : porter un pagne, vando, feuillages). Quelques mois après la cessation des règles, le femme enceinte est envoyée chez le vieux de la famille dans le « Kim-dogo » (case des kimsé, mânes des ancêtres). Là elle est complètement déshabillée et on lui attache des feuillages autour des reins.

Accouchement. — Les couches ont lieu dans la propre case de la femme. Il n'y a aucune préparation spéciale. De vieilles femmes spécialisées par une longue pratique aident la parturiente tandis que d'autres font chauffer de l'eau pour laver le corps de l'enfant de toutes ses impuretés.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

À l'exception des vieilles, aucune autre personne n'assiste aux couches. On chasse les femmes qui n'ont jamais été mères, et à juste raison, car la vue de l'opération pourrait entraîner la stérilité chez elles.

Enfin si l'enveloppe ne sort pas en même temps ou peu après la délivrance, il y a certaines spécialités pour en hâter la sortie.

***

Trois ou quatre jours après l'accouchement, suivant qu'il s'agit d'un garçon ou d'une fille, la mère qui est restée jusque-là dans la maison fait sa première sortie.

Elle a soin de prendre à la main une faucille pour se préserver contre les revenants ou autres mauvais esprits.

Les co-épouses de la nouvelle mère et ses parents lui apportent du « safandé » (savon), du kamé (beurre de karité), du kalgo (soumbala), d'autres lui donnent des cauris. Le père de l'enfant fait égorger un mouton ou un coq et préparer un gâteau de mil.

Une boule de sagbo (bouillie de mil) est envoyée en même temps qu'une cuisse du coq à la femme qui a servi d'accoucheuse. On rase en partie la tête de la mère et celle de l'enfant, et il ne reste plus qu'à choisir un nom pour ce dernier.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Choix d'un nom. — Le prénom d'un enfant varie au Mossi suivant les circonstances qui ont précédé la naissance ou l'événement important qui l'a marquée. Nous classerons les enfants en deux catégories :

A) Les enfants ordinaires :

B) Les enfants demandés.

Nous entendons par « enfant demandé » celui né après que les parents ont consulté des devins, fait des aumônes et sacrifices ou employé des moyens magiques

A) L'enfant ordinaire étant considéré comme un don volontaire de DIEU, son nom est donné par les proches parents du père, à moins qu'une circonstance récente ou éloignée n'oblige celui-ci à donner à son enfant un nom ayant un sens.

Exemples : Prénoms communs vulgaires :

Bila, Poko.

Noms ayant un sens :

Passektale : de Passek, insuffisant ; talé, rancune, haine, signifie : Je ne vois pas en quoi ce qui est fait ou existe peut être la cause de la haine qu'on nourrit contre moi.

Parateida : Paraté, ne pas vouloir ; sida, vérité (Ennemi de la vérité, nom signifiant que les hommes n'aiment pas la vérité.

Dimpougoubnoma (litt. Dima, Grand Chef, ROI ; pougbo, suivre ; noma, profitable, bon). Il s'agit d'un enfant issu d'une mère donnée par un chef ou dont le père vient, peu avant sa naissance, de recevoir un cadeau important d'un chef.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

B) Enfants demandés. — Après plusieurs années de mariage si une femme reste sans enfants, le mari consulte les devins, fait des offrandes et des sacrifices, emploie des gris-gris et enfin a recours au « Tinsé » (tinkougri, de Tinga terre, kougri pierre) ou au « Tiga » (arbre fétiche). La femme se rend avec son mari chez le possesseur du dieu. Ils apportent un coq et des cauris. Après avoir exposé l'objet de leur visite, le coq est égorgé par le prêtre et si l'offrande est acceptée, les époux sont congédiés avec promesse formelle que leurs vœux se réaliseront.

Si par la suite la femme accouche, l'enfant se nommera obligatoirement Tinga et ses frères et sœurs Timbila, Timpoko, etc..., ou, suivant le cas, Tiga, Tibila, Tipoko, etc...

Il arrive aussi qu'après des accouchements successifs les enfants meurent. Les Mossi, nous l'avons déjà dit, croyant à la réincarnation supposent alors — d'autres affirment — que c'est le même enfant qui revient ; aussi pour l'obliger à rester lui donnent-ils un nom significatif.

Exemple : Yewayan (litt. revenu). C'est-à-dire le voilà revenu, c'est encore lui, nous le reconnaissons.

Le Nom est le même pour tous les membres d'une même famille.

Cicatrices. — Lorsqu'un enfant atteint l'âge de un à deux ans, on appelle une vieille femme qui trace sur sa figure (joues, menton, front, voire sur le nez) des traits plus ou moins réguliers avec un rasoir. Ces marques diffèrent suivant les régions — (elles ne sont pas les mêmes à Kaya qu'à Ouagadougou par exemple).

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Le dessin le plus fréquent est cependant le suivant : Trois traits réguliers partant du front et se dirigeant vers le menton, un ou deux traits partagent le nez et rejoignent par les joues les trois traits verticaux.

Fostering. — Si une mère n'a pas suffisamment de lait, elle s'en va de grand matin sous un arbre, par exemple le « kamsaongo » ou le « wédega » (de la famille des lianes gohines) pour lui demander du lait. Elle se met à genoux et croyant s'adresser à une personne vivante, elle fait sa demande humblement mais avec quelle foi ! Il paraît que souvent la prière est exaucée. Mais alors il est défendu à la femme de revenir jamais sous l'arbre car elle perdrait son lait.

Le choix d'une nourrice ne se pose en pays mossi qu'en cas de décès de la mère. De préférence, c'est à la sœur du père qu'est confié le petit orphelin. Si la sœur du mari de la défunte a déjà été mère, elle demande du lait à un arbre dans les conditions susindiquées, même si son dernier accouchement date de plusieurs années. Enfin, si l'enfant ainsi nourri est une fille et survit, elle devient propriété de la sœur du père qui la donnera plus tard en mariage à un prétendant de son choix.

III. — De la mort

L'importance des funérailles varie suivant l'âge et la qualité du défunt.

a) Nitiema (personnes âgées). — Au décès d'un

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

vieillard ou d'une vieille femme, tous les parents habitant le village sont convoqués. Le corps est gardé un jour entier dans la chambre mortuaire après quoi on procède à l'enterrement. Le fils et la fille aînés de la famille jettent des cauris dans le tombeau pour permettre à leur père ou grand-père de s'acheter de l'eau « quand il aura soif et de payer les droits de passage sur la route de l'Éternité ». Les personnes chargées de l'enterrement s'emparent d'une partie des cauris.

La famille organise des jeux et des danses qui durent trois à quatre jours. Enfin tout le monde se fait raser la tête et on fixe la date des grandes funérailles. Ce jour-là, tous les parents, fils, filles mariées, proches parents, petits-fils, apportent des poulets, des bestiaux et des cauris. Tous ceux qui habitent le village même sont tenus de faire préparer de la bière. On tue des animaux et poulets et la viande est distribuée aux personnes venues pour la circonstance. Les danses

---

Tombes. — Différentes formes de tombeaux. — Il existe au Mossi différentes formes de tombeaux. Ce sont : 1° Yaobulga (tombeau en forme de puits). Très en honneur, réservé à tous ceux, vieillards et jeunes gens, morts de mort naturelle.

2° Sampogyaogo (litt. de Sampogré, blessure ; yaogo, tombeau) Tombeau de forme rectangulaire réservé à tous ceux qui sont morts à la suite d'une grave blessure, morsure de serpent, coups de foudre, noyés ou tombés sur les champs de bataille. Pour cette deuxième catégorie de trépassés, il n'y a presque pas de kouré (funérailles). Seuls, les parents se rasent la tête et reçoivent la visite des personnes qui viennent leur apporter des condoléances. Aucune réjouissance, aucune cérémonie n'a lieu. Le jour du renouvellement du kouré, on distribue un peu de bière aux visiteurs.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

durent plusieurs jours et les danseurs comme les tambourinaires reçoivent des cauris.

A noter que les petits-enfants gardent pour eux leurs poulets ou bestiaux après les avoir tués et qu'ils en disposent comme bon leur semble.

Sinddo. — Le « sinddo » n'a lieu qu'au décès d'une personne âgée. L'opération consiste à dépecer un animal vivant, dont la viande sitôt cuite est mangée par tous les membres de la famille du défunt.

Pendant la durée de l'opération, une personne forte serre la gueule de l'animal pour l'empêcher de crier, une seule plainte de la bête étant signe de mort certaine pour quelqu'un de la famille.

Tombeau. — Le tombeau des personnes âgées a la forme d'un puits au sommet ; à l'intérieur, il est rectangulaire ou évasé de manière à pouvoir coucher le mort.

b) Ikanda (homme marié). La cérémonie est beaucoup moins pompeuse pour un jeune marié. Le défunt est tout simplement lavé, puis enroulé dans un secco peulh et enterré. On tue quelques poulets. Le renouvellement des funérailles ne comporte pas de danses.

Règles générales pour les chefs de famille

Le lagda (croque-mort), après que le défunt a été lavé, habillé, enroulé dans une natte ou un secco et

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

déposé sur le seuil de sa case [1] commence à lui offrir le sang des poulets qu'il égorge à ses pieds. Il prononce quelques paroles rituelles qui peuvent se résumer ainsi : « Accepte ces poulets et ces cauries et ne reviens pas, que tout ce que tu laisses sur la terre profite à tes héritiers ! etc. »

On procède ensuite à l'enlèvement du corps. Arrivés

---

1. Venré (ouverture).

Nous avons vu que chez les Nakomsé on pratiquait un trou au mur ou à la palissade formant enceinte et que c'est par cette ouverture qu'on faisait passer le corps du défunt pour le conduire à sa dernière demeure.

En général, il s'agit d'un père de famille. On dépose le corps en face de l'ouverture et son fils aîné et toutes les filles (celles du défunt et celles de ses frères) doivent sortir par le trou avant la dépouille mortelle. Pour cela les filles enroulent des feuillages autour des reins pour remplacer les pagnes ; quant au fils aîné il enlève aussi son cache-sexe. Des personnes saisissent les bras, d'autres les jambes et on fait passer les enfants à tour de rôle par l'ouverture en faisant en sorte que leur corps frôle celui du mort.

Le fils aîné du défunt en passant par le « venré » prouve ainsi aux assistants qu'il n'est pas cause du décès de son père ; quant aux filles, même celles qui sont devenues des femmes — qui osent sortir par le trou c'est par des bravos qu'elles sont accueillies par la foule. Les femmes reçoivent d'importants cadeaux de leur mari. Voici pourquoi : Les filles qui avant d'être conduites chez leur maris ont été enceintes ne peuvent et n'osent même pas sortir par l'ouverture. Le défunt et les autres kimsé (mânes) les frapperaient mortellement.

Aussi bien certaines d'entre elles disparaissent-elles à cette heure tragique, à la grande honte de leurs époux.

On désinfecte la case mortuaire en brûlant une certaine herbe odorante connue sous le nom de « Sompiga ». C'est la plante appelée par les Bambaras et les Wolofs « Benguefala » ou « Benguefira » et qui a été très employée par les Européens à l'occasion de la récente épidémie de fièvre jaune, soit comme tisane, soit comme infusion ou mélangée à l'eau des douches.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

au tombeau, les porteurs en font trois fois le tour avec le cadavre, puis le déposent à terre. Le croque-mort pénètre dans la tombe et dispose la couchette. On défait la natte et on lui remet le corps. Les membres de la famille, les parents se mettent alors tous à pleurer. On ferme l'ouverture de la fosse avec une pierre et on recouvre le tout de terre.

La fille aînée du défunt ainsi que les femmes de ce dernier, se barbouillent le corps de cendre. La pugtiéma (première femme) et la fille aînée entourent leur taille de feuillages, tandis que les autres membres de la famille portent des lianes sur le front : c'est le premier deuil.

Quarante ou cinquante jours après a lieu le renouvellement des funérailles : jeux divers, tam-tams, mise à mort d'animaux, bière, etc... (voir explications ci-dessus) : c'est le second deuil.

c) Dakonré (célibataire). Seuls, ses père et mère se rasent la tête. On l'enroule dans un secco mossi et on l'enterre sans autre cérémonie. Il n'est même pas lavé.

d) Bi-kouré (funérailles d'un nouveau-né). — Si le premier enfant d'une jeune mariée vient à mourir, la jeune femme retourne chez ses parents et y passe treize jours. Après ce délai elle revient chez son mari. Elle est alors accompagnée de quelques parents. Ceux-ci apportent des poulets et pintades qu'ils font tuer pour être accommodés avec un gâteau de mil envoyé au mari de leur fille. L'époux à son tour fait tuer poulets et pintades, prépare du gâteau et fait l'échange avec ses beaux-parents.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

La coutume tient absolument à ce que les parents de la femme passent la nuit en route avant de rentrer dans leur village. Même si le village n'est pas éloigné, ils passent la nuit dans la brousse.

Ajoutons qu'au second accouchement, si l'enfant suit le sort du premier, il n'y a plus de kouré.

e) Pagh'sin kataré biga (femme sans enfants). — Aucune cérémonie. On l'enterre sans façon, comme pour le célibataire.

De l'existence de Dieu, du ciel et de l'enfer

Le Moaga croit à l'existence d'un être supérieur invisible ou visible, car beaucoup ont longtemps considéré le soleil comme un « dieu », qui a créé le ciel, la terre et tout ce qui existe. Cet être, il l'appelle « Wende ou Wenam » (litt. Wende, monde, nam, chefferie : Maître du Monde).

Si le Moaga attribue quelquefois ses malheurs aux mauvais sorts de ses ennemis, il reconnaît néanmoins que rien ne peut se faire sans le consentement de Dieu, dont il ne cesse de prononcer le nom dans toutes les circonstances de la vie, notamment lorsqu'il fait des sacrifices.

Les féticheurs, magiciens, sorciers eux-mêmes, lui reconnaissent une puissance et l'invoquent bien souvent.

Il y a une certaine catégorie de Mossi, qui, ne faisant ni gris-gris ni fétiche, n'étant ni musulmans ni chrétiens, qui ne font et ne veulent du mal à personne, pardonnent volontiers à ceux qui les offensent, ne voient dans tout ce qui leur arrive (bonheur ou malheur) qu'un effet de la divine Providence; ce sont les inspirés.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Mais le déisme des uns et des autres n'est guère approfondi. Tous croient qu'une personne décédée rejoindra ses aïeux pour vivre éternellement avec eux. Mais ils s'imaginent « la Route de l'Éternité épineuse « et le Royaume de Dieu si éloigné de la terre qu'ils « donnent à leurs morts des cauris pour payer le « passeport là où ils rencontreront des difficultés, la « facilité du voyage étant subordonnée aux bonnes « ou mauvaises actions du défunt ».

C'est là, peut-on dire, une très faible idée de l'existence d'un ENFER ou d'un PURGATOIRE. Mais cet Enfer n'est pas le « Feu inextinguible des Chrétiens, ni les atroces souffrances des Musulmans » puisqu'il faut que la personne soit avec sa famille.

L'Alkyoamé. — On entend quelquefois dire par un Moaga : « Ce que tu m'as fait je ne peux m'en venger, mais nous réglerons ça le jour de l'« alkyoamé. » Ceci est encore une conception quelque peu superficielle du Jugement de DIEU. Le Moaga ne croit guère à un jugement dernier, pas plus qu'à la fin du Monde, ni à la résurrection des Corps, mais il entend par ces mots « alkyoamé daré » le jour où tous deux — son ennemi et lui — mourront et que Dieu aura à faire subir à l'un une peine — passagère s'entend — pour le préjudice causé à l'autre.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

CROYANCES ET SUPERSTITIONS SUR L'AME APRÈS LA MORT

De quoi se compose l'être humain d'après les Mossi ?

L'homme se compose de trois éléments : le corps visible, le siga ou toulé (âme) et le « kima » (revenant).

Le « siga », qu'on peut appeler âme, est la partie de l'homme qui doit retourner à Dieu.

Siga. — D'après les Mossi, le « siga ou toulé » est peureux. Une grande souffrance, une maladie, le décès d'une personne aimée peuvent l'obliger à abandonner provisoirement le corps. Il prend alors la forme humaine. Il peut être aperçu par la personne elle-même ou par d'autres. En ce cas on a recours à des gris-gris ou fétiches pour le faire revenir.

Son abandon provisoire du corps ne présente pas, dit-on, d'inconvénients puisqu'il ne gêne en rien le fonctionnement régulier de l'organisme humain, mais comme l'un ne peut pas vivre sans l'autre, son absence prolongée peut être cause de mort.

Kima (de ki, mourir). C'est une sorte de silhouette de la personne qui va mourir. Il n'est visible qu'à certains initiés. On dit cependant qu'il est un peu difforme et que sa présence en un lieu peut faire dresser les cheveux sur la tête ou donner des frissons qui paralysent les membres et empêchent de marcher.

On distingue le « siga » du « kima » à cette différence que ce dernier étant déjà au nombre des morts a la tête complètement rasée, porte de la cendre en forme de croix ou d'un X sur le front, ou a les pieds maculés de sang.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Dès que la personne meurt, son kima rôde quelque temps à côté de sa maison et va rejoindre ses ancêtres à Pilimpikou.

Pilimpikou. — Pilimpikou est un village faisant partie de la circonscription administrative de Koudougou (Haute-Volta). Il y a là sur une montagne, une grotte considérée comme le lieu sacré où se donnent rendez-vous les « kimsé » de tous les Mossi morts.

La légende raconte qu'on peut retrouver à Pilimpikou un parent décédé si on n'a pas eu la bonne fortune d'assister à ses derniers moments ou si l'on désire savoir où le défunt a caché une partie de sa fortune ou un objet précieux.

Il suffit pour cela, dit-on, de se rendre chez le Tingsoba de Pilimpikou et de lui demander d'user de son influence pour appeler le mort.

Le Tingsoba vous fait la recommandation formelle de ne verser aucune larme à la vue du « revenant » et, continue la légende, si l'on ne garde pas le secret de l'entretien qu'on a eu avec le kima, on mourra avant un an.

Enfin, on prétend que lorsqu'ils vont recevoir de nouveaux membres — ils composent, en effet, la grande famille de tous les Mossi morts depuis des générations — les kimsé organisent des jeux dont l'écho est entendu par les habitants de Pilimpikou.

Toutefois les jeunes gens des deux sexes, célibataires au moment de leur décès, les nouveau-nés, retournent là où ils étaient avant leur venue au monde pour « reprendre au sein d'une autre femme ou de leur précédente mère la forme humaine ». Les Mossi, nous l'avons déjà dit dans un précédent paragraphe, croient à la réincarnation des morts.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

CHAPITRE XII

La pénétration de l'islam en pays Mossi.

L'ISLAM AU PAYS DU MOGHO-NABA

Le Mogho-Naba est avant tout un animiste comme tous ses sujets et on s'expliquera mal que son fétichisme se concilie avec les dogmes compliqués de l'islamisme et les nombreux interdits du Christianisme.

Et pourtant le Mogho-Naba sait à son heure être catholique ou musulman tout en respectant les traditions des ancêtres. C'est ainsi qu'à l'occasion des fêtes chrétiennes de la Noël, l'Empereur des Mossi assiste dévotement à la Messe de Minuit. Il gardera cependant sur la tête sa toque, à l'instar de l'Évêque, sa mitre. De même il embrasse l'islam pendant les trois fêtes ci-après : 1° Le moaghrem (Zembendé mossi). Le Ramadam (Nolokré — détacher la bouche) et enfin la « Zoulhési (la Tabaski ou le kibsa mossi).

***

Avant de dire comment le Mogho-Naba célèbre ces fêtes musulmanes, nous allons donner dans un rapide aperçu l'origine de la pénétration de l'islam au Mossi et la désignation des Imams.

I. — ÉPOQUE A PARTIR DE LAQUELLE L'ISLAM A PÉNÉTRÉ AU MOSSI

C'est sous le règne de Naba Doulgou, 23e Mogho-

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Naba à partir de OUBRI, fondateur de la dynastie de Ouagadougou, que l'Islam prit racine dans l'Empire des Mogho-Nabas, et c'est de cette époque que date la nomination d'un Imam à Ouagadougou.

Naba Sawadogo qui succéda à son père Doulgou mit ses enfants à l'École Coranique. Un grand nombre d'entre eux y reçurent une assez bonne instruction; l'aîné de la famille qui monta plus tard sur le trône sous le nom de Naba Koutou devint même un marabout. C'est du règne de cet Empereur que date le développement de l'islamisme au pays mossi et l'attribution de noms musulmans aux enfants des Mogho-Naba :

Saïdou, Mahama, Moumouni, etc..., etc...

II. Gambaga Naba (Chef d'un vaste territoire dans la colonie britannique de la Gold Coast) fut, nous l'avons déjà vu, le père de NYENNENGA, mère de OUEDRAOGO, fondateur réel de l'Empire Mossi. On sait que tel ROI a tendance à imiter un parent illustre et à suivre ses traces dans tout ce qui est de nature à le distinguer.

Eh bien, voici pourquoi Doulgou installa un marabout à côté de lui. On rapporte qu'indépendamment de ses nombreux Ministres, le Roi de Gambaga avait un Imam chargé de régler les affaires compliquées. Il était en même temps le conseiller intime du Roi. Mogho-Naba Doulgou, qui eut un vaste territoire se crut aussi puissant que son ancêtre de Gambaga et voulut, pour certaines affaires, n'avoir à prendre d'autre avis que celui d'un Imam. L'Empereur avait un ami marabout dans la région de Zitenga qui se nommait MOUSTAPHA. DOULGOU le fit venir à Ouagadougou et lui conféra le titre d'Imam.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Inutile de dire que ni le savoir de cet adepte de l'Islam, ni ses qualités n'ont été contrôlées et que cet Imam n'a pas été choisi par d'autres marabouts. C'est ainsi que l'Imam du Mogho-Naba est avant tout un dignitaire de la Cour au même titre qu'un OUIDI-NABA par exemple et comme tel sa nomination est soumise à certaines règles barbares. C'est ainsi qu'après lui avoir remis le turban et le burnous, insignes de la chefferie, il est invité à se rendre dans une maison appelée « Surbinda. » Dans ce lieu sacré on lui présente une calebassée du breuvage abominable connu sous le nom de « Tibo » et qui n'est autre chose qu'une mixture composée de sang d'hommes et d'animaux — breuvage que tout chef de canton, tout ministre et fonctionnaire de la Cour de l'Empereur doit boire à sa nomination, ce qui le rend incapable de trahison et de lèse-majesté. L'Imam saisit la calebasse, prononce les paroles sacramentelles ci-après : « Je ne trahirai jamais le Mogho-Naba dans quelque circonstance que ce soit, je lui viendrai en aide en cas de guerre avec l'ennemi, j'exécuterai sans discussion tous les ordres que je recevrai de mon ROI, etc... », fait le simulacre de porter le breuvage à la bouche et le rend au Ouidi-Naba qui remet le liquide dans la jarre de cuivre où il est soigneusement conservé depuis près d'un millénaire. Il est, ces formalités remplies, l'Imam du Mogho-Naba. Comme pour les chefs de canton ou les Ministres cette fonction se transmet dans la même famille. Sans doute, le fils n'est pas appelé à remplacer son père s'il n'a pas reçu une instruction suffisante pour régler à la satisfaction de l'Empereur les quelques rares questions qui peuvent lui être soumises, mais le choix se porte toujours sur un membre de la famille de MOUSTAPHA, premier Imam.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

CÉLÉBRATION DES FÊTES MUSULMANES PAR LE MOGHO-NABA

Moaghrem (zambende des Mossi). — Le Moaghrem, c'est le commencement d'une année nouvelle de l'hégire. Chaque famille musulmane doit faire bombance la veille au soir. Le lendemain matin c'est-à-dire le dixième jour du mois de Moaghrem on lit le « sourata », livre de l'année, et on sait le Saint qui présidera à la destinée du Monde pendant trois cent soixante jours. On prescrit des aumônes. Cette fête de retour à la joie a pour effet de commémorer solennellement le jour où le Patriarche Noé (Nabi Nouhou d'après les Marabouts), seul béni du Seigneur, put après le déluge qui extermina l'Humanité, mettre pied sur la terre ferme. Ce fut un retour à la vie et ce fut le jour du Feu.

Les Mossi qui n'ont jamais compris l'origine des fêtes musulmanes les célèbrent à leur manière. Ainsi par « jour du feu » ils n'ont pas compris que c'était le retour à la vie de famille, à la cuisson des aliments par le feu, mais ils ont imaginé une drôle de coutume qui rappelle plutôt la prise de la Bastille. Ce jour-là, en effet, ils allument des torches, se pourchassent et se brûlent les uns les autres. Cela occasionne parfois de véritables plaies qui, fort heureusement, guérissent facilement.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Les Silmissi (Peulhs du Mossi) font mieux, ils s'arrosent le corps d'eau fraîche : c'est tout au moins un souhait de bonne santé.

***

La tabaski (zoulhési) (kibsa Mossi). — Autrefois le jour de la Tabaski, le Mogho-Naba était tenu de se rendre à Zoaghna dans la grande mosquée.

Yarnaba — chef des Yarcés — (dioulas dont l'ancêtre KOANDA est venu au Mossi sous le règne de Koumdoumié, huitième Mogho-Naba) est chargé de sacrifier les bœufs et moutons remis par l'Empereur et dont la viande doit être distribuée à l'ensemble des fidèles. Le salam avait lieu dans la mosquée. A cette occasion le Mogho-Naba devenait musulman même s'il n'était pas croyant. Il devait figurer parmi les fidèles qui se placent immédiatement derrière l'Imam. Dès qu'il a fini de réciter les versets des livres sacrés, l'Imam se tourne vers les fidèles, dit « a salama leckum » et serre ensuite la main du Roi. La prière étant terminée, l'Empereur revient chez lui où peu après l'Imam doit venir égorger le mouton de tabaski. Mogho-Naba doit tenir lui-même la queue de l'animal.

Le ramadam (Nolokré Mossi). — On sait que le Ramadam ou le carême des musulmans (le nolokré des Mossi — noré bouche, lokré, défaire le nœud, détacher) est une suite de privations et d'abstinences où le corps abandonné sans défense est sujet à toutes sortes d'indispositions se transformant parfois en de véritables maladies.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

On sait aussi que le Mogho-Naba est soumis à un protocole sévère, à un ensemble d'obligations qui le mettent dans l'impossibilité absolue de pratiquer — fût-il croyant — le jeûne des marabouts. Cependant on lui a tant vanté le « yelsomdé » (le bonheur) du pénitent après les trente jours de souffrances que l'Empereur — car il n'est pas indifférent à ce qui touche les splendeurs de l'Au-delà, demande dans son entourage quelques hommes de bonne volonté pour pratiquer l'abstinence en ses lieu et place; ils recevront le jour de la fête de nombreux cadeaux (boubous, cauris, etc...).

Voici en résumé comment le Roi des Mossi célébrait le Ramadam, il y a encore quelques années :

Le jour de nolokré, Gare-yarga (Yarga, préposé à la selle) apporte de fort bon matin de l'hydromel dans une vieille gourde qui a servi, dit-on, à Naba Rimba — il boit un peu de cette liqueur pour « couper le jeûne » et offre une calebassée au Mogho-Naba dans le même but. Le reste est donné aux Ministres et autres fonctionnaires de la Cour.

L'Empereur offre à manger à tout le monde présent (cuvettes de riz, écuelles de sagbo); il fait abattre au préalable un ou deux bœufs et de nombreux moutons.

Vers sept heures et demie du matin Mogho-Naba se rendait avec son escorte habituelle à Roundé-yiri (lieu de prières, sorte de mosquée en plein air qui se trouvait au nord-ouest de la maison actuelle de Ouendasida, adjudant de Police, — et assistait au salam que présidait l'Imam.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Après la cérémonie ce dernier entouré de ses fidèles allait rendre visite à l'Empereur pour la « doua » (sorte de bénédiction qui consiste à réciter quelques versets de Coran). L'Imam recevait des colas, des moutons ou un bœuf.

***

A l'heure actuelle les deux mosquées n'existent que de nom; la seule mosquée est celle de l'Imam dans le quartier Mohémé (Marabouts), mais le Mogho-Naba actuel n'assiste jamais au salam des jours fériés. Il se rend au Cercle puis chez le Gouverneur et revient chez lui attendre la visite du représentant de l'Islam en pays Mossi.

***

Le seul Mogho-Naba qui fut vraiment musulman est Naba Koutou, 27e successeur d'Oubri. Envoyé à l'École coranique de Sagabtenga il y fit, dit-on, de bonnes études. Appelé à succéder à son père, il installa devant la porte des Femmes, une mosquée. Par tradition une mosquée se trouve au même endroit du Palais de tout Mogho-Naba même incroyant comme l'Empereur actuel par exemple.

Naba Koutou faisait régulièrement son salam suivant les rites de la religion musulmane et observait même les trente jours d'abstinence du mois de carême.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Tous ses enfants portèrent des noms musulmans. Tous, à l'exception de son premier fils qui lui succéda sous le nom de Naba Sanum, ont été envoyés dans des écoles coraniques mais aucun d'eux n'y fit des études sérieuses, dominés qu'ils étaient tous par le désir d'être Nabas.

De son vivant Naba Koutou n'a jamais ordonné lui-même la mort d'un individu, fût-il coupable. Il aimait la paix. Aussi lorsque ses Ministres lui soumettaient des cas graves il leur disait toujours : « Allez faire pour le mieux et ne me rendez pas compte du sort réservé aux coupables. » Comme PONCE PILATE il faisait retomber sur ses ministres la responsabilité des crimes. Prêtant peu de foi aux dires des prêtres du Poéré (confession par moyen magique) il acquittait lui-même les personnes condamnées à la peine capitale par ce procédé barbare.

LES NABAS MUSULMANS

I. La quasi-totalité des habitants de Nobéré, Nobila, Toècé (cantons dans la province actuelle du Gounga-Naba) sont convertis aux préceptes de l'islamisme par convenances personnelles. Ils sont les descendants de Naba Saga, 22e successeur d'OUBRI.

II. De même les habitants des villages de Doundoulma (descendants de Naba KOM, 21e successeur d'OUBRI), de Garpinné et de Kouila (descendants de Naba Doulgou ou Roulgou, 23e successeur d'OUBRI) passent pour de fervents musulmans.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

III. Kombissiri-Naba SIGUIRI, Cercle de Ouagadougou.

IV. Ramongo-Naba BAONGO, Cercle de Koudougour, tous deux descendants de Naba Warba, 19e successeur d'OUBRI étaient convertis aux préceptes de l'Islamisme.

Les Chefs actuels de ces cantons sont des musulmans lettrés et possèdent des mosquées.

V. Sao-Naba, descendant de Naba Ouédraogo, Cercle de Ouagadougou) est converti à l'islamisme depuis près de trente ans. Son premier maître fut un pèlerin revenu de la Mecque et originaire du village de Nakamtenga (près de Kombissiri). Il continua ses études coraniques sous la direction de Sayenouné Bathily, marabout originaire de Kaédi (Mauritanie) thaumaturge redoutable que l'Administration locale dut renvoyer dans ses foyers en 1916. Sao-Naba possède une mosquée, mais la religion musulmane ne semble pas avoir diminué ses croyances animistes puisqu'il continue à sacrifier aux mânes des ancêtres et à boire du dolo de temps en temps (aux fêtes coutumières par exemple).

VI. Gourpila Naba, Cercle de Ouagadougou, Ancien Samand biga du Mogho-Naba actuel, sa conversion à l'Islamisme est de fraiche date (de six à sept ans).

VII. Boala Naba, Cercle de Ouagadougou, musulman fervent.

VIII. Gaongo-Naba, Cercle de Ouagadougou, musulman fervent.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Signalons enfin pour terminer que l'Empereur actuel qui a continué par tradition à donner des noms musulmans à ses enfants, a plusieurs de ses fils dans des écoles coraniques. Le nombre de ceux-ci dépasse certainement celui de ses enfants envoyés à l'École primaire officielle.

I: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Communiqué par la Mission des Pères Blancs à Ouagadogou.

La Maison du Gounga-Naba.

Facing p. 212

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

CHAPITRE XIII

De l'habitation.

Maison des chefs mossi

Nous avons déjà vu dans un précédent chapitre « Corvées et Obligations des sujets Mossi vis-à-vis de leurs chefs », comment sont effectués les travaux de construction et de réfection de la maison des Nabas. Nous savons aussi que le Naba, comme tous ses sujets, consulte le Devin sur le choix de l'emplacement où doit être édifiée son habitation, à savoir s'il doit conserver la maison de son père ou s'il doit construire sur l'emplacement de la maison de son grand-père ou enfin, s'il peut, les esprits lui étant défavorables, s'installer sur un terrain encore inoccupé.

***

La maison d'un Naba se distinguait autrefois de celles de ses administrés par le nombre considérable de cases dont elle se composait et aussi par la présence sur le faite des cases d'œufs d'autruche vides.

Le croquis ci-après donne une physionomie exacte de la maison des Nabas avant la pénétration française et même encore de nos jours dans certaines régions.

Il n'existait pas de maisons à argamasse ou terrasse à la mode indigène. Le Mogho-Naba en possédait bien une, mais bien que copiée sur le style

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Djennéen, elle n'avait à part quelques rares portes et fenêtres minuscules qu'une seule ouverture de la grandeur d'un canari pratiquée au plafond pour donner, dit-on, de l'air aux habitants et qu'on bouchait pendant l'hivernage.

Ouidi-Naba, premier ministre, et Kamsaongo-Naba chef eunuque, possédaient eux aussi des « tatas » d'un modèle plus réduit, le premier pour conserver l'eau sacrée « Nam-Tibo », le second les richesses de l'Empereur son maître.

Nous verrons plus loin la description de l'habitation type du Moaga. A l'heure actuelle et depuis l'installation du Gouvernement à Ouagadougou, la quasi-totalité des Chefs de Province et de canton possèdent des maisons simili-européennes. Le Tata actuel du Mogho-Naba, la Maison du Baloum-Naba, du Gounga-Naba, du Ouidi-Naba à Ouagadougou ; celles du Konkistenga-Naba à Imasshoro et à Zoétigomdé ; du Lallé-Naba à Koudougou — j'en oublie — pour ne citer que les principales — prouvent que de réels progrès ont été accomplis dans le domaine de l'habitation par les chefs Mossi.

Sans doute, comme toutes les maisons européennes de la région qui nous occupe, ces constructions sont malheureusement en banco. Mais la règle n'est-elle pas à peu près générale en A. O. F. ?

Chez les deux plus évolués des ministres de l'Empereur, les salons de réception sont disposés de façon à ce que le visiteur reçoive à tout moment du vent frais sans cesse renouvelé par de larges ouvertures. Pendant les fortes chaleurs un panka placé au milieu

LA MAISON DES NABAS

[p. 215]

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

de la pièce et actionné par un sogoné donne de l'air aux visiteurs essoufflés. Au mur toujours blanchi au kaolin sont fixés çà et là quelque image de réclame, le portrait d'un grand chef ou des photographies de famille qui donnent un peu de gaîté à ces appartements. Tout ceci démontre de la part des chefs indigènes un réel souci d'évoluer dans la voie du progrès et de la civilisation.

Un certain nombre de notables de Ouagadougou ont construit ces dernières années des maisons à argamasse, plutôt pour sauvegarder les biens de leur famille contre les incendies et les vols que pour y habiter.

Enfin avant d'aborder l'étude de la case du Moaga, il convient de dire que la coutume exige que tout nouveau Naba habite, pendant les trois premières années de son avènement, des « songodo », c'est-à-dire des cases tout en paille que nous décrirons plus loin. Après seulement il pourra construire en dur.

II. — De l'habitation des sujets mossi

Installation provisoire. — Avant de construire sa case de marié, le jeune homme consulte le Devin à l'effet de savoir si l'emplacement choisi n'est pas hanté par de mauvais esprits : s'il aura de la joie et du bonheur en s'y installant.

Le Devin, même si le lieu ne présente à ses yeux aucune particularité, prescrit toujours de sacrifier une volaille, un animal, ou d'offrir des aumônes. Le jeune homme s'entend pour cela avec le vieux du village, le chef du clan ou s'il s'agit d'un Nionioga, le Tingsoba (de tenga, terre, soba, maître), pour sacrifier la victime.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Le Tingsoba se rend sur les lieux et fait apporter deux petites calebasses contenant la première de l'eau ordinaire et la seconde de l'eau mélangée avec de la farine : il invoque tous ceux qui l'ont précédé, verse l'eau par terre, priant Dieu d'accepter celle-ci pour sa femme Tinga qui l'absorbe ; puis il égorge la poule en disant : « On — on, mamé ka koud' ti y a niesmé yé ya saramb' boumbou, yaramb' boumbou, ti oua ta mamé (paroles signifiant à peu près : « Accepte l'offrande que je t'offre au nom de X... Il s'est adressé à moi parce que je suis le Tingsoba du village. Je ne me considère pas comme plus habile que les autres habitants du village, mais cette cérémonie est chose de nos aïeux, c'est affaire de succession et j'ai pris la place que m'a léguée mon prédécesseur. »

La poule est maintenue les deux pattes en haut, la tête inclinée, pour que le sang se mêle à l'eau farineuse, puis elle est lancée quelques pas plus loin. Si l'offrande est acceptée la victime tombera sur le dos. On se hâte alors de la ramasser et on arrache quelques plumes qu'on colle au sang à peine coagulé.

La poule est remise à des enfants pour être plumée et brûlée au feu sans assaisonnement, sans sel ni piment. Une cuisse est offerte au Tingsoba et le reste de la viande est mangée par les membres de la famille de celui qui s'installe.

Cependant une partie du « saonré (le foie) est jetée à l'endroit du sacrifice et ainsi offerte aux esprits, habitants invisibles du lieu, qui favoriseront le nouveau ménage et l'aideront à avoir des enfants.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Notons que, pour sacrifier, le Tingsoba peut se tourner dans n'importe quelle direction, aucune orientation précise n'est exigée.

L'installation provisoire consiste, pour un jeune mari, en une paillotte sans agrément, composée des branches d'un arbre appelé « randega » piquées en terre, attachées au sommet par une ligature, entourées à la base de nattes Mossi (sougzakpinri); le tout est couvert par une toiture en chaume.

Installation définitive. Travaux. — Un an après l'installation provisoire, si les moyens du nouveau mari le lui permettent, il procède à son établissement définitif, c'est-à-dire qu'il construit des cases en argile, reliées entre elles par des murs plus ou moins réguliers.

Pour cela il faut d'abord creuser le sol, détremper la terre qu'on a tirée du trou, puis la pétrir et faire des boules de mortier. On trace sur le terrain une circonférence avec une corde attachée à un piquet central ; ensuite, les fondations sont aménagées dans le sol ; elles ont une profondeur de 0 m 20 environ. On y jette du mortier et on commence l'édification du mur qui a toujours une forme circulaire et dont la dimension est plus ou moins grande. On laisse sécher le mortier avant de se remettre au travail et la construction se poursuit ainsi jusqu'à son achèvement complet, c'est-à-dire lorsqu'elle atteint 1 m 65 environ. La maison est d'abord bâtie sans aucune ouverture, mais lorsque les murs sont achevés, on y pratique une porte basse en forme d'ogive. L'intérieur de beaucoup de cases mossi est barré par une murette appelée « kogré », ce qui rend la case extrêmement obscure. On pratique aussi quelques petits trous avec le manche d'un daba. Ce sont, avec la porte basse, les seules ouvertures et c'est par ces minuscules ouvertures que le Moaga tirait des flèches en cas de guerre. Avant de poser la toiture, les murs sont recouverts de cendre mouillée. Cette pratique assure la santé des nouveaux habitants.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

La toiture est conique; elle se compose de perches fortement attachées au sommet par des lianes. Sur ces perches, on place des nattes rigides appelées « zarsé » retenues par des fibres et au-dessus de la paille tressée. Il faut une vingtaine de personnes pour poser le toit. La construction est terminée. Il ne reste plus qu'à crépir. Les femmes ramassent à cet effet une terre spéciale, le « boalga » qu'elles mélangent avec de la bouse de vache ou du crottin de cheval; elles enduisent les murs avec cela. Cette opération terminée, elles étendent du ferrugineux sur le sol, répandent dessus un peu d'eau et dament à l'aide de morceaux de bois plats appelés « silpama ». Après le damage on fait le « sasgo » : cela consiste à verser sur le sol uni une matière gluante « boundou » mélangée de charbon broyé. On passe et repasse là-dessus des tessons de bouteilles ou des pierres spéciales « sassega ». Cette couche noire vernie empêche le ferrugineux de salir les vêtements. Pour rendre cet enduit résistant d'autres l'arrosent de « kanmé », c'est-à-dire d'une infusion préparée avec l'écorce du fruit du néré.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Ouvriers employés à la construction. — Le maître de la maison est aidé par ses propres frères et ses autres parents de même clan. Il ne demande pas de concours étranger. Les femmes vont seulement chercher l'eau nécessaire à la préparation du mortier.

La terre est tirée d'un trou pratiqué non loin de la maison et appelé « tan-nako » (de tando : terre ; nako, trou). Cette excavation est comblée, plus tard, avec toutes les saletés provenant des détritus du ménage, des ordures de la cour, etc..., le tan-nako, bien fumé par ce moyen, est semé de maïs et ce champ se nomme « kamanga ».

Les outils. — Les seuls outils employés sont le sitoiga (pic indigène) et le « wanka » (pioche).

MOBILIER DES CASES. — Case des hommes. — Dans la case des hommes, on ne trouve pour tout mobilier qu'une natte ou un secco fin, un traversin fait avec des bandes de coton ou du kapock, le carquois, le casse-tête, des flèches, l'arc, un grand couteau « zangoégo » et une lance. Çà et là, de petits sacs à grisgris et autres amulettes pendent au mur. Le « pilgou » (sorte de corbeille ovale, faite de paille) sert à enfermer les habits.

Case des femmes. — D'un bout à l'autre de la case on trouve des « billi » (petits morceaux de bois piqués au mur et destinés à recevoir les calebasses, les écuelles (lensé), les lassés (cuvettes en terre), les soutissi (louches), etc.

Au fond de la pièce, des mottes de terre sèche, creusées au milieu, reçoivent les vases « yuiya », les marmites « dougdo » servant à la fois de malles pour les habits et de greniers pour les produits vivriers provenant de la récolte des champs particuliers de la femme.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Plan d'un carré. — A l'entrée de chaque maison, les cases qui se trouvent à gauche sont celles des femmes, celles du maître de la maison sont situées à droite. Tout à fait à l'extérieur de la maison, une ou deux paillottes dans le genre de celle que nous avons déjà décrite, servent de chambres à coucher aux « dakompa » (jeunes gens du sexe masculin).

Le chef de la maison habite tout seul. Il ne peut, du reste, en être autrement puisqu'il appelle ses femmes à tour de rôle.

Les femmes cohabitent avec leurs enfants en bas âge ou avec les fiancées de leur mari en attendant, bien entendu, que ces dernières aient aussi leur propre case.

Cuisine. — Il est rare — très rare — de voir au Mossi une case spécialement affectée à la cuisine. La chambre à coucher d'une femme lui sert en même temps de cuisine.

C'est au mari qu'il appartient, en général, de distribuer les provisions à la femme chargée de faire la cuisine pour la famille : mais il n'en est pas de même partout. A Ouagadougou par exemple, la plupart des femmes nourrissent leur mari. Ce dernier leur fournit des provisions pendant l'hivernage seulement, c'est-à-dire à l'époque des cultures.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Pour la préparation des aliments, il y a un tour de rôle quotidien. La femme se fait aider par ses co-épouses pour écraser le mil au néré (meule) du quartier mais prépare seule le gâteau de mil ou sagbo.

Poulaillers et bergeries. — Il existe dans la maison de chaque chef de carré une petite paillotte pour la volaille. De même, une petite case ronde en terre sert de bergerie aux chèvres et aux moutons.

Réparations de la maison. — La réparation de la maison endommagée par les pluies ou menaçant ruine, est faite par les habitants de la maison (chef de famille, dakompa, femmes et frères du père) sans le concours de personnes étrangères. A part le repas qu'on prend comme à l'ordinaire, il n'est payé aucune rémunération. Le chef de famille se contente de dire seulement après le travail « n'fa nel toumtogo, imaou nian (Merci de la fatigue, merci beaucoup du travail).

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

CHAPITRE XIV

De l'habillement au Mossi.

I. — Habillement des Nabas

Dans ce chapitre nous examinerons les différentes modifications et améliorations apportées dans l'habillement des chefs Mossi.

1° Avant et pendant les vingt premières années de l'occupation française.

a) Zangoego Pelga (grand boubou), fait d'un assemblage de bandes de coton de petite largeur et assez finement tissées. Ces habits taillés et brodés par des spécialistes se vendaient de 70 à 100.000 cauris [1].

b) Karfo, grand boubou, bleu foncé, de la même étoffe que le précédent (50 à 70.000 cauris).

c) Noufa, grand boubou et pantalon, d'une très belle étoffe tirant sur le gris foncé (valeur 2 esclaves), boubou 70.000 cauris, pantalon 50.000 cauris.

d) Zag'banko, habit de couleur, prix variant entre 40 à 50.000 cauris.

e) Baourou ganga (gris clair) couverture d'une va-

1. 100 francs de notre monnaie. A l'heure actuelle le billet de 5 francs vaut 1.000 cauris. La pièce en argent de 5 francs s'échangeait contre 5 à 7.000 cauris suivant les fluctuations du cours.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

leur de 50 à 60.000 cauris qu'on pouvait transformer à volonté en boubous et culottes.

Tous ces habits étaient importés au Mossi par des Haoussas (Zangoéto) de passage, et quelques yarcés, les seuls commerçants de l'époque et qui eux-mêmes allaient les acheter à Gambaga (Gold Coast), seul point de transactions alors connu. Nous l'avons dit dans un précédent chapitre, les Mossi ne connaissaient d'autre pays que le leur.

Évidemment, on rencontrait quelques Nabas qui se contentaient de quelques vêtements grossiers en bandes de coton du pays.

II. — Bonneterie

Les habitants de Béré (village dépendant de la province actuelle du Gounga-Naba) confectionnaient des bonnets appelés « manfo » fort prisés des chefs Mossis (prix 2.000 à 3.000 cauris) :

Quelques notables portaient des bonnets faits à Wéogtinga (province du Ouidi-Naba) par les descendants de Naba Zombré, 20e successeur d'Oubri).

***

2° Modifications et améliorations apportées depuis la création du gouvernement de la Haute-Volta (1919).

Les différents tissus provenant des comptoirs européens, les riches bazins blancs ou indigotés remplacent de plus en plus actuellement les habits d'autre-

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Communiqué par la Mission des Pères Blancs à Ouagadougou.

Tisserand Mossi.

[facing p. 224]

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

fois. Ces étoffes sont transformées en boubous, culottes, blouses et forkias (ce dernier, sorte de longue blouse à larges manches fort estimée des traitants Sénégalais) ; des chemises de toutes nuances et de tous modèles s'entassent dans les malles et les cantines achetées au Commerce ou fabriquées sur place par des menuisiers instruits dans les ateliers européens.

Les bandes de coton, disent un grand nombre de chefs, sont lourdes, encombrantes et gênent la marche.

Des bonnets, façon d'Orient, exportés de la Gold Coast, des coiffures de velours grenat, voire des casques, remplacent les bonnets d'antan.

Les « markatassé » et les « Mougou », sortes de bottes rustiques en cuir travaillé par les cordonniers mossi cèdent la place aux souliers, bandes molletières, leggins ou à des bottes et babouches autrement façonnées — les cordonniers de Djenné sont maintenant fort connus au Mossi.

Enfin un grand nombre de chefs (notamment les chefs de Province, grands dignitaires de la Cour de l'Empereur) se distinguent les jours fériés par des costumes chamarrés de broderies d'or et d'argent — produits de l'Industrie marocaine. Deux de ces Ministres endossent même, avec fierté, le costume européen.

III. — Habillement des sujets mossi

a) Hommes. Le « koiglinga » et le « dandaogo » (sortes de longues blouses à manches), le « koursi » (culottes) en bleu foncé, et le « karfo » (ce dernier rarement cependant à cause de son prix élevé), un zangoégo (grand couteau haoussa), un « manyanfo » (bonnet), un « boussan-zandé » (casse-tête en fer), un « logwaoga » (carquois et flèches) étaient l'accoutrement et les armes, un jour de fête, d'un Moaga qui veut se faire admirer.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Aujourd'hui il porte les mêmes vêtements en bandes de coton du pays (sauf le « karfo »), mais il convient de dire que les jeunes gens revenus de la Gold Coast ou des Colonies voisines possèdent presque tous des habits en tissus de comptoirs, s'ils ne s'affublent pas, comme cela arrive souvent, d'un pardessus ou d'une redingote usagés. Dans les villages de la brousse on porte encore le grand couteau (zangoégo) qu'un « albolé » (ornement) permet de suspendre aux épaules.

Cependant quelques jeunes gens, petits traitants aisés, s'habillent à la manière des Soudanais de grande ville.

b. Femmes. — La femme moaga n'avait guère plus de 3 pagnes : 1° Un pagne qu'elle portait tant qu'elle restait à la maison et qui est son habit de travail ; 2° Un pagne indigoté (fou-sablaga) qu'elle ne mettait que les jours fériés ou pour se rendre au marché ; enfin un troisième pagne blanc ou teint en bleu foncé à longues franges, sorte de « dissa bambara » qu'elle jetait sur les épaules ou sur la tête les jours de cérémonie. Elle renouvelait cette garde-robe lorsque cela devenait nécessaire.

Seules les femmes des Nabas et de quelques notables avaient en plus des pagnes cités, le « godé » (pagne d'origine haoussa et d'un prix assez élevé[1]).

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Comme parures (ornements) la femme moaga ne connaissait guère que les bracelets en cuivre rouge ou jaune et le « kindifou » (perle d'un rouge brillant). Il s'agit, évidemment, des seules femmes qui avaient le moyen de s'en procurer ; le « kindifou » n'était vendu qu'à 50 cauris la perle, mais la rareté des coquillages (cauris) accaparés par les Nabas, les notables et les Rakangba (ces derniers Mossi aisés) rendait son prix inaccessible à la faible bourse de la femme moaga vulgaire.

Les bracelets fabriqués avec une pierre spéciale (mélange de gris et de blanc) appelés « manekagcé » (au singulier « Manekaka ») n'étaient portés que par les Yarbi (jeunes yarcés des deux sexes). Ces bracelets étaient colportés, dit-on, par les Kibissi (Habés) et provenaient, paraît-il, de la région de Tombouctou.

Les bracelets en argent n'appartenaient qu'aux « dimbissi » (descendants des Dima : famille des Mogho-Naba), des « Kombemba (chefs de canton et de province) et leurs descendants ou quelques personnages de marque, c'est-à-dire bien vus à la Cour des Nabas.

A l'heure actuelle et notamment à Ouagadougou, les femmes se parent d'habits de toute sorte (pagnes du pays, bazins, « godés », tissus, pagnes des boutiques). Certaines femmes ont même adopté la camisole et le grand boubou des élégantes Souda-

1. Se vend encore aujourd'hui entre 55 et 100 francs.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

naises ; un grand nombre d'entre elles possèdent maintenant des malles qui remplacent les sacs à habits dans lesquels autrefois elles serraient leurs vêtements.

Le mouchoir sénégalais, le foulard de tête, sont actuellement indispensables. Dans les campagnes, le besoin de se mieux vêtir se fait aussi de plus en plus sentir. On y cultive plus de coton. Les jeunes filles et les femmes de la brousse achètent à Ouagadougou, quand elles viennent y travailler, des verroteries de toutes couleurs qu'elles suspendent au cou ou qu'elles enroulent autour des reins à l'imitation des femmes bambaras.

Tandis qu'autrefois on se « mirait » à l'eau claire des sources et des ruisseaux, il n'y a guère aujourd'hui de femme qui n'ait un ou deux miroirs ou glaces de traite. Enfin les boucles d'oreilles en argent, les bracelets et les amulettes cousues dans de la peau de panthère — et dont la possession devient une hantise pour les paysannes mossi — ajoutent, on peut le dire, un peu d'élégance parfois à leur beauté sauvage.

***

Il ne faut pas s'imaginer, d'après ce qui précède, que le Moaga se croit obligé de porter constamment des vêtements chez lui. Chaque fois qu'il ne doit pas entreprendre un petit voyage, rendre visite à un parent ou ami éloigné de sa propre résidence, le Moaga se contente d'un « benda » (cache-sexe) qui ne couvre même pas ses fesses, et d'une couverture.

Il va le torse nu et aime à faire voir qu'il est bien

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

musclé. Les femmes lorsqu'elles se trouvent dans leurs cases et surtout quand elles se livrent au travail pénible d'égrenage du coton avec leur « gourça », remontent le pagne jusqu'aux cuisses ce qui les met dans un état de demi-nudité.

Quand aux jeunes filles non pubères et non encore excisées, elles vont quelquefois complètement nues, si elles ne dissimulent pas leur sexe avec les chiffons d'un vieux pagne.

La toilette

Les ablutions, les soins du corps

Les gens mariés et les femmes tiennent à la propreté du corps, aussi font-ils leur toilette chaque matin. Celle-ci consiste dans le lavage de la figure, des mains, des bras et des jambes. Pendant la saison fraîche (fin novembre au 15 février), on ajoute un peu de beurre de karité à l'eau chaude pour assouplir la peau. En raison de la rareté de l'eau, les gens prennent très peu de bains; par contre dans les villages où l'eau abonde ils se baignent deux à trois fois par semaine.

Au contraire des grandes personnes, les jeunes gens et les enfants négligent la toilette et il s'en rencontre qui passent toute une journée sans se laver la figure, ce qui provoque d'ailleurs chez les enfants de graves conjonctivites.

Hygiène

1° De l'eau de consommation. — L'eau de consommation est puisée dans les marigots aménagés par des barrages construits par les habitants eux-mêmes pour suppléer à l'insuffisance des puits qui tarissent souvent pendant la saison sèche. Les indigènes ne s'occupent pas d'assainir l'eau qu'ils gardent parfois plusieurs jours dans des vases où se déposent des larves de moustiques. On boit l'eau des mares. Dans certains villages cependant lorsque l'eau est vraiment boueuse on emploie les procédés suivants pour la clarifier :

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

a) Écrasement des arachides, extraction de l'huile et mélange du reste à l'eau boueuse. Pendant trois quarts d'heure environ les saletés et tourteaux se déposent dans le fond du vase, l'eau est versée dans un autre récipient et peut servir à la consommation et à la cuisson des aliments;

b) On peut aussi employer le « missim » (feuilles de tamarinier pilées). L'eau devient claire mais forcément un peu aigre. Bien que servant à la consommation, elle est tout indiquée pour la cuisine, puisque les Mossi mettent même dans l'eau des sources et des puits du « missim » (de miki : aigrir) avant de l'employer à la préparation de leur aliment principal « le sagbo ».

Dans la ville de Ouagadougou, les tournées fréquentes des Agents sanitaires rappellent à l'indigène la nécessité de renouveler sans cesse l'eau contenue dans les vases et l'incitent à combler pendant l'hivernage les trous pouvant conserver l'eau nécessaire à la propagation des larves de moustiques.

2° Blanchissage des vêtements. — On peut reprocher

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

au Moaga de ne pas se soucier suffisamment de la propreté de ses vêtements. Ce n'est pas que le savon lui manque — le beurre de karité avec lequel on fait le savon abonde — mais il croit que de fréquents lavages useront bien vite ses habits; il s'imagine aussi — ce qui est puéril — qu'il faut laisser salir le vêtement si l'on veut qu'au lavage il soit propre. Et il fait de bien ironiques réflexions lorsqu'il nous voit faire repasser nos habits avec des fers. C'est que, il faut bien le dire, un peu partout au Mossi, seul l'homme marié peut exiger que ses femmes blanchissent son vêtement; la maman s'occupe aussi des hardes de son enfant, mais le célibataire est obligé de laver lui-même ses habits. C'est, croyons-nous, ce qui explique l'extrême négligence de certains d'entre eux à laisser longtemps salir leurs vêtements, l'indolence étant aussi, fort malheureusement, un des défauts dominants de l'indigène du Mossi.

3° Fosses d'aisance. — Les Mossi, d'une manière générale n'ont pas de fosses d'aisance. Hommes, femmes, tout le monde, en un mot, va dans la brousse à l'exclusion des enfants encore en bas âge, qui font leurs besoins au seuil des portes. La nuit et pendant l'hivernage notamment, au moment où les tiges de mil sont assez hautes, les grandes personnes elles-mêmes se dissimulent derrière les cases dans le « Kamanga » ou le « Karaga » (champ de mil ou de maïs qui entoure l'habitation).

L'érection de la ville de Ouagadougou en Commune Mixte a permis d'installer aux frais du budget municipal, des W.-C. dans certains quartiers et notamment aux alentours du marché. Des prescriptions formelles ont, par ailleurs, obligé les habitants à creuser des fosses d'aisance dans les maisons, mais pendant longtemps encore, l'indigène ne perdra pas l'habitude de satisfaire ses besoins en plein air.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Communiqué par la Mission des Pères Blancs à Ouagadougou.

Danseurs Mossis de « Warba ».

[facing p. 232]

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

CHAPITRE XV

Les danses mossi et leur signification[1].

Dans ce chapitre nous allons examiner les danses Mossi, en expliquer le sens et dire les vieilles croyances qui s'y rattachent.

Ces danses tiennent, en effet, une place à part dans le cadre général des danses indigènes.

Celles-ci, pour la plupart, et notamment chez les Boussancé et les Gourmas, ne sont que des manifestations exubérantes, tantôt exercices de souplesse, tantôt caricatures des mouvements de la passion.

Les danses Mossi, au contraire, constituent réellement des danses soumises à des règles précises. Elles sont de trois sortes :

1° Des danses que nous dirons sentimentales et qui répondent au nom de « Wennega » ;

2° Des danses mi-guerrières, mi-religieuses, le « Waongo » ;

3° Enfin des danses de funérailles ou « Warba ».

A tout seigneur, tout honneur, commençons par la danse d'amour « Wennega ». Elle s'exécute dans une réunion. L'amant et l'amante — celle-ci vêtue de noir, couleur de cérémonie — reçoivent leurs compagnons et compagnes. Le dolo circule, la cola remplit les bouches. Bientôt les musiciens de l'Assemblée accor-

1. Extrait revu et complété d'une conférence faite par l'auteur le 24 décembre 1926.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

dent leurs guitares rustiques ou « kondés » qu'accompagnent des battements de calebasses. Et les femmes chantent :

M' Ba sida talem néré
Talem kan-kaïn, talemti
Pagh ka zaïd koulogh wa mandé
« Mon mari entretiens-moi bien,
Entretiens-moi dignement,
La femme vieillit vite comme le gombo »

Car en pays Mossi les femmes mariées sont, en effet, des femmes entretenues.

Autres chansons de « Wennega » :

Kandin bilin koamba ziyob'
Ade kandin bilin koamb' ziyob ya
La Fer-nan dambin yide
Bamb' data pagha piligh' wa rebre y a
Ti prote-mannaie yaoulin pa yaguedin
Koure yanga-yanga karin kouma
f' san katarin kont'me y é
f' san katarin kont'me bif ramodeguema

« Les employés du cercle (petit cercle)[1] ne savent pas comment courir les femmes ; ceux du grand-cercle, la compagnie des Fernand sont encore plus ignorants dans l'art de plaire. Ils veulent tous défaire les pagnes des femmes comme on déplie des nattes, mais tiennent leur porte-monnaie hermétiquement fermé.

« Porteurs de culottes dans les replis desquelles se

1. Autrefois il y avait à Ouagadougou le cercle du Mossi, et la subdivision de Ouagadougou proprement dite.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

cachent des poux, si vous n'avez rien à me donner, n'essayez tout de même pas de me posséder par la force. »

F' Nian néré yetta pa nan
logh là
Fola biga ma bé ba
f' ka yi wenin nana y è
« Tu admires cette fille,
Sa beauté te séduit
Et tu ne veux pas la laisser partir!
Es-tu le père ou la mère de cette Enfant ?
Tu n'es pas le Dieu qui l'a créée.

« La « Wennega » est surtout constituée par un mouvement de va-et-vient des reins qui s'exécute sur un rythme lent. Différentes figures se déroulent, mais toujours sur le même rythme et le même balancement des reins. L'amante elle-même se met à danser, fait curieux, car généralement les femmes ne participent pas à la danse des hommes.

***

Nous avons dit qu'une autre forme de la danse mossie est religieuse. Il s'agit du « Waongo. »

Le « Waongo » est un être mystérieux, mi-animal, mi-esprit.

Origine du Waongo. — La tradition raconte qu'il a été trouvé un jour tout seul dans une plaine. Ceux qui les premiers le virent eurent peur et s'enfuirent. Ils vinrent rendre compte aux vieux du village qui réunirent bon nombre de jeunes gens armés de flèches et de bâtons pour aller à la conquête de cet être étrange.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

A l'endroit où il avait été aperçu la première fois on ne le trouva pas. Il avait élu domicile plus loin. Les gens du village l'encerclèrent et les vieux lui ayant apporté un coq se mirent à l'interroger : « Si on l'emmenait à la maison ne nuirait-il pas aux habitants ?... Ne porterait-il pas malheur ? » On égorgea la poule qui, dit-on, ne fut pas agréée.

Les vieux s'en retournèrent au village et ramenèrent un coq blanc (norapelga), un bouc (boéga) et un chien (bâga); s'adressant au Waongo ils dirent : « Peut-être tout à l'heure nous étions-nous trompés, peut-être désires-tu un animal en plus du coq que nous t'avons offert tout à l'heure ? Si en devenant notre hôte tu peux nous apporter le bonheur, nous donner la santé et des enfants, accepte les offrandes que voici ! » On égorgea le coq et le bouc ; on abattit le chien. Cette fois les sacrifices furent acceptés.

Ce qu'est le Waongo. — Le « Waongo » se compose d'un masque représentant ordinairement la tête d'un animal et du bindou (sorte de longue soutane faite avec l'écorce d'un arbuste appelé « béringa », que l'on garde longtemps dans l'eau pour la noircir, ou de fibres de baobab). Il avait à côté de lui, nous apprend la tradition un « toabga » (sorte de hache magique) et le « tibo » (objet sacré, fétiche).

On le prit et on l'enferma dans un lieu sûr. Mais de quelle utilité pouvait-il donc leur être ? Personne n'en savait rien. C'était quelque chose d'inconnu et partant de redoutable.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Un jour on était allé faire le « Kouré » (funérailles d'un vieillard et l'on revenait. C'était des danseurs de « Warba. » Tout en chantant on approcha de la case habitée par le « Waongo » qui sortit aussitôt. Les danseurs terrorisés s'enfuirent. Seul un chanteur eut du courage et resta.

Il continua donc d'entonner ses chants et le « waongo » le suivit jusqu'à la demeure du défunt où il se mit à danser.

On en conclut que le « waongo » était chose de funérailles. Depuis, au décès d'un vieillard ou d'une vieille femme, de la famille des « nioniossé » « soukoaba », on fait venir le « waongo ». Il ne danse pas en effet pour les jeunes gens décédés.

Mais considéré comme sacré le « waongo » ou plutôt le « soukou » est une sorte de religion possédant des secrets qu'il ne paraît pas bon de faire connaître à tout le monde, aussi inventa-t-on un langage spécial — déformation de la langue môré — seul compris des initiés.

Le « Waongo » danse au son d'un tam-tam spécial accompagné de chants et d'éloges en langage secret; sa danse n'a rien de particulier : ce sont des mouvements plus ou moins frénétiques comme dans la plupart des danses indigènes.

Le « Waongo » est toujours accompagné d'un cercle de jeunes gens vêtus d'une mince bande de coton ornée de cauris et portant des sacoches aux côtés. Ces jeunes gens exécutent des mouvements de tête iden-tiques à ceux qu'effectuent les chevaux de cirque. Outre le tam-tam, des joueurs de flûte ou « wissé » les accompagnent dans leurs danses.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

***

Il nous reste maintenant à parler de la danse de funérailles proprement dite.

On la nomme « Warba ». Elle est dansée par des hommes vêtus de pagnes et de sortes de tricots en filet teints en bleu; ils sont coiffés de casques confectionnés avec des cauris. Une longue frange alourdie de métal posée sur les hanches, différencie ce costume des autres travestis. Cette frange s'agite aux mouvements du corps. Au bout d'un moment elle tourne tellement vite que l'on dirait une toupie.

Cependant un grand nombre de gens ne possédant pas le costume spécial dont il est parlé ci-dessus, se contente de nouer une couverture autour des reins. Aux mouvements du danseur cela produit un effet des plus comiques, car l'on croirait voir s'agiter la queue d'un singe.

Les instruments de musique avec lesquels les musiciens accompagnent cette danse sont de longs tamtams (gangando); l'un d'eux resserré dans son milieu affecte la forme d'une mince et longue bobine de fil.

D'autre part les danseurs s'accompagnent eux-mêmes avec de petits instruments de métal analogues aux castagnettes espagnoles.

La danse elle-même s'exécute en cercle sous la direction du chef de la « warba » dont le costume est plus riche que celui des autres. Mais tous les danseurs portent généralement sur la tête de nombreux gris-gris (queue de bœufs, têtes d'oiseaux maculées du sang des poulets sacrifiés).

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

La « Warba » prouve que les Mossi croient à l'immortalité de l'âme.

S'ils dansent, c'est qu'ils pensent que leur danse est nécessaire pour permettre à l'âme du défunt de rejoindre l'âme de ses ancêtres; ils espèrent ainsi se concilier les bonnes grâces du nouvel esprit.

Cette danse a donc un fondement moral. Il ne semble pas que l'on en puisse dire de même de celles que l'on danse un peu partout aujourd'hui.

***

Mais à côté de ces trois danses nationales Mossies il y a un certain nombre d'autres danses exclusivement réservées aux femmes et jeunes filles et qui sont, en réalité, plutôt des exercices de culture physique. Nous ne parlerons que de la principale ou « kiguibtobo » (danse des coups de fesses).

Kiguibtobo. — Elle est exécutée par un groupe de femmes. Ordinairement c'est au début de la saison fraîche après les récoltes que ces danses ont lieu. — Les femmes battent des mains tandis que des cantatrices font entendre leurs voix mélodieuses. La danse est rythmique. Deux danseuses sortent du groupe et se placent au milieu du cercle. Elles vont et viennent, puis brusquement, à un certain passage de la chanson chacune d'elles tourne le dos à sa compagne et leurs fesses se rencontrent et se frappent en cadence. Il faut des danseuses d'égale force pour éviter les chutes qui se produisent parfois avec des danseuses trop robustes.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Voici au hasard, une des chansons de « Kiguib-tobo. »

M'Ma ho, ka M'Ma warla y e
Lebin wa regh'big' tim boudguin
n'di Mossa yarbate ribo
Ma mère, eh, ma mère
Viens vite me débarrasser de mon enfant,
Je vais par là, dans le village voisin
Manger sans pitié le bien de ces vulgaires Mossé [1].

1. Mossi.

Communiqué par la Mission des Pères Blancs à Ouagadougou.

Greniers Mossis (lourds).

[facing p. 240]

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

CHAPITRE XVI

De l'agriculture.

Le choix du terrain de cultures. — Comme dans tous les principaux actes de la vie, le Moaga confie au devin le soin de lui indiquer son terrain de cultures. En réalité il le choisit lui-même, mais le devin doit lui indiquer d'une part, si le lieu n'est pas hanté par des esprits, d'autre part les sacrifices qu'il devra faire pour conjurer le mauvais sort.

Le « diseur des choses cachées » lui révèle toujours a présence de « Kinkirsi » (esprits) et prescrit des sacrifices et des aumônes.

Sacrifices. — Le nouvel occupant fait venir le chef de famille ou s'il s'agit d'un nionioga le Tengsoba, chargé des sacrifices. Les paroles sacramentelles prononcées sont les suivantes : « A zaguel tib reg' noag'la « zom kom kon Naba Zidwende, tib kon zig'tinguin « damba, tib kon timpelem, tib kon yaramba, kon « saramba, tib reg'kon zig, kinkirga ta wa me nan « baou ki, on — on tib reg' koin gnimassem, lass' « pogh'banga, lasse zoug'banga, naore banga... » raduction : De la part de X... j'offre ce coq et cette eau de farine au dieu soleil (zidwendé), aux frères du chef de famille morts sans enfants (zig' tinguin damba), aux ancêtres et grands-pères, pour qu'ils fassent réer les offrandes par les « Kinkirsi » (esprits du champ) et afin que ceux-ci gratifient X d'une bonne santé et d'abondantes récoltes de mil et de haricots.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Une fois ces sacrifices accomplis — s'ils sont agréés le coq doit tomber sur le dos — le nouveau propriétaire fait débroussailler le terrain et attend l'hivernage.

Les travaux. — Dès les premières pluies, il se rend au champ et fait encore égorger un coq qu'il offre au « Kinkirga » en lui demandant le « Gnimassem » (la bonne santé), d'abondantes récoltes qu'il mangera avec de nouvelles femmes et de nouveaux enfants (pog'palla, la bipalla). Après quoi il sème du gros et petit mil, des arachides, des haricots, etc...

. . . . . .

. . . . . .

L'année a été bonne. Le Moaga a eu d'abondantes récoltes. Il est content et se souviendra, le moment venu, de l'esprit du champ... Pour le moment il s'occupe de faire transporter le mil dans le grenier provisoire (lourgho).

. . . . . .

. . . . . .

Le battage du mil. — Avant de faire battre le mil, le Moaga est tenu de sacrifier au « zéiga » (à l'aire). Les paroles rituelles prononcées ne diffèrent de celles dont nous avons donné la signification ci-dessus que par cette seule variante. X... demande que ce mil qu'il va employer pour sa nourriture lui soit favorable, qu'il le mange en paix c'est-à-dire en bonne santé avec sa famille. (Kita ri ki wan ne lafi layelsomdé né a zak'ramba.)

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

On fait ensuite appel aux jeunes gens du village pour le battage du mil. A cette occasion le propriétaire fait préparer du dolo en grande quantité et fait cuire beaucoup de « benga » (haricots). On mélange du « sinni » (sésame) aux haricots. Après le travail on appelle deux enfants de six à sept ans et on leur remplit les deux mains de cet amalgame. Ils doivent faire en courant le tour de l'aire, tout en mangant une partie des haricots. L'autre partie sera semée à tous vents. Ils doivent reprendre haleine trois fois et se regarder face à face. Puis il est procédé à la distribution aux travailleurs des haricots qui restent. Il leur est donné également du dolo.

Les propriétaires conservent-ils des droits sur les terrains abandonnés ? — Pour occuper un terrain abandonné il faut obtenir au préalable, l'autorisation de l'ancien propriétaire. Mais celui-ci conserve ses droits sur le terrain; il peut le reprendre quand bon lui semble sans que le nouvel occupant puisse élever la moindre protestation.

Cependant il convient d'ajouter que bien souvent le terrain n'étant abandonné que parce qu'on le croit infertile ou hanté, il y a rarement reprise de possession. En tout cas ces questions sont tranchées par les intéressés eux-mêmes; l'Administration locale et le chef de canton interviennent rarement dans ces litiges.

Les droits des propriétaires sur les arbres fruitiers des champs de cultures. — Les « donsé » (néré) dont les fruits contiennent une poudre jaunâtre sucrée comes-tible et dont les graines servent à fabriquer le « soumbala » condiment puant fort prisé des indigènes, demeurent la propriété exclusive de l'ancien occupant, tandis que les « tamsé » (arbres à karité) appartiennent au nouveau propriétaire.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

La raison en est que l'arbre à karité se rencontre un peu partout dans la brousse tandis que le néré est plus rare.

Droits des chefs sur les terrains de cultures. — D'une manière générale, le principe des droits acquis étant observé en pays Mossi, le chef de canton ne confisque pas sans motif plausible un terrain de cultures appartenant à un de ses sujets si les grands-parents de celui-ci ont toujours occupé le terrain dont il s'agit.

Mais lorsque le terrain est vacant ou nouvellement occupé, le chef de canton peut, en sa qualité de maître absolu de son territoire, en prendre possession sans que le nouveau propriétaire puisse prétendre à aucun dédommagement.

Les travaux des champs

En principe le champ d'une famille est commun. Toutefois lorsqu'une femme devient vieille elle ne cultive plus avec son mari. Elle a son champ particulier et se nourrit comme bon lui semble, l'époux ne s'occupant plus d'elle et n'assurant plus son alimentation. Le travail se fait en commun. La superficie du champ varie selon l'importance de la famille.

De bon matin — ordinairement avant le lever du soleil — le chef de famille réveille les jeunes gens; ceux-ci se rendent aux champs, situés à 5 et souvent à 10 kilomètres. Vers 10 heures du matin les femmes apportent le reste du sagbo de la nuit ou à défaut de la farine de mil qu'on délaye dans de l'eau.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

A midi (Wend'to souka : la moitié du jour) la famille se repose à l'ombre d'un arbre. Il y a toujours dans chaque champ quelques arbres fruitiers. Vers 2 heures de l'après-midi on reprend le travail. A 5 heuresdusoir les femmes rentrent au logis pour préparer les aliments. Les hommes cessent le travail à la tombée de la nuit.

Sisoaga. — Lorsqu'une famille possède des champs trop vastes pour pouvoir les cultiver seule, elle fait appel à tous les hommes valides du village pour le sarclage.

A cette occasion, le chef de famille donne à ses femmes plusieurs paniers de mil germé pour la fabrication d'une grande quantité de « dam » ou bière de mil fermentée; il fait aussi préparer du sagbo (gâteau de mil).

Au jour indiqué, les jeunes gens se rendent aux champs; leur ardeur est excitée par des chants et des roulements de tambours. Ils reçoivent pour leur travail, sagbo et dam. C'est ce qu'on nomme le « SISOAGA ».

Il s'agit d'une sorte d'entr'aide, de solidarité indispensable, sans laquelle bien des terres resteraient incultes.

Ajoutons enfin que lorsqu'une personne tombe

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

malade pendant l'hivernage, ses camarades se concertent et vont cultiver ses champs; quelquefois sans aucune rémunération, mais par simple esprit de solidarité.

Instruments aratoires. — Comme partout en A. O. F. l'indigène ne possède que des instruments rudimentaires : Au Mossi ce sont : le « Wanka » ou « kounri » pioche ou daba bambara pour le labourage du sol; le « sitoaga » (pic, petit modèle) pour l'ensemencement et le « laré » (hache) pour la destruction des buissons et arbustes.

Travaux accessoires. — Exception faite pour les travaux des champs, chacun s'occupe de ses propres affaires. Les uns fabriquent des paniers, des corbeilles, des éventails ; d'autres tissent des bandes de coton. Il n'est peut-être pas sans intérêt de dire qu'au Mossi il n'y a pas de distinction de castes, à part celle des forgerons ; chacun peut donc pratiquer l'industrie qui lui convient. C'est ainsi que les cordonniers se recrutent pour la plupart parmi les « Nakomsé » (descendants des Nabas).

CULTURES VIVRIÈRES

Les principales cultures vivrières auxquelles s'adonnent les Mossi sont :

Kazouï (petit mil blanc ou gris ou millet);

Baningha (gros mil blanc ou sorgho);

Ces deux variétés sont destinées à la nourriture, bien que le gros mil blanc soit spécialement réservé aux chevaux chez les gens aisés.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Kazinga (gros mil rouge). Les Mossi peu fortunés le préfèrent au « baningha » pour l'alimentation, mais il sert plus spécialement à la fabrication du « dam » (dolo ou bière de mil fermentée);

Mouï (riz) recherché seulement par les chefs, les notables et quelques familles de « dakangba » (hommes aisés);

Benga (haricots);

Soumas (petits pois ou gros pois blancs et rouges);

Niouyan (de niouri : igname) cultivés dans certaines régions seulement;

Nangouri ou sounkama (arachides);

Pèsça (fabirama);

Sinni ou Sili (Sésame); cultivé seulement par quelques amateurs;

Enfin le Bito (oseille) employé pour la préparation de la sauce du sagbo;

On cultive aussi le « mana » (gombo).

Mais à côté de ces cultures vivrières, chacun tient à avoir son petit champ de coton (lamdo) dont la récolte est destinée à la confection des habits dont il a besoin dans l'année.

Les champs sont aujourd'hui, m'a-t-on déclaré, beaucoup plus vastes qu'autrefois, malgré l'abolition de l'esclavage. Cela provient de ce que jadis beaucoup de lieux prétendus hantés restaient incultes. On affirme cependant que le rendement était plus considérable, le Moaga étant à cette époque fort attaché au sol.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

A l'heure actuelle l'agriculture manque de bras.

Il y a une vingtaine d'années encore, dès l'âge de six à sept ans le jeune Moaga suivait ses parents aux champs. De bonne heure il prenait goût au travail. Avant l'occupation française, le Moaga quittait rarement son pays en raison de l'insécurité des routes, fréquentées par des brigands (d'ordinaire c'était les descendants des Nabas). On craignait même d'aller tout seul dans la brousse de crainte d'être attaqué, capturé et réduit à l'esclavage.

Entre des villages même frontières, il y avait peu de relations. A Ouagadougou, on ne se promenait pas librement de quartier à quartier sans de sérieuses raisons et sans s'être « armé jusqu'aux dents ». Bref, chacun se contentait de ce que son village pouvait produire ; il n'y avait, à vrai dire, pas de commerce dans l'acception du mot. Le Moaga essentiellement casanier réclamait au sol de quoi se nourrir et se vêtir.

Il n'y a que deux cultures nouvelles depuis l'occupation française : la culture des patates (Na-niouyan : ignames des chefs) et celle de la pomme de terre.

L'intensification des cultures cotonnières ces dernières années, en permettant aux indigènes de payer plus facilement leur impôt, augmente par ailleurs considérablement le goût de la production.

Mais la pénétration française avec ses nombreux bienfaits (création de réseaux routiers, tranquillité et libre circulation de village à village, suppression des bandits et des pillages), a fait naître chez le Moaga le désir d'expatriation.

Et c'est ainsi que les nombreux recrutements des

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Communiqué par la Mission des Pères Blancs à Ouagadougou.

Fabrication du Saghabo.
Bouillie de mil, nourriture des Mossis.

[facing p. 245]

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

travailleurs pour les besoins des colonies du groupe et pour le service des Travaux Publics du chef-lieu, le service militaire rendu obligatoire — acceptés à contre-cœur par les Mossi, il faut bien l'avouer — poussent un grand nombre de jeunes gens à s'expatrier.

D'aucuns partent sans le moindre moyen d'existence vers la Gold Coast de préférence. Ils vont travailler dans la colonie anglaise pour se procurer de quoi acheter des habits. Mais partis sans argent, ils y passent des mois et parfois des années, ce qui diminue la main-d'œuvre agricole... et oblige les pauvres parents vieux et impotents à cultiver eux-mêmes les champs.

Combien d'ailleurs ne reviennent jamais !...

De quoi se compose l'alimentation indigène

Le sagbo (bouillie de mil) constitue le principal aliment des Mossi quelle que soit leur condition sociale. Le riz considéré comme un aliment de luxe constitue la nourriture des Nabas et des Notables. Le prix de cette durée alimentaire qui varie entre 2,50 et 3 francs le kilo à Ouagadougou, est du reste inaccessible à toutes les bourses. Aussi n'est-il pas extraordinaire de constater qu'elle n'entre que rarement dans la composition de l'alimentation de quelques petits employés de l'Administration et du Commerce.

Les chefs Mossi font généralement deux principaux repas par jour :

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Un premier repas de sagbo ou de riz vers 9 heures;
Un deuxième repas de sagbo la nuit.

Le petit déjeuner n'est guère connu. Mais entre les deux principaux repas, les chefs font griller ou brûler de la viande dont ils sont fort friands, assaisonnée de sel et de piment en quantité suffisante pour leur permettre de supporter le nombre illimité de petites calebasses de dolo qu'ils absorbent depuis le réveil jusqu'au coucher.

Le Moaga ne fait en réalité qu'un seul repas par jour, c'est celui du soir. Une assez grosse boule de gâteau lui fait passer la faim de la journée. S'il en reste il le garde soigneusement pour son déjeuner du matin. S'il n'y a pas eu de restes, comme cela arrive souvent, il se contente de son « zompanrga » mil écrasé auquel on ajoute un peu d'eau et quelquefois du beurre végétal ou des arachides.

Il mange rarement du riz, se contente à défaut de « sagbo », de « benga » et de « soumas ».

C'est surtout pendant les fêtes que le Moaga tient à satisfaire son appétit. Ce jour-là, chaque chef de carré tue une chèvre, un mouton ou des poulets, fait préparer du sagbo, des fabirama ou des haricots avec une quantité exagérée de beurre de karité et c'est la ripaille. Les membres de la famille s'empiffrent à satiété et cela provoque toujours des diarrhées dont les suites sont d'autant plus graves qu'elles sont toujours mal soignées.

Comme assaisonnement le Moaga ne connaît que le « kalgo » (soumbala), le piment, le gombo et le sel. Mais il y a à peine quelques années, avant le développement du commerce dans la Colonie, ce dernier produit que les dioulas et yarcés rapportaient de Tombouctou et de Mopti coûtait si cher que dans les campagnes les Mossi passaient bien six mois sans manger d'aliments salés.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

. . . . . .

Il y a lieu de croire que dans un avenir prochain, le Moaga s'adonnera d'une façon intensive à la culture de certains produits rémunérateurs tels que : coton, pomme de terre, arachides, etc. Dans ce domaine les chefs de Province à Ouagadougou ont réalisé un grand progrès.

MOGH'NAB' KAWINRÉ (LE BATTAGE DU MIL DU MOGHO-NABA)

Sacrifices. — Pour cette cérémonie l'Empereur convoque à Ouagadougou Mankougoudougou Tengsoba (descendant des Nioniossé autochtones, maîtres de la terre) et lui remet un mouton destiné à être sacrifié au « zéiga » (à l'aire).

Le travail. — Après le sacrifice, vers deux heures et demie de l'après midi, KAM-NABA (notable du quartier du Baloum-Naba) se rend sur les lieux avec des jeunes gens de Bilbalogo et de Dapoya appelés à cette occasion. L'opération consiste à battre fortement les épis de mil à l'aide de branches d'arbres taillées en forme d'angle obtus et qu'on nomme « Dabandé » ou « Soika ».

Le travail terminé les travailleurs se retirent lais-

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

sant sur place le mil que l'on ramassera un autre jour.

Le lendemain matin ils reviennent au champ précédés du Bend'-Naba (Chef tambour) qui joue le « Bouloumbougri » kabse Nanamsé, auxquels les autres tambours répondent « Bouroum-bouroum (litt : Bend-Naba cite les noms des ministres de l'Empereur, rappelle l'origine de chacun et souhaite une année nouvelle et heureuse à Oubri-yiri Naba (maître de la maison d'Oubri, c'est-à-dire au Mogho-Naba). Bouroum-bouroum n'a aucune signification.

Tout de suite après le Bend-Naba roule du tambour invitant les jeunes gens à la danse de la warba (danse de funérailles) et ce ne sont plus que des mouvements désordonnés des pieds sur le mil qu'on éparpille de tous côtés. Puis, brusquement, les batteries de tam-tam cessent : c'est le repos. Alors Kam-Naba de Bilbalogo fait deux parts du tas de mil en traçant une ligne droite au milieu du « zéiga. » Les gens de Bilbalogo (quartier du Baloum-Naba) doivent ramasser une part tandis que le soin de réunir le second tas incombe à ceux de Dapoya (quartier des esclaves de case).

Bon an, mal an, la récolte du champ de l'Empereur doit donner 100 paniers (péog' koabga).

Le Mogho-Naba envoie de 50 à 70 canaris de dolo aux travailleurs et peu après il se rend lui-même sur les lieux. Il distribue aussi 2 à 3 wassé (de waga : charge de 1.000 colas) de colas à ses ministres et aux prestataires.

Après avoir remercié les travailleurs et leur avoir adressé quelques paroles d'encouragement, l'Empereur reprend le chemin de sa maison. Il est alors escorté de ses ministres et de tous les cavaliers.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Mankougoudougou Tensoba fait sur le sol du « zéiga » en trois endroits différents, trois traits à l'aide de cendre mouillée. Puis il prend un « lagha » (petit pot en terre cuite) y met de l'eau, prononce quelques paroles sacramentelles, arrose légèrement le mil avec ce liquide en disant : « Zâbre saga Ybéogo sâga, samb'da kôbo la ka toin sameb'la fi yé. (La pluie du matin, la pluie du soir, empêche de cultiver les champs mais ne peut rien contre la santé du Roi). Il s'empare ensuite d'un balai de paille (sagha) qu'il défait afin de prendre un peu de mil qu'il met dans le « lagha » dont il a été fait mention ci-dessus, et se rend ensuite au grenier provisoire (lourgho) (grenier fait avec des seccos Mossis). Il fait trois fois le tour du grenier. Un représentant de l'Empereur lui remet un coq blanc (nora-pelga), du dolo (dam) et du « zom-kom » (eau de farine). Le prêtre s'asseoit à l'ombre du « lourgho » et pour le sacrifice il prononce les paroles ci-après : « Naba Siguiri bad'kom, deghin kon Naba Wogbo, tib reg, kon Naba Sanum, tib kon Naba Koutou, tib reg' kon Naba Baongo, tib kon Naba Karfo, tib reg'kon Naba Sawadogo, tib reg la be kon Nab, gnimassem, la lafi. » (litt : « J'offre ce coq, cette eau de farine et ce dolo à Naba Siguiri (père de l'Empereur régnant) pour qu'il fasse agréer ces offrandes par les Mogho-Nabas Wobgo, Sanum, Kou-kou, Baongo, Karfo, Sawadogo, afin que l'Empereur ait une bonne santé et du bonheur. »

Tengsoba remet ensuite la petite quantité de mil

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

prélevée par lui à la pugtièma (première femme) du Roi pour la préparation d'un gâteau de mil offert aux esprits (mânes des Empereurs défunts et autres esprits de l'aire).

Transport du mil et mise en greniers. — Les femmes du Mogho-Naba, ses filles et sœurs sont seules chargées du transport du mil pour la mise en greniers (baoré)[1]. Mais ainsi que nous l'avons déjà dit il faut qu'il y ait 100 charges de mil alors même que la récolte ne suffirait pas à remplir 20 bons paniers. On répartit donc le mil en petite quantité dans des paniers pour atteindre le chiffre obligatoire prévu par la coutume.

La destination donnée au reste du mil laissé intentionnellement dans le « zeiga. ». — On laisse de-ci de-là sur le sol du « zéiga » un peu de mil que Kassiri-Naba (chef de village) doit ramasser à son profit. Cette faveur exceptionnelle astreint cependant ce chef de village à d'impérieux devoirs. C'est ainsi qu'il est tenu de convier à manger les principaux samand' kamba (gardes du corps) — et ils sont nombreux — de l'Empereur. De même c'est lui qui doit fournir un panier de mil pour l'ensemencement du champ du Mogho-Naba dès les premières pluies.

Utilisation du produit des champs de l'Empereur. — Comme il a déjà été dit dans un précédent chapitre

1. Le grenier « baoré » est fait en terre fortement mélangée de paille.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

« Corvées auxquelles sont astreints les sujets Mossi vis-à-vis de leurs Nabas », le Mogho-Naba ne touche pas au mil de son propre champ. Cette récolte sert à la nourriture des chevaux, à l'entretien des pages et samand'kamba et plus spécialement à la fabrication du dolo le jour de la fête connue sous le nom de « Tinsé » et la « Basgha » du Roi.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

CHAPITRE XVII

De la succession et des droits successoraux au Mossi.

Nous avons assez longuement traité de la question de la succession dans les chapitres « Coutumes » et « Intronisation des chefs Mossi ». Si, nous y revenons c'est qu'il nous a paru nécessaire de préciser certains détails de ce sujet important au point de vue juridique.

***

Ouverture d'une succession. — La succession s'ouvre par la mort du de cujus, mais l'entrée en possession des biens n'a lieu qu'après la fête des funérailles, (pour tout ce qui a trait aux funérailles, se reporter au paragraphe « DE LA MORT » du chapitre des « COUTUMES INDIGÈNES ».

Pourquoi l'entrée en jouissance des biens n'a lieu qu'après la fête des funérailles ? — Le Moaga, nous l'avons vu dans maints chapitres, est superstitieux. Une vieille croyance lui fait admettre que le fait de prendre possession des biens du défunt avant la célébration des funérailles entraînera la mort certaine de l'héritier ou sera cause d'un grand malheur pour toute la famille.

D'autre part tous les membres de la famille devant se trouver réunis au jour des funérailles, cela assure à la dévolution des biens une grande publicité et pré vient toute contestation de tous ceux qui par la suite, se prétendraient évincés de la succession.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Qualités exigées pour succéder. — Pour pouvoir succéder il faut réunir les conditions suivantes :

1° Être né avant l'ouverture de la succession;

2° Ne pas se trouver dans les cas d'indignité ci-après :

a) Meurtre du défunt;

b) Défaut de venger sa mort (autrefois le fils devait venger la mort de son père avant d'entrer en possession de ses biens). De nos jours, il faudrait plutôt entendre par « vengeance » le fait de poursuivre devant les tribunaux la réparation du crime;

c) Défaut de célébration des funérailles. Si l'héritier légitime est mineur, son tuteur doit procéder à la cérémonie en son nom ;

d) Existence d'une disposition testamentaire par laquelle le défunt déshériterait l'héritier présomptif.

Ordre successoral. — D'une manière générale les biens se transmettent en ligne directe, c'est-à-dire à l'aîné des fils du défunt et seulement, à son défaut, en ligne collatérale. Cependant pour certains biens, comme par exemple le fétiche familial, l'héritage revient de plein droit à l'aîné des frères du défunt.

S'il n'existe pas d'héritier du 1er et 2e degré, l'héritage est attribué au plus proche parent de celui de qui le défunt tenait lui-même les biens.

L'aîné de la famille exclut les autres et entre seul en possession de l'héritage. L'usage s'est cependant établi qu'il remette à ses frères et à ses oncles une par-tie des biens. Mais c'est là une véritable libéralité à laquelle il n'est pas tenu en fait.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Dans la succession des Nabas, le fils aîné hérite généralement seul de tous les biens laissés par le défunt, en raison même des lourdes dépenses qu'il devra effectuer conformément à la coutume au moment où il posera sa candidature de chef. En ce qui concerne les femmes — cet autre bien — il choisit celles qu'il aime et les autres sont abandonnées à l'ensemble des Nabissi (fils et descendants des Nabas).

Il n'en est pas de même des vulgaires Mossi qui ont commencé à comprendre l'utilité de faire participer tous les enfants du défunt au partage des biens. Dans le chapitre traitant du « Mariage » nous avons déjà vu que les femmes disposaient d'une certaine liberté dans le choix de leur mari parmi les fils du défunt.

Dans tous les cas, l'aîné de la famille se réserve la plus grosse part de la succession, ce qui au point de vue même de la coutume, se conçoit nettement puisqu'il s'est substitué au défunt dans la responsabilité qui incombait à ce dernier comme chef de famille.

Les filles et les femmes prennent-elles part au partage des successions ? — Les filles ne prennent pas part au partage de la succession. Elles peuvent recevoir cependant de leurs frères des cadeaux de peu d'importance.

Les femmes n'héritent jamais de leur mari. Elles ne peuvent prendre part au partage de la succession que comme représentants de leurs enfants en bas âge. Bien au contraire la femme considérée comme un bien meuble fait elle-même partie de la succession au même titre que les autres biens laissés par le défunt.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Sort de la succession en deshérence. — Le chef de canton a seul qualité pour hériter les biens de tout individu mort sans parents connus.

DROITS ET DEVOIRS SUR LES BIENS DANS LA FAMILLE

Les biens sont individuels.

Les biens sont strictement personnels. Le chef de famille n'a aucun droit sur les biens acquis individuellement par les femmes et les enfants, ou tout autre parent sous sa puissance. — Ceux-ci disposent de ce qu'ils possèdent comme ils l'entendent. La femme-mère fait du commerce pour constituer un pécule à ses enfants. En aucun cas le chef de famille ne peut employer ces biens sans le consentement de leur véritable propriétaire.

Le mari hérite-t-il de sa femme? — Le mari n'a aucun droit sur les biens de sa femme; il ne peut même pas en disposer si elle venait à mourir sans enfants, puisqu'en ce cas la succession de la défunte revient, de par la coutume, à ses propres parents (frères ou sœurs) ou à défaut aux enfants de ceux-ci.

Les enfants ont droit, indépendamment de la part qui leur revient dans la succession de leur père, à la succession laissée par leur mère.

***

Lorsque le chef de famille emprunte des cauris à un

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

membre quelconque de son carré, il se doit de les restituer dans les délais convenus. Quant à ses propres biens il en a seul la jouissance sans contrôle pendant son existence. Ces biens font partie de sa succession au même titre que ses femmes.

Sort de la maison après la mort. — A la mort du chef de carré, la maison n'est pas détruite. Elle passe d'office aux héritiers, c'est-à-dire aux enfants ou si le défunt n'a pas laissé d'héritiers légitimes à ses frères. Si le de cujus était le détenteur et le gardien du fétiche familial, celui-ci est emporté dans la maison de l'aîné des frères ou chez la personne désignée par la coutume.

On sait cependant que le Moaga n'habite pas une maison sans consulter au préalable les diseurs des choses cachées. Aussi, si les esprits sont défavorables au successeur, la maison est abandonnée aux autres fils ou frères du défunt. Du reste, dans bien des cas si le fils aîné est lui-même marié et chef de famille et possède déjà une maison, il fait loger dans celle de son père ses « dakompas » (jeunes frères célibataires) ou un de ses oncles.

Acceptation ou répudiation des successions. — Conséquences. — Le fait d'accepter et de recueillir une succession implique l'obligation d'en acquitter les charges et les dettes. En pays Mossi, on ne refuse pas une succession, puisque la non-acceptation de celle-ci n'exclut pas l'obligation de payer les dettes du défunt. Les parents sont en effet solidaires les uns des autres non pas en considération de la communauté de biens qui n'existe pas, nous l'avons déjà dit, mais en égard au principe de responsabilité collective établie dans un but d'ordre public. Sans doute, les dettes sont d'abord réclamées à l'héritier légitime, mais si la succession se chiffre par un passif tous les parents de même degré sont solidairement responsables.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Ne font pas partie de la succession tous les biens que les membres de la famille ont pu recevoir par donation du de cujus durant la vie de celui-ci.

Testament. — Au Mossi, le testament a toujours la forme orale.

Le testateur en présence de ses parents — oncles, frères et de son voisinage qu'il convoque à cet effet, fait part de ses dernières volontés à son héritier légitime, lequel sera de plein droit son successeur testamentaire. Mais dans le cas où le testament a pour objet d'évincer l'héritier légitime et si pour une cause ou pour une autre, celui-ci se trouvait être absent, le testateur chargerait de l'exécution de ses dernières volontés, le plus vieux des membres de la famille qu'il a réunis.

Cas où l'héritier présomptif est déshérité. — Le testateur en présence de témoins et dans les conditions sus-indiquées, expose les raisons pour lesquelles il entend écarter l'héritier présomptif de la succession. Dans le cas où les motifs invoqués ne paraîtraient pas suffisants, les témoins s'efforceraient de faire revenir le testateur sur sa décision. Cependant si leur intervention était accueillie par une fin de non-recevoir formelle, ils n'insisteraient pas mais au moment de procéder à la dévolution des biens la disposition testamentaire excluant l'héritier présomptif sera considérée comme nulle et non avenue.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Si l'héritier présomptif était déshérité pour une des causes d'indignité déjà citées ou pour cause d'adultère commis avec une femme du père ou de la famille par exemple, la succession est attribuée à celui qui vient immédiatement après lui dans l'ordre successoral fixé par la coutume « moaga ».

Capacité de tester. — Tous ceux qui possèdent peuvent disposer par testament.

Révocation des testaments. — Les testaments sont révocables au gré du testateur. Il suffit pour cela d'une simple déclaration verbale en sens contraire dans la même forme que celle déjà décrite.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

CHAPITRE XVIII

De la circoncision. — Les Mossi pratiquent-ils la circoncision ?

La circoncision est très en honneur au Mossi. Par suite de l'ignorance des mœurs et coutumes mossi, certains fonctionnaires coloniaux ont prétendu que les Mossi ne pratiquaient ni la circoncision, ni l'excision. Il faut, en effet, savoir distinguer le « Moaga » du «Boussanga» et surtout du « Nionioga ». Bien qu'apparentées, ces races ont des mœurs différentes.

La circoncision soumise à des règles précises s'effectue ici, à quelques exceptions près, comme chez les Kassonkés de Kayes.

A l'origine, cette cérémonie a dû être imposée aux « Dagombas » dont les Mossi sont les descendants, par l'Islamisme. Cependant à l'heure actuelle ce n'est pas l'idée religieuse qui incite les jeunes gens à se faire circoncire, mais plutôt les railleries des camarades et surtout le mépris que manifestent les femmes Mossi pour tout homme non circoncis.

Nous allons essayer, dans les lignes qui suivent, de décrire la cérémonie de circoncision au Mossi.

***

C'est après les récoltes, vers la fin novembre, que les jeunes gens manifestent leur désir de subir l'opération de la circoncision. Comme l'entretien d'un circoncis coûte cher à ses parents, ceux-ci ne souscrivent à la volonté de leur fils que s'ils ont fait d'abondantes récoltes.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Du reste, comme il s'agit d'une manifestation qui doit prendre un caractère grandiose, il faut une trentaine ou une cinquantaine de garçons de douze à quinze ans pour qu'on consente à leur faire subir l'opération. Les parents après avoir consulté les devins (bagba) s'en vont trouver un « yarga » (dioula d'origine mandé) ou un « Silmimoaga » (toucouleur du Mossi) et lui demandent de se charger de l'opération.

Ce chirurgien d'occasion s'appelle « Gounni ».

Keogo. — On choisit un lieu retiré de toute habitation, de préférence un endroit sablonneux ; on y trace une circonférence qu'on entoure avec des secco Mossi (sogsak' pinri). L'enceinte est plus ou moins grande suivant le nombre des jeunes gens qui doivent l'habiter. Cette enceinte se nomme « Kéogo ».

Les enfants sont conduits à la Porte du « kéogo » étroitement surveillée par les « zoumsi » (hommes déjà circoncis). Chaque enfant prend un air grave, défiant — il faut bien se donner du courage. Dans l'intérieur du cercle se trouve une foule grouillante, les roulements de tam-tams se confondent avec les chants et il se produit un tel vacarme que c'est à peine si l'on entend : « Moaga wanian konlebin kouli moaga » (litt : Moaga — dans le sens de homme non circoncis — tu es venu, tu ne repartiras plus moaga).

Comment se pratique l'opération. — Avant d'introduire les jeunes gens, on creuse, au préalable, des trous correspondant à leur nombre puis on les fait entrer un par un. On bande les yeux de l'enfant. On le fait asseoir sur une pierre devant un trou ; le prépuce fortement allongé et attaché par une ficelle est placé sur un billot de bois et tranché d'un seul coup de rasoir (barga). On retient la verge avec une paille fendue au milieu pour permettre l'écoulement du sang dans le trou. Je crois que c'est dans un trou spécial que sont enfouis tous les prépuces coupés; une ficelle passée autour des reins du jeune circoncis remplace après l'opération la paille fendue de façon à tenir continuellement la verge droite et à éviter tout frottement avec les autres parties du corps, ces frottements étant très douloureux.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Bankoensé yuiya (Noms attribués aux jeunes circoncis). — Les noms attribués aux jeunes circoncis varient suivant le rang de chacun. Le premier qui subit l'opération porte le nom de « Falinga », le second « Ouanda », le troisième « Wanzouri » et ainsi de suite, Nodo, Koulwandé, Wemba, etc... Il y a même l'enfant gâté qu'on nomme « Ponsom » parce qu'il lui est laissé certaines libertés.

Zouinsi yuiya (Noms des gardiens du kéogo et surveillants des Bankoensé). — Sept jours après la cérémonie, on choisit parmi les « Zouinsi » les personnes qui seront chargées de la surveillance du « kéogo », de l'organisation intérieure, ainsi que des jeux. C'est tout une hiérarchie : Soré-Naba (litt : chemin chef). C'est lui qui est pour ainsi dire le directeur de la maison : puis viennent dans l'ordre des pré-séances Sobila-Naba, Dag'noré, Dag'Nobila (gardiens de la porte). Le rôle de ces derniers consiste à autoriser tout « zounga » à rentrer dans le « kéogo » ; de même nul circoncis ne peut franchir le seuil de l'enceinte sans leur autorisation. Galli, Gallibila — personnages chargés des tambours. L'Imam, l'Imambilla (chefs du Pardon) délivrent des mains des « Zouinsi » les bankoensé maltraités. Banzambo, personne un peu comique qui danse à tout moment, et toutes sortes de danses pour rompre la monotonie de la vie du « kéogo » et donner un peu de gaîté aux circoncis, ses trémoussements provoquant inévitablement les rires de l'assemblée. Wagdré, Wagd'billa (chef et petit voleurs) : ces deux individus ont pour mission de voler la viande provenant des battues auxquelles se livrent les jeunes circoncis ou le saghbo apporté par les parents de ces derniers, mais aussi par compensation, de faire coucher les petits enfants et de leur offrir à manger lorsque les jeux durent longtemps et cela à l'insu des autres surveillants du kéogo.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Nané, Nanebilla sont avec le « Bankoé » les maîtres de cérémonie.

Entretien des circoncis. — Nous l'avons déjà dit, les parents sont tenus d'assurer la nourriture de leurs enfants matin et soir pendant toute la durée de leur maladie. Il n'est pas sans intérêt de dire que les circoncis ne reçoivent, en réalité, qu'une maigre pitance, plus de la moitié des aliments — les meilleurs plats étant mis à part par le « lembré » (personnage chargé d'apprécier le goût des aliments) — étant, en effet, réservée aux nombreux zouinsi dont la plupart, célibataires, trouvent là une occasion de satisfaire régulièrement leur faim.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Soins donnés aux malades. — Un coin du « kéogo » spécialement aménagé sert d'infirmerie. Les soins consistent dans le lavage de la plaie avec de l'eau chaude qui n'est souvent pas d'une propreté rigoureuse, la calebasse qui la contient n'étant parfois pas lavée. La plaie est saupoudrée d'un charbonnage (écorce ou feuillage de la plante « baguem-baga » calciné) mêlé à du beurre de karité. Le bandage composé d'une feuille d'un arbuste « kantonga » est maintenu à l'aide de fil. Lorsque la cicatrisation commence on entoure la plaie de bandes de coton. L'eau ayant servi à laver la plaie est ensuite jetée dans un trou qu'on recouvre d'une pierre.

Langage spécial parlé dans le keogo. — Pour éviter que le moaga (c'est-à-dire le non circoncis) comprenne ce qui se dit dans l'intérieur du « kéogo » ou entre gardiens et circoncis, il a été inventé un langage conventionnel. C'est ainsi qu'on appelle :

L'eau (kom en Mossi vulgaire) hargo;

Le gâteau de mil (saghbo en Mossi) lâbo;

La sauce (zindo en Mossi) kirou;

Le feu (bougoum en Mossi) Nionom;

Le Dolo (dam en Mossi) Sonnom;

Le boubou ou la couverture (Fougou en Mossi) Pilli;

La natte (pinri en Mossi) Wanghé.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Signes distinctifs du jeune circoncis (Bankoanga). — Son habillement « Wallimba » ou « zougba » se compose d'un cache-sexe avec franges et pochettes. Il porte un bâton un peu rustique « zâbré » dont il se sert pour chasser les lièvres et autre menu gibier.

Il accompagne sa danse du soir d'un instrument appelé « Wassimba » composé d'un bâton recourbé à l'extrémité duquel sont enfilés quatre ou cinq morceaux de calebasses troués par le milieu et affectant la forme d'une circonférence.

Tam-tams. — Les « Bankoensé » (jeunes circoncis) dansent en suivant le rythme des batteries de deux tambours qui ne diffèrent en rien de ceux dont on se sert pour la danse de la « warba » ou du « waongo » (voir chapitre des danses indigènes), mais tandis que pour ces deux danses on appelle ces tambours des « Gangango » ici ils prennent le nom de « gallyans ».

Choses défendues dans le keogo. — I. Il est formellement interdit à un moaga[1] de regarder à travers l'enceinte. S'il commet cette imprudence qui constitue une très lourde faute, il en subit immédiatement les conséquences, puisqu'il est tout aussitôt introduit dans le cercle, déshabillé et subit l'opération de la circoncision sans que l'on ait, au préalable, consulté ses parents.

II. Il est formellement défendu d'entrer dans le « kéogo » avec des néoda (chaussures), un pougla

1. Moaga est employé ici dans un sens péjoratif et signifie : homme non circoncis.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

(chéchia rouge) et des « kandé » (lances). Le chef de canton, s'il lui prend la fantaisie — cas du reste rarement observé — de visiter les circoncis, doit abandonner dehors tous les insignes de la chefferie.

III. Il a été observé que les jeunes gens s'étant livrés avant leur circoncision à l'acte sexuel guérissaient difficilement; aussi est-il conseillé aux jeunes gens de s'abstenir de tout contact charnel pendant les premiers mois qui suivent la cicatrisation de la plaie.

IV. On ne mange pas la sauce de « wagha » (sauce faite avec des jeunes fruits du « wagka » arbre de la famille des kapokiers).

Exercices auxquels sont astreints les bankoensé. — Les Bankoensé sont soumis à des exercices pénibles et fatigants qui retardent considérablement leur guérison. Nous allons passer en revue les principaux exercices auxquels ils sont astreints.

De fort bon matin, lorsqu'il fait excessivement frais — nous l'avons déjà dit c'est au début de la saison fraîche qu'a lieu la cérémonie — les jeunes gens sont réveillés et sans couverture doivent se coucher à plat ventre sur le sable refroidi : C'est le « bourga ». Comme tout naturellement les membres sont un peu engourdis on leur distribue généreusement quelques bonnes fessées de « berrella » (branchages de certains arbres), dans le but de leur donner un peu de chaleur et de l'énergie; puis suivant le rythme du tam-tam, ils doivent exécuter le « guella » exercice difficile qui consiste à faire, accroupi des sauts à l'imitation du crapaud avec, par moments, un mouvement circulaire des jambes; ou bien ce qui est plus pénible encore à exécuter le « nagda » exercice consistant à marcher sur les mains avec les jambes en l'air; d'autres fois encore le jeune circoncis doit se tenir droit puis lentement se replier le ventre en l'air, les deux mains devant se poser sur le sol : C'est ce qu'on nomme « kaougsèga » (litt : casser les reins). Les malheureux qui manquent le but s'en tirent seulement avec une légère bosse à la tête. Il y a aussi des mouvements de tête comme seules savent en faire les jeunes filles « Kassonkées » et les Wiskamba » du Mossi, qu'on nomme « zouanka. »

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Libération. — Le séjour au « kéogo » dure de 90 à 100 jours. Vers le 80e jour tout le monde étant guéri, on rase la tête des jeunes gens et on leur annonce qu'un semaine plus tard ils seront libérés. On égorge des poulets « koug'nossé — poulets de la pierre); chaque circoncis reçoit la moitié d'un poulet.

En réalité c'est quatorze jours seulement après cette cérémonie qu'a lieu la libération. Toutes les hardes des jeunes gens (cache-sexe, bandes à pansements, bâtons, etc...) sont brûlées par les « zouinsi ». On allume un grand feu non loin du « kéogo ». Les « bankoensé » complètement nus doivent sauter par-dessus ce feu en courant et continuer sans regarder derrière eux jusqu'à la maison du « Bankoé » où préalablement, une nouvelle enceinte a été dressée. Là on remet aux jeunes gens des pagnes, boubous, culottes et bonnets de toutes couleurs que leurs parents ont acheté ou fait confectionner à leur intention. Chacun tient, en effet, à ce que son enfant se distingue ce jour-là par la richesse de son costume. Le défilé des jeunes circoncis offre un aspect bigarré et pittoresque. Un ou deux jours après, les jeunes gens doivent, à la nuit tombante et pour la dernière fois, se diriger vers le « kéogo » sans toutefois y arriver et revenir chez le « Bankoé », l'échine légèrement courbée : c'est ce qu'on nomme « lèssé-bourgou. »

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Pendant une semaine entière c'est une véritable fête pour les jeunes gens; ceux-ci sont fiers de se faire admirer, de pouvoir danser d'autres danses que celles de la circoncision, de boire du dolo et surtout de faire bonne chère, les parents sacrifiant à leur intention poulets et moutons.

Enfin de fort bon matin quelques zouinsi réunissent les jolis bâtons dessinés « Wangha ou dibissi » des jeunes circoncis et vont les enfouir dans des trous creusés en dehors du village. La cérémonie a pris fin, les jeunes gens sont alors autorisés à rentrer dans leur famille.

Mais tous ces jeunes gens ont subi les mêmes mauvais traitements, ils ont mené la même vie pendant cent jours environ; au cours de ces journées d'épreuves se sont formées des amitiés, des liens durables, ils s'appelleront donc familièrement de leur nom de circoncision, ils se rendront dans la vie des services, ils sont devenus des camarades.

Pour éviter des représailles toujours possibles — dans le « kéogo » on ne distingue guère le fils du Naba de celui du simple cultivateur — la coutume défend aux nouveaux circoncis de garder rancune aux zouinsi des mauvais traitements dont ils ont été l'objet de la part de ces derniers.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

***

Les « Nioniossé » et les « Soukoaba » ne pratiquent pas la circoncision. C'est pour cela qu'on les appelle des Mossé. Dans les villages où les habitants sont exclusivement des « Nioniossé » on ne peut installer un « kéogo ». Certains jeunes gens d'origine nionioga font fi actuellement de cet interdit et vont subir l'opération purificatrice[1] dans le village de leur mère (Yastenga).

Nombreux sont les adeptes du Christianisme qui subissent au Mossi la circoncision volontairement, la femme — même chrétienne — éprouvant une certaine répugnance à subir le contact du « moaga ».

***

Enfin l'excision est aussi en honneur au Mossi, sauf encore chez les Nioniossé où elle ne se pratique pas. Les filles non excisées sont humiliées par leurs compagnes et n'ont pas d'amants.

---

1. Les musulmans croient, paraît-il, que toute personne circoncise ne va pas en enfer.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

CHAPITRE XIX

Maximes et pensées Mossi.

Dans un précédent chapitre « Intronisation des chefs Mossi » nous avons parlé des surnoms que se donnaient les Nabas au moment de leur avènement. Le lecteur a dû remarquer que si beaucoup de ces surnoms ou « zabyuiya » exprimaient souvent une idée de menace à l'adresse des concurrents, ils exprimaient parfois aussi une pensée, ou bien encore donnaient une indication sur la politique que se proposait de suivre le nouveau Naba. D'autre part, dans le chapitre des « Coutumes locales », notamment au paragraphe traitant de la naissance nous avons donné la signification de certains noms indigènes. Tout ceci démontre l'intelligence d'un peuple. C'est que dans la vie courante, le Moaga parle souvent par énigmes et dans certaines réunions soit pour défier les curieux, soit pour éviter de mettre certains étrangers au courant des secrets du village, les paroles échangées sont le plus souvent des mots à double sens. L'indigène a certes une culture rudimentaire, mais il a une culture quand même.

Dans ce chapitre nous allons présenter au lecteur quelques proverbes et maximes Mossi.

Il en reconnaîtra la finesse et parfois la justesse.

Nous regrettons beaucoup de ne pouvoir, dans l'ensemble du travail entrepris, étudier dans ses menus détails la psychologie de l'indigène, cela aurait permis sans doute de le mieux faire connaître pour le mieux faire aimer, car pour comprendre l'âme indigène, il faut avant tout connaître sa civilisation et saisir ses pensées dans ce qu'elles ont de subtil.

Quoi qu'il en soit, nous souhaitons que les renseignements que nous fournissons dans les différents chapitres de ce travail servent d'ébauche à une étude d'ensemble aussi complète que possible pour le bien de la race moaga dont l'histoire et les mœurs ne sont encore que très peu connues.

YELBOUNA (Proverbes)

I. Tekre wind'kouni bi ned kam tala rinda.

Si l'échange équivaut à un cadeau que chacun garde ce qui lui appartient.

II. Kolkodo same rogho, menem n'loubda.

La maison construite avec la salive ne résiste pas à la rosée (Tout ce qui est fait sans réflexion n'aboutit qu'à des mécomptes).

III. Ned sin ting'beogho belem Wendé.

Qui songe à demain repose sa confiance en Dieu.

IV. Wagda noré nionstaba Nab'Niolkba.

Si deux voleurs complices n'ont pas la même langue, leur arrestation par le Naba est proche. (Autrement dit : Pour qu'une affaire soit bien conduite il faut une parfaite entente entre les parties en cause.)

V. Watid Wamb'lab kamba n'maneg'sondo.

Se mettre d'accord pour manger réciproquement leurs enfants c'est entretenir de bonnes relations entre sorciers (cela rappelle un peu de La Rochefoucault lorsqu'il dit que « l'amitié n'est autre chose qu'un échange de bons offices où chacun se propose toujours quelque chose à gagner ».

VI. A baodin bing'din la baodin ditin yam y a yemballa.

Celui qui mange sa fortune de son vivant et celui qui devient avare et ne veut rien dépenser sont aussi malins l'un que l'autre.

VII. Sin pa kou kon sigue yé.

On ne dépèce pas ce qui n'est pas mort. Signifie : Ne fais pas de grands projets si tu n'es pas sûr de pouvoir les mener à bonne fin. Le proverbe français : Il ne faut pas vendre la peau de l'ours avant de l'avoir tué, traduit exactement cette pensée.

VIII. Boulough'ka teud dara yé n'pam kom ye.

On ne peut forer un puits en un jour (ce qui signifie : « C'est à force de réflexion et de patience qu'on trouve la solution des grands problèmes. »

IX. Pagh'nore là loko.

La bouche d'une femme est son carquois.

X. Pagh youré la pagtouba la moum nore tallé.

Qu'est-ce que c'est que la femme ? Un être étrange, bouche-toi les oreilles, ferme la bouche et garde-la.

XI. Sawiné wan yik pind'n'saon.

Pensée de Mogho-Naba Wobgo signifiant littéralement : « Pendant l'hivernage se lever bon matin est mieux. » Cette pensée signifie : « Il faut faire vite ce qu'on veut faire de façon à éviter qu'une circonstance imprévue ne vous oblige à le remettre au lendemain. »

XII. Wend'na konf nioré, la wend'na samfo san maond' taba f'vousda bilfou.

Proverbe de Mogho-Naba Wongo signifiant : « Lorsque les deux personnages qu'on nomme « Dieu te bénisse » et « Dieu te maudisse » sont en lutte cela vous donne le loisir de prendre un peu de repos. »

Pour faire comprendre cette pensée de l'Empereur des Mossi une explication paraît nécessaire : BOUKARY KOUTOU, Empereur des Mossi était de sa nature sanguinaire. Il faisait mettre des individus à mort pour des motifs futiles, mais, par ailleurs il avait des moments de répit pendant lesquels il était très large, distribuant les cadeaux sans compter à tel point que beaucoup de ses sujets le prenaient pour un Roi d'une grande bonté. Il savait personnellement que les avis étaient partagés et si d'aucuns lui souhaitaient les bénédictions du Ciel les autres devaient être prodigues en malédictions; aussi par esprit critique, aimait-il à répéter chaque fois qu'il commettait une mauvaise action, la pensée dont la signification a été donnée ci-dessus.

XIII. Ned na modgh' nitiema n'soui a korg' zome.

Peut-on obliger un vieillard à mettre du mil écrasé dans sa peau de bouc en prévision de la faim ?

Il faut être dénué de volonté pour se laisser dominer par des faibles d'esprit.

XIV. Pagh yoda na sàonga sida.

(Litt. : La femme mariée commet des actes d'infidélité tout d'abord parce qu'elle croit trouver toujours des hommes supérieurs à son mari et aussi parce qu'elle pense n'avoir plus rien à demander à ce dernier, comptant sur les biens qu'elle recevra de ses amants). Signifie : Ce qui conduit l'homme à commettre des actes bas et vils c'est d'abord l'idée du grand profit qu'il compte retirer de ces actes malhonnêtes. Il ne se met jamais dans l'esprit que ses projets peuvent échouer et de là la honte et l'ignominie.

XV. Gom gomdeb laghem koabga ti sind'pam boum.

Ce n'est pas le plus grand parleur qui a toujours raison; bien au contraire souvent le parleur essaie par sa volubilité de dissimuler la vérité. Celui qui garde le silence a le plus souvent raison ou possède la vérité.

XVI. Ned kon banguef zib'tiri ti tousgh'paogof'ye.

Litt. : Quand on connaît le poids de la charge qu'on va porter on prépare par avance le coussinet à poser sur la tête.

Cette pensée signifie : « Lorsqu'on sait quelle responsabilité on assume dans une affaire, on prend ses dispositions pour parer à toutes les éventualités.

XVII. Lãre wind'zindé, zindé yida.

Litt. : Si la hache ressemble et remplace le « zindé » (cognée) c'est que le second n'est pas à portée de la main. Signifie : On n'emploie de moyens de fortune que lorsqu'on se trouve dans l'impossibilité de faire autrement.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

XVIII. Kombre zand'kaosgo yoda bagh'yam.

Litt. : Tenir longtemps dans la main un os sans le jeter au chien qui l'attend c'est vraiment soumettre l'animal à une rude épreuve. Signifie : Hésiter longtemps à prendre une décision pourtant urgente c'est donner à réfléchir à son entourage.

XIX. Toguess'sid'ka ribo la be bassem yam.

Aimer et dire trop la vérité peut être cause qu'on vous refuse quelquefois l'hospitalité, mais la conscience est beaucoup plus tranquille.

XX. Bonkane koum' bigha saon akin dog'yalma.

Apprendre que son enfant est mort victime de sa grande témérité est toujours préférable à la critique qu'on vous fera d'avoir donné naissance à un être couard et sans valeur.

XXI. Zoang'mough'na, n'va parikse n'lebin vadin.

Litt. : Considère l'aveugle : ce qu'il a fait tomber de l'arbre il ne l'a pas encore ramassé qu'il continue quand même à le secouer. Signifie : Il ne faut jamais entreprendre une affaire quand plusieurs autres sont restées sans solution définitive. Un proverbe français dit : « Il ne faut jamais courir plusieurs lièvres à la fois. »

XXII. Pang'san'segh poulga, lebegh' dab raniouga.

Litt. : Lorsque la force (dans le sens de puissance des Nabas) rencontre un dolo fait pour être vendu, cette bière change aussitôt de destination, c'est-à-dire qu'elle est offerte sans exiger aucun paiement. Autrement dit : « La Force prime le droit. »

XXIII. Nionk' loub ya ka pangha, la zo n'panbdan y a ka neda.

Litt. : Faire tomber quelqu'un c'est démontrer qu'on est fort, mais frapper la personne ainsi terrassée prouve que celle-ci n'a pas de parents : ce qui signifie : « Médire d'une personne à son insu est une loi de nature, mais l'injurier en sa présence c'est lui montrer qu'on fait peu de cas de sa personne. »

XXIV. Nab fan mi pogh'nyang'youre lab bond't em yaba.

Litt. : Tout le monde connaît le nom de la vieille, pourtant on l'appelle grand'mère. C'est un reproche à ceux qui divulguent un secret que nul n'ignorait dans la famille mais que l'on voulait cependant cacher au public.

XXV. Da pidghe loko t'eb banghe ti y a tanwingh'ye.

Litt. : Ne montre pas ton carquois et tes flèches car il ne faut pas qu'on sache qu'ils sont faits de bambou. « La force de ceux qui commandent réside dans le secret des moyens divers qu'ils emploient pour imposer leur volonté. »

XXVI. Teng'Naba san n'sonde Albarka, son kiela sonda yemboudou.

Litt. : Si le chef du village a pour nom « Albarka » (nom qu'on donne aux esclaves) les habitants se nommeront « Yemboudou » (race d'esclaves), c'est-à-dire que les sujets d'un chef l'imitent dans toutes ses actions bonnes ou mauvaises. Autrement dit : « Tel chef, tels sujets. »

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

XXVII. Ned toen ti baga gandé, laf ka toen ta mouma nine ye.

Litt. : On peut par la force ou la douceur faire coucher un chien, mais on ne peut l'obliger à fermer les yeux. « Signifie : On peut soumettre un individu ou un pays par la force ou par la douceur, mais il est malaisé, pour ne pas dire impossible, d'obtenir que les habitants abandonnent totalement ou changent leurs habitudes et coutumes. »

XXVIII. Fo san date silfaogho niendegha bif sok dakoeogho.

Litt. : Si tu veux le derrière le l'épervier demande-le au bois sec : Ce qui signifie : « Pour mieux connaître quelqu'un il faut se renseigner auprès des personnes qui le fréquentent. »

XXIX. Sagh' bonsa nien saghbo n'kidmdin, saghbosoba n'sô à saghbo.

Litt. : Le mendiant se réjouit à la vue du saghbo (gâteau de mil), il oublie que le saghbo a un propriétaire. C'est à-dire : « Il ne faut pas confondre son bien avec celui d'autrui. »

XXX. Eb san belghe biga t'a koda, a boug'da wang'kienrga.

Litt. : Si on dit à un enfant qu'il est déjà bon cultivateur il se promènera avec un daba sur l'épaule. Signifie : « Féliciter un orgueilleux c'est le pousser à faire preuve de plus de fatuité. »

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

CHAPITRE XX

Les devinettes Mossi.

Pour faire suite au chapitre des « Maximes », nous donnons ci-après quelques devinettes Mossi. Ces deux chapitres se complètent l'un l'autre.

***

I. — Q. : Boin-bé[1] ta san toutin bi neb sounri nomé, ta dogom daré ya sou sanga ? Littéralement : Quelle est la « chose » dont l'état de grossesse cause la joie dans la famille et dont l'accouchement provoque l'inquiétude et le mécontentement général ?

R. : Baoré (le grenier) lorsqu'il est rempli de céréales toute la famille est contente, mais le jour où l'on annonce qu'il n'y a plus rien personne n'est tranquille.

II. — Q. : Boin-bé ta san zihin bi wogolom yida sin niansé ?

Litt. : Quel est l'animal plus haut assis que debout ?

R. : Bâga (le chien) quand il se met sur son train de derrière.

III. — Q. : Boin dengued'sane bella ta nan pa ta ting' poughin ?

---

1. Le mot « Boin-bé » signifie en mossi « Qu'est-ce qui existe ». Pour la clarté du texte nous avons préféré employer les expressions suivantes : « Quel est l'animal, l'être, la chose, etc ..., etc...).

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Littéralement : Qui est-ce qui salue le premier l'étranger avant son arrivée au village ?

R. : Dote-souga (les toits des maisons).

IV. — Q. : Boin-bé tib san kon sane pinri bé denguin zinedi ?

Littéralement : Quelle est la bête qui, lorsqu'on offre une natte à un étranger, s'y asseoit avant ce dernier ?

R. : Zoanga (la mouche).

V. — Q. : Boin-bé weoguin ta pouré bé yiri ?

Littéralement : Quel est l'être qui étant dans la brousse a son estomac à la maison ?

R. : Tanga (la montagne). Ceci est un peu particulier au Moaga. Il appelle en effet, la montagne « tanga » et « tampouré » (l'estomac de tanga) le tas de saletés provenant des détritus du ménage qui se trouve en face de chaque habitation indigène.

VI. — Q. : Boin-bé ta nin-mess ba pouguin ta komb'be yinga ?

Littéralement : Quel est l'être dont les os sont à l'extérieur et la chair à l'intérieur du corps ?

R. : Guellé (l'œuf); la coque inutilisable représente les os et la chair le contenu.

VII. — Q. : Boin bé lalle dogh'la pa kindin ?

Littéralement : Qui est à la porte, mais n'entre jamais ?

R. : Lougri (piquet de bois). Les Mossi ont coutume de planter un piquet de chaque côté de la porte des cases. Ces piquets (lougri) servant à retenir pendant la nuit le secco servant de fermeture.

VIII. — Q. : Boin-bé ka naw la roude tissé ?

Littéralement : Quel est l'animal sans pattes qui grimpe sur des arbres ?

R. : Wafo (le serpent).

IX. — Q. : Boin-bé ta toumed'wousgo la pa ritin ?

Littéralement : Quel est l'être qui travaille beaucoup et ne mange pas ?

R. : Wanka (la pioche) grâce à laquelle la terre produit tout ce qui est nécessaire à l'entretien de la vie.

X. — Q. : Boin bé bé namesdin la pa ritin ?

Littéralement : Quelle est l'autre chose qui se fatigue beaucoup mais ne mange également pas ?

R. : Néré (moulin) dalle de pierre sur laquelle on écrase le mil pour obtenir la farine nécessaire à la fabrication du sagbo.

XI. — Q. : Boin bé kinde bogdin lab pa touda ?

Littéralement : Quels sont les êtres qui aiment à entrer dans des trous, mais ne creusent jamais ces trous ?

R. : Wafo la pondré (le serpent et le crapaud).

XII. — Q. : Boin bé sasse zougou ta san sigue ting bé lebeg kougri ?

Littéralement : Quelle est la chose qui se trouve dans le ciel et qui se transforme en pierre quand elle descend sur la terre ?

R. : Andga (l'étoile).

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

XIII. — Q. : Boin bé ditin la pa nioud kom?

Littéralement : Quel est l'être qui mange et ne boit pas ?

R. : Souré (la sauterelle).

XIV. — Q. : Boin bé meta rogo la pa gaïn bé?

Littéralement : Quel est l'être ou l'animal qui construit des maisons dans lesquelles il ne couche jamais ?

R. : Vounoun-vougou (la mouche-maçonne).

XV. — Q. : Boin bé ti ned san pa sicca bé niansa zi yendé la pa ritin?

Littéralement : Quelle est la chose qui ne change de place que lorsqu'une puissance étrangère l'y contraint et qui ne mange pas ?

R. : Kougri, la pierre, corps inerte.

XVI. — Q. : Boin bé dogda koamba tif san tare dibo datin senga tipgo bé yik datin kouffe?

Littéralement : Quel est l'animal qui, même lorsque vous voulez offrir de quoi manger à ses petits, vous défend d'en approcher et même désire vous tuer ?

R. : Boniéga (le lion) et on peut dire d'une manière générale les fauves qui ne reconnaissent à personne le droit de les aider à soigner leurs petits ou à leur apporter de quoi manger.

XVII. — Q. : Boin bé ditin la niouda yaolin pa tig'da?

Littéralement : Quel est l'animal qui mange, boit, mais n'en a jamais assez ?

R. : Katré (l'hyène). Même si elle vient de se régaler d'un mouton entier, elle se jettera tout de suite sur le premier animal errant qui se trouvera sur son passage.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

XVIII. — Q. : Boin bé poudin la pa wanda ?

Littéralement : Qu'est-ce qui fleurit mais ne produit jamais de fruits ?

R. : L'œil (ni fou) pour faire allusion à cette matière blanchâtre qui se trouve dans les coins de l'œil au réveil « nin poudou » (les fleurs de l'œil).

XIX. — Q. : Boin bé kom pouga la poudin la pa wamda ?

Littéralement : Qu'est-ce qui tout en se trouvant continuellement dans l'eau ne fleurit ni ne donne des fruits ?

R. : Yindé (la dent). La dent se trouve dans la bouche (marigot) qui ne dessèche jamais.

[p. 286 is blank]

APPENDICE

Liste des Mogho-Nabas de l'origine à nos jours.

---

1. NABA OUEDRAOGO, décédé à Sagabtenga (Subdivision de Ouagadougou) au cours d'une reconnaissance, mais on ignore où il a été enterré.
2. NABA ZOUNGRANA, fils et successeur de Ouedraogo, mort et enterré à Komtoèga.
3. NABA OUBRI, fils de Zoungrana, fondateur de la dynastie Mossi de Ouagadougou, décédé à Koudougou au cours d'une tournée.
4. NABA SOARA, décédé à Lougsy (au delà de Zagtouly) village situé à 9 kilomètres de Ouagadougou.
5. NABA NASKIMIE.
6. NABA NASBIRE, serait décédé et enterré à Lâ (Subdivision de Yako dans le cercle de Koudougou).
7. NABA GNINGNEMDO.
8. NABA KOUDOUMIE. Tombeau à Thyou, dans le cercle de Koudougou.
9. NABA KOUDA. Tombeau à Saponé (Subdivision de Ouagadougou).
10. NABA RAWINGMA. La tradition rapporte que ce Mogho-Naba n'a pas eu de tombeau. Au moment où l'on s'apprêtait à le conduire à sa dernière demeure il se serait transformé en tourbillon et aurait disparu. Dans le tombeau destiné à le recevoir on dut seulement enfouir ses gris-gris.
11. NABA ZOETEMBOUSSOUMA. Tombeau à Gourpila (Subdivision de Ouagadougou).
12. NABA NIANDEFFO. Tombeau à Baoghin (Ouagadougou).
13. NABA NAKIN. Tombeau à Dassouri-Tanghin.
14. NABA NAMEGA. Tombeau à Baoghin (Ouagadougou).

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

15. NABA KIBBA. Tombeau à Baoghin (Ouagadougou).
16. NABA KIEMBA. Tombeau à Tenguemnaoré (Koudougou).
17. NABA COIBGA, Tombeau entre Napalgué et Coibga, Canton de Niou, cercle de Ouagadougou.
18. NABA ZANA. Tombeau à Baoghin (Ouagadougou).
19. NABA GUIRGA. Tombeau à Baoghin (Ouagadougou).
20. NABA OUBI. Tombeau à Baoghin (Ouagadougou).
21. NABA MOATIBA. Tombeau à Baoghin (Ouagadougou).
22. NABA WARGA. Tombeau à Baoghin (Ouagadougou).
23. NABA ZOMBRÉ. Tombeau près de la Mission Catholique (Ouagadougou).
24. NABA KOM. Tombeau à Ouagadougou.
25. NABA SAGA. Tombeau à Ouagadougou.
26. NABA ROULGOU ou DOULGOU. Tombeau derrière la maison de l'Administrateur du Cercle, vers le camp des Tirailleurs.
27. NABA SAWADOGO. Tombeau à Baoghin (Ouagadougou).
28. NABA KABEO. Tombeau entre le camp militaire et le Cercle.
29. NABA BAONGO. Tombeau entre le camp militaire et le Cercle.
30. NABA KOUTOU. Tombeau dans le camp même des Tirailleurs.
31. NABA SANUM. Tombeau dans le camp même des Tirailleurs.
32. NABA OUOBGO. Tombeau à Zangoeog'yiri (Gold Coast).
33. NABA SIGUIRI. Tombeau face à la maison de l'Empereur actuel devant la porte des femmes.
34. NABA KOM. Empereur actuel, intronisé le 24 mars 1905.

Chefs de la famille de Naba Ouedraogo (père de Zoungrana).

BINGO NABA. Chef des Gourmantché, Cercle de Fada.
YATENGA NABA. Chef d'État, Cercle Ouahigouya.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Communiqué par la Mission des Pères Blancs à Ouagadougou.

Un Chef de canton (DOULOUGOU NABA) et son serviteur.

[facing p. 288]

NANORO NABA. Chef de canton, Koudougou.
BINGO NABA. Chef de canton, Koudougou.
DAPELGO NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.
SAO NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.
KOGHO NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.
NIOU NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.
ZANGO NABA. Chef de village Ouagadougou.
TOUGOURI NABA. Chef de canton Kaya.
ZAGTOULY NABA. Chef de village Ouagadougou.
TANVI NABA. Chef de village Ouagadougou.
GNIMDI NABA. Chef de village Ouagadougou.
YABO NABA. Chef de canton Ouahigouya.

Famille de Zoungrana, fils de Ouedraogo et père d'Oubri.

TENKODOGO NABA. Chef d'État Tenkodogo.
GAMPELA NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.
MANGA NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.
DOUABA NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou (mais le chef actuel est descendant de Naba Saga).
ZOUNGOU NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou (actuellement le chef est descendant de Naba Kouda).
ZITTENGA NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou (le chef actuel est le fils de Massi, descendant de Naba Koutou).
DAKOLA NABA. Chef de canton Koudougou.
DATTENGA NABA. Chef de canton à Ouahigouya.
NANGUELA NABA. Chef de canton à Koudougou.
KOMTOEGA NABA. Chef de canton à Tenkodogo ;

Famille de Naba Oubri, fils de Zoungrana et fondateur de la dynastie de Ouagadougou.

SALMATENGA NABA, (fils de Oubri) cercle de Kaya.
BOULSA NABA « Kourita » de Naba Oubri. Le Kourita représente sur la terre le Mogho-Naba dont il a le nom et dont il prolonge la personnalité. Il est défendu au Boulsa Naba une fois nommé de revoir jamais le Mogho-Naba de Ouagadougou. Boulsa Naba est cependant considéré comme un vassal du suzerain et comme tel lui doit des redevances annuelles comme les autres Kombemba (Chefs de canton).

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

IPALA NABA. Chef de canton à Ouagadougou.

NOBERE NABA. Chef de canton à Ouagadougou.

NOBILA NABA. Chef de canton à Ouagadougou.

Ces deux derniers cantons formaient autrefois un seul canton, la scission n'a eu lieu que beaucoup plus tard. Et actuellement Nobéré est commandé par un descendant de Naba Saga tandis que Nobila est administré par un descendant de Naba Koutou.

ZINIARE NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.

NIAGO NABA ET NIARBA NABA. Chefs de canton Tenkodogo.

Famille de Naba Soarba, fils d'Oubri.

N'a pas eu d'enfants.

Famille de Naba Nastiemde, fils d'Oubri et frère de Soarba.

LOUDA NABA. Chef de canton Kaya.

KANBA NABA. Chef de canton Yako (cercle de Koudougou).

VOOKO NABA. Canton aujourd'hui supprimé, Cercle de Ouagadougou.

Famille de Naba Nasbiré (autre frère de Soarba).

PISSILA NABA. Chef de canton Kaya.

KAYAO NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.

SOURGOUBILA NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.

SOURGOU NABA. Chef de canton Koudougou.

TOUDOU NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.

BOLGO NABA. Chef d'un important village dépendant du canton de Nanoro dans le cercle de Koudougou.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Famille de Koumdoumié, fils de Nasbiré.

BOUSSOUMA NABA. Roi. Chef de province Kaya.
KONKISTENGA NABA. Roi. Chef de canton Koudougou.
TEMA NABA. Chef de canton Kaya (dépendait de Yako en ce qui concerne l'investiture).
MANÉ NABA. Chef de canton, Kaya. (Était nommé autrefois par le Mogho-Naba, actuellement par Boussouma Naba, mais se proclame indépendant de Boussouma.)
IMIOUGOU NABA. Chef de canton Kaya.
PAWAMTORE NABA. Le chef actuel est cependant le petit-fils de Naba Wobgo (Boukary Koutou) Ouagadougou.
GUIRGO NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou ;
TANGHIN NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.
YAKO NABA. Roi. Chef de province Yako (Koudougou).
THYOU NABA. Chef de canton Koudougou.
SABOU NABA. Chef de canton Koudougou.
POA NABA « Kourita » de Naba Koumdoumié.

Famille de Naba Kouda (fils de Koumdoumié).

PIKOUTENGA. Chef de canton Kaya.
SOUMBÈGA NABA. Chef de canton Kaya.
SABOURI NABA. Chef de canton Kaya.
IPELSÉ NABA. Chef de canton Kaya.
LALLÉ NABA. Chef de canton Koudougou (Une partie de ce canton qui a dû être scindé est confiée à un frère du Baloum-Naba de Ouagadougou).
ZORGO NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.
TOÉCÉ NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.
OUÉOGTENGA NABA. Chef de canton (le chef actuel est descendant de Naba Koutou).
RASSAMKANDÉ NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.
SONDÉRÉ NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.
ZORGONGO NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou (actuellement descendant de Naba Wobgo).

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

KOASSANGA NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.
ZIGA NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.
DARIGUIMA NABA. Chef de canton Yako (Koudougou).
RIZIAM NABA. Roi. Chef de province à Ouahigouya. (Certains griots le font descendre de Zoettemboussouma et même de Koumdoumié.)
ZOUNGOU NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.
NAKOONGO NABA (Kourita).

Famille de Naba Zoettemboussouma.

DIGUILLA NABA, Chef de canton Kaya. (Certains griots le font descendre de Naba Kouda.)
BOUDRY NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou. (Actuellement c'est un neveu de Koutou qui est chef de ce canton.)
BOUGOURÉ NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.
YAÏKA NABA (Kourita). Chef de canton Ouagadougou
DOULOUGOU NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou (Actuellement ce canton est administré par un fils de Naba Siguiri, frère du Mogho-Naba actuel.)
GAONGO NABA. Chef de canton (actuellement descendant de Naba Karfo).
KOUBRY NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.
ZAM NABA, Chef de canton Ouagadougou (descendant de Naba Saga actuellement).
KIRGUITENGA NABA. Chef de canton à Ouahigouya
KIRGOUTENGA NABA. Chef de canton à Kaya.

Famille de Naba Niandeffo (70 ans de règne) fils de Zoettemboussouma.

NABITENGA NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou (le chef actuel est descendant de Naba Doulgou).
RAMESSOUM NABA. Chef de canton, Yako, Cercle de Koudougou.
GOALA, LAOGO, YARGO, GOLMIDOU, NABRABOGO.

C'étaient de simples Nabissi indépendants qui étaient désignés par le Mogho-Naba au même titre que les chefs de canton. Ces villages ont été depuis l'occupation française annexés au Commandement du chef de canton de Sao (Cercle de Ouagadougou).

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Famille de Naba Nakin (fils de Niandeffo).

TANLARGHÉ NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.
BINDÉ NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.
BÉRÉ NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou. (Primitivement descendant de Nakin, le chef actuel est de la famille de Naba Sawadogo.
SALOGO NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.

Famille de Naba Zana.

ZANGHOGO NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.
KOUBRI NABA (déjà porté à Zoettembousma) Ouagadougou.

Famille de Naba Warga.

NAGREONGO NABA. Chef de canton de Ouagadougou. (Actuellement le chef est descendant de Naba Koutou.)
BILGOTENGA NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.
KABOUDO NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.
RAMONGO NABA. Chef de canton Koudougou.
KOMBISSIRI NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.
KAGOULI NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.

Famille de Naba Rawingma (fils de Kouda).

NÉDOGO NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.
KONIOUDOU NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.
Naba Rawingma fut un Roi terrible, grand guerrier et pour cela très détesté. On rapporte qu'avant de mourir il conseilla à ses enfants de se dire descendants de Naba Kouda de peur d'être mal vus à cause de lui. Par suite, il est difficile aujourd'hui d'avoir des renseignements très précis sur sa famille, celle-ci se confondant avec celle-là.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Famille de Naba Oubi (20e Mogho-Naba).

KONDERIN NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou. (Actuellement c'est un neveu de Naba Sawadogo qui est chef de ce canton.)
DAWOAKA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.
MAONKIN NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.
SATTIN NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.

Famille de Naba Gning'nembo fils d'Oubri et 7e Mogho-Naba.

BATONO NABA. Chef de canton Koudougou.

Famille de Naba Doulougou ou Roulgou (26e Mogho-Naba).

MANKARGA NABA. Chef de canton à Ouagadougou.

Famille de Naba Wobgo frère de Sanum (Empereur des Mossi au moment de la pénétration française).

PAWAMTORÉ NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou. (Le chef actuel est le petit-fils de Wobgo.)
ZORGONGO NABA, fils de Wobgo. Chef de canton Ouagadougou.

***

Chefs de canton pour lesquels il n'a pas été possible d'obtenir des renseignements précis permettant de les rattacher à la famille des Mogho-Naba. (On croit qu'ils sont cependant descendants d'une famille royale.)

SOUGRETENGA NABA. Chef de canton Kaya.
BOUREOUM NABA. Chef de canton Kaya.
KOBOURÉ NABA. Chef de canton Kaya.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

KANDO NABA. Chef de canton Kaya.
PINSA NABA. Chef de canton Kaya.
NOUNGOU NABA. Chef de canton Kaya.
ANDEMTENGA NABA. Chef de canton Kaya.

Nous ne possédons par ailleurs pas de précisions en ce qui concerne les chefs de canton de Ouahigouya.

Cantons dont les chefs n'ont pas une origine bien déterminée, la plupart d'entre eux ayant été, soit des « Kourita » d'anciens Mogho-Naba, soit des « Tansoba » (Ministres de Guerre) ou enfin de simples « Nayirdamba (Ministres ou fonctionnaires de la Cour).

BAGAMINI NABA. Chef de canton Ouagadougou (Tansoba de Koumdoumié).

BAZOULÉ NABA. Chef de canton (Wemba) Ouagadougou.

GONSÉ NABA. Chef de canton Tansoba de Oubri) Ouagadougou.

GOURPILA NABA. Chef de canton Tansoba de Oubri) Ouagadougou. (Autrefois chef eunuque et gardien de tombeau, actuellement le Chef est un ancien Samand'biga (garde du corps) du Mogho-Naba actuel.

KALZI NABA. Chef de canton (Chef Palefrenier) Ouagadougou.

KOMSILGA NABA. Chef de canton (Nayirdin) Ouagadougou.

KOUNDA NABA. Chef de canton (Nayirdin) Ouagadougou.

NAHARTENGA NABA. Chef de canton (serait le descendant du Tansoba de Ouédraogo).

RAPADAMA NABA, autrefois canton réservé à un eunuque Ouagadougou.

SABTENGA NABA. Chef de canton (Eunuque) Ouagadougou.

SAKOUINSI NABA. Ouagadougou.

SAPONÉ NABA. Chef de canton (Nayirdin de Naba Kouda) Ouagadougou.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

TANGHÉ DASSOURI NABA. Chef de canton (Tansoba de Naba Nakin) Ouagadougou.

KAIBO NABA. Chef de canton (village d'esclaves de la Couronne).

TUILI NABA. Chef de canton Tansoba.

MANDIÉ-BANGARÉ NABA. Chef de canton village d'esclaves de la couronne.

ABSOUY NABA. Chef de canton (Tansoba de Ouédraogo Ouagadougou.

LOMBI-RAOGO NABA. Ouagadougou.

LOUMBI POKO NABA. Chef de canton Eunuque Ouagadougou.

MÉGUET NABA. Chef de canton Tansoba de Naskinmdé Ouagadougou.

VOAGA NABA. Chef de canton Nayirdin Ouagadougou.

KOKOLGO NABA. Chef de canton Tansoba de Ching'-nemdo (Koudougou).

DOURÉ NABA. Chef de canton Tansoba de Yako (Koudougou).

KOUPELA NABA. Chef de Province à Tenkodogo, Kourita de Boulsa Naba lui-même Kourita de Oubri.

***

DJIBA NABA. Le Canton de Dijba depuis le règne de Naba Zombré (23e Mogho-Naba) a été toujours réservé au fils aîné de chaque Empereur.

Maisons du Chef des Mossi.
Où habitait le Mogho-Naba et quelle était l'étendue occupée par sa demeure et celle de ses femmes ?

Avant l'arrivée des Français, Mogho-Naba Wobgo (BOUKARY KOUTOU) avait deux maisons séparées par l'ancien marché de Ouagadougou.

La première de ces maisons était bâtie sur l'emplacement actuellement occupé par l'habitation de l'Administrateur du Cercle y compris les dépendances, emplacement que l'on appelait « Ratagrima » ; la deuxième « Dim-voussé » (Repos du Roi) occupait une partie de l'actuel camp des gardes et tout l'immeuble Quégneaux.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

Dans chacune de ces maisons gardées par des eunuques et des Sogonés habitaient des femmes de l'Empereur. Ce dernier passait la nuit tantôt dans l'une, tantôt dans l'autre. Les habitations des suivants étaient situées derrière et en face de ces Maisons.

En définitive, l'emplacement occupé aujourd'hui par le Camp des Tirailleurs, les Habitations et les bureaux du cercle, la Prison et le Camp des Gardes de cercle jusqu'à l'immeuble Quégneaux, était propriété exclusive des Mogho-Naba, personne d'autre ne pouvant construire, ni s'y installer.

Endroits sacrés (Tombeaux, lieux de sacrifices).

1° Au camp des Tirailleurs existent les tombeaux des Mogho-Naba : SANUM, KOUTOU, DOULOUGOU, BAONGO, KARFO.

2° Entre l'habitation du Commissaire de Police et le bâtiment précédemment occupé par M. Clayssen reposent :

NABA ZOMBRÉ, SAGA, KOM.

(Il existe encore un baobab à côté de la tombe de Naba Saga.) Quartier de la Mission Catholique.

Ces tombeaux dont chacun avait son gardien particulier (un eunuque) donnaient lieu à des sacrifices annuels. A l'approche de la fête Mossi « Le TINSÉ » on égorgeait sur ces tombes des moutons et des coqs. On offrait également des sacrifices particuliers à tel ou tel Naba suivant les prescriptions des devins.

Depuis que des bâtiments administratifs et militaires ont été construits sur l'emplacement où se trouvent ces sépultures, elles ne font pas moins l'objet de sacrifices mais le sacrificateur se contente de se placer sur le sentier ou la route conduisant aux lieux sacrés et d'égorger des moutons et des coqs en prononçant les paroles rituelles habituelles.

Existe-t-il un patrimoine traditionnel aux Chefs Mossi ?

Oui. — Voir à ce sujet le paragraphe in fine de la réponse à la première question. Il convient d'ajouter que tout lieu où a été enseveli un Mogho-Naba est sacré.

Peuvent-ils sans inconvénients s'établir à leur gré n'importe où et changer d'habitation à leur gré ?

Le choix du terrain d'habitation étant subordonné aux prescriptions des « diseurs des choses cachées », le nouveau Naba peut, soit reprendre la maison de son père s'il est dit qu'il y vivra en paix, soit construire sa maison sur les ruines de celle de son grand-père ou d'un autre Mogho-Naba. Toujours est-il qu'il reste dans le périmètre des lieux occupés par ses prédécesseurs.

Cependant tout le territoire Mossi lui appartenant il peut sans inconvénient s'installer n'importe où même en dehors de Ouagadougou [1] mais dans ce cas, il laisse une partie de ses femmes et de sa Cour dans sa maison de la Capitale, sous la surveillance des Eunuques.

Les lieux sacrés à Ouagadougou.

1° KOMBEPADAMBA. Occupé par le Palais du Gouverneur à l'endroit précis où l'on jouait autrefois au tennis.

2° TINS'KAONGO. Occupé aujourd'hui par la Mission Catholique. C'était autrefois un bosquet.

3° SANKOIN. Buisson existant toujours à côté d'un baobab au Champ d'Aviation.

4° NINDAOG'KAONGO (Bois sacré). C'est là qu'était abandonné aux vautours le corps des personnes dont la mort était ordonnée par le Mogho-Naba. Sert actuellement de champ de tir aux tirailleurs. Mais le bois existe toujours.

---

1. On remarquera que les Mogho-Naba n'ont pas toujours habité Ouagadougou. Ce n'est qu'à partir de Naba Zana que Ouagadovgou devint la capitale des Empereurs Mossi.

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

5° KADYOGO. Marigot sur la route de Gounghin. Il y avait là deux buissons aujourd'hui détruits. L'emplacement est occupé par le Jardin Militaire.

6° TINKINGA à Pazani (petit village dans la Commune de Ouagadougou).

7° Tous les tombeaux des Empereurs défunts déjà cités et ceux des NABA, SAWADOGO, OUBI, NIANDEFFO, GUIRGA, ZANA à Baoghin. (Un des quartiers de la ville situé à l'Ouest du Jardin du Cercle.)

Pour tous les Tinkouga (de Tinga, terre, Kouga, pierres, Fétiches) susvisés se trouvant dans les habitations européennes ou transformés en Jardins, les sacrifices continuent à être faits actuellement mais dans les conditions déjà indiquées pour les Tombes des Nabas défunts.

Autrefois chaque tombe était représentée par une case ronde couverte en chaume dont la porte fermait à clé. Chaque gardien de tombeau (c'était des eunuques pour la plupart) avait sa propre maison à proximité du tombeau. Il était formellement défendu à qui que ce soit de passer à côté de ces sépultures. Les animaux qui s'aventuraient dans ces parages étaient capturés par le gardien et vendus à son profit, de même les étrangers qui passaient là étaient dépouillés de leurs biens.

Le Mogho Naba pourrait-il transporter dans un autre quartier ses cases et un particulier pourrait-il sans encourir le mécontentement des habitants du pays, s'établir sur l'emplacement abandonné ?

Ainsi qu'il a été dit, le Mogho-Naba peut à son gré s'établir dans un autre quartier de la ville mais sa première maison ne sera pas pour cela détruite puisqu'il y laissera forcément quelques-unes de ses femmes. Il ne saurait être question pour les particuliers de s'installer sur l'emplacement abandonné car il est absolument interdit de s'établir partout où le Roi des Mossi a habité.

[p. 300 is blank]

Communiqué par la Mission des Pères Blancs à Ouagadougou.

Facing p. 300

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

TABLE DES MATIÈRES

PRÉFACE . . . . . I à VII

INTRODUCTION 1

CHAPITRE PREMIER

Avant la pénétration française (Les guerres intestines ou le commencement de la décadence de l'Empire Mossi. 15

CHAPITRE II

La pénétration française racontée par un vieillard de soixante-dix ans 32

CHAPITRE III

Organisation politique, administrative et judiciaire de l'Empire Mossi 46

CHAPITRE IV

La Cour du Mogho-Naba. Tributs et redevances dus aux Nabas. Autres obligations auxquelles les sujets mossi étaient astreints vis-à-vis de leurs chefs 57

CHAPITRE V

De l'esclavage au Mossi 84

CHAPITRE VI

Djiba-Naba, prince héritier de l'Empire Mossi 97

CHAPITRE VII

Le salut Mossi. Le respect de la maison des Nabas. La question du bonnet. Hiérarchies entre Chefs. Une légende sur l'origine de la chefferie Mossi. 107

[p. 301]

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

CHAPITRE VIII

Les coutumes. Intronisation des Nabas. Du surnom. . . . 124

CHAPITRE IX

Les grandes fêtes des Mossi 146

CHAPITRE X

Les femmes des Nabas. Les sogonés et samand'kamba. La Pogsiouré. 159

CHAPITRE XI

Du mariage. De la naissance. De la mort 171

CHAPITRE XII

La pénétration de l'Islam en pays Mossi. 203

CHAPITRE XIII

De l'habitation. Maison des Chefs Mossi (construction, réparations. Habitation-type des sujets Mossi). 213

CHAPITRE XIV

De l'habillement (avant et après la pénétration française). Des soins du corps et des ablutions. Hygiène 223

CHAPITRE XV

Les danses Mossi et leur signification 233

CHAPITRE XVI

De l'agriculture. (Choix des terrains de culture. Sacrifices propitiatoires. Récoltes, battage et mise en grenier.) Le régime alimentaire des Indigènes du Mossi. Le «Kawinré» du Mogho-Naba. 241

1: Delobsom FA28 Mossi

CHAPITRE XVII

De la succession et des droits successoraux au Mossi . . . 256

CHAPITRE XVIII

De la circoncision. Les Mossi pratiquent-ils la circoncision? 263

CHAPITRE XIX

Maximes et pensées Mossi 273

CHAPITRE XX

Devinettes Mossi 281

APPENDICE 287

1730. — ÉVREUX. IMPRIMERIE HÉRISSEY. — 10-32.

116

116 TEXTS--a full set of pages from each processed source, arranged in page order, as a means of establishing the context for any particular slip. Sets are arranged in the numerical order of the sources. See also:

Literary texts 630

2:Mangin--i M-5 (ca. 1910) 1921 FA28 Mossi FA28

The Mossi, Essay on the Manners and Customs of the Mossi People in the Western Sudan /Les Mossi, Essai sur les us et coutumes du peuple Mossi au Soudan occidental/

000

Eugène Mangin

Paris, Augustin Challamel
1921

Translated from the French by Ariane Brunel and Elliott Skinner

Human Relations Area Files

1959

/title page/

2:Mangin--ii M-5 (ca. 1910) 1921 FA28 Mossi FA28

TABLE OF CONTENTS

000

	Page
INTRODUCTION	1
BOOK I. POLITICAL LIFE	5
Chapter 1. The Country and Its Inhabitants	5
Chapter 2. Administration	18
Chapter 3. Rights of Chiefs and Rights of Private Individuals	27
BOOK II. FAMILY LIFE	34
Chapter 1. Establishment of the Family through Marriage	34
Chapter 2. The Family	42
BOOK III. DAILY WORK AND TRADES	54
Chapter 1. Occupations of a Mossi	54
Chapter 2. Industries and Trading	64
Chapter 3. Hygiene, Disease, Death, and Burial	77
BOOK IV. RELIGIOUS LIFE	92
Chapter 1. Beliefs and Ethics	92
Chapter 2. The Cult	107
Chapter 3. Magic	119
CONCLUSION	130

/1/ INTRODUCTION

648 On September 1, 1896, Lt. Voulet, who had been sent by Col. de Trentinian to occupy the Mossi and Gourounsi /Grunshi/ countries, entered Ouagadougou, the Mossi capital. The reigning emperor, Naba Wobro, took to flight, and his army was routed. This was a critical hour for our /French/ Sudan. The negotiations opened at the beginning of that year between France and England on the one hand, and Germany and France on the other hand, had just been broken off. In his fine book, L'expansion française et la formation territoriale /French Expansion and Territorial Settlement/, which we are merely outlining, Terrier describes the situation as follows: "The Germans were determined to extend Togoland to the Niger by cutting off our /French/ Dahomey from the Sudan, and the British denied us access to the lower Niger and the rule of Borgu country. Had these demands been met, Dahomey would have become a mere coastal enclave." (1)

1. The achievements of the Third Republic in West Africa, p. 301.

The Germans had already occupied the very important market town of Sansané-Mango and were pressing east toward the Niger, while Fergusson, a mulatto in the service of England, advanced along the Gold Coast toward the north. At the same time, the Royal Nigerian Company seized Bussa, Say, and the surrounding territories, which were then disputed and which we had not attempted to conquer out of respect for the negotiations then underway. When this news reached France through the brilliant offices of Lt. Comm. Hourst, Col. de Trentinian decided in agreement with Mr. Ballot, Governor of Dahomey, to take possession of those territories which would make it possible to link the Sudan to Dahomey, the Niger Colony, and the Ivory Coast.

Capt. Destenave, Resident in Bandiagara, our extreme frontier post in the region, was ordered to move forward and to occupy Ouahigouya in Mossi country, but he ran into the resistance of the naba of Yako and was denied access to Ouagadougou. In May, 1896, Col. de Trentinian entrusted Lt. Voulet with the mission of reaching Mossi country before the British, who were moving forward from the south with the aid of Samory and especially of his son, Sanrankégny 648 Mory, who had occupied Gourounsi country. Lt. Voulet was then to link the Mossi territory to Dahomey by way of Gourma country. His column of some fifty riflemen left Bandiagara on July 30, proceeded to Ouahigouya, subjugated the naba of Yako, and entered Ouagadougou on September 1. Naba Wobro, who had refused to enter into negotiations with Voulet, was deposed on January 20, 1897. Kouka Kountou, a member of the family of the Moro Naba, was enthroned in his place and took the name of Naba Sigri. He signed with Voulet a protectorate treaty which granted France all territories within the jurisdiction of the Moro Naba.

Now that the Mossi were conquered, the British to the south and the Germans to the east had to be checked. Voulet heard that Capt. Donald Stewart, British Resident in Kumasi, was advancing on Tenkodogo. He proceeded there in person, overtook Stewart on February 17, and obtained an agreement that the latter should withdraw 120 kilometers farther south, /2/ outside the Mossi and Manpoursi /Mamprusi/ territories, in view of the treaties the French officer had concluded with the chiefs of those countries. Voulet abandoned Tenkodogo, leaving to the respective governments the task of deciding to whom it should belong.

While these negotiations were underway, Voulet heard that an armed body of men was advancing on Mossi country from the east. He left Tenkodogo and wrote the unknown head of the column that he was to withdraw since all those lands belonged to France in accordance with the treaties signed with the native chiefs. He then advanced with his troops on Fada N'Gourma. Along the way he seized Koupéla, whose panic-stricken population scattered, and on February 27 he arrived in Tigba, where he found Capt. Vermeesch who had been dispatched from Dahomey by Capt. Baud. Hence, the British were held in the south, the Germans in Togoland, and the /French/ Sudan was joined to Dahomey.

The land thus conquered was not unknown in France; several outstanding expeditions had already acquainted us with it. Binger especially, in his work called Du Niger au golfe de Guinée /From the Niger to the Gulf of Guinea/, had drawn attention to its peoples and presented, in the person of Boukary Koutou, a Mossi chief who was intelligent, open, and merry, and at the same time very authoritarian and strictly obeyed by his people. It is to be wondered why this same Boukary Koutou, who was Moro Naba under the name of Naba Wobro, provided such a poor reception for Dr. Crozat and Monteil and refused

2:Mangin--2a M-5 (ca. 1910) 1921 FA28 Mossi FA28

133
516
415

The Bush in Mossi Country.

648 to open talks with Voulet. This poor political judgment cost him his crown. Binger had been preceded in Ouagadougou by Dr. Krause, who in 1885 was the first European allowed to enter the capital; Von François, coming from German Togoland in 1887, was stopped at the first Mossi village. As already mentioned, Binger, not without difficulty, managed to reach Ouagadougou in 1888. He stayed there for some time, longer than he had wished, and it was by virtue of his admirable energy that he was able to resume his journey toward the south. In 1890 Dr. Crozat was received for the first time by the Moro Naba, but he had to leave Ouagadougou speedily. The following year Monteil did not even manage to reach the capital. He was stopped a few kilometers from it and forced to depart abruptly. The mulatto Fergusson, in the service of the British, reached Ouagadougou by way of Tenkodogo, Nyaogo, and Kombisgri. Von Carnap, a German, came from Sansané-Mango in 1897 and visited Tenkodogo and Koupéla.

114 Such are, in brief outline, the verified contacts of the Mossi with Europeans. Were they already known by John II of Portugal, and even by John III, in the sixteenth century? Did they come from far to the east, from Sokoto, Bornu, perhaps even from Wadai? There are so many questions that seem quite mysterious to us in the present state of our knowledge of these peoples of the bend of the Niger, who lack written traditions. Lt. Marc discusses at great length the various opinions on this subject in his book, Au pays des Mossi /In Mossi Country/, chapters 1 and 7. Delafosse presents his own opinion in his work on Upper Senegal and Niger (especially in volume 2). We shall limit this account to the traditions gathered from the natives themselves.

124 Our working method, indeed, has been to question as many natives as possible and to gather their statements on all matters which seemed of interest. We have avoided any "interpretation" of the facts. We have allowed the natives to talk, to tell their story, to describe /3/ their customs, to explain the phenomena of nature and of life as they understand them. Our role was limited to a day-to-day record of what we heard, to the inducement of explanations, to the arrangement of these notes. Of course, our questions sometimes remained unanswered, We shall leave them unanswered here. Having no plan to defend, we hope to have been sufficiently objective.

114 We shall, nevertheless, be happy if this modest work makes a small contribution to the study of regional history, so heavily stressed

114 today; if it provides ethnography with new materials; if it makes the native better known to missionaries, administrators, officers, colonists, and merchants, and thus better understood; and if cordial relations between the native and ourselves are thereby facilitated. Railroads will soon open up and profoundly modify the country. While there is still time, let us hasten to record the mentality of this people in its primitive form. We were able to gather data which we believe reflect the truth quite closely, thanks to the circumstances of our stay in Mossi country: ten consecutive years among its people, of which seven were spent in Koupéla; a knowledge of the language sufficient to maintain a running conversation on any subject whatever with the natives; and the close contact into which our ministry brought us with the village inhabitants. We shall be the first to acknowledge, however, that errors may have crept in here and there. It is very difficult to obtain a precise piece of information, and several natives questioned on the same subject often gave different answers. We were forced to make choices, and although we always tended to adopt the story which appeared to offer the greatest number of safeguards, we may have been wrong at times.

It must not be forgotten that our goal is not to provide a complete record of Mossi manners and customs. This was not possible, it would have been onerous, and we did not feel that it was necessary in order to present what we consider to be a generally accurate over-all picture of these people. Truthfulness compels us to point out that these materials were gathered for the most part in the province of Koupéla and, therefore, bear the impress of that locality. Our fellow-workers in Ouagadougou were kind enough to provide us with some information, but we were unable to obtain any data on the Yatenga region. God permitting, we shall round out these notes in a more comprehensive work.

101 Before we broach our subject, one remark is in order. It has be-
104 come usual to speak of the Mossi, of a Mossi, of the Mossi language, as though the word did not vary. We shall follow this custom and always write "Mossi" in the singular and in the plural, although the true name of this people is Moara, plural Mosé. Likewise, we have spelled geographical names in accordance with the practice of the Administration, so as to avoid the appearance of wishing to reform everything.

000 May we thank here all those from far and near who have helped us with this work, and especially those who have contributed the interesting photographs that illustrate it.

/4/ BOOK I. POLITICAL LIFE

Chapter 1. The Country and Its Inhabitants

142 Although the Mossi is not a handsome type of Black, there is nothing disagreeable about him. He is rather tall, with lively eyes, woolly hair, flat nose, occasionally rather fine features, lips which are broad without being too thick, and cheeks heavily marked with three parallel lines running from the temples to the chin and a fourth leading perpendicularly from the nose to the other three. His limbs are muscular, and his color neither ebony nor copper but an intermediate hue.

291 He acquires a truly attractive and resolute air when he dresses in festive clothes, with his broad, dark blue, Zouave-like trousers, his loose shirt made of white and blue fabric strips which falls lightly over the arms, and on the right shoulder his doré, a weapon consisting 411 of a slightly bent iron rod, flattened at one end and terminating at the other in a ring hafted perpendicularly to a short stick. His wrist
[301] is often adorned with a copper bracelet, and he nearly always carries at his waist a stiff knife, enclosed in a leather sheath which ends in a tuft of leather strips with cowries attached to them. He wears a 291 cap made of two diamond-shaped pieces of colored fabric half-sewn together; the two free ends may serve to cover the ears and cheeks, but are usually worn raised in the shape of a tiara. A great fighter, he wields the knife with dexterity or strikes with the doré which can become a dangerous club.

173 The Mossi are a conquering people. They have not always lived in the territory they now occupy. But where did they come from?
648 The elders questioned all say that their people came from Gambaga 643 (British Gold Coast), and this is why the Moro Naba Wobro took refuge in Gambaga when he was dethroned by the French conquest; this is also why the naba of Gambaga is notified whenever a Moro Naba dies, and why the shoes, cap, and scepter of command of the deceased are sent to him as gifts to be laid on the ancestral tomb. Gifts are also sent to the naba of Fada N'Gourma, which the Mossi call "Bingo." When the Moro Naba dies, his bow and quiver are presented to the Mossi Youths.

291
142

173 chief of Fada along with his two best horses, saddled, his two youngest 648 wives, twelve head of cattle, one captive, and three bars of salt.
[643] When the naba of Fada dies, however, nothing is sent to the Moro Naba, but his best horse is sent to the chief of Gambaga.

There has been contact, therefore, between the Gourmantché /Gurma/ of Fada, the Mossi, and the Dagomse /Dagomba/ of Gambaga. The Gourmantché claim that they come from Bornu. The first naba of Fada was a slave of the naba of Bornu. The Gourmantché formerly ruled the area as far as Dori. The Peul /Fulani/ came and chased them from the region after a long war. The Gourmantché, however, did not fight either the people of Gambaga or the Mossi. If they ever fought the latter, it was in the course of civil wars; the naba of Fada requested the Mossi to help him against his own subjects.

/5/ This is how the Mossi tell of the conquest of the territory. A
173 daughter of the chief of Gambaga, called Yennenga, had a son by the hunter Riala. This son was given the name Weddaogo. His son, Zougourana, seized Tenkodogo and settled there; in his turn Zougourana's son, Naba Oubri, seized the Ouagadougou area and became master of the whole country. The eldest son of Yennenga had seized Fada and founded the present dynasty, but had been unable to impose his language or his tattoing patterns on the inhabitants. This explains the gifts sent to Gambaga, the cradle of the race, and to the naba of Fada, the eldest son of the family. Part of the autochtonous inhabitants, driven away by the Mossi invasion, withdrew to the southeast and became the Bousansé /Busansi/ and the Gourounsi; the other part, remaining in the country, were assimilated by the Mossi and learned the tongue of their conquerors. A son of Naba Oubri, Naba Namendé, seized Bélousa and its territory.

In the meantime, the naba of Tenkodogo died, leaving only one son who succeeded him. His family requested the naba of Bélousa to give them his own son, who became Kourita, representative after death, of the deceased naba of Tenkodogo. Kourita wished to return to his father in Bélousa, but the latter sent him word not to do so, and Kourita stopped at Zaoré, a day's march from Bélousa, where his immediate successors resided. It was only later that this dynasty came to settle in Koupéla, after defeating and expelling, with the help of the naba of Bélousa, the descendants of Naba Guigma who had settled in Gobro near Soulgou. This is how the province of Koupéla originated, and this is why the naba of Koupéla must be invested by his overlord, the naba of Bélousa.

173 While these events occurred in the east, a sister of the Moro Naba, assigned to guard the tibo fetishes, quarreled with her brother and fled west to Ouahigouya. This region thus became Mossi territory and took the name of land of Ya. (2)

2. For further details, see Lt. Marc. op. cit. Ch. 7, and especially Delafosse, Haut Sénégal et Niger /Upper Senegal and Niger/, Series I, Vol. 2, p. 305 ff.

131 The region thus conquered lies within the bend of the Niger, approximately between the 11°30 and 13°30 parallels and from 2° to 5° longitude west of Paris. Its closest neighbors are the Macina and the Habé to the north, the Samo to the northwest, the Gourounsi to the west and southwest, the Nancana /Nankana/ to the south, the Bousansé to the southeast, the Gourmantché to the east, and the Peul of Dori to the northeast. The Mossi population has been estimated at 161 one and a half million, to which must be added the Yarsé, who are Mandé completely assimilated to the Mossi, the pastoral Peul, the Haoussa /Hausa/ who form small colonies near the large commercial centers of the region, and a few lesser groups. We shall deal with these populations only insofar as they have contact with the Mossi, in whose territory they are scattered.

Two important rivers cross the country from northwest [Tr., the 133 original reads northeast] to southeast. They are the two Volta rivers, the White and the Red. In addition to these two larger waterways, which nevertheless do not flow throughout the year, there are a large number of watercourses /Tr., the French term, marigot, covers both river branch channels and shallow depressions where water accumulates forming pools/. They become impassable torrents after a storm, /6/ but remain empty during the dry season from November to June. The [312] shallow wells which supply water for the households are usually dug by the women in the beds of these watercourses.

There are no high mountains in Mossi country. When arriving from the north, the traveller crosses the beautiful cliffs of Bandiagara and the mountainous country of the Habe. /Two photographs appear here./ Mossi country begins almost at the foot of the cliffs. The northwestern region is, however, quite broken and includes the Pilimpikou peak; the two Volta rivers, especially the White Volta,

361
342

The Cliffs of Bandiagara (Sudan).

342

Entering the Bush.

133 are bordered with hills. Nevertheless, it may be said that Mossi country is flat. It is covered with the classic bush of the Sudan with [137] its small shrubs and tall grass interspersed with bastard mahogany, /7/ huge trunks of the baobabs, and tamarind and silk-cotton trees, thicker on the banks of the Volta rivers, thinner around the villages.

241 The country is quite fertile and easily provides for its inhabitants.
262 The various kinds of millet grow well, especially the small white variety (Pennisetum spicatum) which, mashed and boiled, is the staple of the diet and sorghum, or large red millet, which is used to prepare the famous beer of the country. The horses eat the latter kind, although they prefer the large white millet. Around the huts maize grows well in soil fertilized by the daily accumulation of waste. It is a welcome source of grain when the millet reserves of the previous year are running low and the current harvest has not yet matured. Maize fields are surrounded with a double row of sorghum and often [283] with a double row of a fiber plant called bérensé, a sort of hemp which the natives use to make ropes. After the maize has been harvested, the field is planted with previously prepared tobacco seedlings. Finally, the sunken areas created when huts are built, as well as all slightly damp places, are planted with gombo, okra, which is highly valued as a sauce ingredient.

[311] During the rainy season no piece of land remains unused around the villages, and when the red millet ripens and the ears join across the path, passage becomes difficult. Even the hut roofs bear all kinds
[415] of calabash plants. These supply the housewives with gourds that fulfill the purposes served by our plates, dishes, glasses, and basins; the travellers with their flasks; the snuff-takers with their boxes; and the sorcerers with their spirit-calling instruments. The large gourds that are used to make drums grow among the shoots of maize. In the marshes near the watercourses where water lies stagnant, rice fields are planted, but rice is a luxury food, hard to cultivate because of [554] the care it requires. The natives use it only on feast days or when they wish to honor a distinguished guest. Cotton is sown in damp places among the stalks of large red millet, and it is harvested much later. Peanuts and peas also take up part of the cultivated land, while beans creep along the ground between the shoots of small millet. Peppers, sesame, the indigo plant, yams, manioc, sweet potatoes, and a small

24 tuber, Coleus coffini, which Europeans call oussounifing or fabirama, 262 and which may replace potatoes in a pinch, are cultivated in the soils most propitious to them.

22 The precious karite /shea/ tree (Butyrospermum parkii) grows in 262 most fields; its fruit, prized for its cool and slightly sweet flesh, con-
137 tains a pit which yields karite butter, the fat most widely used in [388] cooking and to make soap. Around the villages, and sometimes even within them, the néré /locust bean/ tree (Parkia africana) produces
[356] elongated pods; its bark, mashed in water, yields a paste that is used to harden the floors of the huts. Its flour makes a cooling drink when [272] mixed in water, and it may also be eaten; its seeds /8/ are used to make kalro /kalre in the original/, the soumbara of the Bambara, an ingredient /made from locust beans, héré/ of all carefully prepared
137 sauces. The doubalé and silk-cotton or kapokiero trees spread their shade over the weavers, numerous among the Mossi, and over the talkers who are even more. Bamboo grows well in the damp southern regions, and the palm oil tree is occasionally found. The caoutchouc liana, however, has not yet been introduced.

231 Small chickens run in all directions through the villages, along with domesticated guinea hens. Everywhere in the bush near the huts, [857] little boys herd goats and sheep; this is the task of youngsters here at the age when their contemporaries among us /in France/ begin to learn the alphabet. The most common sheep and goats are small in size. The sheep have short hair. Sometimes, especially in the larger villages where markets are held, goats and sheep are to be seen with [439] long legs and long, curled horns. They are imported from the northeast and fattened to be sold as butcher's meat. The height of fashion for the wife or a prosperous naba is to be followed by a Touareg /Tuareg/ sheep, well washed and very white. It is fed on millet leftovers and bean mush, and its mistress often presents it with a bit of salt to lick. In short, it is well cared for and agreeably fat; on some important feast day, it will embellish the menu.

The huts are usually guarded by very commonplace dogs, often ill-tempered, but cowardly. A stick is enough to drive them away.
[224] They are mostly used in the hunt, the great Mossi pastime during the dry season. Domesticated ducks are sometimes found in nabas' households, as well as pigeons, but these birds are not widespread and not within the reach of everyone. Finally, almost every group of huts has cats which belong to the women and which are difficult

137

342
361

Above: A Baobab.
Below: Mossi Village.

IX.

23| to approach because they are half wild. The donkeys are of medium
[172] size, but strong and stout; they will carry loads of sixty kilograms for days on end, and their help is priceless to those who trade in fabrics, kola nuts, and salt. There are some donkeys in practically every village.

Horses are quite common throughout the country, and every naba of any importance possesses one or several. Two distinct races are to be found. They are described by Binger as follows: "The most common has all the characteristics of the Arab horse without its qualities: slender head, short neck, thin limbs, receding rump, and very long mane and tail. The coats most frequently seen are bay, chestnut, gray, light bay, and roan; the last three always have patches on the forehead. Horses without white stockings are rare. The other race bears no likeness to the Arab horse. The animal is strong and beautiful, with the characteristics of our cavalry horse; it is about 1.57 to 1.62 meters /in height/. The head is slender and well joined, the limbs strong and muscular, the hooves broad with firm horn, the breast wide, and the mane and tail hair short. The most usual coats are various shades of bay and chestnut." (3) /9/ The Mossi, however,

3. Binger, Du Niger au Golfe de Guinée /From the Niger to the Gulf of Guinea/, Vol. 1, p. 485. It seems exaggerated, however, to ascribe 1.57 meters to a Mossi horse. A horse of 1.52 meters /in height/ is a large horse here, and the average hardly exceeds 1.44 meters. For his part, Meniaud (Haut-Sénégal et Niger, Géographie economique II /Upper Senegal and Niger. Economic Geography, Series II, Vol. 2/, p. 106) states that "the horses of Upper Senegal and Niger seem to possess the characteristics of the Aryan and Mongolian races, occasionally modified by the Germanic race." Further on (p. 110) he includes the Mossi horse in the Mongolian race (Dougolawi or Nubian variety).

accustomed no doubt to getting horses in the course of raids, do not

23| bother to raise them; as a result the number of horses has decreased, and this country, formerly renowned for its mounts, may have none in a not too distant future.

Unfortunately, horses do not thrive in every part of the country; Ouagadougou is particularly deadly for them, although, to my knowledge, the true reason for this insalubrity has not yet been found. The natives attribute it to the water, and there is no doubt that horses watered at the wells are in better health than those watered at the streams; it is also true that horses thrive in areas only a few kilometers [136] from Ouagadougou. Europeans tend to attribute this mortality to the tsetse fly. The two opinions are easy to reconcile, for, on the one hand, tsetse flies prefer damp places, and, on the other hand, the [312] Ouagadougou wells contain salt of magnesium which purges the horses and thus checks the disease.

23| The Peul own fine herds of bovines, some rather small and without humps (small cattle), others large and humped (zebu). Traders also 563 use the zebu as a beast of burden. Much of this cattle belongs to the 437 Mossi who seldom tend their own herds but prefer to entrust them to the Peul shepherds who keep the milk in payment. An adult cow yields from two to four liters a day during the good season. The guardians, however, know how to make the best of this near slavery. When an animal dies it is never one of theirs, and if the owner of the herd /a Mossi/ dies without telling his heirs where his cattle is to be found and how many head he owns, the Peul carefully refrain from disclosing the herd entrusted to them. In former days they were slightly more conscientious because they feared retaliation, but now they bless the French occupation.

23| The herds are sometimes decimated by an epizootic disease, as happened in 1910 and 1911 when the Koupéla area was ravaged by what must have been the bovine plague or peripneumonia. The cows would cough, entirely lose their appetites, and die within a few days.

The Mossi also raise bees. The hives are made of straw or flexible sticks and placed in the trees; sometimes swarms of bees also settle in the hollow trunks of baobabs. The honey is gathered at the end and at the beginning of the winter season; the hive is smoked out and [273] the bees destroyed. Honey is used primarily to make bésé, a kind of hydromel which the Moslem Yarsé, Peul, and Haoussa like very much, and which they are allowed to drink in spite of its fermentation; [237] whereas, in principle, millet beer is forbidden to them. The wax 306 is sold to the jewelry-makers who use it to make bracelets by the lost wax process.

361 /10/ The appearance of the villages indicates that their inhabitants feel safe. There are none of those hut clusters bunched together in [171] narrow walled-in areas to withstand the invasions of an El-hadj-Omar or of a Samory, as in Bambara country; none of those family groupings of flat-roofed huts, those strongholds sheltering the whole family from the grandfather to the last of his grandchildren to resist through sheer numbers the incursions of a more powerful neighbor, as in Gourounsi [592] country where the authority of chiefs is so weak. Here every family head, that is, a man with his wives, his unmarried children, and his servants, occupies a certain number of huts that together form his yri, a grouping Europeans call by its Bambara name, soukala.

342 The huts are circular and usually built of mud, but sometimes of 333 stakes driven into the ground and surrounded with séko, a kind of mat of plaited broad straw. The huts are surmounted with a roof, likewise of straw, resting on a wooden framework. When a native wishes to build a hut, he sets a date with a mason expert in laying mud bricks and notifies the village people. On the appointed day everyone comes to him. The women fetch water from the stream; the men excavate the soil a few meters from where the hut is to be erected; the children trample the mortar and carry to the mason the clods prepared by the old men who sit gravely around the mud pile. This is a festive occasion for the village, because the man who builds must supply drink for all, and food as well if he wishes to do things properly.

A circle is traced on the ground to indicate the outline of the hut, and the mason places the mud clods obliquely side by side along the circle. When the first round is finished, he starts another, and he proceeds in this fashion to mid-height. The work is then interrupted until the following day to give the first part a chance to dry. This is why several huts are usually built at the same time. No opening is left in the wall. When it is dry, a door is cut through, usually arched and so low that one must creep on hands and knees in order to get in. Well-to-do women close their hut with a wooden door that opens inward; it is equipped with a wooden latch that works [414] by means of a large key made of a stick with small iron rods perpendicularly attached to it. The children and even the husband usually leave their clothing, their luxury items, and their cowries in these closed huts which are better protected against thieves. Those who cannot afford this luxury of a door drive two stakes into the ground, one on each side of the opening, and slip a mat between the stakes and the wall.

592 A typical soukala consists of the master's hut, a hut for each wife, one hut for the sheep and goats, another for the horse if he has one, a hut for the family mill, and, finally, a receiving hut with two doors sufficiently high to permit entrance without stooping and set sometimes as an entrance way and sometimes within the cluster of huts. All [351] these dwellings stand in a circle and are joined either by a cob wall or by /11/ mat fences taller than a man and held up by stakes. The master's hut, which usually stands beside the huts for the horses and sheep, is set off from the others by mats to insure his privacy. A low wall describes an arc within the inner courtyard; this is the kitchen when it is not raining. Big jars of fired clay which are used to brew [273 415] millet beer rest between the huts. In front of this cluster of huts, a shelter is built, usually high enough to permit standing and consisting basically of forked stakes with branches and séko resting upon them; this shelter serves as a refuge during the hot part of the day. Small boys and unmarried girls live with their mother, while older boys, servants, and slaves each have their separate huts which face the dwellings of the master and his wives.

The term yri or soukala covers this whole complex of structures. [591] Each soukala is a distinct unit, and, some time after they marry, the children build their own residence, set completely apart from that of their parents, often in another part of the village and sometimes in [361] another village altogether. The soukala stand fifteen to twenty meters apart, and, because of this, the villages, though adequately concentrated, cover a rather extensive area. The heads of cantons 392 place an ostrich egg at the peak of the roof on their own dwellings, [237] and some even build terraced huts higher than the surrounding dwell- [554] ings. They keep their riches in these huts and a prison in the base- [697] ment. An earthen stairway leads to the terrace where the master of [592] the house receives his guests when the sun begins to sink on the horizon.

721 These people, apparently so peaceful today, were formerly quite warlike and went off to war at the slightest pretext. Foreign to the land they now occupy, the Mossi must have conquered it by force of arms. The Tarik-es-Soudan /History of Sudan/ relates that the people of Yatenga seized Timbuktu in the fourteenth century, and in 721 the fifteenth they probably carried their incursions as far as Lake 701 Bébo and even Oualata. (4) The Mossi army was greatly feared.

4. Delafosse, op. cit., Vol. 2, p. 80.

701 When a chief assembled his men, no one stayed behind. Only the 72 women, children, invalids, and old men guarded the villages. Those who had no horses formed the infantry; they were armed with bow
[411] and arrows, usually poisoned, and a large sword hung from the shoulder. The horsemen carried a sword and a spear that rested on the tip of the foot and was held at mid-height with the right hand. The Mossi cavalry was especially numerous and fearful. The Moro Naba stayed [643] home when his people went to war. He gathered together as many horses as possible, and, when horsemen lost their mounts, they came to him to get another horse and rejoin the fight.

669 The last wars before the French conquest of Koupéla, which we shall describe briefly, were civil wars that took place either between the people of Tenkodogo and those of Koupéla, or between the Mossi and the Gourmantché.

669 /12/ As generally happened in parallel cases, these wars followed
643 the death of a naba, when several pretenders wrangled over the succession. It was in order to prevent such wars that only the immediate entourage of the naba was informed of his death. Outsiders were to remain in ignorance and believe the naba to be ill in his hut. The fatal news was spread only when the head of the family had gathered all that was necessary to honor the deceased in proper fashion by celebrating the kouré. (5)

5. Kouré, funeral ceremony in honor of the dead. See below.

669 When Naba Kidba died, leaving only a child of five or six to succeed him, a man from Kazem'bouanga who was powerful by virtue of his wealth and the number of his men decided to seize the throne. His followers had taken for themselves the name of Kazem'-bouanga and used to say: "Although the hyena (katré) is not the equal (zéma) of the donkey (bouanga), she nevertheless attacks and kills him if she meets him in the bush: similarly, although we are not as powerful as the inhabitants of Koupéla, we will manage to defeat them." And indeed, they marched on Koupéla. The prime minister, who bears the title, Saman'Naba (head of the outer courtyard), and whose own name was Wenkosgaraga, seized the child and fled with him to Sapara, the nearest village under the direct authority of the Moro Naba, located nine kilometers from Koupéla.

669 Having learned of this, the men from Kazem'bouanga proceeded to Sapara, but the inhabitants of the village refused to yield the child who had been entrusted to them; meanwhile, the Saman'Naba had returned to his province and gathered all the followers of the young naba. With the aid of the inhabitants of Sapara, the warriors of the Saman'-Naba cut to pieces the pretender's column, killed a great many of his men, and drove them back home. The Saman'Naba then took the child to Ouagadougou, had him invested by the Moro Naba, and returned to Koupéla. The child was Naba Ibri, father of the present naba, who was reigning in Koupéla when Lt. Voulet arrived. His defeated rival killed himself.

669 648 About the same time, on the death of his father Yenkouaré, Batchandé was elected king of Gourma. Some of the villages, Gyékango among them, refused to recognize his authority. Batchandé appealed to the naba of Bélousa who rounded up his warriors and ordered them to join the men of the naba of Fada. Koupéla, a vassal province of Bélousa, took part in the expedition. Gyékango, however, was bravely defended by its chief and its inhabitants, who were favored by very propitious terrain covered with thorny scrub behind which the besieged men took cover to shoot on the Mossi. This was during the dry season. Thirst completed what the courage of the Gyékango people had begun, and many Mossi perished. The naba of Bélousa was so humiliated that he wished to die of thirst, but he was saved by the naba of Pwitenga. At this point Capt. Baud arrived in Fada from Dahomey. Batchandé requested his help against his rebellious subjects, and Capt. Baud seized Gyékango which has since been called Baudéni, "Baud's village."

A war waged in favor of Lébréboundou by the people of Koupéla against those of Tenkodogo /13/ has left vivid memories. Like the preceding, it was a civil war which broke out on the death of a chief. The naba of Tenkodogo having died, the elders elected Naba Korongo as his successor, but Lébréboundou attempted to seize power. He appealed to the people of Fada and to those of Koupéla. The naba of Tenkodogo, at bay, requested in vain the aid of the naba of Bélousa and that of the Moro Naba. Both replied that the winner would be recognized as chief. The men from Tenkodogo were driven back with losses, but this occurred just at the time when the French troops arrived. The elected naba of Tenkodogo appealed to the head of the expedition, who killed the pretender and installed the lawfully elected man in Tenkodogo.

669 The last wars in the Koupéla area, therefore, were all civil wars that broke out upon the death of chiefs in the adjacent regions of Koupéla, Fada, and Tenkodogo.

721 The most usual theater of warfare, however, was Bousanga /Busansi/ country. If a Bousanga woman enslaved to the naba of Koupéla ran away, the naba demanded her return. If his request was turned down, this meant war. When the Mossi ran short of millet, when their herds had been decimated by an epizootic disease, or even simply when they wished to obtain slaves, the naba would assemble his ministers and direct them to raid the Bousansé. The Saman'Naba would take [701] charge of the war. The Trabana, an experienced warrior, acted as chief of staff, and all the other chiefs, heads of cantons and villages; assembled their men. This was a festive occasion, and its abolition is still lamented by many people, especially among the chiefs.

721 Everything was looted; the harvest and herds were shared, and the 567 population was reduced to slavery. Since we have mentioned slaves, we shall provide some details on the subject.

567 Slavery existed in Mossi country, but in a very mild form. The agricultural Mossi kept slaves to till their fields. It was to their advantage to treat them well and thus turn them to good account. [435] Slaves constituted a source of wealth. An adult slave sold for 50 to 100 francs according to his strength, and no distinction was made between men and women. It was, therefore, unusual for a Mossi to kill a slave. Custom certainly sanctioned his right to do so, and no one, not even his chief, could call him to account for his act; his slave was his property, and he could do with him as he pleased. When he wished to get rid of a slave, however, he found it more lucrative to sell him. Besides, a slave should be attached to the household; a [278] maltreated slave might run away, even at the risk of being caught and in spite of the drug he was forced to drink, which, like the Lethean waters, was supposed to cause him to lose his memory. On the other hand, a well-treated, well-fed slave had the hope of obtaining a wife and becoming in turn the master of a hut. When his master was pleased with him, when he had rendered an important service, he was sometimes given one of the master's daughters in marriage; this made him free, and his children were not born slaves. Slaves could also be freed if their family agreed to redeem them. They were freed most frequently by means of an exchange: one of their daughters, sisters, or nieces was given in their place. This custom persisted until quite recently.

576

622
704

Above: The Mossi Salute.
Below: A Naba and his Horsemen.

567 /14/ The Mossi obtained slaves by purchase, warfare, or birth. No distinction was made among these various kinds of slaves; they were all treated in the same manner. The Bousansé and Gourounsi furnished the greatest number of slaves, and, as elsewhere, the Moslem Yarsé and Haoussa were the main traffickers. The Mossi sold each other into slavery too, as when a powerful man seized and sold a child or even an adult whom he had found defenseless in the bush. Sometimes a child was separated from its slave mother, but this was unusual. Slaves were part of the family property and devolved to the heir when their master died. When given in marriage by their own master, they acquired a certain freedom: they had their own house and their fields which they cultivated for their own use; they could acquire property and buy beasts of burden, goats, sheep, and cattle. The only vestige of slavery was the obligation to give all their daughters in marriage to their master. This is why whole villages of slaves are to be found, in no way distinguished from other villages. The village of Koupéla, estimated at 2, 500 inhabitants, is entirely composed of the naba's slaves with the exception of three families. The prime minister himself, the Saman'Naba, and all the ministers are slaves of the naba. It is true that this designation "slave" includes slaves through indebtedness. Whenever a native had borrowed from the naba an amount of some importance, such as the price of a cow, and was unable to pay it back, an arrangement was made between the debtor and the naba. The former promised all his daughters to the latter and thus pledged all his descendants. It was then said that he had become a slave to the naba.

566 Serfs were another source of hands to work the land. There were two kinds of serfs, or man-servants if one prefers: the dakwaba and the noakansé. A dakonré (singular of dakwaba; etymologically, "one who is not married") has a family who places him in the service of a rich man with the sole purpose of getting him married, of getting him a wife when he comes of age. He labors for his master, works his fields, runs errands for him; he may, with his master's permission, have a field of his own and a few small possessions; yet, though he is free, he may not leave his master to enter someone else's service. A noakanga (singular of noakansé) has no family. He places himself into someone's service of his own free will in order to be fed, housed, sometimes clothed; his master gives him a wife more or less promptly according to region. A noakanga is freer than a dakonré, for he

M
566 may leave his master whenever he pleases, either to devote himself
M to trade or to enter the service of another man; but often he gets all
F his work from his master.

563 The Peul shepherds never were slaves of the Mossi, because they M only knew how to watch the herds and were incapable of working the F land. They were, nevertheless, held in severe vassalage by the Mossi, [188] especially by the nabas, and served as victims in certain sacrifices.
Some Mossi sold by the Yarsé or by other Mossi have occasionally been their slaves, especially in the Dori region called Gyémaré by the natives.

/15/ Chapter 2. Administration

M
157 The power of the chiefs and the submission of their subjects are characteristic traits of Mossi country. The spirit of submission permeates the whole Mossi mentality. The Mossi are not particularly secretive or incommunicative, as the Bambara are said to be. On the contrary, they talk quite freely to their friends, even of their personal affairs; this does not mean that they are unable to keep a secret, especially if it is the king's secret. Two individuals have to be equals if there is to be some freedom between them; this freedom may develop into a certain closeness, but never into friendship in the highest sense of the term. If the Mossi appears secretive, it is because he is afraid to offend someone more powerful than himself. He always yields before a chief, before someone who "has the strength," as he puts it, while inwardly he may retain his own opinion and act as he pleases. When a chief talks, he hears nothing but these words
M in reply: bé néré, naba — "That's it, that's right. I agree with you."
576 The Mossi salute, formerly used in all the Black empires of the Sudan, especially in the courts of Ghana, Mali, and Gao, provides good evidence of this mentality. When we first enter the country as foreigners, we are shocked to see a man thus lower himself before another man. In order to salute, the Mossi puts down his load, hat, and sword, removes his shoes, sits on the ground, folds his legs slightly, and leans the upper part of his body forward. The elbows rest against the ground, as far apart as possible; the forearms, folded in front of 576 the chest with the hands half-closed and the thumbs raised, strike the ground together three or four times. The Mossi then raises his body a little and rubs the palms of his hands together. He never looks the person he is saluting straight in the face, but keeps his eyes slightly lowered. It is a truly humbled posture, especially when the chief who is being saluted remains standing or on horseback, towering above his subordinate, and barely according him a glance. The women, instead of beating upon the ground with their forearms, strike it with the elbows and raise their open hands, fingers extended, to shoulder height. The grand salute, very rarely used, consists of turning around after the ordinary salute has been completed, seizing some dust with both hands, spreading it on the forehead, and saluting once more.

When two natives who know each other meet along the way, the younger of the two squats first and begins the salute, which the other acknowledges by squatting in turn. If they are carrying loads, they set them down before saluting. They are never in a hurry. Servants and women, when they walk before a chief, bow slightly and join their hands in front of the chest, palms together. Though complicated, the Mossi salute is rendered easily and gracefully by the natives; they are used to it from an early age, and never perform it in the clumsy and awkward manner which is theirs when they attempt to imitate the military salute, so fine and noble when well done and so ludicrous when distorted by a Black.

622 643 Chiefs are designated by the generic term naba, but a distinction is made between naba and dimma. The latter is elected /16/ according to very precise rules, which we shall mention later, and his authority stems directly from this election. There are only five dimma among the Mossi: the Moro Naba, and the nabas of Fada, Tenkodogo, Boussouma, and Yatenga. The naba, on the other hand, receives his power from another chief more powerful than himself who has chosen him from several candidates.

643 645 Mossi country lies wholly under the authority of the Moro Naba who is assisted by five high ministers: the Widi Naba, Larale Naba, Gounga Naba, Kamisoro Naba and Ballum Naba. The respective functions of these ministers are somewhat ill-defined. The Kamisoro [839] is a eunuch and chief of the eunuchs. Upon his death, since he leaves no heirs, all his property devolves to the Moro Naba. It was thus to the latter's advantage to make him wealthy and to present him with the finest district in the country. The Widi Naba takes the place of the Moro Naba from the time of his death until the investiture

643
291
531

The Moro Naba of the Mossi.

635
291
516
301
342

A Mossi Province Chief.

643 of his successor. He presides over the election and proclaims the new-
645 ly elected chief. The Laralé is the guardian of the Moro Naba's ancestral tombs, and the Ballum is the head of the pages and dancers. When the Moro Naba gives one of his pages in marriage, the latter settles near the huts of the Ballum Naba. This is the least important minister; prior to the French occupation, he was given no province to rule.

631 The Moro Naba ruled directly over a large part of the Mossi territories. The part under his immediate jurisdiction was apportioned among his four principal ministers, who each had under him the heads of the cantons. Those territories not directly subject to the Moro Naba were placed under the authority of powerful chiefs who might be called province chiefs, assuredly vassals of the Moro Naba, but very independent vassals, somewhat similar to the dukes of Brittany and Burgundy vis-à-vis the King of France. Such are the nabas of Ouahigouya, Yako, Boussouma, Bélousa, etc.; there are many of them outside the territory reserved to the Moro Naba, especially to the north, east, and south. These province chiefs could also have independent vassals who, nevertheless, acknowledged their authority, such as the naba of Koupéla, a true province chief, but a vassal of the naba of Bélousa, in turn a vassal of the Moro Naba. The naba of Salmatenga stands in the same position with reference to the naba of Boussouma.

Each province is divided into cantons, each headed by a naba, and the canton includes several villages, each of which usually has its naba. Some of the villages are directly controlled by the province chief who apportions them among his ministers. Some villages may not even have a true naba. These are usually villages established by the children of an important naba. In this case an old man is entrusted with the administrative functions. These villages without a naba may nevertheless obtain one. For example, if the province chief has a son who settles in the community and the inhabitants are pleased with his presence, his father may name him naba of the [562] village. A very few villages are ruled by women who are assisted by the elders when a case is to be judged.

The power of each chief is tempered by his council. The Moro Naba himself does not act without consulting his ministers. Each province /17/ chief has a council. The titles of the ministers vary from one province to another, but their functions are the same.

631 The canton chiefs consult the oldest men in the village where they reside, and the village chiefs make no decisions bearing on the community without assembling the elders and listening to their advice.

Everything is carried out through the channels of the hierarchy. A province chief never transmits an order directly to a village ruled by a canton chief, but he advises the latter who notifies the village chief, and the village chief in turn calls the elders together, conveys the orders to them, and through them informs all his subjects. The orders passed down in this formal way are always carried out, but if perchance a canton chief should wish to disobey his province chief, he would be seconded by his people who recognize his authority before any other.

643 645 701 The last Moro Nabas had become to some extent idle kings. The protocol to which they were subjected by custom constantly encumbered them, not unlike European court etiquette. The Moro Naba was surrounded with a veritable court. As mentioned above, his High Council was composed of five chief ministers. To these should be added the Iman who represents the Moslems and who wields a certain influence, and the Teng'Soba. /Tr. Among the Mossi there is both a Teng'Soba, earth priest, and a Tan'Soba, war minister. It would seem that the latter is meant here./ The duties of the latter are quite specialized. He does not live in the same village as the Moro Naba, and he rules a canton. In case of war, he is consulted on the timeliness of the hostilities and on their chances of success. It devolves upon him at this time to make the proper sacrifices and to question the ancestral spirits. When war has been decided on, he takes command of the armies, and everyone, the ministers and the canton chiefs, must obey him. The Moro Naba remains in Ouagadougou.

644 839 A crowd of subalterns gravitate around these high dignitaries. The eunuchs are not very respectable people; sometimes habitual thieves were made eunuchs, as were, in general, those pages guilty of too much familiarity with the naba's wives. Some of them could reach a high position. The Kamisoro were always eunuchs, and several important cantons were set aside for them.

644 The pages are young boys, hand-picked from the country's most gifted children. They must serve the naba, and they bear the name soroné. The naba is never alone; he always has one or several pages by his side. One holds the fan, one stands near the monarch to help him shift his position, another takes care of his shoes, yet another of his scepter; the great cup-bearer constantly holds a gourd filled with strong millet beer and covered by a tray of artistically woven basketry.

644 The arms of the sorone are ornamented with two, three, or four copper [301] bracelets, often of alternate yellow and red metal. Sometimes they wear them at the wrists and above the elbow, and occasionally both ankles are adorned with thick bracelets or even with copper gaiters which make walking quite difficult but which are prized very highly.
[201] All these pages wait on the monarch hand and foot. If he coughs, they all rub the palms of their hands together and snap their fingers. This is repeated /18/ even when he drinks, sneezes, or spits. If he rises, the whole court rises, and when he feels those needs common to all mortals, the whole court follows and squats as he does.

644 On important feast days, the naba is followed by music, and every 533 time he makes a gesture, says a word, or takes a step, the musicians
534 play on various kinds of drums. The typical drum peculiar to Mossi country, bindré, which only the members of the drummers' guild are allowed to play, is made of a gourd which may reach 70 or 80 centimeters in diameter. The calabash is emptied, and the side where the stem was attached is removed and replaced with a tightly stretched 533 goat skin. By hitting this skin with his hands, the artist draws many different sounds from his instrument. It is quite an art to play this drum well, and the members of the guild are trained to it from childhood. They are the troubadours, the griot of the country; they sing the praises of chiefs whose genealogies they know by heart, they frequent the markets, they follow the rich and proclaim them to be the bravest, the most generous, the most handsome men this world has ever known, for the sake of a few gifts. They attend all festivities.

534 Another instrument is the lounga, made of a hollowed piece of wood shaped like an hourglass; the two ends are rather broad and joined by a narrow cylinder. This drum is carried under the arm, and its two openings are closed with goat skins joined by cords. The artist stretches these cords more or less tightly by clasping the drum between his arm and the left side of his body, while he hits one of the skins with a small curved stick ending in a little ball and held in his right hand.

The naba's orchestra also includes flutes, from which the natives, especially the Peul, draw pretty but monotonous sounds, and small one-string violins which give forth pleasing tones under a skillful bow.

644 If the Moro Naba is to ride on horseback, the grooms bring his 492 mount magnificently decked out in a copper headstall and a large embroidered rug which covers its back and rump completely. A piece of embroidered cloth hides the horse's chest, and the Arab-type saddle,

643
644
291

645
291
516

Above: The Moro Naba. Behind him, his brother, about twelve years old and the head of a large province, flanked by two pages.

Below: The Bullom Naba and his Pages. Behind him, his two Christian sons.

644 with its tall copper stirrups, bears on either side a larger copper tray.
[492] The drums are played when the naba leaves his dwelling, shift to a different tune when he places his foot in the stirrup, and shift once more when he sets out on his way. The whole population over a radius of several kilometers is thus apprised of the Moro Naba's every gesture. A page precedes him bearing his pillow, and another carrying his scepter. The ministers present at the court and the foreign chiefs present at the capital hasten to mount their horses. Several of the Moro Naba's bodyguards accompany him: four strapping fellows walk by his side, their arms leaning against the horse's rump as though to prevent the monarch from falling, while horsemen armed with spears do a fantasia, running 100 meters ahead of the naba, brandishing their spears, returning at full gallop, and setting off again. This constant coming and going entertains the naba who does not gallop.

631 /19/ Every province and canton chief has his court, his ministers, 644 his pages, his drummers. Eunuchs, however, are solely the prerogative of the Moro Naba. In order to qualify for pages, pillow, and spurs, a chief must be invested properly. The present naba of Koupéla who failed to follow the traditions possesses none of these privileges.

The investiture of nabas follows a complex tradition. Each naba invests his own vassals in office. The Moro Naba invests the province chiefs, except for those who hold the title dimma; the province chiefs invest the canton chiefs, and the latter invest the chiefs of villages within their jurisdiction. The right of nomination is an important source of revenue for the nabas.

622 Upon the death of a village chief, several candidates vie for power.
431 They all go to the naba who rules over them, to greet him and to offer him numerous gifts, cowries, chickens, sheep, and, if they are sufficiently wealthy, salt bars, a horse, sometimes even a wife. The one who gives the most has the best chance of being chosen, and the naba decides to announce his choice only when he feels that the candidates are running out of gifts.

622 In Koupéla, a village chief under the direct jurisdiction of the province chief is nominated in the following way. The candidates must apply to the minister who has control over their village. He is the indispensable intermediary between them and the naba who is to make the choice, he is their guide, their sor'soba. When the nomination draws near, the minister goes at night to see the naba, and together they agree on the choice to be made. They may appoint 622 only a relative of the deceased or of a previously deceased naba. Once they have come to an agreement, the naba sets a date and notifies the candidates. Each of them, full of hope, comes toward evening with his men. He is dressed in trousers, a skin worn diagonally across the chest and back, and a blanket thrown over the shoulder in the classic way, leaving the right shoulder and the right arm free. Before each of them stands a young girl, holding a staff which may become a scepter a few moments later. This girl is supposed to receive power at the same time as the chosen candidate, and throughout the investiture ceremonies she will care for the objects used by the new naba and everyone will give her cowries. She will return home after the ceremonies.

All the candidates having arrived, they are seated in the outer courtyard. The naba remains in his hut, and the minister goes to him. The naba names the man of his choice, and the minister goes out, grabs the man's blanket, and tells him that he has been chosen by the naba. The defeated candidates leave hastily, while their men carry the chosen man on their shoulders, which serve for the shield of old, and sing his praises, calling him wobro, "elephant." The Trabrana /sic/, bravest of the brave, then comes to him with a leather satchel, and the chosen man must give him cowries. He also gives some to the minister to get back his blanket, and throughout the three festive days that follow his appointment he must provide large quantities of millet beer. These expenses are alleviated by his new subjects, who come to greet him and offer him gifts as soon as they get the news. /20/ The defeated candidates return on the following day, with shaved heads, to make obeisance to their fortunate competitor. For three days there is much merry-making at the household of the minister who acted as intermediary. Drums are played, the people dance, and they sing as follows:

622 539 Sen kong'nam, lébra sonkam ysa.	Those who were not chosen will gather peanuts.
Bamb'naba y minimini biga, ka zué waodo, dem kom.	Their naba is like the young of the wild duck: he does not fear the cold, he plays in the water.
Sérénde wobro, n'béla.	Come to the elephant and greet him.

622
539 Sen damma nyébra, baryoro nan wa. If someone attempts to kill the crocodile, the serpent appears immediately. (1)

1. That is, to say, if someone threatens the new naba, the province chief will come to his aid.

622 On the third day the new naba is shaved. His sister, or in her absence an old woman, begins the procedure, but anyone may complete it. Everybody then goes to the naba: the chosen man is to re-
[55] ceive a name, and from now on it will be forbidden to call him by his previous name. Each naba receives three names, or rather three mottoes, chosen by his sister or by an old woman of the family. These mottoes allude to a historical event or to the chosen man's position. When everyone has arrived at the naba's house, the man's sister discloses the mottoes to the naba, who proclaims them, and the drums in turn repeat them to the people. Then the dancing, singing, and drinking are resumed. On the following day the new naba, duly invested, returns to his village to take up his duties.

Here are some of the mottoes:

622
539 I. The mottoes of the naba of Koupéla allude to the war which took place at the time of his father's appointment between the latter, Naba Ibri, and the people of Kazem'bouanga:

1. Wadra yerda né kyougou. Wadra gousa menga, t'a péleum ka yd kyougou. The star glows in spite of the moon. But it should beware, for its brilliance does not obliterate that of the moon. (The star stands for the Kazem'bouanga pretender. The moon is the naba of Koupéla.)

2. Kalébdo kanenga, la son boulwaka. Kalebodo sauce is not good, but it is better than boulwaka sauce. (The naba of Koupéla is not very powerful, but he is more powerful than the people of Kazem'bouanga.)

3. Néda gwanga nan samma. The lame man claims that he will kill him. (The pretender, the lame man, intends to kill the naba of Koupéla.)

II. The mottoes of the Saman'Naba, prime minister of Koupéla, allude to his position vis-à-vis the naba, to whom he owes everything and who supports him:

622 1. Ti'douda béleum villi n'pam n'dou. Those who wish to 539 climb a tree seize the branches for support. /21/

2. Gigemdé sen touka séolro, wenniginamma, walpélronamma, nonga morbo, la'b zuéta gemdé. The lion digs up the salty earth (good to eat); the buffalo and koba /a kind of horse antelope/ like to eat it, but fear the lion. (The enemies of the Saman'Naba would like to take his place, but fear the naba.)

3. Kong'panga, bar'bala. Those who lack strength remain servants.

645 The appointment of the high ministers involves only a few gifts,
635 offered during the festive days which last from the death of the minister to the nomination of his successor. The eldest son usually inherits the position, but the province chief may designate anyone he pleases.

636 Upon the death of the naba of Koupéla, a province chief, the ministers hold a council and decide among themselves who is to be his successor. The eldest son is nearly always chosen. Before the name of the man selected is announced, the head of the village section that bears the name Koupéla notifies the canton chiefs, who gather in the village of Koupéla. When everyone has arrived, the Tabrana /sic/ proclaims the name of the man chosen, and they all proceed to Bélousa to disclose their choice to the naba and to request his investiture. The naba of Bélousa usually accepts the man thus formally designated. If there is disagreement, or if he himself would prefer a different choice, he notifies the Moro Naba accordingly and indicates his own preferences; when his messenger returns, he proclaims the appointment, and everyone submits to his will. After all, he "has the strength." As badges of investiture, the naba of Bélousa presents the chosen man with a cap, a pair of shoes, and a scepter. The new naba still may not wear the cap, put on the shoes, or hold the scepter. He must proceed first to the grave of the ancestor of the [769] people, Naba Kourita, where he offers sacrifices, especially that of a cow. The festivities last for seven days, in the course of which millet beer flows freely and cattle is slaughtered in large numbers. In the course of these festivities the head of the chosen man is shaved, and he receives from the messengers of the naba of Bélousa the cap, shoes, and scepter; only then does he truly become a naba, with the right to 635 wear spurs and to have pages and a pillow. When the festivities are over at Kourit'Yaorin, the naba enters Koupéla where he is to reside.

643 When the Moro Naba died, the country fell prey to revolution and 669 to the servants of the deceased, who looted everything they could. This is why the death of the Moro Naba was carefully concealed until the day of the funeral; this is why, once it had been announced, no one dared go out without a bow and arrows or at least a spear. Women and children stayed home. In order to prevent any disorder, a new 643 election was called as soon as possible. The Widi Naba acted as intermediary and gathered the votes of the electors. The latter numbered twenty-five: the five high ministers and twenty other chiefs, of no great importance in everyday life, who were not canton chiefs and were often mere family heads, but who were high electors by right inherited from father to son since the founding of the Ouagadougou dynasty. These twenty-five electors consulted the people of their entourage and told the Widi Naba which candidate had received their vote. There could be several candidates, but to be elected one had to be a member of the family /22/of Naba Oubri, the founder of the dynasty. Once the funeral ceremonies were over, the Widi Naba rounded up all the canton chiefs and all the nabas present in Ouagadougou, and proclaimed the name of the man chosen, to whom he presented the badges of office. Numerous ceremonies followed, the most solemn of which took place in a small village called Paspanga, two kilometers from Ouagadougou. All the nabas went there in turn, beginning with the defeated candidates, to render their oath of loyalty.

All these customs were followed for the investiture of the present Moro Naba, Naba Kom.

Chapter 3. Rights of Chiefs and Rights of Private Individuals

631 The nabas, whether heads of villages, cantons, or provinces, were all-powerful, and no one could act without their knowledge or own anything beyond what they permitted him to possess.

In theory, Mossi country belongs entirely to the Moro Naba, who may dispose of everything as he wishes and give land to anyone he pleases. In practice, the Moro Naba delegates some of his

2:Mangin--27a M-5 (ca. 1910)-1921 FA28 Mossi FA28

291
.516

[342
142]

Above: A Naba and his Men.
Below: Mossi Elders.

631 powers to his vassals, the province chiefs, who in turn entrust them to the canton chiefs, and these do likewise with the village chiefs. Thus, when a native wants to move from one canton to another, or 631 even from one village to another, he must be authorized to do so.
166 He must request the permission of the canton or village chief to settle 425 in such-and-such a place, and the chief of the village where he wants to live tells him where he may build his huts and which field he may cultivate. The naba may dispossess one of his subjects, if he so wishes, and give his field to another. After all, he "has the strength." This rarely happens, however, and a native who has cleared a piece of bush, fertilized a plot to sow maize, sowed and weeded the ground, is usually assured of a harvest, except in case of war. If a man is evicted, on the other hand, there is no appeal; neither the canton chief nor the province chief would listen to him; they would do the same thing if the opportunity arose.

421 There is no communal property. Every individual works his fields for his own account; he himself collects the fruit of his labor and remains its undisputed master. Nevertheless, every native owes his 651 chiefs and benefactors a tithe; and at harvest time it is interesting
431 to watch everyone sorting ears of maize, braiding sorghum stems, and measuring out baskets of small millet. The village chief is to get so many ears of maize; the canton chief, if he does not reside too far away, so many others; the father- or fathers-in-law will get theirs, and so will one friend or another to whom one owes cowries, or who has previously granted a favor. However, everyone who deals out goods right and left will in turn get some from various other people and approximately regain his expenditure. The village chiefs offer more sizable gifts to the canton chiefs, and the latter do likewise to the province chiefs.

651 These were, in fact, taxes, not fixed taxes per capita, but com-
CU pletely arbitrary ones. If the naba found a gift insufficient, he had no compunction about saying so, and the person involved had to comply. It is said that the naba of Koupéla paid annually 500,000 cowries (500 francs) and /23/ three horses to the naba of Bélousa, and a million cowries (1000 francs) in two installments to the Moro Naba, to whom he also gave five horses. The gifts to the Moro Naba were brought first to the naba of Bélousa and from there conveyed to Ouagadougou: ever the hierarchy.

This quasi-official tax, however, was not the only one. Whenever the Moro Naba wanted horses, cattle, or anything whatever, he 651 661 had a province chief notified, and everyone hastened to carry out his wishes. If a province chief in turn wanted something, if he was short of millet or wished to build huts, he had one or several canton chiefs notified, and these in turn advised the village chiefs; through them everything was slowly carried out, for it took time to transmit these orders, but the common man never failed to comply.

Such a system made it impossible for an individual to accumulate wealth. A surplus of goods would have aroused the naba's cupidity, and he would have found some excuse to tax this overly enterprising subject more than the others. This is why those who owned a few cows carefully concealed it by entrusting them to the Peul. The latter could not hope to increase their herds rapidly, because the nabas were always in need of fine, fat cattle for some alleged sacrifice or festivity.

651 661 431 At certain times the canton chiefs and even the village chiefs, as well as people desirous of making a good impression, must go to the naba to greet him and to present him with gifts which never amount to less than 500 cowries (50 francs). When the naba undertakes an important task, such as the building of several huts, the weeding of his field, or the harvesting of his millet, some of the people are summoned to help him, and it is proper for the others to come and offer him gifts. His convalescence from illness is an occasion for gifts also, and, if he has eluded some danger, he must quickly be congratulated and given cowries. On every festive day or on the days following each naba must go to his province chief to greet him and to bring him gifts in proportion to the importance of his own position. Whenever the naba travels, every village where he stops must give him food and drink, and thus offer him chickens, goats, sheep, or even a cow if the village is sufficiently important. The grooms and other servants in the retinue of the naba manage for themselves at the expense of the inhabitants. This is quite a burden, especially since the naba, when he returns home, expects more greetings and cowries.

726 War was another important source of revenue. Binger describes what he witnessed at the court of Boukari-Koutou, who was later Moro Naba under the name of Naba Wobro and who was deposed by Voulet's arrival. Before leaving for war, the sorcerers were consulted and indicated the tangandé or sacred grove where a sacrifice was to be made in order to insure victory. The province chief then took out his flag, a mere staff with charms and a cow's tail hanging at 726 the end. A man appointed for the task carried this flag in the front line of battle. He was never to look back and always to walk forward, and he bore no weapons other than a bow and arrows. If he was killed, another man took his place. When a village was besieged, 727 all the spoils devolved by right to the naba, who took /24/ his choice and left the rest to his men. All able-bodied men who could still fight and who refused to become slaves were put to death; the old men were spared, and the women and children reduced to slavery. The naba became master of all the slaves taken by cavalrymen mounted on his own horses. If any disagreement arose about a capture, the naba seized the prize; if the individuals concerned managed to reach an agreement, they shared the booty amicably. Those who had seized a horse or a slave on their own initiative could keep it, but more often than not they offered part of their prize to the naba in order to avoid difficulties. The war did not end with a peace treaty. It ceased when the loot was considered sufficient. The Gourounsi and Bousansé countries thus were true granaries for the Mossi, who drew upon them according to their needs.

692 The nabas did not merely administer their lands and collect taxes; they also dispensed justice, civil and criminal. The village chief usually judged a case of first instance, but the convicted party could appeal the sentence to the canton chief and through him to the province chief, or he might even resort directly to the latter. The judges 695 were always assisted by assessors, the village elders for the petty nabas, the ministers for the province chiefs. Criminals were judged as promptly as possible, and the accused were subjected to imprisonment only while awaiting the arrival of witnesses. They were allowed to name their own witnesses, and these were summoned.

No questioning similar to that of our examining magistrates preceded the session. Everything took place openly, and anyone could speak up whenever he pleased. Torture was not employed to obtain incriminating confessions, but sometimes was used to unmask false witnesses. Sons were not allowed to testify in favor of their father, nor slaves and servants in favor of their master: their testimony might too easily be biased.

In case of dispute, there was no trial by ordeal nor intervention by a sorcerer. The judge did not put the witnesses under oath, but a litigant could say: "If I lie, may I fail to rise from here (that is, may I die)." If someone accused of being indebted to a recently deceased individual denied this debt, the heir could lead him to the 695 tomb and force him to drink water in which earth from the grave had been diluted. This test was greatly feared, for the Mossi believe that the deceased will come and take his revenge.

The defendant went free unless his guilt was proved by witnesses. When arguments arose about the ownership of fields, domestic animals, etc., each person concerned would give his argument and summon his witnesses, and the judges made a decision on the basis of the discussions. If two women quarreled, their husbands were supposed to get together and reach a decision. The province chief judged disputes 692 concerning marriage. For instance, if a girl had been promised to someone and the bride price was paid in part, and then her father changed his mind and gave her to another, the disappointed suitor could appeal to the province chief, who saw to it that the payment was returned. If the defendant ran away to avoid trial, he could only be tried in absentia if witnesses deposed against him.

696 /25/ The sentence was carried out as far as possible, even in the 691 absence of the convicted party; if he returned, the trial was not re-
672 opened but he could appeal to the province chief. The family is held responsible in every case. If the sentence includes a fine, and if the convicted person's property is insufficient, the property of his relatives is seized. People are held accountable for their children's debts, and if the defendant runs away, one of his relatives is seized in his place. On the other hand, the head of the family is the absolute master and the judge of the family. He must pay his children's debts and the fines they have incurred, but he may chastise them, even put them to death, or banish and curse them, a punishment which as a rule is greatly feared. All this indicates the strength of the family ties, which we shall study in the second part of this work. The naba saw to the execution of the sentence pronounced by the court; the executive and judicial powers were vested in the same person. If anyone refused to pay his debts or to pay the inflicted penalty, he was stripped of his property. No commutation of the sentence was allowed, and the person condemned to irons or to death had to suffer the sentence himself and could not go free by paying a fine or by substituting a slave. Capital punishment was carried out in public. The province chief was entitled to grant a pardon, but, of course, he made use of this right quite rarely. A man's life counts for so little in the eyes of the Black!

[513]

[761]

695 The procedure was the same for all, men and women. The sons
681 of nabas, the nakomsé, however, were neither tried nor punished in 554 public. They were not tied with ropes, but with strips of fabric; and if condemned to death, they were hanged rather than clubbed to death. In any case, complaints against them were extremely rare. The sons of a powerful naba could do anything with impunity.

681 For examples, here are a few crimes and their respective punishments. Of course, there was no written code, no formal scale of penalties. Everything depended on custom and on the whim of the 696 judge. Thus, the wealthy could obtain sentences in their favor by 691 paying the judges, and thieves could avoid punishment by sharing their loot with the naba. Otherwise, a thief caught in the act was 685 flogged, sometimes to death. He was condemned to several months in irons, and exposed to public ridicule before the naba's hut; he had to restore what he had taken, and his family was held responsible. If he repeated the offense, he was led to the marketplace with a rope around his neck; he was supplied with an abundance of meat and dolo /beer/, and then clubbed to death at the foot of a tree. In Ouagadougou he was sometimes made a eunuch instead. This was almost the equivalent of a death sentence, because the operation was carried out in such barbarous fashion that death often ensued. French justice more leniently imprisons the thieves, a cause of complaint by honest people who find the punishment too mild.

682 In case of willful murder, the killer was put to death; if he could 683 not be found, a member of his family was executed in his place.
672 In case of a brawl, no attempt was made to determine who had started the fight or who was in the right. (Manslaughter was punished by a fine paid to the victim's family. The right /26/ of self-defense was, of course, recognized. If blows and wounds had been inflicted, the adversaries were put in irons.)

681 Old women were often accused of being witches and of eating
683 children's souls. If their crime was considered proved, if the sorcerers
888 consulted declared some old woman guilty of a baby's death, she was put to death in very cruel fashion: a second opening was made in a clay pot so that her head could be put completely within it; then the pot was heated intensely and placed over the head of the unfortunate woman.

685 If a goat or sheep caused damage to a field, the animal could be killed on the spot. The owner had to be notified, but he was not 685 entitled to complain and merely removed the animal. If the damage was caused by a cow or donkey, the owner of the field had to obtain a witness and was entitled to recover damages.

425 Whoever found an object of small value, such as a knife or even a garment, was entitled to keep it, but anything valuable, such as a sheep, a donkey, or, all the more, a cow, had to be handed over to the naba and became his property.

684 837 The province chief alone could pass sentence on a rapist. He was beaten and put in irons, the girl was returned to her family, and, if she gave birth, the child was killed. If the girl had been promised to the naba, the rapist was put to death. An adulterer caught in flagrante delicto could be killed by the deceived husband, but if he had not been caught in flagrante delicto, if he had managed to run away, or if he had merely been denounced by the woman, the deceived husband could do nothing. A girl's seducer usually became her husband if she gave birth, but he had to provide another girl for her betrothed.

791 787 837 The province chief had a special procedure to insure the faithfulness of his numerous wives and his pages. When a wife or page did not behave properly, the Poënaba was supposed to point them out to the naba. He proceeded as follows. Every Friday the Poënaba left his village on foot, a whip in his hand. A servant preceded him with a leather satchel containing charms. No one was allowed to come near him. Everyone fled into the bush, and the path he had followed was closed to other people until they learned that the dreadful man had reached the home of the naba. The wives were gathered together. The Poënaba filled a large gourd with water, poured in his ingredients, and sat before it. The women came to him one by one and cast their reflection in the water. The Poënaba looked in and claimed to recognize those wives who were faithful and those who were not. The former were allowed to go free, but they were often beaten to remove any possible inclination to unfaithfulness. Those designated as unfaithful were seized and had to denounce their accomplice. Both the man and woman were clubbed to death. If the woman pointed out as guilty had no accomplice or refused to name him, she alone was killed. Women still point out with terror the place of execution. This procedure was very barbarous, and its abuses were flagrant. To avoid an accusation which would cost them /27/ their lives, the poor women were ready to do anything, and they presented the Poënaba with all the gifts they could gather in order to be spared.

177 The preceding pages deal wholly with past history. The French occupation has profoundly modified the whole administrative set-up and curtailed the rights of nabas, who are now mere civil servants. The people are slowly learning not to fear them; their authority is weakening; the gifts dwindle; and the nabas have been put on short allowance and forced to cultivate their fields like everybody else. Their judicial power is practically gone, and those few who have preserved real authority were able to do so because of their remoteness from administrative centers and their past. They were in charge before the French occupation, and they have managed to keep up their prestige in spite of everything. Yet little by little attitudes 600 change and respect vanishes. Is this good? Is it bad? The matter could be argued at great length. Although this administrative system led to regrettable abuses which had to be checked, it also had its favorable aspects, and it made the Mossi into one of the most feared and most homogeneous peoples in the bend of the Niger.

/28/ BOOK II. FAMILY LIFE

Chapter 1. Establishment of the Family Through Marriage

562 The family is established through marriage. We shall, therefore,
584 first study the marriage bond. Obviously, since Christianity was 567 introduced in the country only a short time ago, virginity is unknown there even as a concept. Every nubile girl must marry. She is given in marriage by the person to whom she belongs, and her own tastes are not taken into account. She belongs primarily to her father, but sometimes even before her birth she belongs to the person who gave her mother away on the condition — a common clause in free marriage contracts — that the first girl she bears will be given in marriage by her grandfather. Or the woman may belong to her father's master, and this may be her father's only remaining obligation toward the man who formerly owned him as a slave. Thus, nearly all girls born in Koupéla belong by right to the naba, for the inhabitants of this locality were formerly his slaves. Sometimes a

562 girl is used to pay debts; a man borrows on the promise of giving his 584 daughter in marriage. She will be handed over, often with no bride
567 price other than the borrowed sum; and, contrary to the custom noted above, since she is considered a slave, her first daughter does not belong to the grandfather. A girl may also be given in exchange for her enslaved brother or uncle, who thus recovers his freedom. A man may be seriously ill and call a doctor who agrees to treat him on the condition that the patient's daughter be given to him if he gets well. The father does recover, and the girl is given in marriage to the fortunate doctor. Exchange of daughters also takes place: a native may give his daughter in marriage to another, who in turn gives him his own.

562 A girl is given in marriage by her mother only if she was born out
584 of wedlock, and her father is thus theoretically unknown. The sisters 848 of certain nabas are the only ones permitted to choose their husbands
[554] according to their own wishes and to leave them when they please.
593 The fickle existence they lead is easy to imagine! In all other cases the girl is given in marriage by her father, or by his heir if the father is dead. (1) The mother is not consulted, but since she cares for the daughter until the latter marries, she may through advice, promises, or even threats dissuade her from a certain match /29/ or welcome her if she runs away from a husband to whom she was given against her will.

[754] 1. It would be onerous and indeed impossible to list all the various situations that may arise. The sorcerers quite often interfere, and who knows what goes through a sorcerer's mind! One case among many: a woman bore a daughter after raising several others who died immediately following marriage; the father consulted the sorcerer to find out whether he should promise this last daughter in marriage. The sorcerer stated that she must be left free to choose her own husband, or else she would die like her sisters. The father left her free.

584 If the girl absolutely refuses to go to her betrothed, her father
[562] tries to persuade her but does not use force. If the girl persists in her refusal in spite of everything — this is extremely rare — the father returns to the betrothed any money he may have borrowed, but he does not return anything that was given him spontaneously. If the father happens to die after he has pledged his daughter, his heir may not retract the promise and give his sister or niece to another man, [428] but he will from then on receive the gifts himself. If the betrothed man dies, his heir gets the girl promised to the father, with the condition that he will continue to pay the bride price.

584 Contrary to the situation in European countries, the woman, con-
583 sidered as valuable property, is paid for; it is not she who brings a dowry, but the man who wants her as his wife. If a man has an eye on a friend's daughter, he goes to visit the father even though the girl may still be a babe in arms. He is careful not to state what he has in mind. He comes sometimes with a few cowries, sometimes with a chicken, a piece of salt, perhaps even a sheep. The child's father understands, and when he has some work to be done, a field to be weeded, millet to be threshed, huts to be roofed, he makes it known to the suitor, who hastens to work for the man whose son-in-law he should like to become.

After a time, the father says to the suitor: "You have treated me well. I am pleased with you. I will treat you well." The suitor understands and becomes even more assiduous. He sends his friends; and on every festive occasion he presents the father of his intended with a few chickens. There is no outright promise, no betrothal in the usual sense of the term. Sometimes the father has financial difficulties, pressing debts, or he has seen a fine garment he should like to buy, and he has a request for money conveyed to his friend. The latter knows that he is loaning without return, or rather loaning against the girl. He refuses only if he is actually unable to furnish the sum; for if negotiations were ever to be broken, the child's father would have to return the money advanced, and this would greatly embarrass him and thus prevent him from profiting through the transaction. In any case, it is extremely rare for a promised girl not to be given to the man who has made the first advances and who has been favorably received. A father who should promise his daughter to a man after receiving gifts for some time from another would be held in very poor esteem and forced to return any money he might 583 have borrowed. In addition, he would expose himself and the preferred suitor to the vengeance of the rejected one.

584

583 The bride price is not exorbitant. The total gifts, spread over a period of years, amount to some fifty francs, without counting the work days. Nevertheless, it requires sufficient means to secure at least the necessary cowries. Besides, the child's father prefers to give her to someone who already boasts a certain fame and some wealth, in short, to an elderly man. /30/ This is why children are promised to old dotards, and white-haired men are paired with young girls; while the old men's sons of marriageable age cannot get wives. If the father has the means to pay the bride price, he carefully refrains from helping his son, even if the latter has found a match to his liking.
587 It is true that all the father's wives are inherited by the oldest son,
578 who gives some to his younger brothers; but this occurs only at the old man's death, and this may not happen for a long time. This ex-
593 plains why the oldest son wishes for his father's death, and why the father sends the son away for fear of a premature end. It is only fair to add that some men, with a better understanding of their own interests, marry off their sons as soon as they are old enough.

595 Polygamy exists among the Mossi as in all Black countries. The [556] wealth of a man is gauged by the number of his wives. Women furnish hands to till the soil, for the wife works in the fields like the husband. Women also furnish children, and if these are daughters, young men will come to offer their services (dakonré) and one day take the girls in marriage; or the father will receive gifts. If the children are boys, they will later aid the father in his work. In these countries where each lives for himself alone, where selfishness reigns supreme, polygamy is easily explained, but it undoubtedly results in a lower birth rate. White-bearded old men cannot have children as numerous and sound as young men in their prime, and the latter, deprived of wives, wear themselves out with their excesses. It is true that those who can afford a dozen wives are few; most have to be content with two, three, or four. Some nabas, nevertheless, own veritable herds of women, and this is certainly a grievous abuse. Their wives are numbered in the hundreds. The greatest moral dis-
[837] order reigns in those harems, where the boys who serve as grooms and pages spend most of their time among their master's wives. This explains the precautions taken by the women's owners and the eunuchs of the Moro Naba, as well as the Poënaba and his sinister duties.

582 Marriage is exogamous, that is, relatives do not marry if their 564 kinship is known. There are no sharply defined caste lines. The Mossi marry Yarsé Malinké, Bousanse, and Gourounsi, but cannot marry Peul nor Haoussa. A Mossi who does not belong to a caste may choose his wife among Mossi who do belong to one. The latter do not intermarry freely; iron workers cannot marry from among the drummers.

584 But to go back to our story. The girl has grown. The suitor has already made numerous gifts. In short, the time has come to proceed with the wedding. The girl's father /31/ summons the betrothed and tells him: "Come and see me on such-and-such a day with a chicken." The suitor joyfully returns to his village and tells the elders that he was told to bring a chicken. On the day set, the suitor takes the bird to the girl's family, accompanied by his friends. He hands over the chicken, and everyone goes to the home of the head of the family, or, in his absence, to a village elder. The father states before all present that he wishes to give his daughter to So-and-So. Congratulations are exchanged, and everyone goes home. Now the festivities must be arranged, the relatives and friends must be notified, and the millet beer must be brewed. Meanwhile, the relatives and friends who have heard the good news come to greet the bridegroom and bring him fifty or a hundred cowries to help him meet the expenses of the festivities.

When everything is ready, the bridegroom takes 500 cowries and a rooster to the girl's father and 500 cowries to the elder in whose household the bride shall live until her wedding day. The girl's relatives have prepared dinner, while the bridegroom provides the [302] drink. A relative of the groom shaves the bride's forehead in a circle, and she retires to the inner courtyard where her father's wives wash her thoroughly and tie a cotton cord around her waist. She dons a white garment and goes to offer a gourd of beer to her betrothed who has remained outside with his friends. Everyone thanks the girl's parents and then they all leave. On the day after next, the groom
[431] sends his friends to greet the family of his betrothed with a basket of millet flour, four kalro pellets, and salt, which are all distributed among the village people. These festivities, with their attendant ceremonies, come closest to a formal betrothal.

585 The girl, however, remains with the head of the family or with the elder who takes his place! When all these preliminary ceremonies are over, the groom sends daily for his bride. Once the trousseau has 585 been gathered together in a basket — clothes varying in number with the family's wealth, gourds, a pot for the sauce, a wooden spoon to stir the millet mush — the father tells the groom's messenger that the wedding date has been set for a certain day, nearly always on a Friday, sometimes Thursday. For the second time, the groom prepares the festivities and again the food and the drink. In the evening, his friends go out to meet the bride who is accompanied by her family. When nearing the village, they all let loose merry cries, "you, you", the bride pretends to run away, and the young men run after her and bear her on their shoulders to the head of the groom's family or to one of his uncles. And the party begins. The men eat millet mush [262] and a chicken; the women, millet mush and a guinea hen. They all drink beer, dance, and sing.

[302] On the following morning, the groom's relatives shave the bride's head, and that of her husband if she is his first wife, because their way of life has changed: the young man has become the master of a hut, and the young girl a wife. In the evening, the friends and relatives of the new husband go to the bride's village bearing in this order: a sheep killed at the husband's house, jars of beer, and finally the sarabo /millet mush/. The bride's relatives follow in complete silence /32/ and without greeting anybody. When they arrive at the home of the bride's family, the bearer of the sheep and the women who carry the millet beer and sarabo go into the inner courtyard and put down their loads; then they come out and dance, while the in-laws have the food transferred to other containers. The jars are returned to the bearers, who are driven away with blows by millet stalks and a sprinkling of water mixed with ashes.

All the while, the bride stays in the soukala of the elder, watched closely by his first wife. She remains shut in for several days, until the elder finally decides to send her to her husband. His wife prepares millet mush, sauce, and meat, and brings a jug of beer. The old women assemble and accompany the bride to the home of her husband. He returns the courtesy to the elder on the following day. Henceforth, they are married at long last.

If the new husband is prosperous, he goes to thank his in-laws a [431] few days after the festivities. In leather pouches sewn all around, he offers 1, 300 cowries to his father-in-law and 1, 400 to his mother-in-law. If he can, he also offers beer, two chickens, and a sheep. These last gifts are less essential, but if he fails to offer the cowries, the in-laws may seize his wife's children and keep them until the thank-you gifts have been received.

585 It should be noted that these ceremonies are often curtailed. They 184 may also vary in ways that will not be described here. Sometimes they may not take place at all. This happens when the girl already has a husband prior to her birth, or when she is part of an inheritance. In such cases her relatives merely take her to her husband.

585 No sacrifices are performed during the marriage ceremonies. The 782 husband does offer a sacrifice on the day he builds a hut for his wife, and at the place where the structure is to be erected. The girl's mother consults the sorcerer a few times to find out if her daughter will be welcomed in her new home, and to know which sacrifice must be offered to ward off illness while she lives with her husband. She communicates the answer to the girl's father, and he himself offers the prescribed sacrifice.

602 In theory, the husband owes nothing else to his in-laws. In practice, 431 he would hold himself in poor esteem if he were not to present them with a few more gifts, especially on important feast days. When his maize is harvested, he sets aside a few ears for his wife's relatives; when his millet is threshed, he is sure to send some to his father-in-law; whenever he organizes any sort of festivity, his in-laws are invited; and he personally helps them in their work.

586 There is no divorce in the formal sense of a judgment rendered by law. A husband may send his wife back to her relatives if she steals, if she is lazy, or especially if she commits adultery, but even in the latter case his action will be regarded with disapproval. It is a husband's duty to watch over his wife and, if necessary, to discipline her. The man who repudiates his wife makes himself unpopular and cannot obtain new wives. It also happens, and this occurs more frequently, that the wife runs away and goes back to her family, /33/ either because she complains of ill treatment, or because she is not happy with her husband, or for some other reason of a more or less dubious character. If the husband manages to catch up with her before she gets home, no great problem is involved. He merely beats her and shuts her in for a few days. If she does reach her relatives, especially if they are in connivance, the husband must present a few gifts to them and even to his wife. The in-laws usually try to convince their daughter to return to her husband, but they do not force her to do so. Even the naba, when called upon to intervene, limits himself to the use of moral authority; his threats usually persuade the woman to return to her husband, who may himself use force if he wishes.

586 It nevertheless happens, though very rarely, that the husband is unable to convince his wife and returns home alone. No one troubles the wife from then on, and her relatives give her full freedom. The grudge of the rejected husband may be persistent, however, and his vengeance frightful. The bride price is not returned; the husband should have known how to keep his wife. It is nevertheless acknowledged that the children born of the union, boys or girls, belong to the father, and he does not fail to claim them when they are grown, or if they run away to their mother.

564 467 Negro populations often contain caste groups, set apart from each other by tight barriers. The most outstanding of these are the rules prohibiting marriage between members of the same caste or between those who belong to a caste and those who do not. Such prohibitions do not exist among the Mossi, except in the sense mentioned earlier. Although three caste-like groups exist among them, drummers, smiths, and undertakers, they are castes only in the sense that those who do not belong to such a family cannot exercise the profession. It might be more accurate to call them guilds.

533 [534] The drummers (binda) are those who play the bindré, a sort of large gourd with an aperture about 40 centimeters in diameter and covered with hide. Only those who belong to the drummers' family may play on this drum, which apparently is peculiar to the Mossi, but anyone may play on the other drums. The drummers are present [762] at all sacrifices offered by the naba; on Friday, the day of sacrifice, they go and pay their respects to him. When sacrifices are offered, they are entitled to the head of the victim. They are present at all [764] burials, where they play their drum and receive a remuneration which varies with the wealth of the deceased. If it is one of their members who died, they receive neither cowries nor food. They go to war [727] with their drums. If they are so unfortunate as to be made prisoners, they are never sold but ruthlessly killed; this is done either to prevent them from going back into the fray and stirring the warriors to sack the village, or because no one would want to buy them since they belong to a naba who would retaliate against their captors, or for both reasons at once. The drummers are the country's griot, a term hallowed by custom. They know the genealogy of every naba and sing his praises. Each province chief has a number of drummers and never travels without taking some of them with him. At other times they go to /34/ the market and follow the best-dressed people, singing

342
534

The Large Mossi Drums.

535
857

Dance of Young Mossi Girls.

533 their praises and beating fiercely on their drums in the hope of receiving a few cowries, kola nuts, or at least some beer.

326 The smiths (saba), by which is meant those who work with iron,
306 extract the metal from the ore and make it into hoes and hatchets. They sometimes work with wood, as in other parts of the Sudan, but usually this industry is carried out by members of another guild. The jewellers make bracelets, file teeth, repair worn hoes, etc. They are not smiths, properly speaking, and anyone may exercise their trade.

767 The undertakers (lada) offer gifts to the spirits of the deceased on the day of death or its anniversary (kouré). They also lay the corpse in the grave, and if death was due to illness, it is impossible to proceed with the burial without them. But anyone may dig the grave and carry the corpse. We shall discuss the undertakers again when funerals are described.

Chapter 2. The Family

596 The structure of the Roman family and the power granted to the paterfamilias, its very foundation, have been greatly and justly admired. Something like the paterfamilias is to be found among the Mossi. Would that we also found the Roman matron! As we have seen above, every Mossi is subject to the Moro Naba, a province chief, a canton chief, and a village chief. He is also subject in a more immediate sense to the head of his family, and he can do nothing without his consent. If he wishes to marry, he consults the family head, in whose household his bride will lodge when she arrives in the village. On the other hand, the man who wishes to give his daughter in marriage never does so without consulting his family head, at whose house the girl will stay before she goes to live with her husband.

[551] The family is thus very tightly organized among the Mossi. Each family has a name which is seldom used; if one of its members was ever naba, the name derives from that of the first naba. Members of [582 the same family may not intermarry, and usually they all have the 784] same kisgou (prohibition), whether the term designates a totem, a taboo, or something else altogether. The head of the family is its oldest member. Upon his death, the authority is transferred not to his

596 heir but to the oldest member of the family. Nothing is done without consulting the family head, and even if a member of the family occupies an important post, he continues to show the greatest deference toward his family head, his elder. This is why the present prime minister of Koupéla, the Saman'Naba, leaves the prerogatives of a family head to his uncle; he does not take the liberty of offering sacrifices on the Day of the Dead, and he consults his elder on all
596 matters which fall within his jurisdiction. The head of the family, 681 however, does not have the right of life or death over its members or over his own wives. Even if the latter steal or commit adultery, they may not be put to death; only the district chiefs may kill their own wives. A husband or family elder may beat them, put them in irons, or even more rarely /35/ turn them out of the household, but he may not kill them. Also, the family head may not dispose of the family property, nor force his kin to hand it over. He may, however, request his relatives to help him pay his debts or obtain a wife, but he may not force them to do so. Nevertheless, they always help him as best they can.

593 Children are directly subject to their father. While the latter 596 consults the family head whenever he must make a serious decision, the children consult their father, who in turn goes to the family head, who often goes to the village chief, who resorts to the canton chief, who consults the head of the province if the matter warrants it. Mature reflection thus precedes every serious decision.

593 The father is the absolute master of his children. He has the right of life or death over them, and sometimes he made use of this right, especially when a child was born deformed or became an incorrigible thief. He sees to the marriage of his daughters. He may exchange them for other women, or he may give them in marriage to a creditor in order to pay his debts. He may place his sons in the service of a relative or friend. The eldest son seldom remains in his father's household, especially if the father is wealthy or a naba; the father is too afraid that his son may do away with him, the sooner to come into his inheritance. To give one's son to another man is a convenient way to get rid of the problem of his marriage; it will become the concern of the boy's master.

861 Fathers take little part in the education of their children. Daughters always remain with their mothers until their marriage. Sons help their father as soon as they are old enough to work, but they never 861 receive any advice from him. The Mossi, fathers and mothers alike, do not know how to train their children. Under the pretext that a small child does not know what he is doing, the parents allow him to do as he pleases and to carry out his every whim without punishment. Tots who can barely articulate two words utter the coarsest insults to their mother and beat her with their small fists without being punished. The onlookers merely remark that some day he will be a fighter. To chastise him would be to make him cry, and a child's tears are always an embarrassment to be avoided as much as possible. When a child behaves badly, when he fights, steals, seeks out the company of professional thieves or young scamps, when he tells everybody what he has seen and heard and cannot keep a secret, when complaints are made against him, then his father and mother punish him and warn him not to do it again; but they do not prevent wrong doing, and [672] if necessary they will pay his debts, because all members of the family, especially the father, are held liable. The father does not teach his son the cult and the sacrifices, but he does request the boy's help. The child watches his father, and when he grows up, he does as his father did.

857 Boys of twelve or fifteen may fail to return home in the evening for any reason whatever, without warning, and no one worries about it: "He will come soon enough." The young man of twenty builds 884 himself a hut apart from his father's house, in order to have greater 593 freedom and to receive any visitors he may want. Besides his father's field, he cultivates his own piece of land and sells the produce /36/ himself in order to buy clothes. His father feeds him but rarely presents him with gifts of clothing when he is old enough to work for himself. If he weaves cloth during the dry season, he may do with it as he pleases, sell it or make clothing. His father has no say in the matter. It is the father, however, who teaches his sons how to 868 cultivate the soil, how to plait mats, and sometimes how to weave. 593 If the father works at a trade, he teaches it to his sons: the drummers teach their children to beat the drum and to sing the chief's praises; the jewellers and smiths teach their sons their respective professions.

593 The father usually is fond of his children and likes to play with them when they are small. He watches over them while the mother does her household tasks. Parents sincerely lament their children's death, and children that of their siblings. Undoubtedly there are parents with the greatest indifference toward their offspring, but such 593 cases are rare. Less rare are the children who care little for their parents. Nevertheless, old people are usually treated well and with [888] great respect. A son who abandons his old father or mother is held in very poor esteem. A woman prefers to bear daughters who will help her in her daily work, but she hopes for one or two sons with whom she may live when she is old.

857 The girls live with their mother. As soon as they can walk, they 883 follow her to the stream and return with a gourd of water on their [482 heads. As they grow, so does the gourd, and little girls carry water 312] jars weighing from fifteen to twenty kilograms. At home, young girls mill grain to feed the whole family, tend the fire, stir the sauce, wash the dishes and the clothes, sweep, in short, attend to all the household tasks under their mother's guidance. The only task of a woman with two or three half-grown daughters is to supervise their work. Because they are always with their mother, the young girls are usually more responsible and better behaved than the boys. Unfortunately they make up for this later, and more often than not, it is on their own initiative that they go at night to the young men's huts. A young man may give presents to a girl who has already been promised in marriage, and he may do so in front of her mother, who says nothing.

857 Boys help their father as soon as they are strong enough. Younger 883 boys follow their older brothers into the bush as soon as they can and 231 help them herd the sheep and goats. These boys go out every morning, before the sun has dried the dew, to look for new termite nests full of insects which the chicks are fond of eating. During the dry season, they cut down and plait grass to cover the roofs; if they are old enough, they even cut the firewood. When a little older, if their father or the person with whom they live owns a horse, they watch over it, take it to the stream to water it and to wash it, go into the bush to cut grass for it, and clean the stables. During the winter when the grass is green, each of the horses of a rich naba is cared for by three or four children. Some of them cut the grass, others /37/ stuff it almost by force into the horse's mouth, while one little boy drives the flies away with a stick to which a sort of flexible leather sole is attached. The winter season is a fine time for horses, who grow fat and heavy. Unfortunately, the Black does not think of the future and does not foresee how much dry grass will be needed to bridge the dry season; as a result, the horses suffer a great deal from hunger at that time.

857 The young Mossi, like children in our own country, like to play.
524 Babies have bone hatchets on which they chew; little girls have wooden dolls, and on important feast days they hand them out graciously with a curtsy; whoever takes the doll must give the child a few cowries when he returns it. The boys mold horses, saddles, and horsemen in clay and draw figures in the dust with their fingers, just as we at the same age used to make mud pies and draw funny figures in the margins of our spelling books. Of course, all this is done rather crudely, but it shows that human beings are the same and have similar tastes all over the earth.

857 All children like noise, and the Mossi are no exception. When 534 the stalks of millet are still green, they fashion a kind of harmonica with a vibrating tongue made of a piece of millet stem tied with a thread; or they cut a millet stalk in two and hollow it out, leaving a mere slat which vibrates under the repeated blows of a stick. The sound is augmented by a broken gourd that serves as resonator. These are expendable toys which are thrown away the following day when they have dried out, but it is so easy to make more! The children
857 also make straw rings which are usually worn around the wrist as 524 bracelets, but which may also be used in a game. They are placed on the ground before the players who take turns rolling one of the little hoops. If the ring falls on that of another child, the player who propelled it wins the hoop; if it falls at a certain distance, it is won by the opponent; and if it rolls past that distance, the throw must be repeated.

The older boys and the men have more complicated games.
524 They have a kind of checkers; the board is formed by making small holes /in the ground/ by hand, and the pawns are represented by stones. Above all, they have the cowry game, a game of chance,
525 a game of winnings and losses, and like every gamble involving money, a thrilling game. Those who take to it go as far as their European counterparts. They become cheaters, liars, thieves, and indebted. Some have gambled away everything up to their last pair of trousers, their last breechcloth, and have ended up gambling themselves away. This game should be forbidden as strictly as our own games of chance.

535 The game of games, the pastime of pastimes, that which is resorted to on every occasion, happy or sad, and sometimes without any special reason, is the dance. If the Mossi happened to know her, the muse Terpsichore would have no more devoted followers. No man, woman, or child can remain still when dance music fills the air.

535 /38/ To tell the truth, however, the Mossi do not know how to dance. With the exception of the circumcision dance and of some villages of dancers where people devote themselves methodically to choreography, the greater part of the population do not know how to dance gracefully. This does not prevent them, one and all, from indulging in the dance. Men and women dance separately. The most common male dance consists of a rapid motion of the upper part of the body, from left to right and right to left; the feet do not leave the ground, and they are moved forward very slowly. The arms are bent up to shoulder height and away from the body; the fingers are extended, and arms and hands shake along with the rest of the body. When performed by professionals, who are sometimes found in the villages, this motion is rather graceful but lacks breadth of style.
[292] The dancers wear a cardboard headpiece, its crest adorned with a band of cowries and its sides often embellished with bits of mirror fragments, feathers, and all sorts of small, gaudy articles. The upper part of the body is covered with a tight, wide-meshed garment, decorated at the waist with pompons or cowries and small bells. The dancer wears
[301] on the middle finger a piece of iron which looks like a large clam shell, and on his thumb an iron ring. He strikes one against the other in rhythm. His wrist is often adorned with a bracelet made of several of these iron shells; hanging from them are small strips of the same metal which clang at the slightest motion. Those who do not have a costume deck themselves out in tawdry finery.

The women dance two at a time, each by herself, spinning around and assuming whatever poses they consider most graceful. When they come near one another, they turn around and strike their backs together; then one of the two withdraws, and another takes her place. All the while, the women spectators clap their hands in rhythm and sing. Sometimes one of them utters a shrill cry to arouse the dancers or to laud one who has proved unusually graceful and lithe.

[831] There are no special dances for the dead, and Mossi dances apparently do not have the obscenity of some Negro dances.

857 But to return to the children. It may be stated, as a general rule, that children can do as they please as long as they help out with everyday tasks, as long as the son helps his father and the daughter her mother. Happily there are exceptions to this, and some parents watch their children quite closely, but these are exceptions. Boys
593 prefer their mother to their father, because the latter must often

535
292

Mossi Dancers.

Mossi Dancers.

593 reprimand them, while the mother's role, here as elsewhere, is to indulge her children.

595 The children of different wives are quite fond of one another and often exchange help. When the father dies, the eldest son make no distinction among his brothers and helps them all as best he can. Polygamy seems to present no drawbacks in this respect.

When a man has several wives, his first wife (porkyema) is mistress of the household rather than his mother. All the other wives are on an equal footing, even the slaves, excepting, of course, those for whom the husband has a special preference. As the number of wives increases, so does the authority of the first wife, who wants /39/ her husband to have as many wives as possible. Each wife has a separate hut where she lives with her children, and this avoids many a quarrel. The husband goes to the hut of the woman he desires, or he has her come to his own hut. When a man works in his field, all his wives and children must help him, because he feeds them all and gives them a daily millet ration; it is, accordingly, only fair that all should take part in agricultural work within the limits of their capacity.

593 443 421 Provided that a woman remain at her husband's disposal and help him in the fields, she is free to do as she pleases. She goes to market to sell the grain, the spices for sauce, and the thread to weave cloth, but the husband sells the fabric strips and the raw cotton. During the winter each woman may have her own field to cultivate with her children, and the harvest belongs wholly to her. The husband has no say in the matter. If the woman spins cotton, she sells it at the market or even to her husband; if she brews beer, she offers one jar to her husband, but if he entertains friends and wants additional jars, he must pay cash for them. It is not unusual for a woman to refuse her husband credit, for who knows when he would pay?

593 574 A woman may visit her relatives with the permission of her husband, who sets a return date. The woman rarely comes back on the date set, and the husband goes to fetch her himself, or he sends one of his friends with a piece of salt or a small gift. A woman especially likes to visit her relatives when she is pregnant or shortly after the baby's birth. She knows that she will be well cared for and especially that she will enjoy complete freedom. As a result, it is not unusual for a woman to leave her husband for several months and to return only after considerable coaxing. Most quarrels between one Mossi and [578] another derive from their wives and from their debts; yet it may not be said, as a general rule, that women are unhappy or ill treated.

843 A woman's role is to bear children. When she knows that she is pregnant, she no longer consents to come to her husband, but she is careful not to inform him of her state; if she told him, the child would die. If her parents happen to pass away during her pregnancy, she does not go into mourning and does not attend the funeral. If she is newly wed and has not yet borne children, one of the other wives of her husband, or, if there are none, the husband's sister, comes at night to sprinkle the husband and wife with water. The young wife will henceforth call this woman her husband, prepare millet mush for her, and heat the water in which she washes. When the pregnancy begins to show, one of the wife's female relatives consults the sorcerer [782] to find out which sacrifice should be offered so that all will go well, but the husband is not informed of this consultation. Sometimes the sacrifice is repeated when the birth draws near. When the first baby 851 is born, the husband sends a child to his wife's relatives with a rooster or a hen depending on the newborn's sex. The child tosses the bird into the yard without saying a word and runs away; everybody understands.

847 /40/ A child born deformed, lame, or blind is done away with; 845 it is simply drowned without further ado if considered incurable. In 732 olden times, twins were often drowned also because their birth entails 761 difficulties for the family, who must offer special sacrifices; some- 753 times only one of them was done away with. If they are spared and die a natural death, the mother wears a small bell at her ankle until the anniversary of the death (koure). If the mother happens to die or the father becomes ill, the sorcerer need only say so and the children are put to death, because they are said to have caused the illness or death of their parents. A baby who could barely walk was once brought by relatives to the Koupéla Fathers. He had been born on a Friday and his mother had died; that was sufficient to call for his sacrifice. His relatives tried unsuccessfully to poison him; they exposed him for three days in the bush, and the child did not die. As a last resort they brought him to the missionaries, who hastened to shelter him. Children recognized as insane are abandoned in the bush where they die of hunger.

732 It is only fair to add, however, that these barbarous practices 845 reminiscent of Sparta are not invariably followed. Several lame and incurably ill children are carefully tended by their parents, and some twins born prior to the French occupation are alive and in good health.

2:Mangin--49a M-5 (ca. 1910) 1921 FA28 Mossi FA28

293
142
291
304
[301]

Tattooed Mossi Women.

Tattooed Mossi Youth.

852 Three days after the birth of a male child, or four days in the case
553 of a daughter, the father and mother invite the relatives to come and rejoice over the new addition to the family. On that day the baby's forehead is shaved in a circle, and he is given a name. The husband's sisters or his other wives choose a name for the first child, and the father himself chooses the names of the others.

551 The name is derived from an event which preceded, attended, or followed the birth. If the mother ever happened to kill a chicken, even by mistake, even in her childhood, her first child is called by the generic name for chickens (noara), or else he will die. If the father or mother have seen two snakes in the same spot, the child will bear the name Ganda. If several previous children died, the newborn takes the name Yéwaya, "he has come." If several reasons for specific names concur, for instance, if he should be named Noara, Ganda, Yéwaya, he is called Ywawa, "one with many names." A child often bears the name of an older sibling with the addition of the adjective Bila, "little, younger." Thus, if the older child is called Tibo, the younger one is called Tibila (Tibo Bila, "the little Tibo fetish"). In other words, names are not given haphazardly. Some names are rather pretty: Zuényendé, "he is shy"; Nongabamba, "she loves them (her parents)"; Danimmamyé, "forget me not." Sometimes the name merely indicates the child's sex: Daore, "male"; Poko, "female"; or else the festive occasion or day of the week when the child was born.

304 Just as names are not given haphazardly, tattooings do not vary without reason. The native tattooing consists basically of three parallel lines on each side of the face, running vertically across the cheek from the temples to the chin, with a fourth line leading from the nose perpendicularly to the other three and crossing the cheek horizontal hatching between them, like a ladder; this is the mark of free men and of chiefs' sons. The three vertical lines may also be interrupted halfway down the cheek by three horizontal stripes, and then continue down to the chin; this is the mark of a child who was born
[844] among the Peul because his older siblings had died and the sorcerer had decreed that his mother should give birth among the Peul. This [197] tattooing is characteristic of a distinct Mossi tribe, which lives among them but speaks a different language—the Marensé, better known as Marka. If a child has a Yarga /Yarse/ mother or grandmother, he will bear one horizontal stripe on the right cheek in addition to the three vertical lines /on each cheek/; this is the Yarsé tattooing.

304 Children are tattooed at any age, sometimes when already grown. Many Yarsé do not tattoo their children, and the Mossi themselves do not seem especially to hold to this barbarous custom which sometimes disfigures an individual. The tattooing is done with a razor, and powdered charcoal is put into the wounds. In order to soften the skin and to alleviate the pain, the whole face is covered with oil until the wounds are healed, leaving more or less accentuated scars depending on the success of the operation. Some natives are completely disfigured by thick excrescences of flesh as the result of a faulty operation.

Sorcerers sometimes have the strange idea of prescribing tattoo marks on the belly or lower back of children whose older siblings have [789] died. For instance, a woman had lost three of her children. She consulted a sorcerer when the fourth was born, and he declared with the greatest seriousness that the child would die if his buttocks were not marked with stripes and his belly with tattooings radiating from the navel. The child was marked accordingly, and he lived! Young girls nearly always tattoo their belly with lines extending radially from the navel; many adorn their chest above the bosom with small stripes running perpendicular to the breasts and parallel between them. The tattooing patterns we have described here are, of course, only the most widespread types, because there is a great variety of markings.

304 Just as there is no set age for tattooing, there is none for circum-
852 cision. Children of seven or eight are circumcised along with youths and even mature men. Circumcision does not seem to be a Mossi [184] custom, for it is not a general practice. In Ouagadougou province most children are circumcised, while in Koupéla province most of them are not. However, the custom is gaining yearly in Koupéla. The head of the family often has himself circumcised because he is ill, and his children follow suit. Thus circumcision is introduced into the family, for once the father has undergone the operation, his 304 children do likewise. Sometimes the mother is a Yarga, thus from a 563 Moslem family, and her children are circumcised, a new gain for the 852 practice. It also happens that children are drawn to it through sheer curiosity and the enticing assurances of the Peul and Yarsé, who are usually Moslems and thus circumcised, and who spread propaganda all around them. Excision, on the other hand, is universal.

/42/ When there is a group to be circumcised, their relatives set a date with the Peul who is to perform the operation. At dawn of that

304 day the one in charge of the circumcision, a wealthy Yarga or Mossi
563 who has the means to feed several of the people to be circumcised,
852 chooses a tree to serve as shelter for the operation. Rain need not be taken into account, for circumcision is always performed during the dry season from December to April, when agricultural work is at a [778] standstill. The tree is surrounded with straw mats, forming the téoo or sacred enclosure which no one who is not circumcised may come near without running the risk of being insulted and often beaten; if he should dare to step inside it, he would be stricken by the greatest misfortunes. The Peul sets out a flat stone, sacrifices a chicken in order to make the spirit of the tree benevolent toward those to be circumcised, and operates on the boys one by one. Drums are played throughout the operation to drown the cries of the victims.

852 For three days afterwards the newly circumcised boys do nothing. They rest and tend their wounds. They remain isolated from the rest
[535] of the community for two or three months, sometimes even longer. Judging by the dances which close the festivities, dancing must be their primary concern during that period of time. They also thresh the millet of those who invite them to do so, but no uncircumcised person may join them, no uninitiated individual may come near them.
[198] They do not speak the Mossi language at this time, but a special tongue of which they learn enough to serve them in their everyday needs. Woe to those who forget and use their native tongue; they are [551] beaten with switches made of a kind of willow. Even their names are changed, and no one may call them by their Mossi names.

The circumcised boys are divided in two groups, one "male" and one "female." One of the groups bears the name of the hyena (kwara in their language) and the other is called masalro, whose French equivalent we do not know. The hyena group must strain their wits to snatch food, even from the other circumcised boys, who are kept constantly on the alert. The other group makes improper gestures during the dance.

852 The circumcised boys are covered with gray dust to alter their 293 appearance completely. A tail is fastened to the back of their breech-
776 cloth, hanging to the ground. It is made of plaited cotton thread and 481 ends in a pompon. Its function is to drive off the kikirsi spirits, who apparently do not like circumcised persons. The boys walk bent over and leaning on sticks like old men. This is done to test their obedience and to see if they listen carefully to what they are told.

292

Mossi Dancer with Cowrie Headdress.

852 When they go into the bush, either to cut down straw or for any other reason, they sing invocations to the spirits of the paths and of the trees in order to propitiate them, to draw their blessing, and to avert illness. They chase everyone in their path, approach the villages, and, if they can, seize a few chickens, goats, or sheep as an extra tidbit. This is the custom, and they even steal the animals of their relatives in this fashion. At night they come up near the huts and beat everyone they meet; they take everything they can find, and no one would think of resisting them. /43/ In any case, during that time, people take good care of their children and send them plenty of food. To have a child undergoing circumcision is a burden to a family.

852 563 869 When the circumcised group consists largely of Moslems, Yarsé or Peul, the one in charge of the circumcision assembles them during rest periods, in the evening, or sometimes in the middle of the night, in order to instruct them. There does not seem to be any esoteric doctrine, and the instructions deal with the glorification of ancestors who were also circumcised there. Only those who are circumcised can enter heaven and have many children; those who are not will taste no happiness in the other life and will remain sterile. The group is also taught that God sits under a black tree on a sheep skin, that he eats from a dish and drinks from a bottle. It is all very childish. They are also told that they must not disclose to anyone, under penalty of death or at least of serious illness, what they have seen and learned during the circumcision period. This is to prevent them from revealing the robberies committed during that time and from discouraging those who should like to undergo the operation; for although it is tempting to eat well, to play a great deal, and especially to wear beautiful clothes, it is also unpleasant to be lashed with willows at the slightest slip, or for not dancing well, for quarreling with or insulting someone, for speaking Mossi, for being slow to go to work.

852 Occasionally, at circumcision time, two sticks are found on the path near the market. They were placed there on purpose, and if one looks to the right and left, he will see two children, all covered with dust and wearing dirty breechcloths. They are newly circumcised boys who are begging, and passersby drop a few cowries to the ground.

852 302 All these ceremonies are soon to end. The clothes are ready, and the children are getting tired and restive. The one in charge of the circumcision decides that the boys are to be shaved, that is, that the circumcision period will end in two weeks. The hair of the circumcised boys is not shaved off completely: strips of hair alternate with

852 shaved strips on top of the head, while the sides are shaved similarly [302] in semi-circular strips. On the seventh day, people who were previously circumcised bring chickens to sacrifice to the spirits of the paths so that all will go well, but the newly circumcised take no part in the proceedings. The children wash, oil themselves, and put on their 852 beautiful clothes. Everything is brand new, the breechcloth, the 292 trousers, the shirt, the blanket, and the headgear. The belt is adorned 301 with a knife in a leather sheath and with a needle case which has at the end a tuft of leather strips with cowries attached to them. They [776] hold a cow's tail, also adorned with cowries, to drive off the scheuyan spirits who dislike little rascals and people who dress too well. Both wrists are adorned with copper bracelets. Needless to say, this flashy new outfit with its cowries that clang like bells lures the eye and bewitches the young boys, who decide to be circumcised at the first opportunity so they too may eat well and wear beautiful clothes.

852 /44/ The circumcised boys continue to walk bent over, leaning on [481] their sticks, but their crude staff is replaced with two sticks decorated with burnt designs and tied together. They no longer wear a tail. They go to greet the chiefs, and they thank those who have given them gifts. They walk to the sound of the large drum, since the bindré is forbidden at circumcision ceremonies, and sing plaintive chants to the spirits. They parade in the marketplace and display their clothes in the villages. They dance before the chiefs, and their dances are very [535] graceful indeed. They dance in unison to the beat of the drum, making the same gestures all together or two by two, varying the figures in accordance with the beat. After seven days the festivities are over, and they all return to their families and take up everyday life as though nothing had happened.

We shall now study this everyday life.

/45/ BOOK III. DAILY WORK AND TRADES

1 Chapter 1. Occupations of a Mossi

221 The Mossi are essentially cultivators, and it may be said that no
241 Mossi who works at a trade will fail to cultivate his fields when the 221 rains come, laying aside any other task no matter what his profession

241 may be. The Mossi year is divided as described below, and year follows year without bringing any changes in this monotonous existence.

The rainy season from May to October is the time of the hard labor of cultivation, and all Mossi devote themselves fully to the task. Men, women, and children are always in the fields. They cut down the [805] thorn bushes at the beginning of May, as soon as the Pleiades appear on the horizon and the baobabs begin to burgeon. This is spring (sigu). For this work they use a small hatchet, a few centimeters wide, with a short, easily grasped handle, and a forked stick to fold back the thorny branches so they may more conveniently be cut at the base. The branches are piled in heaps and burned one evening as soon as they are dry. When the first copious rains fall, usually in June, the natives immediately sow the small white millet used to make sarabo, the staple of the aboriginal diet, and the large red millet or sorghum from which millet beer is made.

Sowing is regarded as one of the most laborious tasks, because it forces the sower to remain bent so as not to lose sight of the stretch already covered. The natives sow with an old worn-out hoe, with which they strike the ground twice in order to make a small hole. The grain is carried in a gourd held by a string to the left hand; this leaves the fingers free to seize a few grains which are dropped into the hole. A little soil is then replaced by the hoe. When the rain has soaked the ground more thoroughly and the millet has begun to grow, maize is sowed around the huts.

Following the first weeding of the fields, beans are sowed among the shoots of small millet, and cotton among those of large red millet or near the watercourses. The ground is then prepared to sow rice, peanuts, and native peas. Meanwhile the fields must be hoed incessantly to remove the weeds that would smother the young millet shoots. If the rain is too abundant at the end of June, the cultivators are often overwhelmed with work, and they complain that it has become impossible to keep their fields clean. Gombo (okra) and all the condiments for making sauce, peppers, tomatoes, etc., are planted around the maize fields, near the huts, along with /46/ native hemp and all sorts of gourd plants. In favorable soil, hence only in certain areas, fabirama, manioc, and yams are cultivated in a special manner.

221 Those who raise chicks take them along to the fields in an oblong 235 cage of plaited straw or willow. When they get to the spot where

221 they will be working, they open the door of the cage and the mother
235 hen comes out. She is tied to the basket with a string, and the chicks run around her. If their master finds a good termite nest, he takes it to his little charges and breaks it in two. In the evening he puts the hen and chicks back into the basket and carries it home suspended from his shoulder.

[805] The heavy rains fall in July and August. This is summer (seoro).
221 Whenever the ground is not too soggy, everybody runs to the fields at 241 dawn and works until nightfall. One or two women stay home to pre-
476 pare food for the laborers, whose strength must be maintained for all this hard work. No one may rest. Only the sick and the helpless old people stay home, and even they are put to work, looking after the babies. This is the time when wealthy people call friends to their aid. The owner of a vast field has every member of the village notified — especially the young men, those who own some obligation toward him, those who have an eye on his daughters — that on a certain date he will be weeding his field, and at dawn of that day everyone gathers and labors while the drums spur them on. On another occasion, this man in turn will help those who have worked for him. This practice of mutual aid is very advantageous because a field overgrown with weeds is cleaned in a single day, but it becomes onerous when people must appeal to their neighbors several times in the course of a season.

221 The heavy rains stop in August or September, the maize is ripe, 241 and feasting begins. Roasted corn ears are a prized tidbit, especially 262 when the kernels are still tender. There is one kind of maize, faintly sweet, which when sautéed in butter recalls our garden peas. Everywhere the children and even the elders feast on maize; everywhere people offer a visitor a few ears of maize, which are often roasted on the spot. When the maize harvest is completed, maize gruel, which recalls the famous Italian polenta, advantageously replaces millet mush and brings a pleasant change to the daily fare, especially since gombo is ripening and adds variety to the sauce as well. Bellies fill out, faces glow with health, and as a very natural sequence, hearts are flooded with joy. The end of the dry season may have been difficult because millet was running low; the winter tasks may have been laborious; but now everyone makes up for it. The harvested maize is replaced in the fields by tobacco; its seedlings were prepared as the harvest drew near.

[805] At the end of September or beginning of October, the large red millet is ripe. This is autumn (houpéla). Maize is now too tough

241
343
251

482

Above: Water Carriers.
Below: Youths Returning from the Bush with Bundles of Straw.

Above: Threshing Millet.
Below: Winnowing Millet. Millet Granaries in the Background.

22/ 24/ 262 forroasting and is replaced with green millet, eaten raw after being beaten with a small stick to remove the chaff. /47/ Certain kinds of large millet are sweet and not too unpleasant to eat in this fashion. Horses grow fat because millet is their staple food and they may eat 221 as much as they please. Men also profit greatly, because beer brewed 241 from new millet tastes much better than that made from old millet, 273 and when millet abounds, drink is never wanting. At this time rice is harvested, threshed on the threshing floors, and laid aside carefully for festive occasions.

221 At the end of October the rains have stopped almost completely. 241 The beans are gathered and laid out in the fields on millet stalks or on séko held up from the ground by forked stakes to keep the termites from eating them, or the beans may be brought home and tossed on the séko which serve as shelters in front of the soukala. Now is the time to harvest the small millet, which is dry. The millet stalks are severed at ground level by the men and laid out with all heads oriented in the same direction to facilitate the work of the women, who cut off the heads and gather them in heaps. When the millet has been cut, the women fill their baskets. The largest containers are used for the occasion, and each woman uses her ingenuity to pile the millet as high as possible over her basket, using the longest ears or bean stems as supports, like the Zouaves who vie for the tallest pack. Should the line of women on their way back to the village meet a man known for his generosity, they sing, cry out, and surround him until he throws them a few handfuls of cowries to buy a jar of beer.

221 As they near the threshing floor their cries get louder, and each 241 woman comes to the granary and hands her basket to the man who 251 stands there. These granaries are very crudely built and consist basi- 343 cally of sticks driven into the ground in a circle to hold up a séko which is wrapped around them. The floor is made up of another séko, usually resting on the ground but sometimes raised on stones or forked sticks to avoid termites. This is where the millet is placed prior to threshing. The granaries stand around the threshing floor of beaten earth, which is located 100 or 200 meters from the village, some- 674 times even farther. Thieves are no important threat. They may cut down millet when it stands in the bush, but they rarely steal millet already stored. Only goats, sheep, and guinea hens are to be feared, and they are kept away from the granaries by thorns.

221 As soon as these heavier tasks are over, everyone digs up peanuts 241 and peas. The whole family gathers under the shade of a tree, and 221 the men bring bunches of peanuts. While nibbling on the green nuts 241 and talking, they all separate the pods from the leaves. The latter are carefully set aside along with the bean leaves. They make ex-[231] cellent fodder for the horses during the dry season, when the sun has burned off all the grass in the bush.

221 By November harvesting is completed. The sun has already dried 241 out the grass, and the time has come to cut straw for séko and roofing.
356 /48/ This task is usually reserved for children and servants (dakonré).
857 The head of the household tells each one of them the number of straw bundles he is to cut, and every morning the children set off in groups, a sickle on their shoulders. They look for straw on the banks of the watercourses and return when the sun begins to scorch. This marks the end of the working day, and there is nothing to do now but rest.
The dry season is indeed a time of rest, and from November to May there are no pressing tasks.

[805] It gets cold in December. This is winter (sapolro). The natives
221 gather at dawn around fires of millet stalks, twigs, or straw; anything
241 combustible serves. Every newcomer must contribute an armful; it
[372] is the price of admission to a seat near the fire. At the end of December 47 all the straw for roofing has been stored, and then the small millet is threshed. Every inhabitant of the village has the use of the threshing floor in turn. He notifies his friends and acquaintances as he did when he weeded his field. The millet beer is ready, and on the previous day the women have covered the area with cow dung diluted in water to harden the floor. At dawn the friends arrive, and the millet is removed from the granary and spread out on the floor. This is done with the help of millet stalks tied together in bundles and dragged along the ground with ropes while a man bears down upon them.
The flail is merely a stick cut in the bush, a tree branch shaped in such a way that the part which is held in the hand is rather thin and flexible, while the part which is used for threshing is quite thick and forms an obtuse angle with the part in the hand. The boys line up in a row, with the tots at either end; the drummers stand before or behind them; and the flails fall with the beat, crushing the ears of millet and separating the very dry grain from the stalks. All the while the old men sit in the shade of the granaries, talking, smoking, and sewing clothes. When the threshers get to the end of the floor, they retrace their steps and rest, while the old men gather with straw brooms the grain which has been scattered outside the pile.

221 After a few hours when the millet has been sufficiently threshed, 241 the emptied and broken husks are swept to the side. The grain is 476 gathered in a heap, and a strong fellow tosses it into the air with a 788 wooden shovel to separate the chaff from the good grain, which is put in a heap. When all the grain has thus been winnowed, it is surrounded with a ring of ashes to protect it against evil spirits. Then one of the threshers, who is not a member of the family, puts some millet in a gourd and sprinkles it with water. He proceeds to throw it by the handful onto the millet pile, saying: "So-and-So fears rain," mentioning the name of the owner of the harvest and the name of every member of his family. He ends by saying: "When we are finished weeding, let the drought come. When we are finished planting, let the heavy rains come." If the owner of a horse is present, he receives a gourd of millet for his mount. Each of the elders also takes some for his chicken. If this ceremony is not carried out, the millet may not be used as seed the following year.

221 /49/ The women come with their baskets; a man takes one of the 251 brooms and sinks it into the millet heap in various places; then the [482] men fill the baskets and help the women place them on their heads. At the house the millet is unloaded into granaries made of clay mixed with finely cut straw. These granaries have the shape of large jars 1.50 meters high; they usually rest on large stones, and they are [343] smoked out beforehand to get rid of termites. They are closed with a lid of the same material and covered with a small thatch roof as a protection against rain, for they usually stand in the open air in the inner courtyard. Millet beer is brought and drunk on the spot while the millet is being winnowed. Sometimes the festivities end with dancing, and then everyone goes home, to begin again another day. The month of January goes by in this fashion.

221 February, March, and April are vacation months, months for hunting and fishing.

224 Actually no Mossi is a hunter, yet all Mossi are hunters to some 411 degree. Since the French occupation, men armed with very primitive flint guns are sometimes seen on the fringes of the heavy bush which borders the Volta and contains large game. These flint guns are so crude that they frequently burst and wound the man who recklessly 224 loaded it with too much powder. These natives know the bush thoroughly and are very helpful to the adventurers who wish to hunt koba, buffalo, elephant, leopard, or even lion, although the latter is to the 224 Mossi as to us the king of beasts, the master of the bush (wé' naba), and they attack it only if it has killed a man.

These hunters make their own powder with ground charcoal and 224 saltpeter extracted from earth soaked with urine. This earth is washed 389 carefully, and a residue of saltpeter crystals is left when the liquid evaporates. Usually no sulphur is added because it is too costly. This powder burns well, and when made carefully it is quite effective. The hunters keep it in small gourds or ram horns; they only make a little at a time. Hard pebbles are used as bullets.

224 The natives know how to disguise themselves skillfully, and they only shoot at very close range when the animal is not moving. They often lie in wait for hours on end, sometimes for the whole night. They know the habits of the animals and the water holes where they come to drink, and they build small huts with branches or dig holes where they hid under foliage. Others more ingeniously build a vast funnel-shaped trap, its open base sometimes one or even two kilometers long; the sides of equal length consist of thorn fences, and the tip of the funnel, which is located near a thick tree, leaves barely enough space for the animal to pass through. The hunter takes his position up in the tree with bow and arrows and settles comfortably because he may have to wait a long time. Unsuspecting animals follow the thorn fence and come to the tree where they are killed. The hunters manage to fell some handsome game in this fashion, even elephants, in spite of their very primitive weapons.

/50/ Professional hunters, those who always have adventures to relate and who say like those of Tarascon that they never miss a shot, such true hunters are rare, but those who hunt as a pastime are as numerous as the Mossi themselves. A Mossi never goes out without [411 a stick. When asked why he does so, he answers that it is to kill 752] snakes, which — alas! — take so many victims, and to drive off dogs; and then, "I might find a hare or some other animal in the bush, and [23] what would I kill it with if I didn't have a stick?" Many of them have dogs which are truly not very ferocious, but they are poorly fed and preserve all their agility. A Mossi on his way to the fields or walking from one village to another always keeps his ears and eyes open; he is on the lookout for meat! Since he does not have many ideas, he is seldom absorbed in his thoughts or absent-minded.

The season[1] we are now studying is the time of large-scale hunting. Several villages get together and set a date and a meeting place.

1 [i.e. February-April. - Analyst]

224 Each village goes there in a group, burning the bush and driving on the game. If the plan is carried out properly, the animals are eventually enclosed within a circle of fire behind which stand the natives, some on horseback and armed with spears, others on foot with their dogs and equipped merely with sticks or sometimes with bows and arrows. The bows are of medium size and made of hard wood. The 411 string is usually made from a rattan stem or a millet stalk. Arrows 224 are made of the tough and light stems of tall reeds; they are not barbed, but the tip is made of iron and shaped like a harpoon, with two and sometimes three pairs of teeth. The leather quiver hangs from the shoulder.

224 The panic-stricken hares, deer, antelope of various kinds, guinea hens, and partridges run all around the fiery circle, and those who manage to cross this first obstacle are felled by the blows of the hunters. These hunts are sometimes quite fruitful, and buffalo and koba are 224 occasionally caught. Unfortunately, every animal killed in the bush 661 belongs by right to the naba, who searches the hunters' bags and takes what he pleases. If he learns that a lucky hunter has killed an antelope and failed to bring it, he summons him to his presence, reproves him harshly for his lack of consideration, and thrashes him soundly. It must nevertheless be said that such cases are constantly growing rarer, and now the natives flatly refuse to yield their catch.

224 Often no game is caught because one of the villages has failed to appear and the animals have fled through the unguarded opening. In short, these hunting parties are mostly a pastime and entertainment. The hunters who bring back a catch are few, owing to the large number of men who participate. It is true that when they set out for the hunt they all hope they will be lucky. They all are thirsty, for at this time of year the sun is very hot and it is better to hunt in the middle of the day when the game lies down in the bushes and cannot run very far. These hunting parties dwindle year by year. The cultivated fields are more extensive, and the game has withdrawn deeper into the bush. Also, the natives find it more difficult to reaching an agreement for large parties of beaters; /51/ they prefer to hunt in small groups, far from the chiefs' sight, so that nothing will be taken from them.

226 In addition to hunting, fishing is the great pastime at this time of year.* Professional fishermen are as rare as professional hunters. Of course, those who live on the banks of streams usually know how to [48] swim, especially when they live near those watercourses which are most difficult to ford.

*[i.e., February-April. - Analyst]

226 most difficult to ford. Each watercourse, or more exactly each pond, [423 belongs to a naba and bears a special name, so no river has the same name
558] name all along its course. During the dry season the lelek /bed?/ of the watercourses is usually dry. Here and there are to be found ponds of varying depth where the cattle is watered. These ponds are where the natives fish. They wait until the water level subsides to knee height, for otherwise fishing would be too difficult.

226 The fishing gear is as crude as the hunting gear. There is a small 227 net held open by three sticks forming a triangle and crossed by a tough stick that is held in the hand, quite similar to the spoon-nets we use to gather shrimp. Above all a sort of wicker trap is used, conical in shape, open at the base and closed at the tip with a movable lid. This trap sometimes contains a second one made of very flexible sticks that are attached to the base of the first one. The two traps thus have a common base, but the second one opens within the first. The fish enters the trap and is held by the sticks of the smaller cone, which close in as the fish tries to get out. The fisherman removes the trap from the water or leaves it sunk in the mud, opens the lid, plunges in his hand and removes the fish, which is confined and easy to seize. The fisherman then puts it in a net or in a leather bag.

226 On a set date the owner of the pond offers sacrifices to the crocodiles
825 so they will not bite anybody. This is why the naba of Koupéla, before he fishes in his pond, must sacrifice a black goat and a chicken. No one may kill a crocodile while fishing, or the naba will die before the year is over. Was not a crocodile killed in his father's pond on [789] the very year when he died? Before they go fishing, the natives make charms by burning roots and tree bark inside their traps. If the charm is good, the fish will rush headlong into the net or trap.

226 The fishermen gather at one end of the pond. They stand in a row across the water and move slowly forward while dipping their nets and traps over and over again. All the fish caught are put in bags or tossed to friends who stand on the shore, but, as during the hunt, the naba takes an ample share and seizes the finest specimens. The ponds hold mostly silurids anyway, which like mud and retain its odor and taste even when cooked. The Volta rivers, on the other hand, contain more abundant and more varied fish. /52/ When the natives have crossed and recrossed the pond several times, only small fry remain, and everyone goes home glad to have a little fish for the sauce and especially to have escaped the teeth of the crocodiles, for in spite of 226 the sacrifices, these amphibians have no scruples about biting a foot or leg. However, the crocodiles in these ponds are seldom large enough to sever a limb.

In those places where the water is somewhat shallow and flows for some period of time, the bank dwellers make dams of tree branches intertwined with millet stalks. These are placed diagonally to the current and lead to a sort of funnel closed with a net. The fish follow the dam, enter the funnel, and get caught in the meshes of the net.

221 The major ceremonies also take place at this time of year.[1] This 356 is when the Day of the Dead is celebrated, when the koure is held. When the first gust of wind unroofs a few huts or at least indicates those that need a new covering, everyone sets down to the task. The thatch cut in December is used for the purpose. Before the soukala, [283] children and youths knot blades of straw with strings of hemp and [857] plait seko. They also go into the bush to cut down branches and to gather bark which serves to bind the branches together. When everything is ready, the head of the household calls his people and gathers a few neighbors. The roof is made and laid within a short morning. This task must be repeated every two years or so, and it is men's work entirely. At the beginning of winter, the villages take on a smart 221 new look. This is when people think of building a new hut, the man who has acquired a new wife, the child who has grown into a young man and who can no longer live with his mother, the man whose wealth has increased by a few head of cattle or a horse. The women fetch water, the children knead the mortar with their feet and carry to the mason the mud clods prepared by the old men. These tasks are not laborious, and they are accomplished with merrymaking.

Now the thorn bushes have grown back, the rains will soon fall again, and already a few gusts of wind herald the coming winter. The Pleiades have appeared on the horizon, and the baobabs are budding once more. It is necessary to take up the hoe again and to sow; this is a good thing, because the millet is running low in the granaries. The working cycle we have described must begin anew. And year follows year without bringing any major changes in the life of the common man.

1 [i.e., February-April. -Analyst]

Chapter 2. Industries and Trading

443 Such are the everyday tasks of all Mossi. To these must be added visits to the marketplace all through the year, and during the dry season work performed by certain guilds or certain individuals, in short, the various industries practiced by the Mossi.

443 571 /53/ Every self-respecting Mossi, be it man or woman, child or elder, must go to market at least once in a while, were it only to look...and to be looked at if he can don some handsome new clothes. To see the natives in their best finery, one must go to the markets which follow important feast days. At those times the marketplace is thronged with Yarsé and Peul as well as Mossi, and they all vie with each other in the richness and originality of their costumes. At other times people go to market on business, except for a few individuals who go there only to be admired even on ordinary days.

443 Every community of any importance holds a market every three days. Everything is arranged so the markets will not be too far distant from each other, and the villages near to one another will not hold markets on the same day to avoid competition. A native may, if he wishes, spend all his time at market, sometimes in one village, sometimes in another, for a market is always being held not far from where he lives. All the markets are not of equal importance. Some villages of no great consequence in themselves are located at the [554] crossroads of several routes followed by caravans and become important trading centers. The following Mossi markets are said to be especially popular: Pwitenga, Kaya, Rakay, Bélousa, Mané, Téma, Yako, and La.

Formerly these markets were slave-trading centers. Nowadays they deal mostly in horses, cattle, donkeys, sheep, goats, salt, kola nuts, native or European fabrics, and petty imported wares, such as matches, glass trinkets, handkerchiefs, basins, dishes, perfumes, and even firecrackers. Every important article has a section of its own. Butchers have theirs, and so have the traders in salt, fabrics, and kola nuts. All the millet beer is sold in one place, the sauce condiments and grain in another. The most important transactions, however, are carried on outside the marketplace, in the huts that travellers who intend to stay for awhile have hastily built in the Haoussa or Yarga quarter and sometimes among the Mossi. This is

342

482
286

443

Above: Inside a Soukala. Above: The Occupants of a Soukala.
Middle: Load-bearers. Middle: Weaver.
Below: Marketplace.

443 why only a native who is used to the transactions and who frequents the market regularly would be able to estimate the amount of business carried out on the marketplace itself and in its neighborhood; he would also have to take into account the off season, which exists here as in any other trading center. (1)

435
443

1. I shall list below, for what they are worth, the approximate prices of some goods; they apply to a year of average yield and were recorded shortly after the harvest. Prices increase rapidly as harvest time recedes into the past, and during famine years there is no set price.

Millet, 0.02 franc a kilogram; rice, 0.10 franc a kilogram; fabirama, 0.05 franc a kilogram; karite butter, 0.50 franc a kilogram; milk butter, 1.50 francs a kilogram; peanuts, 0.07 franc a kilogram; peanut oil, 0.50 franc a liter; one jar of ordinary millet beer, containing about six to eight liters, 0.20 franc; one jar of strong millet beer (tōsé), containing about six to eight liters, 0.40 franc; hydromel (bēsé), 0.15 franc a liter; chicken, 0.40 franc; average sheep, 3.50 francs for a ram, 4 francs for a ewe; large sheep, 8 to 10 francs; donkey, 25 to 30 francs; horse, 150 francs; a head of small cattle (no hump), 50 francs; zebu, 70 francs; goat skin, 0.30 franc; sheep skin, 0.50 franc; cowhide, 1 franc; salt bars, from 1.50 to 2 francs a kilogram; kola nuts, from 0.03 to 0.10 franc a piece; one hoe, 0.50 franc; clothes: strip of white cloth, 0.05 franc, about 0.60 franc a cubit; white blanket, 2 francs; indigo blanket, 3 francs; striped blanket, 4 francs; shirt, medium size, 2.50 francs.

443 /54/ These large markets are in the minority. In the village markets the transactions are carried out between natives who know each other, and they deal almost exclusively in native goods: millet, 443 rice, beans, karite butter, roasted peanuts sold in little heaps for one centime, raw peanuts, and all the spices for the sauce. Yarsé or Haoussa girls walk from group to group with small basins full of kola nuts, and chiefs and rich men buy one or two nuts which they usually share with their followers. Foreign traders sit under shelters of foliage or millet stalks and sell a few pearls, salt or copper bars, henna or blue dye, while bald-headed vultures hovering above the butchers point out their location to everyone. The meat on sale consists of a goat or sheep, sometimes a beef found dead in the bush or more rarely one slaughtered especially for the occasion. Some people bring chicks and occasionally a hen. This is about all that is to be found.

443 To these comestibles drink must be added. The women who sell
273 millet beer occupy a whole section of the market, and this section is not the least frequented nor the quietest spot. While butchers may be located by watching the vultures, it is possible to spot the tavern-keepers merely by cocking one's ears. Their presence is revealed by the cries, the beating of drums, the hubbub inevitably connected with a crowd slightly the worse for drink. The Mossi undoubtedly drink a lot of millet beer, but the beverage sold at the marketplace does not easily go to the head. The beer that is boiled again (tēsé /sic/) is far more dangerous with its rather high percentage of alcohol, and hydromel (bésé) is even more so. The latter is made of honey and millet flour boiled in water, to which barm is added to induce fermentation. These two beverages are truly potent, especially when drunk
[579] alternately. This is why brawls occur rather frequently, and sometimes real battles in which people are wounded. These are drunkards' quarrels. Men are indeed the same everywhere, and how many fairs without a drunk or two are to be found in our own country? It must be said, however, that more intoxicated natives are to be met with in Mossi country than in France.

443 The market begins at about ten o'clock and usually closes at two; the important ones open around noon and last until nightfall. When we discuss the industries, we shall mention the other products which are sold there.

283 Weaving is the most widespread industry, the one that all men may [284] practice and all do practice to some extent. The cotton is ginned, 462 and the thread prepared by the women. Delafosse, in his work on the Siéna, has described the process accurately: "When the cotton has been separated from the husk, the seeds are removed with an iron rod

283 which is rolled with both hands on the boll lying on a flat stone; /55/ the seeds are thus driven forward and picked up by hand... The cotton is coiled around a wooden rod which the woman holds in her left hand; with her right hand she grasps and stretches a strand of cotton from the distaff and winds it around the upper tip of a wooden needle, which bears at its lower end a sort of heavy clay ball and which is caused to spin rapidly, like a top, on the bottom of a wooden dish by the motion of the right hand. Extended between the left hand which holds the distaff and the right hand which secures and spins the top, the cotton stretches and becomes thread, which coils around the needle of the top... The thread is later uncoiled, then wound again around a wooden rod to make a thick cylindro-conical ball. When the thread is to be used for weaving, it is stretched around four stakes set in the ground in the shape of a very elongated quadrilateral." (2)

2. Delafosse, Le peuple Siéna /The Siena People/, p. 58.

286 All the young men learn how to weave; it is part of their education. The loom, like the spindle described above, is the kind used by all the Negroes of West Africa, and it is described by Delafosse as follows: "The slat loom is suspended from a piece of wood resting on two forked stakes; the shuttle is canoe-shaped and hollow, the treadled lever permits alternate crossing of the two rows of slats /heddles/; the threads are stretched by means of a large stone resting on the ground in front of the weaver who sits on a crude stool placed behind the trestle which supports the loom (here usually the weaver sits on the ground), so that his feet come to rest on the pedals. This apparatus is usually set up in the shade of the large trees which stand on the village grounds, or else under shelters of foliage built especially for the purpose. The cotton fabric is woven in strips 10 to 15 centimeters wide; several of them are sewn together to reach the width required for breechcloths and garments." (3)

3. Ibid., p. 59.

The fabric strips are not always solid in color. Often the warp consists of threads dyed red or dark blue and mixed with white strands, [531] while the woof is white. Some people know how to make strips with small blue or red checks which are quite attractive. All weavers are 286 not equally skillful, but some of them know how to weave cloth which is fine, tightly woven, and quite strong. Sewn together and cut according to unchanging patterns, these strips are made into breechcloths, trousers, wide shirts, full robes which cover the whole body, and especially men's and women's blankets, white or dark blue, which are an indispensable protection against the cold and which are worn wrapped around the body. Mossi fabrics are quite well-known in neighboring territories, and as we shall see they are an important trade item.

386 It is customary to dye the garments after they are made or the thread before it is woven. The dyer's trade is quite widespread in Mossi country, and there is no important /56/ village without dyers. They get together to dig their wells in the same spot; often choosing a small hillock for the purpose where they sink about ten wells, two or three meters deep, the inner surface baked with a charcoal fire. The dyeing solutions are poured into these wells, and the clothes or thread to be dyed are immersed in the liquid and stirred with sticks that have at the end pieces of wood set in the shape of a cross. Fabrics are left soaking for varying periods of time depending on their bulk, and then they are spread out in the sun to dry. The colors obtained vary from a very dark blue, nearly black, to light blue. Certain clothes are dyed sienna, a color favored by hunters because it is dark. Several washings are needed to remove the strong odor which permeates cloth dyed in this fashion, but each washing removes part of the dye.

285 Everyone knows how to weave, and almost everyone knows how to make basketry. When the grass is full grown, the children have fun making straw hats, some of which are not badly done; others make containers in various patterns by mixing yellow and black straws, and red ones dyed with the leaves of a variety of millet, cultivated in order to obtain the red shade desired for coloring leather; yet others plait simple trays of straw which are used to cover the gourds or to carry meat.

294 Those who are skillful make sturdy hats adorned with leather figures, and this becomes a veritable industry. There are two main kinds of hats: those shaped like pointed cones, and the bell-shaped hats with a wide brim. They are so ample that they can easily be worn over a cap which is sometimes wrapped in a strip of soft fabric. A leather [284] strap with a sliding knot holds the hat in place or permits it to hang down one's back with the cord holding it at the neck. Saponé is the manufacturing center for hats.

285 The art of basketry, however, is exercised primarily to produce woven containers. These serve many purposes and come in all shapes and sizes from large wicker containers used to protect chicks against birds of prey and small wicker baskets for collecting refuse to baskets of plaited grass for carrying millet, rice, and most other goods. Some baskets are made with greater care, decorated with designs made by mixing dyed grasses and thin leather strips and edged with cowries.

[462] Only the men do basketry, and only they work with leather; some 281 of them make leather objects which are almost artistic and very well sewn. Unfortunately the natives do not know how to tan skins properly, and their leather has no strength. The hide is simply stretched out and dried by the sun; sometimes it is briefly immersed in water containing tamarind bark. The hair is removed by pouring hot water onto the skin and then scraping it off with a knife. To make it softer, the skin is moved back and forth over a stake planted in the ground and slightly sharpened at the tip, or it is simply crumpled /57/ between the hands. When it has been softened, it is stretched once more to dry in the sun, held with small wooden pegs driven into the [386] ground. It may be dyed red, green, or black with special herbs.

Some men make knife or saber sheaths; others specialize in the long gaiters which are tied to the belt and worn by every horseman in full regalia; still others make saddle rugs stuffed with kapok or cotton and decorated with designs. They also make the various parts of the harness: the leather strip which runs across the horse's chest, and the 294 large rug which covers its rump. Leather is also used to make all kinds
281 of footgear, from the mere piece of hide held to the feet by leather strips running between the big and second toes and all round the foot, to the Turkish-type slipper and the ornamented boots with spurs attached which are a natural complement to the long gaiters. Some of the shoemakers are truly skillful and could make quite satisfactory shoes if they had lasts and especially if they had better leather.

281 Hide is also used in the manufacture of belts adorned with cowries, pouches, amulets, bags which are sometimes nicely adorned, etc. The designs are usually made as follows: small leather strips of various colors are sewn onto a skin of solid color which serves as a base; more rarely, as in Morocco, the top layer of skin is removed.

The above-mentioned industries are performed exclusively by men, 462 and any male individual may practice them. The preparation of gun powder and tobacco is also male work. The industries listed below, 462 on the other hand, are female prerogatives; every woman knows how to make millet beer, soap, karite butter, and kalro (soumbara) with varying effectiveness.

273 Millet beer is brewed with sprouted millet, which is boiled and reboiled in a volume of water proportionate to the amount of grain; yeast is added to the brew on the last day. The liquid is strained through twigs to remove the residue of millet. The more the beer is boiled, the stronger it is; when hops are added, the beverage recalls our own beer.

388 Soap is made with karite butter to which the ashes of millet stalks are added for potash.

252 Oil is extracted from peanuts, previously roasted and crushed between two stones; the women have no press and therefore lose a considerable amount of oil, but it remains in the residue, which is also sold.

Kalro is made from the beans found in the pods of néré /locust bean tree/. It has a strong and characteristic odor, but it enhances the sauce with a not unpleasant flavor.

463 The pottery, wood, and copper industries are carried out by specialists. This does not mean that only the members of a caste may exercise them, but that an apprenticeship is required which is not undergone by everyone, and that people bequeath to their children the secrets of the trade.

323 /58/ Pottery is chiefly made by women, although the men may 462 also work with clay and actually often make jars (canari), while the women make the large jars which are used in brewing millet beer, small pots in which they cook sarabo and sauce, and shallow dishes which are used to serve food.

323 The molding and firing methods are similar. A shallow pit is dug into the ground, larger or smaller depending on the size desired for the jar. The walls of the hole are pounded smooth. The woman places in this mold the prepared clay, previously kneaded with the feet and any stones removed. The clay is slightly damp, and the pit is dusted with dry earth. The woman spreads the clay with a well-polished granite stone and makes it revolve so that every portion of the clay is worked between the stone and the pit wall. After a while, she obtains the jar she wants in the proper thickness.

When several potters live in the same village, as usually happens, they get together for the firing. The jars are marked and gathered in 323 a hollow. Straw, twigs, or pieces of bark are laid between the jars and even inside them. Then everything is covered with straw and set afire in the evening. The smaller the jar, the more heat is needed. The women fetch their goods the following morning. Some of the jars are cracked; others, insufficiently fired, would be too porous and must be fired again; the rest are gathered and sold at the market.

322 Woodworking is done by men. They use a hatchet to cut down the trees, an adze and a knife to work the lumber. The mortars and pestles used by the women to crush maize, herbs, peanuts, and sauce ingredients are made of wood, and so are the dishes shaped like gourds, the bowls for sarabo, and the tool handles. There are also stools of a rather peculiar shape. Those women who can afford them close their huts with crude wooden doors. All these industries, however, are quite primitive and of no great interest.

326 The iron and copper work is so distinctive that those who practice [564] it could only be specialists. The smiths, in fact, form a separate caste. One is born a smith, but one becomes a jeweller, since this [306] profession is open to everyone. The smiths extract the metal and make iron tools: hoes, hatchets, adzes, and knives. It is said that no layman is allowed to watch when they extract the iron from the ore, and this would explain why the natives do not know how it is done. As I was unable to visit Yatenga, the area where most iron workers are to be found, I am not familiar with the extracting process.

326 /59/ The jewellers occasionally work with iron, but they do so on 306 the sly. They may repair broken tools, sharpen hatchets and arrow tips, and re-use a piece of iron, for instance, make an old hoe into [301] nails, hinges, etc. Their main task, however, is the manufacture of all sorts of bracelets and of all the copper ornaments in a horse's harness: headstall, bit, spurs, stirrups, and the copper plates which hang from the saddle. These plates are a strange ornament which seems peculiar to the Mossi. They may reach 40 centimeters in diameter, and their edge may be as wide as 10 centimeters. The naba and the wealthy horsemen fasten them behind the stirrups, on either [415] side of the saddle, where they hang down the horse's flanks. Servants sometimes use them to drink beer when they have no other containers. To smelt the iron or copper, the Mossi use charcoal which they obtain exactly in the same manner as our /French/ colliers. The fire is kept going with a double bellows made of the skin of goats or sheep and operated by a child. The red-hot iron is hammered with a cylindrical

326 iron bar on an iron stump planted in the ground or on a stone. Copper 306 and zinc are smelted in small clay crucibles, the size of which varies with the desired thickness of the bracelet. The bracelet is first made in wax and coated with well-kneaded clayey earth which acquires the same shape. The wax is then removed with boiling water, and copper is poured into the clay mold. With a crude file the jewelry-maker removes the dross which clings to the metal, polishes the bracelet, and carves designs into it. The most skillful among them make attractive twisted ornaments of iron and red and yellow copper. One Ouagadougou Christian, deft at modeling wax, makes all sorts of objects, such as napkin rings, paper weights, inkwells, figurines, etc., which are not lacking in style.

484 The Mossi have always travelled a little, and they used to go quite regularly to Timbuktu; now, thanks to the French peace, journeys have become increasingly frequent. The European settlers in Tenkodogo, Ouagadougou, Léo, and Koudougou hire the Mossi as house boys and [464] take them to Ségou, sometimes to Kayes, and even to Saint-Louis. These boys, when they return, fill their friends with wonder and arouse their desire to take such great journeys also.

484 The recruitment of Black troops has also fostered this desire to see 464 new lands. Many natives have made the trip to Bandiagara to enlist as riflemen; others went to Kati, and when they found that no further enlistments were being made there, they went on to Saint-Louis.

484 During the dry season the Mossi are more often lured away by trading ventures. In October and November many young men who have managed to secure a sheep or two or a few goats and the wealthier natives who own cattle organize caravans in the hope of selling their livestock at a profit in faraway markets. In former times the Yarsé and Haoussa had a monopoly on trade. Nowadays the Mossi compete [65] with them, for they must find money to pay taxes to the Whites, the 648 famous five-franc piece. /60/ Besides, now the roads are safe. Highway robbers are no longer to be feared, and one no longer has to pay tolls every time he enters the territory of a new chief. From this point of view, and from it alone, the French peace is valued by the natives, although they find it onerous to pay taxes, to build roads and bridges, and to pay customs duties on leaving and re-entering French territory. Is a man ever pleased when something is required of him, even for his greatest good?

491 Now only the watercourses present some difficulty when they are full. The Administration, which does all it can to facilitate trade, 491 builds bridges, but as they are made exclusively with materials found in the country, forked sticks and beams covered with pounded earth, the first swelling of the water carries the whole structure away, and after a heavy rain one must wait for the waters to subside and resort to ferrymen who justifiably charge for their work.

481 The ferrymen proceed as follows. The person who wishes to cross
484 holds on to a thick beam, a gourd, or a simple clay jar, which holds him out of the water; sometimes two large sticks under his arms serve
501 as a life belt. In a few places rafts are available, made of sticks connected with séko and covered with dry grass. The ferryman swims next to him and prevents him from being carried too far by the current. At certain favored fords near the French posts, ferryboats are available.
484 Livestock swim across, and the ferryman holds their muzzles out of the water to prevent them from drowning. These crossings take a long time and add up to considerable expense, and animals are often carried away by the current or snatched by crocodiles. Woe to the man who dispenses with ferrymen, if he is not familiar with the bottom of the river and the strength of the current! He often drowns, and those whose aid he scorned do nothing to help him. On the other hand, if the caravans postpone their departure for too long, the rivers will be dry, the grass burned off, and the animals will die of hunger or thirst, or they will arrive at the markets exhausted and lean and will sell poorly.

These journeys thus entail a number of hazards; in addition, although imported goods sell high, living expenses run equally high, and if a profit is to be made, one cannot grow fat along the way. He will make up for it when he returns to the village.

442 The need for middlemen brings other hazards. Lt. Marc, who was well qualified to discuss the subject because he was twice in command of the Léo Post, described the situation as follows: "The livestock upon arrival is bought by interpreter-brokers, middlemen between the butchers and the meat merchants, to whom the caravaneers are practically forced to resort. These men buy all the kola nuts brought by the forest natives and control the market prices... These interpreter-brokers apparently speculate on livestock in a most curious way. They have scouts who go out to meet the caravans, sometimes two days' march to the north. /61/ These scouts attempt to alarm the cattle owners with tendentious remarks, until they are willing to cede their herds at a low price. Sometimes, at the height of the business season, in January and February, livestock prices may fluctuate by one

342
354
415

343
492

Above: Cooking Sarabo.
Below: Outdoor Kitchen.

Above: Millet Granaries.
Below: Riding an Ox.

442 hundred percent within a few weeks. The Mandé-Dioula vie in eloquence, the Yarsé and Mossi in politeness, the Haoussa in friendliness. In fact, with exclusively native methods, this is a trading center in embryo, a veritable stock exchange." (4)

4. Marc, Au pays des Mossi /In Mossi Country/, p. 173.

484 487 The traders travel in all directions. The roads most commonly followed are those which run from Ouagadougou south to the Gold Coast, to Gambaga, Daboya, Salaga, Kintampo, Sékondi; from Léo through Oua and Salaga; and from Tenkodogo through Bitou to rejoin the Gambaga road. Contact also occurs, though less frequently, with German Togoland and the markets of Sansané-Mango and even Lomé on the coast.

439 These two British and German colonies are supplied with livestock and native fabrics by the Mossi. They completely lack butcher's meat, for the tsetse fly does not permit cattle to survive within the confines of the rain forest. Imported fabrics do not withstand a few washings, so the native fabric strips, although less bright in color, are preferred by the Gourounsi and forest dwellers. They formerly wore only a sheep or goat skin, but they have taken to clothes since the arrival of the Europeans. Their scant clothing does not embarrass them when they are among themselves, but they are ashamed when Europeans see them. The Mossi bring back from their journeys the kola nuts which are the basis of their import trade, but they also bring copper, European goods of all sorts, fabrics usually of inferior quality, matches, perfumes, pearls, sugar, and basins of all shapes and kinds. Trade is very active in the coastal areas, and Lt. Marc writes on the subject as follows: "The Gold Coast administration, which commands a network of posts denser than ours, recorded in 1904 and 1905 about 16,000 beeves and 75,000 sheep or goats coming from Mossi country. Considering that the Mossi also supply in part the Togoland markets and the Boudoukou market, their annual export may be estimated at a minimum of 20,000 beeves and 100,000 sheep. Their kola nut imports amount to at least 500 tons." (5)

5. Marc, op. cit., p. 178.

651 There is proof that trade tends to grow year by year in the ease with 436 which the natives now secure the five-franc piece needed to pay their 457 tax. The Europeans who live among the Mossi, including all the riflemen and circle /an administrative district/ guards, do not put into circulation a quarter of the five-franc pieces which are required each year from the natives. At first the Mossi were taken by surprise and had to give 10, 000 or even 15, 000 cowries to obtain /62/ this famous coin, this charm, which was to free them from all difficulties with the Whites. At the official rate of exchange this coin is worth 5, 000 cowries. Nowadays it is very difficult to find a native willing to give this much for one of the coins. The usual exchange rate is from 3, 500 to 4, 000 cowries; French currency has depreciated. This must mean that the natives find elsewhere, through trading, this indispensable coin. They know that the tax must be paid every year, and instead of waiting until the last minute, as soon as they have accumulated the necessary cowries, they secure the five-franc pieces from those who have fetched them from afar. The coins flow in; the rate of exchange goes down.

439 Nowadays, trading is less active toward the north. Formerly the 567 Mossi supplied Timbuktu, the desert regions, and even Morocco with slaves. The Gourounsi and Bousansé were frequently raided with the sole intent of obtaining slaves. The Mossi even sold each other into slavery, and prior to the French occupation a woman and even more a young girl or boy did not dare venture alone a few hundred meters from the village; they were too afraid that they might not return. It is said that the Mossi even supplied the Constantinople court with eunuchs; and when the great Cardinal Lavigerie was head of the Algerian Arab Orphanage, officers once brought him small children rescued in the desert. They were very young Mossi who had been sold in Saraféré or Timbuktu and whom our officers had found enclosed in bags carried by camels in a caravan halted by our troops. These children were raised in Malta, and they returned to Mossi country where they rendered significant services. Now the establishment of an administrative center in Kaya, near the important market of Salmatenga, will no doubt promote trade in this northern region.

439 Nowadays the trade between Ouagadougou and Tenkodogo on the one hand, and Ouahigouya (in Mossi country), Saraféré, and Timbuktu or Dori (called Gyémaré by the natives) on the other hand, amounts to very little. The Mossi export kola nuts which they have brought 439 from the south, bracelets, and fabric strips, and they import salt and hoes. Often they take only money with them and return with salt bars which sell on the market for one to one and a half, sometimes even two francs, a kilogram. Around Fada N'Gourma (Binge /sic/ to the natives), Say, and Niamey, Karite butter, locust bean flour, and especially kalro pellets are exported, while onions, garlic, and sometimes horses are imported. There is no trade with Dahomey.

484 The natives travel in short stages of 20, 25, or at most 30 kilometers a day. They set out at dawn or whenever the moon sheds sufficient light and stop when the sun becomes too hot. They set out again when the sun dips on the horizon and stop in time to prepare a meal if their wives accompany them, which is rare, or to buy something to eat if they are alone. They spend the night with a friend if [574] they /63/ have one in the locality and lengthen or shorten their day's march if they expect to find an acquaintance in a certain village. The livestock feed as they walk, and donkeys carry the exchange goods and especially the kola nuts on the way back.

482 Nearly all travellers bear part of their load on their head. Since we have come to mention this, let us again quote Delafosse: "Portage has been much slandered in France these past few years. It has been cited as a barbarous custom, a form of slavery which we had supposedly introduced in Africa and imposed on the unfortunate Negroes. This merely proves that the French people like to discuss things of which they know little. The very first geographers and travellers who spoke of the Sudanic Negroes—Herodotus among the Greeks, El Bekri among the Arabs—said that beyond the Sahara, where horses and camels cannot stand the climate, the natives themselves carried burdens on their heads over very long distances." (6) These remarks are strictly true. Abuses on our part lie in forcing the pace and making the natives run with their loads in the hot sun or in exceeding the regulation weight. If reasonable limits are observed, the Blacks accustomed from infancy to the bearing of heavy burdens on their heads—in their country, everything is carried in this fashion—are no more to be pitied than our soldiers burdened on long marches with 482 their pack, their full cartridge pouches, and their gun. This is proved by the fact that it is very easy to find volunteer porters nowadays who [465] agree to carry a box weighing 25 or 30 kilograms for 200 or 400 kilometers, or even farther, for half a franc a day.

6. Delafosse, Le peuple Siéna/ The Siena People/, p. 53.

[492] The fabrics are coiled into huge rolls which hang on either side of the ox or donkey, or, when the man carries them himself, they are folded in baskets from one and a half to two meters long, made of [285] bamboo stems slit lengthwise in two. These baskets are semi-cylindrical in shape and are used to carry kola nuts on the way back. A small pillow is attached to the center of the basket, and when the traveller stops to rest, he looks for a thick tree, leans one tip of the [481] basket on the crotch of two branches and the other tip on the bamboo he uses as a staff. He can thus pick up his load effortlessly when the resting period is over.

484 The traveller always returns to his village at night to avoid those prying persons who would rush out to see what he brought back. The goods are carefully put away, and on the following day the man takes up village life as though he had never left it. It is only gradually, at the evening gatherings, that he relates his adventures. At the first subsequent festivity, however, he dons his new, bright clothes and a red tarboosh, sometimes stockings and shoes, and proudly displays them. Those who have tasted /64/ the life of travel and adventure cannot do without it, and they set out again every year. Some of the independent and carefree young men even live all winter on the [178] profits of their distant journey and no longer cultivate the soil. This is shocking to the elders, who do not understand it at all but are aware that something has changed in their country.

600 Some Europeans have attempted to engage in livestock trading like the natives. One enterprising and courageous European settled in Ouahigouya, and another near Mané; a trading house sent one of its representatives to Ouagadougou, and a Syrian settled there. None of them seems to have succeeded. We are not in their confidence and cannot say just why this happened, but would it not be, at least in part, because a European cannot easily adapt himself to the native way of life? The Blacks manage to make a profit because they do not spend much along the way; they subsist on very little and carry part of the goods themselves instead of hiring porters. Also, the natives 000 help each other. If they are sometimes, indeed too often, fleeced by middlemen—and it would seem that the various European administrations, no matter what their nationality, should prevent such speculations in their own best interests—if the natives are fleeced, a European ignorant of the customs and the language would be fleeced all the more. Who would guard his herds during his absence; who would lead them to far markets if he stayed home? It is difficult to find a native [181] who can be fully trusted. At present, however, trading in livestock is the only possible source of profit in the country.

The forthcoming railroad will soon change trade conditions and promote the interests of the Europeans without undermining those of the natives. This is to be desired, because Mossi country will only come fully into its own when its products can be exported. The natives were too long isolated as a result of their continuous warfare, and the nabas, it must be said, were too inclined to monopolize all the goods, for trade to develop in a significant way. The French peace, by making the roads safe, has already done much for the country; it will achieve even more when the railroad which is now cutting across Mossi country links it on the one hand to the Ivory Coast and on the other hand to the Niger Colony. Trade will then no longer be carried out exclusively with the Germans and the British, and as soon as native products find sure channels of export, the raising of livestock and agriculture itself will be greatly extended. The Mossi are not averse to trade. [181 They actually seem to possess a real knack for it, which until now 439] they have had no opportunity to exercise freely. They have not yet taken full advantage of their transactions, and this is why they seemed to some observers to have no aptitude for trade. They will adapt to it, as they already are.

/65/ Chapter 3. Hygiene, Disease, Death, and Burial

828 Part of life, especially the life of a Black, is spent in sleep, but 774 the slumberer is sometimes disturbed by dreams that are more or less 787 extraordinary. The Mossi attribute dreams to ancestral and other spirits. They also say that the soul leaves the body during sleep and does the things witnessed in the dream. Sorcerers are consulted to find out what caused the dreams and how to cope with the bad omens.

364 For the Mossi, as for all other men, life ends in death, with or without illness. The Blacks do not know how to prevent diseases, and they know very little about fighting them. Hygiene is almost unknown. The huts are poorly aired, the chickens and in general all the animals in the inner courtyard walk everywhere and foul everything. The courtyard is swept often, but the hut of the sheep and goats is located in the midst of the other dwellings; the horse is kept within the soukala [514] itself; and people relieve themselves anywhere, wherever they find a convenient spot. The manure is gathered in a heap, but it is kept next to the huts and gives off a nauseating smell and noxious miasmas, especially at the beginning of the rainy season.

515 The Mossi are not dirty, but they cannot be called clean. Those who dwell in villages abundantly supplied with water at all times are the cleanest. The women, who fetch water every day and thus have an opportunity to wash, are usually cleaner than the men. A Mossi never passes a pond without drinking copiously and washing all over, and this would seem to prove that those who go dirty do so unwillingly; they have no water nearby, and it would be too much trouble to go to the river to bathe. Clothing, especially breechcloths, is often repulsively dirty. This is because washing wears out clothes, and who knows when new ones will be available? No wonder disease has such a hold on this people.

855 165 Child care is quite rudimentary: a few baths; enemas two or three times a day, without which it is said their bowels would not move; and that is all. At the slightest indisposition the sorcerer is consulted, or else the child is left to himself; he will get well or die, and nothing is done about it. As a consequence, child mortality is very high.

758 Those who fall prey to a contagious disease are not isolated. A healthy child lies on the same mat as one with smallpox, a leper drinks from the common gourd unless his lips are covered with sores. People do, however, hesitate to sit where a syphilitic person with sores previously sat. The education of the Mossi in matters of hygiene is wholly yet to be learned.

576 On meeting someone, Mossi politeness requires that an inquiry be made about his health and that of all his relatives. The response invariably is "So-and-So is well," and the other in turn responds, "May God permit his health to wax." It is only after a little conversation that a certain person is said to be ill or to be getting better.

195 It is not said that someone died, but that he ran short of strength, that he passed away, that he left us.

753 /66/ This is because illness is usually attributed to an evil spirit,
761 which must not be irked with complaints. Yet in everyday language it is God who is the cause of everything, of health as well as of death. The sorcerers consulted indicate which spirit must be appeased, to whom sacrifices must be offered; or they state quite frankly that the hour of the sick person has come, that his life is over and he is about to rejoin his ancestors, for it is often the latter who call him and come to fetch him. In the case of old men and especially of old women, death is considered a natural event. An old man has many children who will give him a fine funeral, and it is time for him to make way for his eldest son. If a quarrelsome person falls sick, his illness is often attributed to an evil spell cast by an enemy. When [763] an elder is about to die, those who have caused him offense come to beg his forgiveness and only find peace when they have obtained it, for the old man might return to obtain his revenge. Sudden death is usually ascribed to poison and, alas, this is often the case. Sometimes it is also attributed to an evil spirit, especially in case of accident, fall, snake bite, etc.

755 The instinct of self-preservation is so strong in man that the Mossi
757 although they ascribe a superhuman origin to illness, nevertheless fight it. It is true that all their treatments combine medicinal and superstitious elements to drive off evil spirits, and whatever the remedy, true medicine or amulet, it is always a tim; there is only the one
759 word to designate it. Some of the natives know how to treat certain illnesses, and people come to consult them, often from far away. One has a medicine against snakes, and he makes it in complete secrecy on a certain day; one knows how to treat colds and bronchitis;
[752] another, dysentery; yet another, sores. The bone-setters are often very skillful, and with the mere pressure of their fingers they can set a dislocated joint or a broken leg; then they enclose it between tightly-bound millet stalks as a splint. These doctors prescribe remedies without resorting to sacrifices or witchcraft. Sometimes they live with their patient to care for him, of course for a fee, especially if the person gets well.

751 Smallpox vaccination is performed, but often too late, on individuals who already have the germ. The vaccine is taken from a seriously ill person without any precautionary antiseptic measures. The vaccinated individual is usually made very sick and sometimes dies of 751 it. It is recognized that smallpox does not hit the same place twice (obviously, when it has already killed all those who could be killed), and fear of catching the disease prevents many natives from undergoing the operation. The Administration is rendering great services

744 with its vaccination tours, which will be all the more successful since the experiments carried out by our Fathers some years ago, with tubes of vaccine kindly sent by the Administrator of Ouagadougou, bore excellent results and checked an epidemic which was decimating the population. Smallpox victims are nursed /67/ as carefully as possible.
757 They are laid on a bed of sand which retains heat. When the pocks are ripe, they are punctured with a thorn, and then the patient is rubbed with sand. The eyes are washed with an antiseptic decoction, and the patient gargles frequently with peppered water.

Medicinal herbs, tree leaves, and barks are the basis of all remedies, in the form of infusions or poultices. The study of these medicines would no doubt be of interest to a specialist. But would the natives who hold the secret of their preparation be willing to surrender it?

[572] When a friend is ill, even if he lives far away, the right thing is to 755 visit him, offer him sympathy, and even more appropriately bring him some gifts. The relatives of the sick person consult the sorcerer, for it is necessary to determine the agency that caused the disease. Sorcerers rarely prescribe a medicine. Their role is to point out the part of the body which is afflicted and especially to indicate the spirit who should receive the sacrifice. Another man, who in most cases has nothing to do with witchcraft, knows the medicines. If the patient improves after the prescribed sacrifices have been offered, it means that the sorcerer knows his business well; if not, it means that he has cheated.

758 Every self-respecting sorcerer must prescribe a negative treatment, in the sense of pointing out certain things the patient must not eat. Sometimes goat or chicken flesh is forbidden for the duration of the illness or permanently. Sometimes it is a certain kind of sauce, or millet or bean fritters. On the other hand, since the Mossi eat no eggs, especially not raw, and drink hardly any milk, they sustain the sick with plenty of millet beer and with an unappetizing mush of coarsely ground millet, often mixed with powdered charcoal. Patients have difficulty absorbing such a mixture and occasionally die of 755 starvation. Sometimes the sorcerer also indicates an amulet that 755 must be procured. The leaf used to cover a wound must be held by means of a thin cotton cord with cowries attached at the end, three cowries for a boy, four for a girl. A hemp cord with three or four knots, worn around the neck, wrist, or any other part of the body, prevents swelling of that part and is also a master remedy against hair worms. Sometimes it is not so easy to secure the prescribed amulet, for instance, if it is the beak or claw of a hawk, a deer horn, or certain parts of a buffalo or koba. The poor Mossi goes to great pains to find this indispensable amulet.

763 Do as he may, sooner or later he must die. When an old man feels that his end is near, he calls his family and gives them his last instructions. He talks to his eldest son and tells him where his cattle and caches are to be found, who are his debtors and creditors. Sometimes death comes swiftly without warning, and the old man has no time to talk to his heir; a large part of the fortune is thus lost, because a Mossi in good health never tells anybody, especially not his /68/ children, where his property is, and those to whom he has entrusted it do not return it. Some Peul have made rather nice profits in this fashion.

761 The death of a young man or woman or more especially that of a small child is usually ascribed to an old woman who is said to have 754 eaten the child's soul, and some old women claim to have this secret. [683] The sorcerer points out the guilty woman who is seized and put to death. Every sudden or accidental death is ascribed to an evil spirit, and the funeral ceremonies reflect this.

762 Suicide is extremely rare, but it does occur. Here is one case where we knew the participants. A man quarreled with his wife. The wife, who was stronger than her husband, overwhelmed him in the fight, and the neighbors openly ridiculed him. The following day the husband was found hanging in his hut. A pit was hastily dug [766] in his nearest field, and he was tossed into it naked without further ceremony. Suicide is regarded as a criminal act, and even the corpse is punished for it.

763 Like all human beings, the Mossi fear death. No longer to eat millet mush or to drink dolo seems to them the greatest of misfortunes. Still, when a Mossi sees death approaching, he resigns himself to it and accepts it stoically. He rests his head on the lap of his first wife, and his other wives gather around him. His friends and the village elders sit before the soukala, and all wait silently for hours until the 763 old man passes away. Suddenly, a shrill and lugubrious cry uttered by the first wife pierces the air and announces to everyone that a soul has just left its body and appeared before God. All the women rally to this call, and for a few minutes the most plaintive laments fill the dead man's soukala.

764 767 Silence is soon restored. One of the family members fetches the undertaker, lada, without whom it is impossible to proceed with the burial. Meanwhile, one of the séko which enclose the inner courtyard is torn off to permit the soul to get through and leave the living in peace. An old woman and the dead man's children proceed to lay out the corpse, using only their left hand. The body is washed with warm water and vigorously soaped, then annointed with karite butter. The head is shaved and the hair buried, unless the shaving was done before the dying man breathed his last, in which case the hair is tossed to the wind. When the corpse has been thoroughly washed, the undertaker softens the joints of the neck, arms, and legs so the body will slide more easily into the pit; then he lays out the body in the hut of the first wife if she is still alive, otherwise in the hut of the dead man.

764 The corpse is laid out on a mat, on its side in the position of a sleeping man, with arms and legs folded, and covered with a white blanket. As soon as the body is laid out, lugubrious cries are heard once more, and the men and youths go to dig the pit while the women remain sitting in the courtyard and watch the corpse. Women friends and neighbors prepare food for the family which has been visited by death.

The grave is usually dug in the family field, where the ancestors already rest. The villages have no common graveyards; /69/ each family has its own. Nevertheless, the vicinity of a sacred grove is sometimes used as a cemetery. To be buried away from one's relatives is a great misfortune, and one who dies far from his village strongly desires that his body be returned there; the family always fulfills this last wish if at all possible. Otherwise, the dead person is buried along the road that leads to his village. In order to rest near his ancestors in his last sleep, a native who feels that his strength is ebbing may build his huts in the middle of the bush, at the place where the village of his ancestors used to stand. An old man esteemed and loved by his family is buried in front of the soukala, and this is the rule for nabas.

The undertaker prescribes the shape and size of the grave, but anyone may dig it. Mossi graves consist of a circular pit about 1.50

764 meters in diameter and 0.70 meter in depth. At the bottom of this first hole or against the wall, a second pit is dug, 0.75 meter in diameter. The bottom of the second hole is enlarged to form a sort of chamber, 1.50 to 2 meters in length and 0.75 meter in depth, where the body will be laid. This chamber is plastered with a preparation of néré to make the inner surface very smooth.

Young men spend the whole night at this task. Meanwhile, friends and absent relatives hasten to the house of the deceased as soon as they hear of his death; drummers also come, on the lookout for a few jars of beer and a few cowries. Everyone dances, sings, and makes merry.

764 The children and younger brothers of the deceased wear mourning
765 clothes: an ample apron with a large pocket, adorned with cloth streamers and various designs on a red or blue background; a small gourd as head covering; a circle of ashes on the face, and a cross of ashes on the back. The daughters and sisters of the deceased wear in addition a bunch of leaves in the back and thin white cotton cords around the neck. The eldest son wears a sheep skin across his chest and over the shoulder. At dawn the millet beer comes, the millet 764 mush is ready, and they are taken to the men who dug the grave. The undertaker tosses a little beer onto the soil removed from the pit and mixes it with some millet mush. Then the merry-making comes to a halt, and everyone drinks, eats, and rests for a while. Sometimes the dancing is taken up again around noon. When the sun dips toward the horizon, the burial gets underway.

An opening is made in the hut where the dead man lays, and the corpse is removed through it. The body is laid in front of the hole, and every one of the dead man's children must pass through and step over his father's corpse. The body is then laid on a stretcher, but not tied as yet; it is taken back into the courtyard, through the opening left by the séko which was removed at the moment of death. The eldest son now draws near with a goat or chicken, according to his means, and gives it to the undertaker who offers it to the deceased by shoving it forward three times and saying: "Your son offers you this goat, so it will bear kids for you." The other children may also present offerings, as well as the friends, /70/ and the undertaker offers them all to the deceased in the same manner. In some localities, the animals thus presented are taken home by the undertaker, who kills [184] and eats them, and no sacrifice is made on the spot; elsewhere the victims are killed near the corpse.

764 When the last chicken has been offered, the body is wrapped in a very pliant mat and bound tightly to the stretcher. The funeral procession gets underway. The women and children walk ahead of the body, and the friends and village people follow with the drummers. If the deceased was an important person, horsemen join the procession and guns bark. If the deceased was the head of the household, the procession winds around the soukala three times. Women, who are never heads of a household, are not granted this honor. Then the procession goes toward the grave in a roundabout way, passing by the favorite spots of the deceased: an old woman, for instance, is taken to the place from which she used to fetch water and to the marketplace where she went to sell grain. The drummers bang away, everyone shrieks, sings, and exchanges insults so coarse that no one was willing to repeat them to me. The procession comes to a halt three times if the deceased was an old woman, twice if it was an old man, and the noise rises to a new pitch.

When the procession reaches the grave, everyone stops for the last time and becomes silent. The stretcher is lowered, and the relatives utter a subdued and melancholy chant: "May the chief of hatred (the being who killed the deceased) depart!" The body is laid out near the pit. One of the undertakers, who alone may bury someone who died of illness, stands in the first hole, and another waits in the funeral chamber to receive the body. The cords which bind the corpse to the stretcher are cut, and the mat removed. Those undertakers who are not occupied at the moment stretch blankets around the pit to hide the body from the onlookers. The man in the first hole seizes the corpse and passes it on through the opening of the funeral chamber to the second undertaker, who takes it in his arms, lays it on its side on a mat with the head toward the south and facing east in the case of a man, west in the case of a woman, with the arms and legs folded.

As soon as the corpse has vanished, the blankets are removed, and the eldest son steps forward. He offers the dead man a mourning [801] apron, in the pocket of which he has placed 444 cowries in the case of a woman, 333 in the case of a man, or even 4, 444 or 3, 333, according to his means, and the undertaker presents them to the deceased, saying that his eldest son is offering him cowries to buy drinking water (to be translated as beer). He also offers clothing: for a man, two pairs of trousers, two shirts, two blankets, and a cap, if he wishes to do things lavishly; and blankets in the case of a woman, some to 764 be worn, others for carrying jars or to take to market. A woman is also offered a gourd to cook sauce, along with pepper, spices of all sorts, and salt. In addition, she is given the spindle that she used to spin cotton, but first its stem is broken; in fact, everything which is offered to the dead is previously damaged or torn. Wealthy friends also present clothes, and the others toss cowries to the dead. The undertakers carefully cover the smaller hole with blankets to prevent the cowries /71/ from falling into the pit. Every once in a while they allow a few to slide down, but they keep the greater part to themselves. When everyone has tossed in his offering, the undertakers take one, two, or several pieces of clothing; this is their share, and the practice is sanctioned by custom. They also take a few handfuls of cowries from the mourning apron, and someone hastens to count them. All eyes are anxiously focussed on the person who counts them, [80] 787 for either a man or a woman will die soon, depending on whether the number of cowries comes nearer to 333 or to 444.

Finally the undertakers close up the pit. If the deceased was an old woman, the smaller opening is plugged with one of the large jars in which she prepared millet beer; if a man, it is covered with a small jar or sometimes, especially if the opening is larger, with sticks laid as close together as possible. The corpse is thus completely isolated in its funeral chamber. The larger hole is then filled up with the soil removed from the pit. A jar and an earthen sauce pot are placed on top in the case of a woman, an earthen pot and a large stone in the case of a man.

Everyone withdraws to drink, eat, and rest. There is no dancing that night, but they make up for it on the following day and even on the day after that, if the wealth of the deceased permits it. On the second day after the funeral in the case of an old man, on the third day for an old woman, the children and younger brothers of the deceased shave their heads, go to thank those who have helped them, and remove their mourning clothes. There will be no further preoccupation with the deceased until the anniversary festivities or kouré.

[184] Such are the ceremonies which usually attend the death and burial of a married man or woman, those who have children. We say "usually," for all these complex ceremonies may be curtailed and modified to a greater or lesser extent, depending on the region and the customs peculiar to one family or another.

766 The death of a naba, as we mentioned earlier, is carefully concealed; the more powerful he was, the more careful the concealment.
579 This is done out of fear of the disturbances which would be created by those who aspire to his succession, or by scoundrels who might take advantage of the absence of authority to indulge in every kind of robbery. At the death of the Moro Naba his province was sacked by armed bands, and no one dared to go out unarmed. On the day following the death of Moro Naba Sigri, we had to fetch millet from a village located a few kilometers from Ouagadougou. All the bearers were armed with bows, arrows, and spears. They made an interesting picture in the moonlight.

766 In spite of all their amulets and all their sacrifices, nabas die just like their subjects, and when this happens, his relatives hastily dig a pit in the entrance hut of the soukala and lay the corpse there without any ceremonies. Those wishing to see the naba will be told that he is unwell. The naba of Koupéla is especially favored in this respect. One of the huts in his soukala, standing near the entrance, is set aside for his burial. A pit has been dug within the hut, and every /72/ day the caretaker comes to pour dolo into the hole. This caretaker must not have a wife, and if he happens to have one before his appointment to this post, the naba takes her for himself. On the other hand, the caretaker eats the same food as the naba and drinks the same millet beer. Needless to say, this job is not in great demand. The [761] naba may not enter the hut, and when the roof is in need of repair, the drummers are sent for, and the naba must flee; woe to him if he should hear the sound of the drums, for he would die within the year. When the naba of Koupéla dies, his hands and feet are immediately pierced with big thorns so that he may not return; should he venture to seize one of his people after his death, the thorns would cause him such pain that he would immediately let go of his prey. The corpse is tossed into the pit to fall as it may. The Mossi, full of respect for their chiefs when they are alive, make up for it when they are dead.

Young unmarried men or girls are buried with a previously deceased old woman of the family, so that someone will take care of them in the other life. Their death is regarded as a true misfortune and mourned accordingly. There are no dances or ceremonies. The father, mother, and younger siblings shave their heads on the second or third day after the burial.

[775] A small child is buried by the path. He will soon return in the person of the first child borne by his mother after his death.

766 Suicides are buried like our dogs; here, all dogs are eaten. Lepers [761] are buried at night without festivities. Accidental death, whether [262] from a fall, snake bite, or any other cause, is attributed to an evil spirit who must not be irked by granting funerary honors to its victim, or else it would return and kill another member of the family. This is why those who die of an accident are buried without ceremonies and without undertakers. Their heads are not shaved, because God has called them with their hair on, as the Mossi say. A pit is dug, they 769 are buried, and that is all. They have no one to represent them; to the anniversary of their death, the koure, they have no kourita.

Every Mossi who dies of illness, be it man, woman, child, or naba, survives in the person of the kourita. In the case of a married man, the kourita or koutoarsa (who imitates the deceased) is a woman of the dead person's family, usually one of the wives of one of his younger brothers, someone who bears a certain resemblance to the deceased. She is chosen by the family, and sometimes designated by the dying person. She wears the clothes of the deceased, his shirt, his blanket, his hat, his shoes, his bracelets, and his rings; she wears his belt and knives, walks with his staff, his hoe, his dore, and bears his spear, blade pointing toward the ground. She walks like the person she represents. She must imitate him in every way and keep his presence alive in the household. If the deceased was usually accompanied by a /73/ child bearing his satchel, the kourita is followed by the same child bearing the same satchel, but turned inside out. If the deceased was a leper and had no fingers, she pretends not to have any; if he liked to laugh, she laughs; if he was peevish and quarreled with everyone, she maintains a constant state of anger. The children of the deceased call her their father; the wives call her their husband and prepare her millet mush. If the dead man was a naba, she is called naba; if he was not, she is called by the name of the deceased.

769 She acts in this manner until the day of koure. On that day she 428 shaves her head like the other members of the family, and her role ends there. She retains the name kourita, however, and on the day when the inheritance is distributed, she receives a garment in exchange for the clothes of the deceased. If the heir is generous, if the inheritance allows it, she is given some livestock, sometimes a child. It is said that the kourita dies sooner than if she had not played this role, because the ancestral spirits will come and fetch her. For this reason, the position is not in great demand.

769 In addition to this kourita, if the deceased was head of the household, his oldest daughter, or in her absence, his granddaughter, [184] occasionally plays a role and is also called kourita, but this custom is less widespread. Her mourning clothes are embellished with thin cords of red straw (bini) around the neck and wrists and above the elbow and at the ankles, 13 for a man and 14 for a woman. Around her head she wears cotton threads (pana) which hang down her back like a long tail, ending in a pompon. The first kourita, previously mentioned, sometimes wears these badges also. This second kourita actually has only one task, namely, to plant large millet where her father's huts stood. When the millet is ripe, she sets it aside to use for preparing millet beer on the day of the kouré. Sometimes her position is held for three years, and she cannot shave during this time. To offset this, it is she who brews the beer for the Day of the Dead (basra). At the end of three years, she shaves and takes up her usual way of life. No such kourita is provided for an old woman, since she was not the head of a household.

A mother is kourita for a child who dies before he marries. She wears at her ankle a thin cotton cord to which she adds a knot daily [801] for the duration of mourning, 33 days for a boy, 44 days for a girl.

The Moro Naba has a kourita like other Mossi, but on the day of the kouré a young boy of his family is appointed to represent him for life.
This kourita adopts the name of the dead naba, and all through the dry season he goes from canton to canton, as the true Moro Naba could not do in his lifetime. Everywhere he is greeted and entertained with great honors, he receives many gifts, and his men loot what they can. One place only is closed to him, Ouagadougou, the residence of his successor. If they were to meet, one of them would die within the year. At present there are among the Mossi two kourita of Moro Nabas: that of Naba Sanem, who welcomed Binger, and that of Naba
Sigri, enthroned as a result of Voulet's conquest and deceased in 1905.
Naba Wobro, deposed by our troops, has no kourita because he was [643] no longer Moro Naba when he died; he had failed tradition by leaving Ouagadougou and thereby renounced his rights as a sovereign.

/74/ The first funeral is a temporary expedient; the human body decomposes quickly, and the burial has to be held before all the friends and relatives can be assembled. Also, death comes by surprise; there are not enough cowries, the animals have not been gathered in sufficient numbers, and the deceased must be granted the honors due his rank, he must be offered numerous victims. These are the reasons

769 for the koure, which for lack of a better term we have called an anniversary, although the festivities may be held a few days after the burial if everything is ready.

769 The koure is always celebrated on Sunday. The kourita, the eldest 767 son, or the head of the family first sets a date, but this is not the real date. A few days later he discloses the true day to everyone. Relatives and friends gather on Saturday for a gala family dinner of meat, salt, beer, and sarabo. Sunday at daybreak the women wail, weep, and shriek. At dawn the members of the deceased person's family shave their heads, mark themselves with stripes of ashes, and don mourning clothes, exactly as they did on the day of the death. Around noon, each of the relatives and friends brings an animal as an offering to the deceased. The undertaker (lada) presents it. First he takes the sheep given by the eldest son and stands before the door of the hut in which the body was laid after death. Three times he offers the sheep by making it move forward and back, while saying: "Your son gives you a sheep. Take it and eat it with your whole family." Then he seizes the sheep and holds its jaws shut to prevent it from bleating. Helpers drag the sheep out of the inner courtyard and slit its throat. An old woman comes to catch the blood in a gourd. The meat is cooked separately, while the blood mixed with millet flour is cooked with the viscera, liver, lungs, and some salt. This is the semdle, of which all members of the family must partake. This is one of the customs to which the Mossi are most attached. While the oldest son's sheep is butchered and prepared, each of the children presents his victim to the undertaker, who offers it to the deceased as before. Then comes the turn of other relatives and friends.

When all the animals have been offered, the undertaker takes some beer from a jar which has stood in the sun and empties a gourdful onto the grave. The rest of the jar is his. The remainder of the day 769 is devoted to the slaughter of all the victims, which vary in number according to the wealth and fame of the deceased, to cooking them, eating them, and drinking. In the evening, one of the dead man's daughters takes a gourd full of water, places it on her head without a pad, and walks three times around her father's soukala, shrieking and weeping. All those present follow her and blend their wails with hers. She returns to the inner courtyard and pours the water from her gourd into the pot where the millet mush is cooking. If the head of the household had a dog, the animal is now killed and eaten. The whole night is spent in endless dances and games.

769 On Monday millet beer is prepared for Wednesday, and the dances and games continue, as they do on Tuesday. On this day all the wives of the dead man vanish, because they must not witness the ceremony of pounding the grave that will take place on the following day.

/75/ On Wednesday morning the whole family goes to the grave
769 with paddles, accompanied by drummers and the undertaker. The 767 women have brought water, and everyone pounds the earth over the grave, on top of which an earthen pot is left in the case of a woman, a stone in the case of a man. When the grave has been thoroughly pounded, the undertaker kills a chicken on the stone or pot and says: "Take the chicken from the grave, eat it with your family, and leave your children in peace." Then he takes a gourd of beer and pours it over the grave. The chicken is roasted and eaten, and the jar of beer is drunk on the spot. Everyone returns to the house of the deceased, and the games and dances are taken up with renewed vigor.

769 On Thursday the whole family goes to market and thanks the friends who have assisted at the festivities and who have helped them.

The funeral ceremonies are now over, and there will be no further ado about the deceased except once a year on the Day of the Dead.

Young men or girls who die childless also have a kouré, usually on the same day as an old man or woman who died previously. If no one in the family has recently died, the children's kouré is carried out without ceremonies. The father, mother, and younger siblings shave and build a small hut which represents the hut of the deceased, and this is where the chickens or sometimes a goat are offered to him. Millet beer, of course, is distributed to the relatives and friends who are present, but there is no dancing and no pounding of the grave.

Ostensibly the death of a naba is not known, and the poor man is 766 buried without ceremony. When his heirs have gathered all that is needed to give their father a funeral worthy of him, they have the news of his death spread everywhere on a Saturday morning. A dummy built with the dead man's clothes is laid in the hut of his first wife or in his own hut, and all the ceremonies are carried out Saturday night as they would be for any other important burial. The dummy is carried like a corpse; the soil covering the pit is disturbed slightly, and the clothes are buried there. On the following day, Sunday, all 769 the kouré ceremonies are held, and their solemnity is proportional to the naba's power.

Thus everyone has his kouré, with the exception of nursing children, who will soon return, and of suicides.

428 When the head of a household dies, he leaves an inheritance of varying magnitude. No one touches it until the day of kouré. As soon as the festivities are over, the eldest son summons the head of the family and all his uncles, brothers, and sisters. The partition of the property must be carried out. Theoretically, the whole inheritance, all the women, cattle, and cowries, belongs to the eldest son if he is married [429] or of marriageable age. If he is too young, one of the younger brothers of the deceased must act as his guardian, administer the property, and transfer it to his nephew when he comes of age. Of course, the uncle squanders his ward's property. If the deceased leaves no male heirs, the inheritance devolves to his eldest daughter. If he has no children, /76/ his younger brother, or if there is none, the son of his oldest brother, inherits the property. The oldest brother himself never inherits, except in the case of a naba; in such a case, if there is no other heir, the oldest brother comes into the fortune.

428 587 Although in theory the oldest son is the absolute master of all his father's property, in reality he must share part of it. If he has younger brothers of marriageable age, he gives them one of his father's wives. Every brother who inherits a wife must shave her head. If she refuses to have this done, it means that she does not want this new husband. 428 If the heir's brothers are too young, he gives them some livestock, cattle, sheep, goats. If the inheritance is sufficient to allow it, the uncles also get their share. No one may force the eldest son to share the property. He may state point blank that he intends to keep everything, but this will cause him difficulties and create enemies, especially if his father has squandered a nephew's fortune. Upon his uncle's death, a nephew defrauded of his father's property reminds his cousin of the matter and requests indemnities, which are usually granted in the form of wives or livestock.

428 592 The new heir becomes head of the household in his turn and often inhabits his father's soukala; sometimes he builds himself another one. He is now his own master, subject only to the family head, while his unmarried sisters and younger brothers come under his jurisdiction. He has inherited the property, but he has not inherited the power. If his father was a naba and he wishes to succeed him, he must now solicit the position from the higher naba who is empowered to grant it.

596 Such is the family life of the Mossi. To summarize: marked submission to nabas and family heads, marked freedom toward those who are not in a position of authority. The wives live side by side

596 under the supervision of the husband's first wife; the daughters are never their own masters at any age and thus live in semi-slavery. The children do not spend much time together. They undoubtedly have affection for each other and show it at times, and their parents love them, but there does not exist among them that bond, that family spirit which only Christianity can bring them.

/77/ BOOK IV. RELIGIOUS LIFE

Chapter 1. Beliefs and Ethics

000 We have studied so far the external manifestations of Mossi life: the political structure and its hierarchy, the family structure and all its derivatives, marriage, birth, life, and death. We must now take a further step and carry our investigation to a more intimate level, to analyze the deepest and most persistent feelings and attitudes of these people. It is very difficult to understand one individual and to grasp the motives for his actions in everyday life; it is all the more difficult to do so in the case of a people, especially when this people does not practice self-analysis and when no writings exist to reflect its soul, which must be detected in its most spontaneous manifestations, in the most commonplace conversations. We would, however, know almost nothing about the Mossi if we did not know their ideas about God, the world, and ancestral and other spirits, as well as the relationships they have established with this invisible world. Religious life plays a very important role in the life of any people. Would it be an exaggeration to state that the significance of its role increases with the primitiveness of the people and their resulting tendency to attribute all they cannot explain to preternatural intervention?

124 The Mossi do not like to broach these subjects with foreigners, especially with Whites, whose beliefs they know to be so different from theirs. Not only are they afraid to offend the spirits by revealing their secrets, but they fear the derisive smile. One must be careful not to laugh at their ideas, no matter how childish they may seem to us. To laugh at them is the surest way of hurting their feelings and of making them hopelessly secretive. In any case, is not sincere belief worthy of some respect, even if this respect is mixed with a certain amount of pity?

124 The problem is aggravated by the fact that the Mossi possess no religious theories and are not in the habit of discussing their beliefs. They are bewildered by the slightest "Why," the most elementary "how is it so." To fulfill the needs of our European minds, therefore, it proved necessary to put a little order and clarity into the ideas we gleaned here and there. In this area especially we have avoided as much as possible any tendency to systematize, and we can say that there is nothing of our own in the two chapters that follow. We have listened to the natives, elicited explanations, asked questions, and made note of the answers. We shall now transcribe the results. Of course the answers did not always agree, and we /78/ were forced to make choices on the basis of those testimonies which appeared most worthy of trust. The disagreements were on matters of detail only, and on the whole the statements persistently agreed on the most important points. In any case, whenever a serious doubt arises, we shall be careful to point it out.

776 576 How could Lt. Marc ever write, "We do not believe that the Mossi have the concept of a single God and Creator"? (1) The idea of God is everywhere to be found among this people. The merest wish, the simplest greeting, includes the name of God. When someone is going away, the person who is leaving and those who are staying hold the following exchange: "May God be with me," says the one who goes; "May God see you home! May God cause you to return! May God move your legs!" answer those who remain.

1. Marc, Au pays des Mossi /In Mossi Country/, p. 158.

Persons who receive gifts tell their benefactor: "May God keep you! May God cause you to remain a long time (on this earth)! May God reward you! May God repay you!"

If a friend is seen wearing a new garment, this occasions another greeting: "May God allow you to wear it out before you discard it!"

If he is eating, he is told: "May God cause you to profit by it!"

If he comes to announce the birth of an heir: "God grant that you may suspend him from your shoulder!" /Tr., Mossi children from age [854] two or thereabouts are often carried astraddle the hip and holding on to the shoulder./

If he is leaving to return on the same day: "May God grant us the pleasure of talking to each other!"

776 At the end of the day, the Mossi greet each other as follows: "May 576 God grant you a tommorrow!" To which they must reply: "May God give you a good morrow!"

On festive days those who meet tell each other: "May God lead you to the next year! May God allow you to see a new year!"

God gives health, maintains it, and restores it to the sick:

"May God give you health!" they wish each other, "May God increase your health! May God make you happy!"

Those who are in danger, or ill, are told:

"May God keep you from misfortune! May God restore your health! May God come with health and a cooling breeze!"

When death has struck, sympathy is offered to the family as follows:

"May God hinder the day (of death)!"

An arriving horseman is told: "May God help you dismount!" And to the man who has just lost a horse: "May God restore your tethering post!" (For only those who own a horse have a tethering post.)

When asked, "Who gives power to the medicines and to the amulets?"
776 a Mossi invariably replies that it is God.

God knows everything and is called upon as a witness: "By God!" If unjustly accused, the Mossi calls upon God: "God sees inside me, /79/ and He knows that there is nothing there!" And if someone does not know the name for something, he adds immediately, "But God knows it."

God disposes of everything, and the Mossi often say among themselves:

"If God grants me the day after tomorrow, I shall come"; "he was about to fall, but God came to his aid"; "we start talking in the morning and request God's protection."

God is everywhere, and it is impossible to hide from Him. God preserves us, and one naba who bore no trace of Islamism once told me: "We are in God's hand; we are God's sheep, and He watches over us as my son watches over my own sheep." It sounds like an echo of the Gospels: "I am the good shepherd." It would be easy to furnish other examples. God is superior to all spirits. He created them and He sends them to man, but He did not make them evil. Nevertheless, God may help us obtain revenge from our enemies, and His sacred name often recurs in curses: "May God suspend from your neck the bag of poverty! May God destroy you! May He destroy him completely! May God burn him in the fire!" (2) Every 776 2. We owe this list of formulas to the kindness of Fr. Thueux, the European who undoubtedly knows the Mossi language most intimately. May we express here our hearty thanks.

sacrifice includes a curse against enemies.

Beyond these wishes, however, no prayer is addressed to God
776 directly; no sacrifice is offered to Him without mention of spirits.
782 Yet, as we shall see in the following chapter, the invocations of the sacrificial formula are addressed mostly to God, and when the sacrifice is over all those who have participated in it greet the sacrificer with these words: "May God accept your sacrifice; may God receive it!"

But who is this God? Is he one or many? Has he a body, or is he 776 spirit? Where does he dwell? So many questions which a Mossi has never asked himself and which leave him momentarily bewildered. "Is God one or many?" "I don't know" is the usual answer. If one insists, he says that God is one. But a difficulty arises: "Why then, in sacrifices, do you invoke God-king male and God-king female?" Again: "I don't know; this is what our fathers said."

Does God have a body? Yes, assuredly, for only a highly practiced 776 intelligence can conceive of a pure spirit. But what is this body like?
821 "I don't know." Where is God? "Everywhere." But does he occupy a special place? "God is the sun."

Do they identify God with the sun? It is difficult for us to establish 776 a settled opinion on the subject. They do seem to grant the identifi-
782 cation, and in the course of sacrifices—after all, their sacrificial 821 formulas must fit their concept of divinity—they offer God water for his rising and pour it to the east, water for his retiring and pour it to the west. In a quarrel the weaker party says: "God is my witness that I have not harmed you; God will pay you back in kind," and points toward the sun. Sacrifices are never /80/ offered in the middle of the night; but then they are not made in the middle of the day either, and they may be offered in the evening, when the sun has dipped below the horizon. The names for God and for the sun are 776 different. Wendé is the proper name for God, Wennam indicates 821 God's power (Wende nam). These words have no plural and thus indicate a belief in God's oneness. The sun is called Winniga, or 776 Wintoro at noon when it scorches the earth (Winniga toro). It must be 821 added, however, that sometimes the sun is called Na /Naba/ Wendé, "God-king." At night God is supposed to retire into his hut, since the sun is no longer visible, and yet he continues to be everywhere. "If you commit an offense during the night, God knows about it." The Mossi are likely to say when the sun stands at the zenith, "It is God who makes the sun scorch us today." Thus they do seem, in practice, to make a distinction between God and the sun. The sun is God's dwelling, but it is not God. But what inconsistency in all this!

Natural phenomena are sometimes attributed to God. Lightning kills those who have done evil, it kills livestock wrongly obtained through fraud or theft, and it is sent in punishment by God ... unless it is sent by an enemy. Amulets and fetishes derive their power from 776 God, as already mentioned, and the same applies to medicinal remedies. Illness is usually attributed to an evil spirit who must be [753] appeased, but sometimes it is also attributed to God. The Mossi do not seem to grant a soul to inanimate objects, but only to animate beings: plants, animals, men. Yet, as a rule, inexplicable or abnormal phenomena are attributed to spirits dwelling in inanimate objects.

There are three kinds of spirits: the tisé (plural of tiga, "tree"), who dwell exclusively in trees; the kikirsi (plural of kikiriga), or spirits proper; and the tangamma (plural of tangandé), the protective spirits of the villages who dwell in sacred groves.

The tisé reside preferably in those trees which stand near the huts, but some of them also dwell in the bush. They have a special liking for the tamarind tree and bastard mahogany, but they are not at all fond of the doubalé, which shelters bats. At night they leave their dwelling and go into the huts. Their bodies are human in form, but invisible to the common run of mankind. They are much taller and fatter than men, and they are black and walk with their feet up in the air and their heads down to the ground.

At night they wander about, and their presence is betrayed by a 776 darkening of the doorway; they are so fat that they blot out the light.
753 Woe to the man who has no water in his soukala, who has saved no millet beer! The tiga who comes and finds nothing causes pimples to grow all over the man's body; this is the illness characteristic of the tisé. He is fortunate if he gets away with so little, for the tisé can afflict him with many other diseases or even kill him. If the tiga manages to touch someone, the place touched will swell; if someone

776 makes noise in the bush under certain leafy trees, his cheeks will swell
753 out. The tisé talk, even during the day. It is their voices which are heard when the wind stirs the leaves. We had /81/ papaw seeds planted all around our dwelling. They had sprouted and grown well; the fruit was already ripening. One morning, no papaw trees were left in [824] Koupéla! The naba had decreed that these were talking trees, that they would cause illness to those who had them in their soukala ... and the papaws had been cut down!

776 Fortunately, it is possible to protect oneself against the tisé. First,
782 those trees which shelter them may be felled, and the spirits will move elsewhere. Some very beautiful trees vanish thus from the villages. The tisé may also be appeased with sacrifices. Does this result in tree cult, dendrolatry? Indeed not! The Mossi clearly make the distinction between the tree and the spirit that inhabits it, and they sacrifice to the spirit. Sometimes also, a tree was planted on the [769] grave of the elder who founded the village, and sacrifices are made to the ancestral spirit at the foot of the tree. Finally, there are fetishes more powerful than the tisé. It is enough to know which roots and barks the tisé do not like, to steep them in water, and to place the pot at the door of the hut. When a tiga sees this fetish, he invariably runs away. Some Peul are said to have the power to distinguish between those trees where spirits dwell and those where they do not, and to kill the former trees merely by rubbing them with butter! This must be done in a special way.

776 The kikirsi are imps, red or black all over, and only a few centi-
754 meters high. Their body has the same shape as ours, but it is much nimbler and more tenuous—something ethereal and impalpable that only the sorcerers can discern. The latter call them with a low whistle or by shaking a peculiarly shaped gourd that looks like a handle
[534] ending in a sphere. This gourd is dried without being opened, and the seeds gather in the sphere. The sorcerer makes noise by shaking this instrument, and the kikirsi flock to him singing.

776 There are good and evil kikirsi, and the good ones only do evil when forced to do so; for instance, when someone puts pepper in their sauce. They abhor pepper but they love honey, and every good housewife who wishes to preserve her honey covers it carefully with pepper to prevent the kikirsi from eating it. They are inordinately fond of sesame, and they dote on millet cakes (samsa); every woman who makes millet cakes offers them a few. People who eat samsa while walking are careful to drop a few crumbs to the ground. On the 776 other hand, the kikirsi do not drink fermented millet beer, but they must be offered some before the yeast (da'nodo) is added. They have their preferences like human beings. They know hatred and jealousy, and sometimes they even kill one another. They are said to have two 776 sexes, to marry, and to procreate. They even have the special faculty 845 of always bearing twins, and this is why twins are called by their 551 name and are dedicated to them; it is believed that spirits dwell within them.

776 The birth of twins causes their mother much trouble. Formerly 845 both were sometimes put to death, while at other times only one was 782 killed. When a woman bears twins, she builds at the door of her hut a tiny miniature house where the spirits dwelling /82/ within her children will take shelter. Three times a year if her means allow it, in the spring, in the winter, and at the height of the rainy season, or at least once a year, a guinea hen must be offered to the kikirsi. This fowl is sacrificed exclusively to them. On that day they must also be offered their favorite foods, and this means that honey, sesame, and millet cakes must be purchased, that beer must be prepared and a jar saved without yeast, that millet mush has to be cooked, and especially that no pepper be added to the sauce. Otherwise the husband, wife, or children will be afflicted with a dreadful eye disease, for [753] such is the illness which the kikirsi have the power of visiting on human beings.

776 As children, twins may wear only the kankabra, a garment made 845 of black and whitish threads, the characteristic clothing of the kikirsi. Happily, they are later allowed to dress as they please. If the mother dies, the twins offer the sacrifices themselves and build the small hut that serves as a dwelling for their little spirit. The later born twin is considered the older of the two. They both wear the same bracelet and share everything given to them. It is not considered proper to make a gift to one without giving the same thing to the other. Actually, these customs are to be found in Africa from Bambara country to Tanganyika.

776 To return to the kikirsi themselves, they are present everywhere. In the bush they are fond of termite nests, large and small. They 241 also like open spaces. They are to be found around the villages; there are ponds set apart for the kikirsi, wells considered to belong to them. There are spirits watching over every field, and before sowing, as also before harvesting millet, the master of the field sacrifices a chicken to the spirit on a stone in the middle of the field. The 776 kikiriga, in turn, are to ward off anything that might harm the crop, 241 birds, caterpillars, thieves, and the like, and to fill with millet a granary of the size drawn on the ground with ashes at the time of harvest. If the kikiriga has properly carried out his duties, he gets another chicken when all the grain has been gathered in a heap.

776 Pregnant women are under the protection of a special kikiriga, and [843] small children have one of their own to ward off illness and danger. Do we not say ourselves that a special Providence watches over the very young?

776 Actually, everyone has his kikiriga. Some have an evil one, and 828 those are the people who quarrel with everybody, the ones who are never successful, whose livestock dies, for the kikirsi often kill the goats, sheep, and horses that die of illness. Other people have a
[517] good kikiriga, and for them everything goes well; they were born under a lucky star. These are the engaging, sweet, good-natured people who get rich and who have many children. When a Mossi lies down
[513] to sleep in his hut, he rests his head on a stone or a small mound of beaten earth. This is where his kikiriga dwells, and from time to time, especially when he feels the need for special protection, he [782] sacrifices a guinea hen or sometimes even a goat, with the understanding that the spirit will chase away all fellow spirits who might want to harm him and will avert all illness and all danger from his path.

/83/ The tangandé is a spirit who has the shape of an animal and 776 who is regarded as the protector of a village. The term is also ex-
778 tended to designate the spirit's place of residence, usually the sacred 825 grove but sometimes a mere stone or even an open space. The tangandé may be a crocodile, a boa, a leopard, a turtle, a deer, a hare, etc. The animal is sacred to the whole village and may not be killed in the sacred grove, but it may be killed elsewhere, even a short distance from the thicket.

776 The tangandé is a guardian spirit because it protects men and sends 755 its servants to accompany the village people on trips when they request it to do so. The natives incessantly turn to it for protection, and the sorcerers incessantly refer those who consult them to the tangandé to obtain cures and to request the release of souls held captive 776 by evil sorcerers. When someone dies, sacrifices are made to the 782 tangandé with requests to protect the survivors and to ward off illness. When souls leave the body during sleep, they often go to the sacred [774] grove. Anyone may sacrifice to the tangandé and in the tangandé.

776 The naba does so more than anyone else; on the Day of the Dead
782 (basra) he always makes sacrifices there, and usually the village elders accompany him.

776 A village may have several tangandé /sic/, but the protective 778 animal or animals—most often there are two—are the same in all the sacred groves, of which there are as many as there are tangandé /sic/. Nothing may be taken from a sacred grove; everything in it is sacred. No wood may be cut down, and it is forbidden even to gather dead wood which has fallen by itself. By the same token, the dry grass may not be set afire, not even in the area around the grove. If all precautions have been duly taken and fire nevertheless spreads to the sacred grove, nothing can be done and the village people are not held responsible. On the other hand, outsiders are prevented, by force if necessary, from taking anything whatever from the sacred grove. If the outsider is powerful and cannot be restrained, expiatory sacrifices are offered after his departure.

776 The tangandé is thus a guardian animal, and yet some tangamma
754 retaliate by afflicting the guilty party with diseases. If one of the sorcerers who eat souls (seuya) offers gifts to a tangandé, the latter will help him and refuse to restore the soul which has been entrusted to it, unless more substantial gifts are forthcoming. One may pray to a tangandé and make a vow, for example, promise it a goat or sheep if it kills a designated enemy. The goat is purchased pending the enemy's death. Sometimes the tangandé takes its time and [781] several years go by. The spirit is chided and told to hurry, and finally decides to do away with the person in question. Then the goat is sacrificed.

776 Some people say that all tangamma come from the Fada N'Gourma
778 region, where the father of all tangamma is to be found. It is the sorcerer's task to point out the tangamma and the place of their 787 residence. Once, for example, a village had just been founded. The elders had found a piece of ground propitious to agriculture, in the vicinity of water, and had built their huts. At the beginning /84/ of the winter season, when the time came for sowing, they shared out the neighboring bush and proceeded to lay out their fields. One day a leopard driven out of its lair took to flight before their eyes and repaired to a thicket. Immediately the people were called, the thicket surrounded and searched thoroughly. No leopard was found. On the following day the same episode took place in the same spot. This happened three times, and every time it proved impossible to 776 find the leopard, which had suddenly vanished. The puzzled elders, 778 like the good Mossi they were, consulted the sorcerer who stated that 787 the leopard was their tangandé, and the thicket to which it had repaired was its sacred grove. He also prescribed the sacrifices to be offered.

776 As the blood of the victims flowed, the children saw a turtle
787 walking toward the sacred grove and tried to seize it. The elder prevented then from doing so and again resorted to the superior knowledge of the sorcerer to find out what this might possibly mean: a turtle entering the sacred grove during a sacrifice to the tangandé! The sorcerer pronounced the following oracle: the turtle is the child of the tangandé and thus becomes sacred to our village. Since that time the village has had the leopard and turtle as its tangandé /sic/.

776 The tangandé may actually be a stone or a tree which is regarded as the guardian of the village, but this is more unusual. The tangandé might perhaps be considered as a sort of village totem. If we take Salomon Reinach's definition of the totem as "the animal, plant, or more rarely mineral or heavenly body which the clan acknowledges as an ancestor, a protector, and a rallying sign," (3) we find that the

3. Salomon Reinach, Cultes, mythes et religion /Cults, Myths, and Religion/, p. 81.

tangandé is usually an animal, a guardian animal, but that it is not regarded as an ancestor and it does not serve as a rallying sign, for [621] several villages may have the same tangamma /sic/—many have the crocodile and boa—without considering this as a bond between them.

Monseigneur Le Roy defines totemism as follows: "An institution consisting essentially of a magic pact, which reflects and constitutes a kinship, mystical and supernatural in nature, by which an invisible spirit in the visible shape of an animal, or, in exceptional cases, of a plant, mineral, or astral body, is associated with an individual, a family, a clan, a tribe, or a secret society for the purpose of reciprocal services." (4) This definition does not correspond to the

4. Mgr. Le Roy, La religion des primitifs /Primitive Religion/, p. 132.

776 tangandé in every detail either, for only the village may have a tangandé, and there does not seem to be any magic pact unless the sacrifices offered are considered as such a pact, which does not seem justified. The tangandé-animal is never sacrificed, and no special initiation takes place.

774 761 [775] The closest thing to totemism among the Mossi seems to be their concept of the human soul, and yet it is not, properly speaking, a totem in the sense indicated by these authors. Every man has a soul that lives on after death and takes the name of kyma, while during life it is called siga. Shortly before death it takes the name of toullé [197] /85/ in Ouagadougou or toundo in Koupela, but siga, toundo, kyma are one and the same thing, one and the same principle. According to the Mossi, this soul is an animal, invisible of course, a snake, a crocodile, a deer, a hare. The soul is related to this animal, it belongs to the same family, so that to kill a snake or a crocodile in a village where the soul of the inhabitants is a snake or a crocodile is to kill an inhabitant of the village; every individual related to the snake has a snake in the village to represent thim, and he will die when his soul-animal dies.

774 784 Yet, and this runs counter to the definitions of totemism, the individual expects no aid from this animal, never sacrifices to it, and never kills it himself to renew the kinship pact. A person whose soul is a crocodile is forbidden to kill crocodiles in his own village, but he may kill them elsewhere, although he may never eat them, while he may kill the tangandé animal as long as he does so outside the tangandé, and he may eat it at any time. Some people, when they [766] find a dead soul-animal of their family near their village, render it funeral honors, weep, wail, and bury it as one of their own, but they offer it no gifts and hold no koure. Generally it is merely covered with earth. The most widespread soul-animals are a kind of snake (bosombodro) and the crocodile. Several families may have the same [582] one, and marriage, although exogamic, is not forbidden between members of these families.

774 754 The soul may leave the body and in fact leaves it often, especially during the night. If children had a good time in a certain place, if they enjoyed themselves at someone's house, the soul returns there at night. This is when the worst is to be feared from the sorcerers; they may seize the soul by surprise, and its unfortunate owner will die.

774 In the course of a dream, the soul may warn its owner of a threaten-828 ing danger. One day a native, whose village and name were told to 761 me, dreamed that his enemy offered him a kola nut. Much anxiety ensued, for this is a sign used by the soul to indicate that an enemy threatens one with death. In such a case there is only one remedy, to deposit a few cowries on a nest of large red ants, so they will avert the disaster. The man set out immediately for the nearest ant nest. Alas, a snake bit him along the way, and he died before he could offer his gift to the ants! Such occurrences obviously make a profound imprint on the imagination of the natives, who immediately react with the sophism: post hoc, propter hoc. A few such cases are sufficient to anchor them forever in their superstitions, and innumerable such occurrences were related to me.

774 If the soul can leave the body, it is possible to seize it and to pre-
761 vent it from re-entering its body, and this is why our Blacks do not like to be photographed. They say that there is an evil spirit in the box, who takes the soul and eats it. This is proved by the fact that the individual may later be seen on the piece of paper.

774 One becomes sick when his soul cannot re-enter the body because 753 it is held prisoner by an evil sorcerer or by a kikiriga, and many sacrifices must be offered to obtain its release /86/ and return. Entreaties are usually directed to the tangandé in such cases, because it is stronger than all the other spirits, stronger even than the sorcerers, and because its function is to protect the village.

774 Sometimes the soul was so well hidden that the tangandé cannot 761 find it: the sorcerer has eaten it right away, or the tangandé itself
754 is in collusion; or the ancestral spirits are calling the sick person; or, finally, it is God who sent the disease. Nothing can be done, and 775 the person dies. His soul changes names, and henceforth is called kyma. It leaves the body at the moment of death. If it was taken by a sorcerer or by the ancestral spirits, at the moment of death it leaves the sacred grove where it was held captive. It proceeds to the place of souls from where it will return to the grave whenever sacrifices are offered to it. It will also return if it wishes to afflict the survivors with a disease of some sort.

775 Is the soul punished for the evil it has done on earth and rewarded
735 for the good? Opinions on the subject differ. Some say that when one gives alms to the poor, and the Mossi frequently do, when one is generous and hospitable, God takes all that has been given and sets

775 it aside to return it to the soul when it leaves the body. From this [735] comes the thank-you wish, "May God repay you!" If the deceased led an evil life, if he was quarrelsome or a thief, if he killed, he is condemned to walk over live coals to reach God, or if he is a murderer, he may come to God only after he has drunk all the blood he has shed, which God has saved for this purpose. The major offenders are detained by the treetops and never reach the place of souls. It must be said, however, that most Mossi take little heed of the penalties which may await them in the other life or deny their existence altogether.

The souls go to Bourtenga, the "gathering place of the souls," according to the etymology of the word, a place of indeterminate geographical location, or they go to Pilimpikou, a mountain located 775 in Kipirsi country. Their sole occupation over there is to go to market
764 at night, and this is why on the day of burial the deceased is given cowries so that he may buy millet beer and clothes in order not to look like a tramp.

The souls are white but otherwise they look like men, although they are nimbler and can move effortlessly and with great rapidity [264] from one place to another. They do everything upside down; they eat with the left hand and do with it all the things we do with the right, and this is why the corpse is washed with the left hand. They wear their clothes inside out, with the pocket of the breechcloth facing in; they carry the spears iron downward, and they walk backwards because their eyes are placed behind their head. This is why the kourita who represents the deceased wears everything inside out.

775 The souls of the animals sacrificed to him, chickens, sheep, goats,
769 beeves, etc., go to join the deceased, who can thus feast, invite friends, and gather kin together, for people are reunited up there. Although nabas are no longer such, those who were subject to them on earth recreate their court. It is said that parents come to fetch their children, /87/ nabas their pages and favorite wives, and friends their friends, unless the survivors treat them very well and provide them with lots of food.

Indeed, the souls of the dead come back to earth to receive the gifts which are offered to them, to drink the blood of the victims sacrificed in their honor and the millet beer prepared for them on the annual Day of the Dead (basra). This is why no Mossi faithful to tradition ever drinks millet beer without first pouring a little on the

775 ground; he also pours what is left at the bottom of the gourd, so the 769 souls will rejoice with him. It is considered a great honor when a [554] naba tells an elder to grasp one side of the gourd and to pour along with him.

One must not laugh about the souls of the deceased and their visits
775 to earth. If you doubt their return, listen to what an old naba once
764 told me. "One day, I had gone to visit a naba, my friend and neighbor. We had arranged to meet at his house with another neighboring chief. He gave us a very nice welcome, and the day was most pleasant. We were resting at night in the shelter of his soukala when we were suddenly awakened by the sound of harness bells and horses galloping. On the following day we left our host. No sooner had we left than he took ill. A week later he died. The souls had come to fetch him. Oh! Father, do not laugh about the souls of the deceased!" And the good old man trembled with emotion. This is what our Mossi believe. They firmly believe in all these ghost stories.

775 Are the souls reincarnated? Small children who die before the age of reason are said to return in the person of the first child borne by their mother. This is why, especially if the mother has lost several [304] children in a row, the baby is marked at birth with distinctive signs, particularly tattooings on the belly and lower back; sometimes, if he [764] dies, a piece of his ear is cut off, or a toe or finger joint broken. It is said that the child born next will bear the same marks, but no living example of this could be cited. Often, the mother leaves the hut where her baby died. An old woman spreads ashes before the door in the evening, and if small footprints are found in the morning, it is a sign that the child came back and wishes to return to his mother's bosom.

Rebirth is not granted to anyone other than young children, not even to young unmarried people. They remain in the place of the souls for years on end, the number of which cannot be ascertained, and no distinction is made between the rich and the poor, the powerful and their subjects.

775 The soul of suicides, cursed in death, is not entitled as a rule to 762 funeral ceremonies. It wanders through the world without harming anyone, but unable to find rest.

577 Morality is reduced to its simplest expression. Whatever harms
673 other people is bad. Think your own intimate thoughts and desire anything you like; as long as you do no harm to your fellow man, no fault has been committed. Fornication and adultery are faults only

577 673 [839] insofar as they involve an offense to justice. /88/ I do not speak of unnatural practices, which are almost unknown. When theft, murder, even insults, blows and wounds are punished, they are punished as injustices. Calumny is abhorred, and it is a very serious insult to say that someone has slandered someone else. A Mossi will not forgive an insult against his mother, because it is prejudicial to the family honor and hence to himself. In dealing with the natives, therefore, it is necessary to be careful and not to commit any injustices. They are very sensitive to this; while they accept a just punishment without complaint when the offense has been proved, they reject indignantly any accusation which cannot be proved, even when it is well founded.

577 784 In addition to this general morality, many things are forbidden not because they are evil, but because they entail baleful consequences. The taboos (kisgou to the Mossi, from kisé, "to forbid") are almost innumerable. They may be divided into two classes: permanent kisgou, which affect the whole family, and personal and transitory kisgou.

784 The former usually consist of a prohibition to eat a certain animal or to do a certain thing. Thus some nabas are forbidden to meet, to see one another, and if they disregard this prohibition, one of them will die before the year is over. This prohibition is easily explained by the incessant wars which were formerly waged between important chiefs, and their fear of being poisoned or done away with in some other way by one of their enemies. Another instance: a Mossi goes to war on a frisky horse and he is forced to flee. His foes are about to seize him, and he owes his escape to the swiftness of his mount. When he returns home, he decrees that the horse will be a sacred animal to him and to his descendants, and that henceforth all his children and their children must treat horses well and may not eat their flesh under penalty of blindness or leprosy. This is the extent of the prohibition. The horse is not considered a guardian animal, no sacrifices are offered to it, and the Mossi do not call it tangandé (guardian animal of the village) or siga((soul-animal), but kisgou (prohibition).

784 262 Sometimes the kisgou affects only certain members of the family. A father has been ill after eating dog flesh on two or three occasions. He consults the sorcerer, who states that dog flesh is forbidden to him and to his children, but not to other members of his family. A person

784 born among the Peul, to whom dog flesh is forbidden, may have the 262 dog as kisgou. Sometimes the kisgou concerns only him, his son, and grandson and not his other descendants, because the son and grandson will follow his own soul, while the soul of the other descendants will follow that of his mother, their great-grandmother, to whom dog flesh is not forbidden. A sorcerer's reasoning against which there is no argument!

/89/ This kind of kisgou is the more binding of the two, but it may be terminated if the person who established it offers the proper sacrifices, or if one of his descendants, of his own will, releases himself and his children from it. Thus the family of the Saman'Naba, Prime Minister of Koupéla, has the hare as kisgou. When the naba saw his Christian brothers and son eat hare flesh with impunity, without becoming blind or leprous, he took to eating it himself without ill effects.

784 Parents teach their children about the various family kisgou and 869 instill the proper awe into them so they will not eat these animals.
753 Involuntary disregard of one's kisgou may lead to illness, and the sorcerer consulted indicates what has to be done and what sacrifice must be offered to the tangandé to obtain his forgiveness. If the slip was deliberate, if it showed contempt, no forgiveness is possible.

784 The second kind of kisgou is quite special and personal. It consists 758 of the various prohibitions imposed by the sorcerers on a sick person.
262 A certain kind of meat or sauce is forbidden to the patient, or he may not drink water containing millet flour, or he may not eat millet or bean cakes. This is how a poor rachitic child with a heart disease was successively forbidden practically every kind of food. His relatives had the greatest difficulty finding those foods that were not forbidden to him, and eventually he died of starvation. All such kisgou terminate of course with the illness that caused them, unless the disease is incurable and lasts to the end of the patient's life.

Chapter 2. The Cult

000 If we define religion with Mgr. Le Roy (1) as "The body of beliefs,

1. Mgr. Le Roy, op. cit., p. 49.

000 obligations, and practices through which man acknowledges the supernatural world, fulfills his duties toward it and requests its assistance," there remains for us to investigate, now that beliefs have been studied, how the Mossi communicate with this supernatural world, how they discharge their obligations toward it, and how they request its assistance. This involves the whole matter of sacrifices and ceremonies.

Beyond this acknowledged and reasonable cult, however, there is another, magic, which is "the art of coercing into one's service the forces of nature, or harnessing the powers of the invisible world, through certain occult practices of a more ore less religious character." (2) This involves the whole area of superstitions, amulets, fetishes, and charms, and, more especially, the sorcerers and their practices.

2. Ibid., p. 331.

782 Sacrifice is the central act of the cult in every religion, and it is usually bloody. Whatever their origin, the Mossi are no exception to this rule which applies to all mankind. They make bloody sacrifices and commune in the sacrifice to such a point that even those who did not witness the killing may eat of the animal and are said to have offered the sacrifice along with the sacrificer.

/90/ The blood of chickens, goats, sheep, and beeves is shed at the slightest pretext; sometimes it is the blood of donkeys, horses, and formerly even men. A Mossi will not undertake anything without sacrificing to his tangandé (guardian animal) or to his kikirsi (spirits). If he does not know to whom to address his sacrifice, he consults a sorcerer.

If a member of the family is ill, one or several sacrifices are offered; if someone leaves on a journey, if he goes hunting or fishing, he offers sacrifices. Sacrifices are also made when two men have quarreled and wish to make up their differences, and innumerable sacrifices are required as a result of dreams, evil forebodings, and dangers which seem to threaten. Sacrifices are made to gain the favors of kikirsi or ancestral spirits, to beg for success in an undertaking, to fulfill a row, to ward off a disease, to harm an enemy, to appease an irked ancestor or some incensed tisé, kikirsi, or tangamma. Hardly any medicines are prepared without a sacrifice, and sacrifices are part of all spells, of all procedures meant to harm an enemy. Sacrifices are offered before sowing, before harvesting, before building 782 a hut for one's wife. Sacrifices are made for every purpose, for everybody, and practically to everything.

Sacrifices are made everywhere. The sacred grove is the place most frequently chosen, along with the dwelling-stone of the kikiriga who protects the house. Sacrifices may be made, however, in the fields, in open spaces where nothing grows, or on the path which leads to the tangandé either from the village where one lives or from one's village of origin, if it is learned that the spirit requires a sacrifice and one cannot go there in person.

Any man may offer a sacrifice once he has reached the age of reason, and children of about ten are sometimes seen offering their sacrifices with as much solemnity as their elders. Women cannot [562] themselves make sacrifices; they must resort to the agency of men. They may, however, furnish the victim and partake of it when it is eaten. Nabas and men of some wealth have their own appointed sacrificer or sacrificers. This is compulsory for province chiefs, who themselves never sacrifice in public ceremonies and quite rarely in private.

There are several kinds of sacrifices, and we shall study each one of them in turn, the better to understand how the Mossi communicate with the invisible world.

First, the characteristic sacrifice which serves as basis to all the others, the mand'zallé.

The sacrificer, accompanied by his son bearing a white or otherwise colored rooster and a gourd containing millet flour mixed with water, proceeds to the place of the sacrifice, for example, to the tangandé.

Upon arriving he says:

782 Kabré, kabré. — Excuse me, pardon me.

539 /91/ Then he sits down, his face turned to the west, and taking the victim in his hands, he says:

Na-Wend'daogo, sak'a tan!	God-king male, answer thrice!
Na-Wend'poko, sak'a nasé!	God-king female, answer four times!
Na-Wend'ka kou ned'yé, kon ky yé.	If God-king does not kill, we do not die.
Na-Wendé ka léo, ned'kon lu'yé. — Pilimpik'dim n'yélé; lila kom'dim n'yélé t'eb y noara, ti	If God-king does not bind, we are not bound. — The butterflies have told us; the spirits of the water have told us to take a bird, a white rooster, and to offer it to the tangandé, so that he may take it and it with the kikirsi of the village and their wives.

782 539 no'pelra t'eb kis'tangandé t'a déé n'di né teng'kikirsi lé teng'portapa.

782 539 755 This formula may vary with the circumstances. This is when the sacrificer sets forth his wishes. He tells the tangandé, for instance, that his son is ill and that he has consulted the sorcerer, who has told him to take a white rooster and offer it to the tangandé with water, so that the tangandé may restore his son's health. Then he pours the water behind his back, toward the east, and says:

Na-wendé, déé a ybou kom! God-king, receive the water of your rising!

Then he pours water before him, to the west, and says:

Na-wendé, déé a kyenbo kom! God-king, receive the water of your setting!

Finally he pours water on the sacrificial stone or before his feet, saying:

Tangandé, yk'n'déé kom nyou la kwen la biga lafi! Tangandé, arise, receive the water and drink it, and grant health to my son!

Nyé lé zouanga, nini ka yé. He is like a blind man, he no longer has eyes.

Tangandé nyé youngo né wintoro la ko biga lafi. The tangandé, he sees night and day and grants health to my child.

If the sacrifice includes an offering of millet beer, he pours some on the sacrificial stone, saying:

Na-Wendé ka nyou dam yé, la porédimma nyouda. God-king does not drink beer, but those of his retinue do.

Then he seizes the rooster with his left hand, bends its head back by pulling the comb, and slits its throat. He allows the blood to flow upon the stone where the water was poured, while saying:

Tangandé déé noara n'di, la kwen la biga lafi né sounoro! Tangandé, receive this rooster and eat it, and grant my child health and joy!

Then he tosses the rooster before him, saying:

Noara bé Wennam, ba souk' ba'a. This rooster is for God; may He dispell the illness.

Then he sends his child to get the rooster. The boy grasps the bird when it is lying on its back and if necessary helps it to achieve this

782 position. /92/ He drags it along the ground by the feet to the 539 sacrificer, who says:
755 T'a vouda bemdaoge. Drag me enemies along the ground.

The sacrificer then seizes the chicken and sets it upon its feet, holding its head straight:

T'a timma biga! May He grant health to my child!

He turns the rooster around, with its head down and its legs up in the air:

T'a terida bema! May He cause my enemies to bite the dust!

With his left hand he tears feathers from the neck, spits on them, and glues them to the stone or to the ground with the victims's blood, saying:

Yelbandé tou sébro! May all that is evil go with the wind!

Ta toubré oum! May his /my enemy's/ ears catch (my curses)!

Ta nif ka nya yé! May he /my enemy's/ eyes go blind!

He breaks one of the chicken's legs:

T'a kao bemdaogo karga! Break the leg of my male enemies!

He breaks the other leg:

T'a kao bempoko karga! Break the leg of my female enemies!

He returns the bird to the child, who carries it away. The remaining water and beer are poured on the very spot of the sacrifice.

The rooster is plucked there or at home and roasted or cooked in water according to the sacrifice. The sacrificer removes the claws, beak, pinions, and liver, and he places them in the left hand of his child who lays them by the path some distance away, saying:

Mand'déé gobra, la kwen détogo nyé masem. The sacrifice is received with the left hand, but grant him health with the right hand.

He returns to the place where the people are gathered, and the victim is shared among all present. When all have eaten, they gather in a group before the sacrificer and greet him as follows:

Wennam déé mando! May God receive /Tr., the Mossi word means "eat"/ your sacrifice!

Wennam tou taoré! May God accept it!

The sacrifice is over.

782 If a goat, sheep, or beef was sacrificed, the hair on top of the 755 head is pulled out instead of neck feathers, and a piece of the rope used to tie the victim is added. All of this is glued where the blood was shed, and the victim's legs are not broken.

Such is the usual sacrificial formula. Variations are of course introduced by individuals and by the customs of particular regions. This is the mand'zallé.

/93/ The mand'lingdem or mand'dédem, which we might call "hidden sacrifice, " is offered for the sake of someone who is ill and on the point of death. His illness is due to the fact that the soul has left his body. The sorcerer has said that it is to be found in the tangandé. Without the sick person's knowledge, hence the name "hidden sacrifice, " his father goes to the tangandé, accompanied by another of his children who bears the victim and some water and by the sick person's mother who bears a large gourd half filled with water and a smaller gourd inside it.

The sacrifice is offered as previously described, but while the child is roasting the chicken, the sacrificer tosses onto the ground three cowries in the case of a sick boy, four in the case of a girl, and pours a little water. Then he invokes the sick child by name:
[801] "Bila, come, answer me." He calls three times for a boy, four times for a girl. He then takes the cowries and some of the soil which was soaked with water and the animal's blood. The woman lifts the small gourd which floats in the water, the sacrificer places the mud and cowries at the bottom of the large container, and the woman quickly covers the mixture with the small gourd which she holds down in the water. This procedure is repeated three or four times according to the patient's sex. The woman then heads toward home, holding the container in one hand and still bearing down on the small gourd to prevent it from floating. The sacrificer follows her, waving his sword or spear behind her to ward off the evil spirits. The soul is at the bottom of the water, amid the bloody mud and cowries, and they must do their utmost to prevent it from running away again.

When the procession reaches the patient, he is made to sit up, and the woman pours the water of the large gourd on his head, without lifting the smaller gourd. If the sick person, surprised by this sudden shower, gives a start, it means that he is saved; his soul has re-entered his body. Otherwise, nothing can be done, and the unfortunate person is abandoned to his fate; the tangandé did not want to return the soul.

782 755 Then the sacrificer and his assistants eat the victim, but the patient does not partake of it.

782 751 [753] The silent sacrifice, mand'moukou—also called "egg sacrifice," mand'gellé, because an egg is offered—is made in the following circumstances. Some diseases have the dismal faculty of talking like people. They call someone, who answers to his name thinking that a human being has called him. This is sufficient, he will fall ill and die.

The sorcerer decrees that such a disease threatens the village, and that a silent sacrifice is in order. The naba and the elders anxiously delegate one of the men among them to offer the sacrifice. On the following day in the morning, the appointed elder takes an egg, often also a kola nut and special roots, and follows the path which the disease would take if it came to the village. He walks in complete silence. When he reaches a certain point, he brings the egg close to his lips and tells it secretly that a disease threatens the village, and that if the disease tries to follow this path, the egg must stop it. Then he places the egg, kola nut, and roots upon the ground or buries them and retraces his steps. /94/ The egg, a chicken-to-be that cannot yet talk, is chosen as a symbol of the silence that must be observed to ward off the disease.

In the procedure called "bad sacrifice," the victim is not eaten by those present but left on the spot, where it rots or is eaten by vultures and hyenas. Any animal may be offered in this fashion, but the sorcerer alone may decide when the sacrifice is called for. It is usually performed to avert a general misfortune, for example, to ward off a contagious disease that will devour the animal and leave the people alone. The victim is sometimes abandoned alive and driven into the bush.

782 Anything may be offered in sacrifice if the sorcerer says so: kola nuts, cowries, the ashes of certain barks or roots, red stones, the inner fruit of the karite tree, etc. Chickens are the victims most commonly chosen, but sacrifices of goats and sheep are not uncommon. We have already mentioned the guinea hen as the sacrifice preferred by the kikirsi. The nabas are sometimes required to sacrifice cows or donkeys in certain cases. Some nabas, but not all, may sacrifice horses. Finally, even men were sacrificed in the old days. Certain tangamma [563] were greedy for human sacrifices, and the Peul were often used for this purpose. Natives with light skins tending to red, thus closer to [826] the color of ancestral spirits which are said to be white, were sacrificed to these spirits in preference to any others.

M
782 to these spirits in preference to any others. These sacrifices were rare, and they were the sole prerogative of the highest chiefs.

Sometimes a vow is made instead of an immediate sacrifice. This is the poulongo mando. For example, a disease rages in the country, or someone has a serious undertaking at hand and wonders how it will turn out, or he wishes to dispose of an enemy. The person who makes the vow goes to the tangandé or to the kikirsi stone, carrying a gourd of water. He pours the water, saying, "Tangandé, if this illness departs, or if my understanding succeeds, or if my enemy dies, I will sacrifice to you a goat or a beef." To prove his good intentions, he buys the promised goat or cow at the first opportunity. If the tangandé or kikirsi grants his request, he fulfills his vow; in the sacrificial formula, instead of saying that the sorcerer told him to offer a certain victim, he mentions his vow and often promises another sacrifice on the following year.

M
F
782 The Moslems have invented another bloodless sacrifice for their own benefit. Here is the recipe: "If someone is ill in your soukala, 755 take a kola nut, honey, honey cakes, beans, maize, and cowries and mix them all in a gourd filled with water. Then call in a Yarga or Peul Moslem to say a prayer. Of course, this man will only make the trip /95/ for a fee. A sheep at least must accompany the request." Grave, stately, and guarded as all good Moslems are supposed to be, the man sits down in the inner courtyard near the hut where the sick person lies, and the people sit around him, both hands open before their eyes, like a book, with their little fingers joined. The Moslem begins his prayer in Mossi, repeating the request that was made to him, that the patient should get well. When he is finished, he moves both hands across his face, three times for a boy, four times for a girl. Then the people go back to their former position, and the man utters some gibberish in Arabic or Peul. When he is through, all the people move their hands repeatedly across their faces; the head of the household dips his hand in the gourd which contains the mixture described above and puts it to his forehead; the children carry everything away; and everyone greets the sanctimonious rascal with the words: "May God grant your prayer!" Then the man sets out for home with the same gravity as before. The water will be used to wash the patient, and some of it will also be added to his food. None of this is very alarming, and if some patients get well through auto-suggestion, all the better.

789 Blessings and curses are also used. Should they be classed with the cult, or with magic? One way or the other, there are natives who have the power to kill anyone merely by saying a word. They can make the harvest wither, the cattle sicken. There are also some who can bless, make a trip propitious, an undertaking successful. If you 752 are wounded, go to them. They will put around the wounded part of 755 your body a greasy rope with three or four knots according to your sex;
801 there will be no swelling, and the wound will heal quickly.

782 Such are the major sacrifices and the practices of the cult. The 769 sacrifices offered to the spirits of the dead on the day of burial or on 796 the day of kouré have not been mentioned, because the animals offered are not properly speaking sacrificed (kou mando) but offered, presented, fabré. We shall now mention the sacrifices made on the Day of the Dead.

The Koupéla Mossi have two major feast days: the Day of the Dead or basra, and the Moslem sheep celebration called kibsa. Both are intimate family affairs.

Basra is the feast of the dead. On that day every family head must offer sacrifices to his ancestral spirits, and he alone may sacrifice upon the grave. Even if a member of the family has become powerful and wealthy, he will not offer the sacrifice which devolves by right to the family head. All members of the family who wish to offer a sacrifice on the ancestral grave must, therefore, go to their elder on that day. Anyone may sacrifice to the kikirsi and tangandé, and almost everyone does at this time. It is mainly on this occasion that little children may be seen gravely sacrificing their chicken to their kikirsi and to the tangandé; each makes it a point of honor to offer his own animal. Only chickens are sacrificed on that day.

Basra is not celebrated by every family on the same day. Some celebrate it before the province chief does, others after him, while most families do it on the same day he does.

/96/ The naba of Koupéla proceeds as described below, and the ceremonies are the same for his subjects with the sole difference that being less wealthy they cannot offer as many sacrifices. The basra is always celebrated by the naba on a Saturday. Already on Thursday he has taken non-fermented beer from the vats and poured it on the graves of his father and grandfather. He has also sacrificed a chicken on each of the tombs. Wherever an ancestor of the naba is buried, the guardian of the grave sacrifices a chicken. This is repeated on 782 Friday evening. The sacrifice is the usual one described earlier, but 769 the invoking formula is replaced with the following: "Soul of my 796 father, stretch out your hand and take this chicken which I offer you; grant me to reach next year in good health, and I will return with another chicken." The chicken killed on the grave is not roasted as in other sacrifices, but cooked in water.

On those days one must be careful not to sleep outside. The souls come to drink beer from the vats, and woe to those who lie in their way. They will kill them or at least make them seriously ill.

782 On the feast day itself, all those who have some obligation toward 769 the naba or toward the man who is holding the festivities, such as 796 those to whom he has given a wife or who have asked him for one,
431 come to greet him with a rooster and cowries if they did not come on the previous day. Many of his subjects, especially the canton chiefs, also come to offer their rooster and cowries. On the other hand, if an important visitor comes on that day, it is an elementary rule of civility to offer him a rooster.

782 Usually, on the very day of the festivities, no sacrifices are offered 769 on the graves. The victims are offered to the protective kikirsi of 796 the hut, of the inner courtyard, of the outer courtyard, of the whole soukala. The number of sacrificed chickens varies in proportion to the number of gifts. When the sacrifices are over, the naba assembles his people, and the beer is brought in and presented to him. He first pours a little on the ground as an offering to the ancestral spirits, then he drinks and distributes the ars among his people. This is not [273] a good day to discuss important matters, because after noon everybody is more or less drunk.

On the following Monday and Wednesday, the naba proceeds at dawn with great pomp to two neighboring villages (Nakalbo and Sabré) to sacrifice a beef to the tangandé. Much feasting ensues there on those two days; the naba loses a beef /in each village/ but gains many chickens and a few thousand cowries. He also goes to the village of Toulgou on the day when basra is celebrated in that locality, because his family originated there.

527 The kibsa is the Moslem sheep feast, and it is celebrated forty days after the end of the great feast. All Mossi celebrate it in private; every family has brewed millet beer, and on that day millet mush is replaced with rice and meat. These festivities are even more intimate than the previous ones in the sense that they are held

527 everywhere on the same day, and by and large people stay home to [574] eat and drink. They go visiting on the days which follow.[1]

On the morrow of the day when the moon appears on the horizon, that is, nine days before the feast, the chief of the Kalmodo Yarsé solemnly comes to greet /97/ the naba of Koupéla. He bears in his hand the spear of Naba Silga, one of the predecessors of the present naba, and speaks approximately as follows. Naba Gado (the naba of the Kalmodo Yarsé) and Naba Silga were friends. The slave of Naba Gado ran away, and the naba looked for him everywhere but could not find him. Naba Gado went to Naba Silga and said; "My slave has run away, and I have looked for him everywhere in vain." Naba Silga replied, "I have not seen him either." And Naba Gado went on looking for his slave. Finally he found him and came to tell Naba Silga, who had the slave returned to him. To show his gratitude, Naba Gado offered Naba Silga the feast of fire. The latter refused, saying, "It is fire, and fire burns." Then Naba Gado suggested the fast, Ramadan. Naba Silga refused again, for fasting is hunger and thirst, and would a friend make such a gift to his friend? Then Naba Gado suggested the kibsa, but with the condition that every year Naba Silga should prepare abundant food for him and all his people, that all should come and celebrate the festivities here and make merry with their hearts full of joy. Naba Silga readily agreed.

When the naba of Kalmodo finishes this little speech, the first wife of the naba of Koupéla offers him a gourd of water, for Moslems do not drink fermented beer, and the naba of Kalmodo sings the praises of all the predecessors of the present naba of Koupéla. Then everyone makes noise and dances. A week later, the naba of Kalmodo always returns with the spear and the war drum. The naba of Koupéla offers him a beef which the naba of Kalmodo slaughters. He pours the blood on the spear and says, "May God grant health to the naba and to his ministers!" The naba has the victuals brought in. When all have eaten, they come to greet the naba, saying, "May God grant you another year!" and then they depart.

These two festive days, basra and kibsa, are observed by all Mossi. (3) There are others peculiar to the naba of Koupéla, which we shall

3. To be exact, it must be said that the name basra is not used everywhere in Mossi country, but the feast itself appears to be observed everywhere. In Bélousa, it is called kytouara. The name kibsa, on the other hand, is known everywhere, but special circumstances may prevent its celebration. Thus the warriors of one canton were defeated on that day, consider the kibsa unpropitious, and no longer celebrate it.

[1] [i.e., following the Kibsa, the Moslem sheep feast. - Analyst]

527

mention briefly.

The naky (naba ky, "naba's millet") is the naba's personal feast. It is always celebrated on a Saturday, like all the naba's ceremonies. It is proclaimed at market by the village-crier twenty-one days beforehand. Seven days before the feast, the naba sacrifices a goat on [782] the threshing floor and eats it on the spot after it has been roasted. The three nabas assigned as keepers of the naba's millet thresh a little grain, and every day they return to the grounds to thresh a little more until the day of the festivities. The quantity of millet thus flailed does not fill more than two baskets.

On the day of the feast, early in the morning, the high ministers go with their retinues to greet the naba: "May God be with you; may God grant you to see the year through!" A procession is formed and proceeds to the naba's threshing floor. His sisters and wives take part of the millet threshed on the previous days and carry it /98/, shrieking and dancing, to a granary located outside the naba's soukala. Then everyone drinks copiously.

Two days later, in the evening, another ceremony takes place. The naba's relatives go to the threshing floor and wrap the remaining millet in grass stalks; the bundle is carried to the sound of drums with jesting, shrieks, and dancing, as on the day of a burial. The millet is placed in the granary alongside the grain brought in on the day of the feast, and a sheep and a chicken are sacrificed nearby and [782] shared among those present. The naba does not partake of this flesh. Actually he hides throughout the ceremony, for if he saw the pro- [784] cession he would die.

What is the origin of this custom, which reminds the naba that in spite of all his power he is mortal like his subjects? What is the origin of that other custom, mentioned earlier, of building near his dwelling the hut where he will be buried? The Romans used to remind their 527 victorious heroes that they were only mortals. The thought of death is wholesome and beneficial.

The "bean feast" is so named because on that day the naba eats bean sauce for the first time in the year.

The naba's hoeing ceremony (na-kobo) is celebrated twenty-one days after the previous one, and like it, like the naky, always on a Saturday. When the naba of Koupéla was solemnly invested by the naba of Bélousa, he used to go with a large number of horsemen and much pomp to hoe a field located some distance from Koupéla. Nowadays he merely breaks ground on a path which connects his huts with those of his two prime ministers. He gives the first blows with the [526] hoe to the sound of drums, and his men take up from there. If the Peul and the horsemen have come in sufficient numbers, they run [273] races. As is usual in such circumstances, beer flows freely, and at the end of the day everyone is drunk. These festivities bring the naba a few thousand cowries offered by his subjects.

000 There ceremonies, naky, nakobo, do they not constitute a sort of homage to agriculture, do they not recall similar festivities celebrated long ago by the Romans and even today by the Chinese?

443 The market which follows each of these feasts is always crowded. Several beeves and large numbers of sheep are killed. Everyone makes a point of attending in his very best clothes, and the sight of this motley crowd is quite interesting indeed.

Chapter 3. Magic

000 Mgr. Le Roy, as already mentioned, defines magic as "the art of coercing into one's service the forces of nature, or harnessing the powers of the invisible world, through certain occult practices of a more or less religious character." This is what we shall now study. To put some order into a subject which is wholly lacking in it in the mind of the native, we shall first discuss the superstitions, then the sorcerers.

[181] Like all primitive people, black or white, the Mossi are very superstitious. Were not our own ancestors, in the Middle Ages? Have superstitious beliefs, such as those concerning thirteen people at table, 000 spilled salt, /99/ four-leaf clovers, hares crossing the roadway, etc., been altogether eradicated by science?

751 No matter how things may stand among us, superstition reigns
789 supreme among the Mossi. Amulets and talismans are greatly valued. Anything may contribute to their manufacture, from the highly prized head of a crowned crane to that of a hawk or a gray heron. Anything may be found in the numerous little bags which hang down a native's neck, from scraps of paper with a few words of Arabic scribbled upon them which Moslem Marabouts distribute in large numbers throughout the Sudan, to cowries or the ashes of every possible and imaginable root. There are amulet bracelets which are worn on the left arm and which protect against seuya sorcerers (see p. 127) if their wearer remembers to push them swiftly up his arm when meeting one of those dreadful soul-eaters. There are bracelets which protect people in fights, and iron rings which act as safeguards against snake bite. Do you want to be welcomed and accepted by the man whose daughter you wish to marry? Wear a certain bracelet on your right arm, and your hopes will come true.

Amulets are worn around the head, neck, arm, or wrist. They are sewn to the cap or to the clothes, attached to the belt, to the pipe, to the staff, anywhere. The list would be endless if we tried to enumerate all the various kinds of amulets. The shoulder blade of a beef fastened to the end of a stick and an iron chain stretched across the soukala entrance protect its inhabitants against a host of misfortunes and unpleasant nocturnal visitations. People consider themselves fortunate to possess such easy protection against the numerous spirits prowling for victims.

787 If you have dogs, watch them carefully. If they are so careless as to lie down or relieve themselves in a basket, or to vomit within the hut, kill them fast or you will die yourself. If your bitch bears only one puppy, kill her pitilessly. When the gray heron flies over the huts shrieking, mothers beat on their jars for fear that their 783 children will get diarrhea. Hunters must not eat koba meat before 789 they engage in their sport, and if they want to gain skill, they must 224 secure certain roots, cook them in water, and wash their hands with the mixture.

777 Sunday is the day of the spirits, the day when koure is held. It is also a good day to build huts. There is nothing special about Monday, but you must be careful about Tuesday, for you never know what it 777 may hold in store. Wednesday is unreservedly bad, and you must not start a job or leave for a trip on that day. Thursday and Friday are propitious to weddings, especially Friday. On Saturday the sorcerers take the day off and hold no consultations. In addition, every individual has his own lucky day and his unlucky day, which he must know and bear in mind.

778 787 823 Some stones are said to have fallen from heaven. On the day when they fall, the village chief immediately covers all the jars in his hut which contain charms. If he knocks one down in his haste, he will die within the year. These stones are held sacred. Those who can lift them /100/ have nothing to fear, but those who cannot are soon to die. People may also interrogate such a stone, whose reply is considered favorable if they manage to lift it, unfavorable if they cannot [788] do so. Passersby toss millet stalks onto the stone, or twigs cut along the way, or sometimes cowries, to procure success in their endeavors.

821 787 Comets are omens of war or of the death of a great chief. When Halley's comet appeared on the horizon, the chickens, goats, and sheep had a bad time of it. It was necessary to ward off all the possible misfortunes. It is true that the comet was magnificent, spreading for several days from one end of the sky nearly to another, and it is understandable that the natives should be upset. We have heard that many people were troubled in our civilized countries, where the comet could not be seen in all its splendor. In spite of all those sacrifices, the chief of one of the principal cantons in the province, the naba of Pwitenga, died that very year!

000 We must limit our enumeration, and these few examples, which could easily be multiplied, suffice to make clear the role of amulets and superstitions in the life of this people.

801 One further word on superstitions. The reader may have noticed that the numbers three and four and their composites have recurred constantly according to the sex of the person spoken of. Three is reserved for men and four for women. In the sacrifices, God-king male is called three times. God-king female four times. The cord of the charm has three or four knots according to sex; mothers mourn their children for 33 or 44 days. A dead man receives 333 or 3, 333 cowries, a dead woman 444 or 4, 444, etc.

302 Every time a native changes his status, his hair must be removed. Babies are shaved before they are given a name, girls before they come to their husband, women when they are transferred to a new 302 husband by legacy; while men are shaved only when they receive their first wife, because then they become masters of a hut, but they are not shaved when they get new wives because their status does not change again. A man who is appointed naba must lose his hair which was that of a subject and no longer suitable to a chief. A dead person [764] may only be buried without being shaved if he died an accidental death, etc.

789 The cross also plays a role which must not be overrated, but which is nevertheless real. The hilts of swords bear the shape of a cross; the feet, hands, and chest of the sick are often anointed with charcoal mixed in fat, always in the shape of a cross. The chests and backs of soukala dwellers are also marked with crosses to protect them against lightning. The huts are marked likewise, and crosses are drawn even inside the mouths of horses and donkeys. A cross is also drawn on the hut door of those who are seriously ill so as to ward off evil spirits. A cross of ashes on the chest and back is part of the mourning costume.

What is the origin of this custom? The natives cannot say, and invariably reply, "This is what our fathers did."

In addition to these superstitious practices that do not commit one to anything and that harm no one, there are others which can be very useful to /101/ those who practice them, and others yet which seem indeed to fall into the category of magic. We are referring to what the natives designate by the generic name of tim, without differentiating between true remedies of medicinal origin and superstitions or evil spells which should be characterized as magic. Indeed, it is often quite difficult to distinguish between the two.

755 Amulets and charms are tim to the natives, and so are the medicines which their specialists prescribe and which seem to have real effectiveness. We mentioned them briefly when we spoke of illness. We did not say that the preparation of these medicines rarely goes unaccompanied by some sorcery, and that the person who has been cured by a remedy must at least keep some in a little bag and sacrifice a chicken to it every year. Everything is done as in the usual sacrifices, but the invoking formula is replaced with the following: "God-tim, stretch out your hand and take this chicken. God has given me a powerful medicine. May this medicine protect me night and day, in the middle of the night and on the path, where we amuse ourselves and in the huts. Keep the jaws of the snake shut so that next year I may still be in good health, so that no misfortune may come to me, 755 so that my heart may rejoice unceasingly. Then I will come back with another chicken, so that you too may rejoice and continue to protect my wives and my children." Then the sacrifice is concluded. This formula does indicate that the power of the medicine is wholly ascribed to God.

751 Certain superstitious practices that belong in the tim category are used in special cases. For the sake of curiosity, here is what is done when a man has killed a hyena and to protect the huts against lightning.

[828] If a man kills a hyena, he must hastily consult some other native who previously has killed one, or he will become raving mad. The hunter goes to such a man who knows a remedy against this raving madness and takes him a chicken. The man indicates which roots must be obtained, and the hunter gathers them in the bush. He cuts them to pieces and brings them to his doctor who seizes a jar, grabs the chicken, and pulls it toward the roots, then says while pouring water into the ar: "God-tim and his kikiriga, arise, stretch out your hand, and take this water to drink it; take this chicken to eat it, and grant the man who has killed a hyena not to become raving mad." He sacrifices the chicken and pours the blood into the pot. Then he puts half of the roots into the jar and reduces the other half to ashes.

The hunter takes the whole thing home, and for seven days he puts water from the medicine into his millet mush and ashes from the roots into his sauce.

On the seventh day all the family members get together and come with their friends to greet the hunter. They all toss cowries into the gourd which contains the medicine, then proceed to market with much ceremony. The hunter fastens the head of the hyena to the end of a staff and bears it triumphantly to market. He has /102/ the right to take pistachios, beans, millet, cakes, etc., free of charge, anything he wishes. When he is finished taking things, stealing like a hyena, the procession falls into line once more and proceeds to a thick tree near the market. There, the hunter drives his staff into the ground, and everybody starts dancing around him; then they take small sticks and strike him, and he hastily runs away. He is now sure that he will not become raving mad, and what is more from now on he may kill as many hyenas as he wishes without fear.

821 Water in general and rain in particular are a blessing in this sun-
825 scorched land. Crocodiles are reputed to attract water to their dwelling-place. To kill a crocodile may not necessarily amount to homicide, but it amounts at least to drying out a watercourse or pond, for the crocodiles will leave the place and the water will leave with them. If rain is too long delayed, the crop will not have time to ripen; if it falls too heavily, especially at the beginning and at the end of the winter season, weeds will choke the millet, or the flowers will fall before the fruit is formed.

789 Rain is, therefore, desired or feared according to the circumstances, and the power to make rain and to ward it off devolves upon the naba, 829 who rules on the life and death of his subjects. In truth every powerful man is believed to possess this power, and how often they requested me to make rain! Is it not true that Whites can do anything? They are related to the ancestral spirits, their color proves it! Do they not come from the land of water? Did they not emerge from the water? In spite of my assertions that God alone can make rain, that one must pray for it, their skeptical smiles made it plain that they did not believe me.

789 The naba has the charm, the talisman, to draw rain. All he need do when a storm threatens is to take from his hut a certain jar full of certain roots and fill it with water to overflowing. On the other hand, if he wishes to ward off rain, he burns another kind of root, and the wind carries the smoke in the direction where the naba wishes to send the clouds; or else he hangs a cow's or horse's tail to a stick by a thread, and the wind tosses it, thus driving the clouds away. This is why the naba sends one of his men to market when the rainy season draws near, to gather karite fruit from each woman there, because the pits are used to make the charm and must be obtained in this fashion. If a person other than the naba has tried to make rain and failed, he attributes his failure to someone more powerful than himself; if the naba fails, no one says anything about it, or else it is said that the naba did not really wish to attract or to ward off the rain.

821 Every storm is accompanied by lightning, which often kills people in this land of violent thunderstorms. Its effects are attributed to an evil spirit, to an enemy ~~who can~~ send lightning if he knows the proper tim, or to God Himself. Lightning strikes thieves and murderers; it is a punishment. If it does not kill the thief himself, it kills the proceeds of the theft, the stolen horse or sheep. It never kills a person without reason.

789 /103/ Happily, it is possible to avoid lightning. To achieve this,
821 it is necessary to find in the bush a white substance rather similar to hyena droppings which the natives call "rain dung," as well as certain tree roots. Part of these roots is left to soak in water for three days, and the rest is burned to ashes. A chicken is sacrificed to the tim. Then the water in which the roots have steeped is used to cook the millet mush, and the sauce is made with baobab leaves. All the soukala dwellers must eat this millet mush, and every one of them is marked on the back and chest with a cross of ashes mixed with karite butter. The horse and donkey, alone among the animals, are similarly marked on the back, chest, and inside the mouth. The huts are marked on the east side, the direction from which the rain comes, and above the entrance. Now there is nothing to be feared. We do feel, however, that lightning-rods are more effective.

759 All these tim, medicinal remedies, amulets, talismans, and 756 superstitious recipes, are prescribed either by true doctors who actually know the properties of herbs and effect real cures or by sorcerers. The doctors are often consulted. Since they specialize in certain diseases, they are consulted for those diseases alone. Those who have been cured by a medicine willingly make it known to friends who are afflicted with the same illness. The doctors are as numerous as the diseases which afflict mankind.

278 Some doctors are not merely healers but also poisoners, and they 674 are greatly feared. The surest way to get rid of an enemy is to consult them, but their fees are high. They have slow poisons which consume the victim gradually and the overwhelming ones which kill in a few hours. They put them in drinks, in millet mush, or more 754 often in kola nuts. There are also people, sorcerers rather than doctors, who claim the power to kill at a distance and who know how to practice sympathetic magic. Their prestige has waned since the French occupation because they have not managed to kill the Whites who settled in the country; but they say that our tim are more powerful than theirs.

764 The sorcerers are also numerous. There are those who take up the 756 call of their own accord and those who are born sorcerers. The former 791 are the bagré and seuya; the latter the tibo, bartibo, waongo, and nyonnyonsé. Pardon us these barbaric words, but they are impossible to translate.

791 The bagre is the nice, innocuous kind of sorcerer, who helps the 756 poor for a penny or two. He is consulted about everything. For example, what does the future hold? Will fire destroy my huts or won't

791 it? Will my journey be successful? And so forth. If the answer is un-
756 favorable, what must I do to avert misfortune? The bagré are resorted to especially in case of illness, to find out which spirit caused the disease and what the spirit wants. The role of the sorcerers is thus /104/ chiefly to prescribe the sacrifice and to indicate to whom it must be directed. More rarely they prescribe a medicine, but no one puts much faith in such remedies; in most instances, they indicate a negative treatment by stating what is forbidden to the patient.

756 They use the process of elimination to spot the disease. "He has a headache," says the sorcerer. If the reply is negative, he mentions another part of the body. "A stomach-ache ...No. A pain in the arm ...No." He must eventually hit on the right statement. If the sick person is cured following the prescribed sacrifice, the sorcerer is said to be skillful and to be truly in touch with the spirits, and his practice and income grow accordingly. If the patient is not cured or dies, it is either because the sorcerer has cheated or because he does not "see." Another sorcerer is sought out, in the hope of finding a true seer.

Sorcerers are carefully listened to, and everything they prescribe is faithfully carried out. Since they sometimes guess right, since even more often the patient is cured through auto-suggestion because the sorcerer said that he would be cured, since among people who fall ill those who get well are fortunately more numerous than those who die, for all these reasons the prestige of the sorcerers is high and their practice numerous, for it includes all the Mossi. The bara (plural of bagré) are not feared. They are abused when their prescriptions fail, and they are never consulted in the course of trials to find out the name of a culprit.

791 On the other hand, people often ask them who has killed their 695 child, their wife, their livestock, and the bagré sometimes indicates the culprit, with resulting enmity between the wronged party and the individual pointed out as guilty. The latter often resorts to trial by ordeal in self-defense. He himself suggests that he should drink poison, or that he should be burned with a red-hot iron or strangled with braided shreds of straw. If he is innocent, the poison will not harm him, the fire will not burn him, the straws will come apart. Only those who wished to do so resorted to such ordeals, and the judges never made use of this procedure. In trials actual proof had to be submitted.

791 Anyone may become a sorcerer, and those who take up the call
756 are usually poor chaps who have nothing to live on, who do not have the strength to till the soil, or who simply want to live without working. When someone enters the brotherhood of bara, people say that he wants to learn how to be idle, and they laugh about it.

791 During the dry season the country is overrun with hordes of Gourounsi and Nankana, filthy and ragged, who claim to know everything and to possess a charm for every purpose, even to make peanuts grow. Led by a chief who speaks a few words of Mossi, they wander from one village to another, dancing and singing for the nabas like the mountebanks who perform at the wagon door of fortune tellers to attract the public... They are consulted, and they return home well rigged out thanks to the cowries they have gathered in Mossi country.

754 /105/ The seuya or soul-eaters are greatly feared. The death of 774 a native, especially that of a child, is often ascribed to them. They have the power of leaving the human body they inhabit and wandering about everywhere in search of a soul to eat. Fire is their vehicle, and they travel about at night on the will-o'-the-wisps that wander in the fields around the huts. They may be stopped by the trees and thrown to the ground, and those who possess an amulet more powerful than their can drive them away.

The seuya are extremely dangerous, for complete protection against them is impossible. They work by night. Every mortal soul leaves the body often during the night and goes wandering about. Woe to it if it should come upon a seuya. He will pounce upon the soul or put it under a big stone, and the unfortunate body that owns it will fall ill and eventually die. The only remedy is to offer a sacrifice to the tangandé, and the guardian animal of the village will go on a search until it locates and releases the unhappy soul; the tangandé causes it to re-enter the body, and the sick person gets well. If, however, the seuya ate the soul, or if he is in connivance with the tangandé, nothing can be done, and death swiftly ensues.

791 The bagré sorcerers can tell who is a seuya and who is not. Some 754 of them have a tim which permits them to distinguish the seuya in a crowd of people. They need only smoke a pipe, and the eyes of the soul-eating man will redden and fill with tears. Those accused of 754 being seuya usually deny the charge, and to call someone a seuya is [578] one of the worst insults. We have already described the heinous death inflicted on these unfortunate people. Old women especially are 754 accused of eating the souls of little children, and I have known some who boasted of possessing this power!

The tibo are a family of sorcerers. People are born tibo, and the village they inhabit is called Tibin. The naba of this village has the special faculty of discerning all sorts of things, especially whether someone has an enemy, merely by gazing into a gourd filled with water in which a certain charm has been placed. A chicken was previously sacrificed on the gourd. This naba, and he alone, can also kill at a distance. To obtain his protection, it is necessary to bring him a goat, a chicken, millet flour mixed with water, and millet beer. Sooner or later the one designated will die! If it takes too long, the sorcerer always has an excuse handy.

754 The village of Tibin contains a hut where the tibo fetishes are lined 778 in a row. These fetishes consist basically of clay pots containing water, branches, and tree leaves. They are covered with clay gourds of the kind used to cook sauce, and the sacrifices are made on these gourds. It is said that there are snakes and turtles in the pots, but only the tibo sorcerers can see them. Every village has its tibo jar in the naba's household, either at the door of his hut or hanging inside. These tibo are the dwellings of powerful kikirsi.

754 /106/ The bartibo are professional dancers. They have the faculty
791 of distinguishing while dancing those who have the power of killing 535 people, whether poison-givers or seuya. The bartibo themselves claim to have the power of riding the wind and going to kill anyone they wish. They specialize, however, in child-bearing charms for the benefit of sterile women.

754 The waongo also belong to a special family. People are born tibo, 292 bartibo, waongo, or nyonnyonga. For their ceremonies, the waongo don garments made of the bark of baobabs which cover them completely. These strange garments completely conceal the person. A figure may be seen walking, but the person cannot be recognized, and a dreadful illness threatens those who dare to strike it. This is why people, when they see these shapeless forms, run away as fast as they can.
[769] The waongo wear masks when they celebrate the koure (death anniversary) of another waongo. They can ride the wind and inflict diseases; they can even kill if they wish.

754 The nyonnyonsé also ride the wind. The members of this family of sorcerers can kill anyone pointed out to them. People who wish to do away with an enemy go to a nyonnyonga and ask him how much he wants to kill the person they designate. The sorcerer asks for a cow, a sheep, anything whatever, and a chicken. The chicken is sacrificed on the handle of a hatchet, at the end where the iron is hafted, which is pierced with three holes and wrapped with thin cords. Following this sacrifice the sorcerer goes to sleep, and night or day his soul goes off with the wind, head down, hatchet in hand. When it meets the soul of the person who is to be killed, the sorcerer's soul strikes it with the hatchet and kills it, then returns to its own body. It seems that the female sorcerers are the most ferocious!

Anyone who wants it may obtain this power, but a fee is required. The lifespan of these sorcerers increases in proportion to the number of people they have killed, and those who wish to be initiated must offer them the life of one of their children or at least of a relative, for the sorcerers are not satisfied with a stranger or a slave.

It would be interesting to investigate the sacrifices and ceremonies which attend these initiations. It does seem that these tibo, waongo, and nyonnyonsé sorcerers belong to the realm of black magic, for the natives tell dreadful stories about them and list their victims by name. We must confess, however, that we were unable to secure any further trustworthy details about these sorcerers, and that we had no personal contact with any of them. We could not verify all that was told us about them, and therefore we shall not discuss the subject any further. In any case, these sorcerers if questioned would have told us nothing unless they had come to be converted.

754 575 These families of sorcerers are a small minority among the Mossi, and if they can be called closed sects, secret societies, /107/ they are to our knowledge the sole ones extant. In Mossi country, therefore, there are properly speaking no secret societies, nothing like the sects found in Bambara country, (1) and this is a good thing.

1. Abbé Henry, L'ame d'un peuple africain /The Soul of an African People/, Bibliothèque Anthropos 1, 2, passim.

Likewise, there are no initiations, no secret cults celebrated at night, no esoteric doctrines. Is this because the nabas, intent on remaining the sole masters, would not allow a power greater than theirs to develop? Or is it for some other reason?

77/ It would seem that living as they do in the midst of spirits who 157 permeate the air, the earth, the fire, the houses, the fields, and everything else, and who are not always in an accommodating mood, the Mossi would live in a perpetual state of terror since they have everything to fear from the poisoners during the day, the seuya during the night, but this is not the case. The Mossi are a light-hearted people; they like to laugh, and they do not look a bit worried. Once, as I pointed this out to an old man, he replied: "Everyone does not have enemies. And then, why worry about the inevitable?" In fact, those dreadful sorcerers are only to be feared by those who know that they have an enemy and that he can resort to the power of the sorcerers. The spirits are pacified with sacrifices, and if a soul is seized at night by a seuya, the only thing to do is to try one's best to release it.

Furthermore, like so many others, the Mossi easily forget all these beliefs in the course of everyday life and act as if they were masters of their own actions and confident of achieving their goals. Laughingly and playfully they toss sticks and stones at the wind eddies that whirl by, stirring up the dust and dry leaves. And yet, how many spirits and sorcerers may they conceal, each more dreadful than the next! The most ardent believers consult sorcerers and offer sacrifices before every undertaking; the others only bother with sacrifices on the Day of the Dead and when misfortune strikes. Is it not suffering that recalls us to the religious life, because it reminds us of our dependence on a power greater than ours? Here as elsewhere, there are ardent and lukewarm believers; no one seems to be indifferent, and atheism is unknown. They are not yet sufficiently civilized for such ideas!

000 Their conversion to Catholicism seems to be only a matter of time. Messis quidem multa, operarii autem pauci. /The harvest is great, but the workers are few./ May the Master of the Harvest dispatch many workers to this land and hasten the day when the whole of this people will enter the divine fold!

/108/ CONCLUSION

181 By way of conclusion, we shall now attempt to draw in rough outline the mental characteristics of the Mossi as we see them.

181 The Mossi are a mixture of defects and qualities. As a rule they 577 are not overly scrupulous about stealing and lying, but these deficiencies
674 are not so deeply rooted that they could not be corrected with the development of a more refined conscience. The Mossi are thievish because they often have the opportunity to take what belongs to others, especially cowries which are handled in a very intricate manner. It is so easy, when counting cowries, to slip a few into a pocket without the master's notice! There are some highway robbers, who are greatly feared, and many of them are very skillful. They are, of course, a very small minority.

181 Debts are the most frequent cause of theft. As a rule every Mossi
577 is both a debtor and a creditor, and when he borrows only God knows
426 when he will repay. If someone owes him a debt, he borrows, saying, "So-and-So owes me such-and-such an amount; when he pays me back, I will repay you," and he always finds someone who is willing to lend. Who can deny a friend such a favor? In order to be repaid numerous steps will prove necessary, and the day when the sum is refunded will be a happy one. This shortcoming is so ingrained among them that the wealthiest people are not exempt from it, and although able to return what they have borrowed without difficulty, they do not return it.

181 The Mossi lie easily, but they especially practice the method of 577 mental reservation. When questioned, they excel at posing another question, to find out whether their questioner is really acquainted with the facts. If they can mislead one, they do; on the other hand, if they feel that to confess would be to their advantage, they do so even if their confession implicates their accomplices; but they only do so if they are quite sure of coming through safely.

The Mossi are not false or deceitful, but they often fail to tell the truth for fear of displeasing a more powerful person. They try to guess the reply expected by their questioner, and much caution is needed when a precise piece of information is required. They also deceive by telling only half the truth; when queried, they sometimes reply to a question but suppress a detail which would have modified the answer or opened the way to another question.

They are discreet and know how to keep a secret, especially the king's secrets. When they do not wish to tell anything, they say "I don't know." This is not incriminating, and it cuts short any prying question.

181 /109/ The Mossi have passions, and they are the same as ours:
152 ambition, jealousy, gluttony, sloth, lust, and sometimes even avarice, though more rarely. All of these reign among them. Because they cannot control their emotions, cannot resist their evil inclinations, these passions become tyrannical as they grow older. The children are usually quite malleable. The spirit of obedience and complete submission to their parents is instilled into them from such an early age that when taken sufficiently young their character can be trained and they become capable of truly virtuous actions which cost them an effort. When left to themselves, however, they listen only to their own desires and seek out whatever can bring them some satisfaction. This is rather similar to the morality of a slave who fears only the whip.

The Mossi are vain and easily offended by a word they have misunderstood, even when spoken in jest. The practice of humility is far from being one of their habitual pursuits. The Mossi are quarrelsome and testy, especially when they have drunk a little more millet beer than they should have. There are no festivities and few markets of any importance where a quarrel does not arise among some natives, often for no better reason than because someone is jostled in the crowd. The brawl begins with insults, proceeds with clubs, and ends up with knives. No one gives way. A Mossi who gave way in a quarrel would feel dishonored. The man who gives in proves that he is the weakest, and at the first opportunity someone who witnessed the incident will insult him in turn. Why not, since he does not defend himself? This is why a Mossi who has been abused will give in only at the final extremity, especially if his father and mother were insulted, and all cursing soon gets to this point. When drawn apart, the opponents keep up their invectives at a distance. An angry Mossi loses all control. A quarrel often has its aftermath. The Mossi are spiteful, and, especially if they were placed in the weaker position, they will seek revenge in one way or another, so it cannot be said that they got the worst of it.

181 Not only do the Mossi have passions like ours, but like us they also 157 have their temperaments. There are the lymphatic ones, languid and incapable of any effort; there are the nervous people who are always in motion, sensitive to a fault, who weep at the slightest remark; there are the taciturn ones who almost never laugh, who think that no one loves them and that everyone wants to hurt them, who like solitude and

181 who speak little; there are the choleric people, more liable than others 157 to anger, more spiteful, but also endowed with more energy.

Energy is not the chief quality of these people, who are trained by 181 their leaders to blind and faithful obedience. The tight organization
156 we have described has its unhappy consequences, atrophy of the will and destruction of the spirit of initiative. Such is the price. A Mossi cannot resist those who are more powerful. Flexible and almost cowardly before his superiors, he makes up for it with his inferiors and shows great arrogance and disdain toward those who are weaker.

181 /110/ The Mossi do not exercise their will, and they do not exer-
153 cise their thinking faculty. This is not because they lack intelligence, but because they are not accustomed to thought except when their interests are at stake, at which time some of them demonstrate true intelligence and diplomacy.

The Mossi do not question the why of things. While small children in our country like to argue and often perplex us with their questions, the Mossi never ask themselves, "How can this be? Why is it so and not otherwise?" The first answer that comes to mind satisfies them.

This lack of thought is the cause of their lagging civilization, for is it not true that we move forward unceasingly only because we seek to investigate the cause of everything? It also results in a paucity of ideas. Conversations turn mainly upon women, food, and agriculture during the rainy season. Their sphere of ideas is quite restricted, but it is capable of expansion, for the Mossi may be considered quite intelligent.

539 If proverbs express the wisdom of a people, the Mossi certainly do not lack wisdom and often couch it with great subtlety. Permit us to prove this by quoting a few proverbs, culled in the course of conversations by Fr. Thueux, who kindly conveyed them to us and who gathered explanations, since some of them are real enigmas to our European minds.

1. Kota ningri, ka kot' sen kong'ye.
   Give above you, not below.
   (If you give to someone who is more powerful, you will always get something out of it.)
2. Maokasankaré ñarda kon lo'é naobi taoré.
   No matter how much it may hurry, the heel never catches up with the toes.
   (Who is the hen to sing before the rooster?)

346

The Ouagadougou Mission.

343

A Resthouse.

539

3. Pang'sen tu soré, bũm buta mo'en.
When Strength walks the path, Justice steps aside into the bush.
(Might makes right.)

4. Ka suét'nil ba'a, nan nõka.
The dog will grab you if you don't respect its nose.
(Don't laugh, for you might pay for it.)

5. Soam' garedga, wamma n' so.
The master of the hunt is master of the disputed hare.
(Every disputed hare devolves to the master of the hunt.)

6. M'ba di sarabo, n' long'zom.
My father ate the millet mush, he is moving toward the flour.
(He who has drunk will drink /The rich get richer./.)

7. Fo nan ka suk'korgo, l'e kurn sa'a.
You have not yet searched the bag, and you weep about the lightning.
(You cry before you are hit.)

8. Dunna benda, saon beo' kurga.
A breechcloth today is better than trousers tomorrow.
(One thing that is yours, it is said, is worth more than two things you may have in the future /A bird in hand is better than two in the bush./.)

9. Kobré sen kyama, ya kob' kaodga.
A hard bone is a brittle bone.
(Your strength will ultimately betray your courage.)

/111/ 10. Sarab' ki n' beng' a menga.
Mush that spoils turns to water by itself.
(He has done harm to himself.)

11. Yind' kondro, ka bé sokr'ye.
Old songs are not questioned.
(No explanation is needed for familiar things.)

12. Abra kud' ka leb n' tut' bé ias' yé.
An old leopard would not go back there.
(One does not return to a person one has wronged.)

13. Katré yi no'o, ka ginn' yé.
When the hyena was good, one does not turn aside.
(One returns to those places where he was welcomed.)

14. F' sen ka nong' néda, a kurga ya yobro.
If you don't like a man, his trousers are a bag.
(An enemy does everything badly.)

539 15. Sosra sen kaosda, wata ne korg' wenbsego.
When a conversation lingers, the bag is fingered.
(Familiarity breeds contempt.)

16. Pu' pidya, bango luéya.
Full belly, gagged indiscretion.
(Those who need you are discreet).

17. Sad' no' o, yid noa' karga.
A good laugh is better than a chicken leg.
(A warm reception is better than a good meal.)

18. Ned' kon wok' a bâka, ti pemsom yi ye.
You don't cut open your shoulder just for the air to come out.
(Never abandon a friend in need.)

19. Bunbundi ka dod' zalol'n yé.
Those who give their best do not go away empty-handed.
(Work hard, do your best, there is no lack of true wealth.)

181 153 The Mossi likes to talk. Although he has few ideas of his own, if one knows how to make use of his familiar experiences to bring him to a higher level, he follows the reasoning easily, understands quite promptly what is told him, and grasps the train of ideas and even the finer gradations of meaning. In short, he has quite a noteworthy aptitude for assimilation. Often I explained to a chief in broad outline the handling of a gun or the mechanism of a watch or bicycle. If an outsider came by, the naba relayed the explanations to show that he was intelligent and that he had grasped them properly. Indeed, I was often surprised at how well most of them did this.

They like pictures. At first they often hold them upside down, but a few explanations are usually sufficient to make them grasp their meaning. First they recognize familiar things, such as people, horses, dogs, and trees, and they explain them to each other. They come to understand the scene and the reasons for the attitudes of the figures pictured.

181 522 576 /112/ In conversations, when they are not ill at ease, they are lively, merry, and they like to laugh. It is a compliment on their part when they say that someone laughs easily. They are sometimes humorous, they understand innuendoes, but they know how to keep their distance and do not permit themselves any familiarities, even in words, toward their superiors.

181 153 They are very susceptible to teaching. The little slaves raised in Malta learned the French language well, and all those who have met them say that they are quite intelligent. We had children in our school who quicly learned writing, reading, and arithmetic, and who did not forget what they had learned when they got married and had to leave school to work in the fields. Reading remains a pastime to them, and they keep up their knowledge of the French language. We did not notice among them what has so often been pointed out about the little Arabs, who give great promise when young, signs of real intelligence, and who do not live up to this promise when they grow up. The intelligence of the Mossi develops with the years, and this would make it possible to exercise considerable influence over them. 080 Teaching that opens their minds, however, should not cause them to lose their religious sense without contributing anything in its place. Within a short period of time this would bring about the demoralization and downfall of this people who seem capable of rapid progress, and it would be a pity.

538 They like to tell fables, and a volume of Mossi literature could easily be compiled by gathering the historical legends, proverbs, and fables which are to be found among this people. As an example, we shall now recount a few stories we have been told. As in all primitive tales, animals play the role of intelligent actors. The Romaunt of the Rose has long since familiarized us with this kind of literature.

The Bad Vulture and the White Hawk

539 A bald vulture was wandering about the bush. A white hawk came by and said to the vulture, "Why have you nothing to eat?" The vulture replied, "It is true, I have nothing to eat. May God help me find something." The hawk said, "God cannot give people enough food to satisfy their hunger." The vulture answered, "If God does not give me something to eat, I shall not eat."

The white hawk saw a dove alighting on a stick. The hawk swooped down upon her, but the stick pierced his breast and came out behind his head. The vulture came and ate the hawk.

The Monkey and the Turtle

539 The monkey told the turtle to come with him on his walk through the bush. They saw karite fruits, and the monkey climbed into the tree, shook it, and all the fruit fell down. The turtle told him, "Monkey, this fruit is green." The monkey abused the turtle because she had called him by his name, and he feared the dog. Finally the turtle called the monkey, who came down and told her to fetch some fire in order to roast some meat. The turtle /113/ went to get the fire and found a dog lying near the hearth. The dog asked the turtle, "Who sent you to get fire?" The turtle replied, "The monkey sent me to look for fire." The dog told her, "Is this really true?" The turtle said, "It is true." Then the dog pretended to be dead. The turtle grabbed him by the tail, took some fire, and went back to the bush.

The monkey asked, "Is the dog dead, or is he alive?" The turtle said that he was dead. Then the monkey told her to bring the dog. The monkey seized the dog by the legs to lift him and took a stone to break his teeth. But the dog opened his eyes. Then the monkey said to the turtle, "Come and get hold of this chief's son, so I'll be able to get up." The turtle answered that she would not come. The monkey pushed the dog to make him fall, got up, and ran away. But the dog ran after him, caught him and killed him, and the turtle ran away and found a place to hide.

The Goat and the Hyena

A goat had gone to Dori to buy salt. The hyena met him along the way and felt like taking his salt. As soon as she saw him, she became panicky and started running. She found a lion who was lying down because he had a stomach-ache, and she told him that she knew a man who had a medicine for stomach-ache. The hyena went and fetched the goat. The goat came and greeted the lion, who said that he had a stomach-ache and that the hyena had told him that the goat knew a medicine. The goat answered, "Indeed I know a medicine, but it is made with hyena liver." The lion said to the hyena, "Take a piece of your flesh and give it to me." The hyena took a piece of her own flesh and gave it to the goat, who cooked it with salt and gave it to the lion. The lion asked him, "Should we add some more?"

346

Above: The Ouagadougou Church
Below: Inside the Ouagadougou Church

539 The goat replied, "The hyena should give all of herself." The lion told the hyena to remove her own leg. The hyena bit herself. It hurt, and she ran away. The lion caught her and killed her. The goat ran away with his salt and went home.

This is why the hyena attacks livestock.

181 The Mossi are polite. This is the quality that first strikes all those 576 who have dealings with them. We mentioned earlier that the natives always greet one another. In fear of their nabas, the Mossi maintain before them a respectful, almost humiliating posture. They are very attentive to important outsiders and see to it that they should lack nothing a Mossi might wish: a sitting stool and mat are brought in immediately along with the drink; the food is abundant and usually clean and carefully prepared.

181 The Mossi are very hospitable and willingly give alms for its own
574 sake, that is, to poor people who cannot repay. They are generous and always share with their neighbors, and when they have millet beer, they hand it out liberally. No woman who is brewing beer would allow a stranger of some importance to go by without offering him a gourdful, and she is displeased if he refuses. An object once offered is never retrieved, and stratagems must be used to make a native take back under some pretext what he has given away.

576 /114/ The Mossi always offer things with the right hand. It is an insult to pass the gourd or to take it with the left hand. The oldest person in a group helps himself from a dish first, and all those present follow in order of seniority, down to the youngest. On the other 264 hand, the eldest stops eating first, and it is the youngest who eats the 27 last bits and cleans the gourd. When drinking, however, the most eminent person drinks the last drop.

576 Children do not greet their parents in the home, because it is their 574 home; but if a properly brought-up girl sees her mother coming with a full jar or a basket, she rushes to take the load from her, even if the woman is only a few yards from the soukala. When a friend has come to visit, it is considered good manners to carry her load for some distance when she leaves. In any case, visitors are always seen on their way, sometimes to the outskirts of the village.

576 The Mossi do not lack tact and sensibility. When they want something, they first delegate a friend with a gift, then send word that they have a small matter to discuss; sometimes they hint at what it may be and leave without waiting for an answer. Some time later 576 they send their friend once again to indicate what they desire, or they go and bring up the matter themselves.

181 Being sensitive and capable of attachment, even of affection, the 577 Mossi readily acknowledge the good done to them and seek to express their gratitude. If they can offer a gift, such as eggs, millet, honey, a chicken, they offer it unobtrusively. "Take this millet for your horse; give this chicken to your child." If they have nothing to give, they watch for every opportunity to spare their benefactor work or trouble. They take the hoe from him to weed his field or help him lift a load. They show their gratitude as they can, through action rather than words.

181 The Mossi are not lazy. As a rule it may even be said that they 461 like work. Lazy people are pointed at, avoided, and despised. During the winter season everyone must be in the fields from morning to night, men, women and children alike. Only those who cannot work or who have household tasks to perform stay home. The Mossi work very hard at this time of year. During the dry season, on the other hand, they enjoy some leisure. Although most of them weave during these months or travel for trading purposes, while the children cut grass to thatch the roofs and the millet is threshed, it must be said that it is not possible to work in these sun-scorched lands as it is in our temperate European counties. Besides, why work when there are so few outlets? Since the time when the French peace made the roads safe, trade has been on the upsurge. Now, sure of reaping the fruit of their toil, the natives are expanding their crops and every year the fields encroach further upon the bush. All the important villages are surrounded with cultivated fields as far as the eye can reach. If the Mossi do not work more then they do, therefore, it is not from laziness but from /115/ lack of outlets. It seems likely that the country will develop quite rapidly as soon as channels of communication open it to European trade.

181 Such are, in succinct and impartial outline, the qualities and defects of this people. Which of the two preponderate? It is for the reader to judge. In our opinion the Mossi are a very worthy people capable of a brilliant future, but under one condition, that they become Christians. Their most striking characteristics, as we have stated over and again, are their religious sense and their absolute submission to all that bears the stamp of authority.

000 Obviously, our European civilization will undermine both these tendencies at the outset, and what will it bring in their stead? As soon as their education becomes sufficient to make them doubt the existence of spirits and the power of sorcerers, as soon as they come to feel that the only remaining power of their chiefs derives from a White who often lives at a distance of several days' march, but who hears grievances and listens willingly to charges against nabas, and that it is possible to have a naba imprisoned, or at least to cause him serious difficulties, as soon as this happens, the Mossi will hold up their heads. Since they do not lack independence when they are not afraid, their chiefs will lose all their authority, and anarchy will result. When superstitious beliefs lose their grip, the natives will become skeptics, and selfishness will reign supreme with its train of vices.

Christianity alone can avert this moral breakdown by furnishing a sound conception of authority and by replacing the fear of spirits and sorcerers with the fear or rather the love of God. The Church has always been the great initiating force of civilization, which does not consist merely of economic development or greater material well-being, but especially of the moral uplift of thoughts and feelings.

Indeed, the conversion of this people to Catholicism is but a matter of time and of tact and kindness on the part of missionaries. Anything may be obtained from the Mossi by those who gain their love, who win the respect of the nabas and if possible their understanding, if not their trust and affection, by showing regard for them and respecting their respectable side, who explain to all people, old and young, what is expected of them and make them understand their task thoroughly, for they are capable of grasping it, who make sure that those people over whom they possess some authority do carry out their tasks, and who can be firm when necessary.

[197] Alas! The missionaries are too few. To this day, there are but two missions and eight missionaries for the evangelization of 1,500,000 souls. One can only wish to see their numbers increase considerably, for there is no lack of locations favorable to the establishment of missions, and wherever missionaries settle and carry out their work, they will, by spreading Christian civilization, cause the acceptance, or better, the love of the rule of France who sends them /116/ in the name of God. There is need for haste. Islam may become a danger, and in a not too distant future important lines of communication will cut through the land. Railroads are drawing near, bringing with them material development along with the rubbish of our civilization. May they find the heart of our Mossi armored against all the lures of the world, susceptible to all that is beautiful and noble in our European ideas, but sufficiently strong to withstand their disintegrating and corrupting inducements!

Once again, Christianity alone can save them from a bondage much more fearsome than that of the body, the enslavement to every passion, but how will they come to know Christianity if no one teaches them? Who will teach them if there are no preachers? How will preachers evangelize if they have no resources? Oh, who will grant us the means to flood this land with zealous missionaries? Who will add to the royal crown of Christ this handsome jewel which the Divine Master has conquered at the cost of His blood!

2: Mangin FA28 Mossi

R. P. Eugène MANGIN
des Pères Blancs
Missionnaire d'Afrique, à Koupéla (Mossi)

LES MOSSI

Essai sur les us et coutumes du peuple Mossi au Soudan occidental

TIRAGE A PART DE L'ANTHROPOS (1916)

PARIS
AUGUSTIN CHALLAMEL, ÉDITEUR
RUE JACOB, 17
Librairie Maritime et Coloniale

1921

[title page]

A

SA GRANDEUR

MONSEIGNEUR LEMAÎTRE

ÉVÊQUE DE SÉTIF

VICAIRE APOSTOLIQUE DU SOUDAN FRANÇAIS

RESPECTUEUX ET FILIAL HOMMAGE.

[p. i]

[p.ii is blank]

LETTRE
DE
MONSEIGNEUR LIVINHAC
SUPÉRIEUR GÉNÉRAL DES PÈRES-BLANCS
AU
PÈRE EUGÈNE MANGIN.

MAISON-CARRÉE (ALGER)
le 12 février 1914.

Mon cher Père,

Vous avez bien voulu, durant vos dix ans d'apostolat au milieu des Mossi, consacrer vos rares loisirs à étudier les mœurs et coutumes de ce peuple encore peu connu. Vos patientes recherches vous ont fourni les matériaux d'un travail qui, je n'en doute pas, sera lu avec autant de plaisir que de profit, par tous ceux qui s'intéressent à l'ethnographie des mystérieuses régions du centre de l'Afrique.

Je ne puis donc que vous encourager à le publier.

Votre affectionné et tout dévoué en Notre Seigneur

† Leon Livinhac.

[p. iii]
[p. iv is blank]

2: Mangin FA28 Mossi

[p.V]

Table des matières.

	Page
Lettre de sa grandeur Monseigneur LIVINHAC à l'auteur	III
Table analytique des matières	VI
Table des illustrations	XII
Introduction	1—3
Livre premier: Vie politique	4—27
Chapitre premier: Le pays et ses habitants	4—14
Chapitre deuxième: Administration	15—22
Chapitre troisième: Droits des chefs, droits des particuliers	22—27
Livre deuxième: Vie familiale	28—44
Chapitre premier: Constitution de la famille par le mariage	28—34
Chapitre deuxième: La famille	34—44
Livre troisième: Vie active et industrielle	45—76
Chapitre premier: Occupations d'un Mossi	45—52
Chapitre deuxième: Industries et commerce	52—66
Chapitre troisième: La hygiène, la maladie, la mort, la sépulture	65—74
Livre quatrième: Vie religieuse	77—107
Chapitre premier: Dogme et morale	77—89
Chapitre deuxième: Culte	89—98
Chapitre troisième: Magie	98—107
Conclusion	108—116

[p. VI]

Table analytique des matières.

	Page
Introduction	1—3
La conquête du Mossi par la France	1—2
Le Mossi et les nations européennes avant la conquête	2
Méthode de travail et but poursuivi	2—3
Remarque sur le mot «Mossi»	3
Livre premier: Vie politique	4—27
Chapitre premier: Le pays et ses habitants	4—14
Portrait d'un Mossi	4
Relations entre les Gourmantché, les Dagomsé et les Mossi	4
La légende de Yennenga et la conquête du pays actuellement occupé pas les Mossi	5
Description du pays	5
Limites et populations	5
Hydrographie	5
Orographie	6
Cultures	7
Arbres utiles	7—8
Animaux domestiques	8—9
Les chevaux	8—9
Les bœufs	9
Les abeilles	9
Habitations	10—11
Construction d'une case	10
La soukala type	10—11
Les Mossi à la guerre	11—13
Les dernières guerres	11
Naba Ibri et les gens de Kazem'bouanga	12
Gourmantché et Mossi	12
Koupéla contre Tenkodogo	12—13
Mossi et Bousancé	13
L'esclavage au Mossi	13—14
Le servage au Mossi	14
Chapitre deuxième: Administration	15—22
Relations entre les chefs et leurs sujets	15—16
Le salut Mossi	15
Naba et Dimma	15—16
Le grand Conseil du Moro-Naba	16
Division administrative du pays	16
Le conseil des Nabas	16—17
La cour du Moro-Naba	17
Ministres	17
Imam	17
Teng'soba	17
Eunuques	17
Pages et musiciens	17—18
Une sortie du Moro-Naba	18

Page

Intronisation des chefs de village 19
Que faire pour devenir Naba 19
L'intronisation 19
Les chants et la fête 20
Imposition du nom 20
Quelques devises . . . . . 20—21
Nomination des grands ministres 21
Nomination du Naba de Koupéla 21
Election du Moro-Naba . . . . . 21—22
Chapitre troisième: Droits des chefs, droits des particuliers . . . . . 22—27
A qui appartient la terre? 22
L'impôt . . . . . 22—23
Sa répartition 23
Arbitraire dans le prélèvement de l'impôt 23
Circonstances dans lesquelles on doit un cadeau au Naba 23
La guerre, source de profits . . . . . 23—24
La justice 24
Différents tribunaux 24
L'audience 24
Les témoins 24
Le jugement 25
Exécution du jugement: Solidarité de la famille 25
Peines infligées à quelques crimes 25
Vénalité de la justice 25
Punition des voleurs 25
Meurtre . . . . . 25—26
Les sorcières 26
Dégâts causés par les bestiaux 26
Objets trouvés 26
Ravisseur 26
Le Poënaba 26
Conclusion 27
Livre deuxième: Vie familiale . . . . . 28—44
Chapitre premier: Constitution de la famille par le mariage . . . . . 28—34
Comment sont mariées les jeunes filles . . . . . 28—29
La dot . . . . . 29—30
La polygamie 30
Mariage exogamique 30
Les fêtes du mariage 31
Quelques remarques 32
Le divorce 32
Les castes . . . . . 33—34
Chapitre deuxième: La famille . . . . . 34—44
Le chef de famille, ses droits 34
Le père de famille 35
Education des enfants 35
Liberté des enfants . . . . . 35—36
Amour paternel 36
Travail des filles 36
Travail des garçons . . . . . 36—37
Jeux des enfants 37
La danse . . . . . 37—38
Affection des enfants les uns pour les autres 38
Hiérarchie parmi les femmes . . . . . 38—39
Biens appartenant à la femme 39

Page

La femme peut s'absenter 39
La naissance d'un enfant 39
La grossesse 39
Le sort des enfants mal conformés 40
Le sort des jumeaux 40
Imposition du nom . . . . . 40—41
Tatouages 41
Circoncision . . . . . 41—44
Origine 41
L'opération 42
Occupations des nouveaux circoncis 42
Libertés qu'ils prennent 42
Instructions qu'on leur donne . . . . . 42—43
Fin des cérémonies 43
Costume des nouveaux circoncis 43
Leurs danses 44
Livre troisième: Vie active et industrielle . . . . . 45—76
Chapitre premier: Occupations d'un Kossi . . . . . 45—52
Au printemps . . . . . 45—46
En été 46
En automne . . . . . 46—47
Récolte du petit mil 47
Récolte des arachides 47
Provision de paille . . . . . 47—48
En hiver 48
Battage du mil . . . . . 48—49
La chasse 49
Fabrication de la poudre 49
Ruses de chasse 49
Chasses des particuliers . . . . . 49—50
Grandes chasses 50
Les arcs 50
Gibier tué . . . . . 50—51
La pêche . . . . . 51—52
Lieux de pêches 51
Engins de pêche 51
Sacrifices à faire 51
Comment procèdent les indigènes . . . . . 51—52
Pêches des particuliers 52
Travaux divers 52
Chapitre deuxième: Industries et commerce . . . . . 52—64
Industries . . . . . 52—59
Les marchés . . . . . 53—54
Fréquentation 53
Lieu 53
Ce qu'on trouve sur les grands et sur les petits marchés . . . . . 53—54
Tissage . . . . . 54—55
Préparation du coton . . . . . 54—55
Métier à tisser 55
Différentes espèces d'étoffe 55
Teinturerie . . . . . 55—56
Vannerie 56
Chapeaux 56
Panniers 56
Travail du cuir . . . . . 56—57

Page

Bière de mil 57
Savon 57
Huile 57
Kalro 57
Poteries . . . . . 57—58
Procédé de fabrication 58
Cuisson 58
Travail du bois 58
Forgerons 58
Bijoutiers 59
Commerce . . . . . 59—64
Les voyages et les caravanes . . . . . 59—60
Aléas à courir 60
Ponts et passeurs 60
Cherté des vivres 60
Les intermédiaires . . . . . 60—61
Commerce avec la Gold Coast et le Togo 61
Extension du commerce . . . . . 61—62
Commerce avec le nord 62
Commerce avec les autres pays 62
Comment voyagent les indigènes . . . . . 62—63
Le portage 63
Le retour . . . . . 63—64
Les Européens commerçants 64
Chapitre troisième: La hygiène, la maladie, la mort, la sépulture . . . . . 65—76
Les songes 65
L'hygiène des Mossi 65
La propreté 65
Noms donnés aux enfants 65
Comment prendre des nouvelles de la santé 65
Causes des maladies 66
Soins donnés aux malades 66
La variole 66
Remèdes employés . . . . . 66—67
Conduite tenue vis-à-vis des malades 67
La mort . . . . . 67—69
Avant la mort 67
Après la mort . . . . . 67—68
La tombe . . . . . 68—69
Habits de deuil 69
La sépulture . . . . . 69—72
La sépulture d'un homme ou d'une femme mariés . . . . . 70—71
La sépulture des Nabas . . . . . 71—72
La sépulture des jeunes gens 72
La sépulture des petits enfants 72
La sépulture de ceux qui sont morts d'accident 72
La première kourita . . . . . 72—73
La seconde kourita 73
Kourita du Moro-Naba . . . . . 73—74
Le kouré 74
D'un homme ou d'une femme mariés . . . . . 74—75
Des jeunes gens 75
Des Nabas 75
L'héritage . . . . . 75—76

Page

Livre quatrième: Vie Religieuse . . . . . 77—107
Chapitre premier: Dogme et morale . . . . . 77—89
Combien il est difficile d'obtenir des renseignements sur ces matières . . 77
Méthode employée 77
Dogme . . . . . 77—78
Dieu 78
Croyance à l'existence de Dieu 78
Nature de Dieu, son unité . . . . . 78—79
Dieu et le soleil . . . . . 79—80
Les phénomènes de la nature 80
Les génies . . . . . 80—84
Les tisé 80
Leur nature 80
Leurs relations avec les hommes . . . . . 80—81
Comment se défendre contre eux 81
Les kikirsi 81
Leur nature et leurs goûts 81
Les kikirsi et les jumeaux . . . . . 81—82
Leurs relations avec les hommes 82
Le tangandé 83
Sa nature 83
Les relations avec les hommes 83
Le bois sacré 84
Origine 84
Tangandé et Totem 84
L'âme 84
Sa nature . . . . . 84—88
Ame et totem . . . . . 84—85
L'âme et le corps 85
Causes de la maladie et de la mort . . . . . 85—86
Châtiments après la mort 86
Survivance 86
Leur état après la mort . . . . . 86—87
Les défunts et les vivants 87
Réincarnation 87
Morale . . . . . 87—89
Morale générale 87
Interdictions . . . . . 88—89
Kisgou perpétuels . . . . . 88—89
Kisgou personnels 89
Chapitre deuxième: Culte . . . . . 89—98
Division 89
Culte 89
Le sacrifice 89
A qui et dans quelles conditions sacrifier 90
Lieux du sacrifice 90
Qui peut sacrifier 90
Différents sacrifices . . . . . 90—94
Mand'zallé, formule du sacrifice . . . . . 90—92
Mand'lingdem 93
Mand'moukou 93
Mauvais sacrifice 94
Ce que l'on offre en sacrifice 94
Le vœu 94
Prière des musulmans . . . . . 94—95

2: Mangin FA28 Mossi

Page

Bénédiction et malédiction 95
Fêtes . . . . . 95—98
La fête des morts 95
La kibsa . . . . . 96—97
Le naky . . . . . 97—98
Le nakobo 98
Chapitre troisième: Magie . . . . . 98—107
Les superstitions 98
Amulettes et talismans 99
Exemples de quelques superstitions . . . . . 99—101
Les nombres 3 et 4 100
Les cheveux rasés 100
La croix . . . . . 100—101
Les tim 101
Remèdes véritables 101
Remèdes superstitieux 101
Quand un chasseur a tué une hyène . . . . . 101—102
La pluie et la foudre 102
Qui indique les remèdes 103
Empoisonneurs 103
Les sorciers 103
Ceux qui le deviennent 103
Bara . . . . . 103—104
Seuyan 105
Ceux qui le sont de naissance 105
Tibo 105
Bartibo 106
Waongo 106
Nyonnyonsé 106
Magie noire 106
Pas de sociétés secrètes . . . . . 106—107
Conclusion 107
Conclusion . . . . . 108—116
Défauts d'un Mossi 108
Sa manière de voler 108
Sa manière de mentir 108
Ses passions 109
Sa susceptibilité, son irascibilité 109
Son tempérament 109
Manque de réflexion 110
Qualités d'un Mossi 110
Intelligence 110
Quelques proverbes . . . . . 110—111
Facilité d'assimilation 111
Amour des images 111
Gaieté 112
Instruction possible 112
Quelques fables . . . . . 112—113
Politesse 113
Sensibilité et délicatesse 114
Amour du travail 114
Conclusion générale . . . . . 115—116

[p. xii]

Table des illustrations.

Page

Introduction: La brousse aux pays mossi (planche) 2

Livre premier: Jeunes Mossi (planche) 4
Les falaises de Bandiagara (Soudan) (figure) 6
L'entrée dans la brousse (figure) 6
En haut: Un baobab (planche) 8
En bas: Village mossi (planche) 8
En haut: Le salut Mossi (planche) 14
En bas: Un naba et ses cavaliers (planche) 14
Un chef de province mossi (planche) 16
Le Moro-Naba des Mossi (planche) 16
En haut: Le Moro-Naba. Derrière lui: son frère, âgé d'une douzaine d'années et chef d'une grande province; à ces côtés: deux pages 18
En bas: Bullom-Naba entouré de ses pages. — Debout derrière lui: ses deux enfants chrétiens (planche) 18
En haut: Un naba et ses gens (planche) 22
En bas: Un groupe de vieillards mossi (planche) 22

Livre deuxième: Les grands tambours chez les Mossi (planche) 34
Danse de fillettes mossi (planche) 34
Danseurs mossi (planche) 38
Femmes mossi tatouées (planche) 40
Type de jeune homme mossi tatoué (planche) 40

Livre troisième: Danseur mossi avec son cimier fait de cauris (planche) 42
En haut: Porteurs d'eau. — Battage du mil (planche) 46
En bas: Jeunes gens revenant de la brousse avec des bottes de paille. — Le mil battu est vanné. Au fond: Greniers à mil (planche) 46
En haut: Intérieur d'une soukala. — Les habitants d'une soukala (planche) 52
Au milieu: Porteurs. — Tisserand (planche) 52
En bas: Place d'un marché (planche) 52
En haut: Cuisson du Sarabo. — Greniers à mil (planche) 60
En bas: La cuisine en plein air. — Un bœuf porteur (planche) 60

Livre quatrième:
En haut: L'ensemble de la Mission de Ouagadougou (planche) 110
En bas: Un campement (planche) 110
En haut: Clocher de l'église de Ouagadougou (planche) 114
En bas: L'intérieur de l'église de Ouagadougou (planche) 114

Les Mossi.

Essai sur les us et coutumes du peuple Mossi au Soudan Occidental.

Par le P. Eugène Mangin, P. B., missionnaire d'Afrique à Koupéla (Mossi).

Introduction.

Le 1er septembre 1896, le lieutenant Voulet, envoyé par le colonel de Trentinian pour occuper le Mossi et le Gourounsi, entrait à Ouagadougou, capitale du Mossi. Naba Wobro, l'empereur régnant, s'enfuit et son armée fut dispersée. L'heure était critique pour notre Soudan. Les négociations entamées au début de cette même année entre la France et l'Angleterre d'une part, et l'Allemagne et la France d'autre part venaient d'être rompues. M. Terrier dans son beau livre: «L'expansion française et la formation territoriale», que nous ne faisons que résumer, décrit ainsi la situation: «Les Allemands tenaient à pousser le Togo jusqu'au Niger en coupant notre Dahomey du Soudan et les Anglais nous refusaient l'accès du bas Niger et la domination du Borgou. Le Dahomey devait, si ces exigences eussent été admises, devenir une simple enclave côtière[1].» Déjà les Allemands occupaient le marché très important de Sansané Mango et poussaient à l'est vers le Niger; tandis que Ferousson, mulâtre, au service de l'Angleterre, montait de la Gold Coast vers le nord, et que la compagnie royale du Niger s'emparait de Boussa, de Say et des pays environnants, pays contestés et dont nous n'avions pas entrepris la conquête par respect pour les négociations en cours. Quand ces nouvelles furent connues en France, grâce à la brillante mission du lieutenant de vaisseau Hourst, le colonel de Trentinian, d'accord avec le gouverneur du Dahomey, M. Ballot, résolut de prendre possession des territoires qui permettraient de réunir le Soudan au Dahomey, au Niger et à la Côte d'Ivoire.

Le capitaine Destenave, résident à Bandiagara, notre poste le plus avancé dans cette région, reçut l'ordre de se porter en avant et d'occuper Ouahigouya, qui est Mossi, mais se heurta à la résistance du naba de Yako et se vit refuser l'accès de Ouagadougou. En mai 1896, le colonel de Trentinian donna pour mission au lieutenant Voulet de devancer au Mossi les Anglais qui s'avançaient par le sud, et étaient aidés par Samory et surtout par son fils Sanrankégny Mory qui occupait le Gourounsi, puis de réunir le Mossi au Dahomey par le Gourma. La colonne Voulet forte d'une cinquantaine de tirailleurs quitte Bandiagara le 30 juillet, passe à Ouahigouya, soumet le naba de Yako et entre à Ouagadougou le 1er septembre. Le 20 janvier 1897, naba Wobro, qui a refusé d'entrer en pourparler avec Voulet, est destitué et Kouka Kountou, membre de la famille du Moro Naba, est intrônisé à sa place et prend le nom de naba Sigri. Il signe avec Voulet un traité de protectorat qui donne à la France tous les territoires relevant de l'autorité du Moro Naba.

Le Mossi conquis, il fallait arrêter les Anglais au sud et les Allemands à l'est. Voulet apprend en effet que le capitaine Donald Stewart, résident anglais à Coumassie, marche sur Tenkodogo. Il s'y rend lui même, le rejoint le 17 février et obtient que l'Anglais se retirera à 120 km plus au sud, en dehors des territoires Mossi et Manpoursi en raison des traités passés avec les chefs de ces pays par l'officier français qui lui même abandonnera Tenkodogo, laissant aux gouvernements le soin de décider à qui restera cette localité.

[1] L'œuvre de la troisième République en Afrique Occidentale, p. 301.

Pendant ces pourparlers, VOULET entend dire qu'une troupe armée, venant de l'est, s'avance vers le Mossi. Il quitte Tenkodogo, écrit au chef inconnu de la mission qu'il a à se retirer parce que tous ces territoires appartiennent à la France de par les traités que nous avons signés avec les chefs indigènes et lui même se dirige, avec ses troupes, sur Fada N'Gourma, s'empare au passage de Koupéla dont la population affolée fuit de toutes parts, et arrive le 27 février à Tigba, où il trouve le capitaine VERMEESCH, envoyé par le capitaine BAUD et venant du Dahomey. Ainsi les Anglais devaient rester au sud, les Allemands dans le Togo, et le Soudan était réuni au Dahomey.

Le pays ainsi conquis n'était pas ignoré en France et de très brillantes missions l'avaient déjà fait connaître. BINGER surtout par son ouvrage: «Du Niger au golfe de Guinée», attira l'attention sur ces populations et montra en Boukary Koutou, ce qu'était un chef Mossi intelligent, ouvert, gai, en même temps fort autoritaire et exactement obéi de ses gens. Pourquoi faut-il que ce même Boukary Koutou, Moro Naba sous le nom de Naba Wobro, reçut si mal le docteur CROZAT et MONTEIL, et refusat d'entrer en conversation avec VOULET? Ce manque de sens politique lui coûta sa couronne. BINGER avait été précédé à Ouagadougou, en 1885, par le docteur KRAUSE qui fut le premier Européen admis à entrer dans la capitale; VON FRANÇOIS, venant du Togo allemand, fut arrêté au premier village mossi en 1887. Nous venons de voir que BINGER put parvenir, non sans difficulté, à Ouagadougou, en 1888. Il y séjourna quelque temps, plus longtemps qu'il n'aurait voulu, et c'est grâce à son admirable énergie qu'il put poursuivre sa mission vers le sud. Le docteur CROZAT, en 1890, fut reçu une première fois par le Moro Naba, mais il dut quitter rapidement Ouagadougou. L'année suivante, MONTEIL ne put même pas parvenir jusqu'à la capitale. Il fut arrêté à quelques kilomètres et obligé de partir précipitamment. Le mulâtre FERGUSSON, au service des Anglais, passa par Tenkodogo, Nyaogo, Kombisgri, et gagna Ouagadougou. VON CARNAP, Allemand, venant de Sansané-Mango, visita Tenkodogo et Koupéla en 1897.

Telles sont, rapidement ésquissées, les relations certaines que les Mossi eurent avec les Européens. Etaient-ils, dès le XVIe siècle, connus de Jean II de Portugal; et même de Jean III? Viennent-ils de très loin dans l'est, du Sokoto, du Bornou, voire même de Ouadai? Autant de questions qui nous semblent très mystérieuses, étant donné l'état actuel de nos connaissances sur ces peuples de la boucle du Niger qui n'ont aucune tradition écrite. M. le lieutenant MARC discute longuement les différentes opinions à ce sujet dans son livre: «Au pays des Mossi» (chap. 1 et 7), et M. DELAFOSSE, dans son ouvrage sur le Haut Sénégal et Niger (spécialment dans le tome 2), donne à son tour son opinion. Nous nous en tiendrons ici aux traditions recueillies auprès des indigènes.

En effet, notre méthode de travail a été d'interroger les indigènes en aussi grand nombre que possible, et de recueillir leurs dires sur tous les sujets qui nous ont paru pouvoir intéresser. Nous nous sommes gardés d'«interpréter» ces faits. Nous avons laissé les indigènes causer, raconter leur histoire, décrire

Anthropos IX.

La brousse aux pays mossi.

[facing p. 2]

2: Mangin FA28 Mossi

leurs mœurs, expliquer, comme ils les entendent, les phénomènes de la nature et de la vie. Notre rôle s'est borné à noter au jour le jour ce que nous entendions, à provoquer des explications, à mettre toutes ces notes en ordre. Mais il est bien évident que parfois, nos questions sont restées sans réponses. Nous les laisserons telles dans cet ouvrage. N'ayant aucun système à défendre, nous espérons avoir pu rester assez objectif.

Heureux serons-nous pourtant si ce modeste travail peut apporter sa petite contribution à cette étude dont on parle tant aujourd'hui, de l'histoire des religions. Si par lui, l'ethnographie s'enrichit de documents nouveaux; si l'indigène, mieux connu de tous, missionnaires, administrateurs, officiers, colons, négociants, est par là même mieux compris; si le rapprochement entre nous et lui en est facilité. Le chemin de fer bientôt va ouvrir et profondément modifier le pays. Hâtons-nous, alors qu'il en est encore temps, de saisir ce peuple dans sa mentalité primitive. Un séjour de dix années consécutives au Mossi, dont sept à Koupéla, une connaissance de la langue suffissante pour tenir une conversation courante, sur quelque sujet que ce soit, avec les indigènes, des relations plus intimes que notre ministère nous amenait à avoir avec les habitants des villages: autant de circonstances qui nous ont permis de recueillir des documents que nous pouvons considérer comme très approchés de la vérité. Nous reconnaîtrons cependant facilement que des erreurs ont pu se glisser ça et là. Il est si difficile d'obtenir un renseignement précis, et plusieurs indigènes, interrogés sur le même sujet, nous ont fait souvent des réponses différentes. Il nous a fallu choisir, et bien que penchant toujours vers le récit qui nous semblait offrir le plus de garanties, nous avons pu nous tromper.

Il ne faut pas oublier non plus que notre but n'est pas de donner un recueil complet de tous les us et coutumes des Mossi. Ce n'était pas possible, c'eût été fastidieux et ce n'était point nécessaire pour donner de ce peuple une idée d'ensemble assez exacte, croyons nous. La vérité nous oblige à dire que ces notes ont été réunies pour la plus part dans la province de Koupéla et sentent le terroir. Nos confrères de Ouagadougou ont bien voulu nous donner quelques renseignements; mais nous sommes restés sans documents pour tout le Yatenga. Si Dieu nous le permet, nous compléterons ces notes dans un ouvrage d'ensemble.

Avant d'entrer dans notre sujet, une remarque s'impose. On a pris l'habitude de parler des Mossi, du mossi, de la langue mossi, comme si ce mot était invariable; nous suivrons la coutume et écrirons toujours «Mossi», invariable au singulier et au pluriel, bien que le vrai nom de ce peuple soit Moara, pluriel Mosé. De même, nous avons orthographié les noms géographiques comme le fait l'administration afin de ne pas avoir l'air de vouloir tout réformer.

Qu'il nous soit permis de remercier ici tous ceux qui de près ou de loin ont bien voulu nous aider dans ce travail et surtout ceux qui nous ont communiqué les intéressantes photographies qui l'illustrent.

LIVRE PREMIER.

Vie politique.

Chapitre premier. — Le pays et ses habitants.

Plutôt grand que petit, l'œil vif, les cheveux crépus, le nez épaté, les lèvres grosses sans être lippues, les traits parfois assez fins, les joues largement marquées de trois barres parallèles qui commencent aux tempes et descendent jusqu'au menton et d'une quatrième qui part du nez et tombe perpendiculairement sur les trois premières, les membres bien musclés, ni noir d'ébène, ni cuivré, mais d'une couleur intermédiaire, le Mossi sans être un beau type de Noir, n'a rien de désagréable.

Quand il a revêtu ses habits de fête, son large pantalon à la zouave bleu foncé, son ample veste de bandes d'étoffe rayées bleu et blanc qui retombe légèrement sur les bras, qu'il porte sur son épaule droite son doré, sorte d'arme composée d'une tige de fer un peu courbée, aplatie à l'une de ses extrémités et terminée de l'autre par un anneau qui s'emmanche perpendiculairement à un bâton court, il fait vraiment bonne impression et a l'air décidé. Souvent son poignet est orné d'un bracelet de cuivre, presque toujours il porte à la ceinture un couteau rigide, enfermé dans un fourreau en cuir que termine un pompon fait de lanières de cuir auxquelles sont attachés des cauris. Il a la tête très près de son bonnet, composé de deux losanges d'étoffe de couleur, cousus jusqu'à la moitié, les deux pointes libres peuvent couvrir les oreilles et les joues mais le plus souvent sont relevées en forme de tiare. Grand batailleur, il joue facilement du couteau ou frappe avec son doré qui devient alors un casse-tête dangereux.

Le Mossi est un peuple conquérant. Il n'a pas toujours habité le pays qu'il occupe actuellement. Mais d'où vient-il? Les vieux interrogés disent tous qu'ils viennent de Gambaka (Côte d'or anglaise) et que c'est pour cela que le Moro Naba Wobro, détrôné par la conquête française, s'était réfugié à Gambaka; c'est pour cela qu'à la mort de tout Moro Naba, on prévient le naba de Gambaka et on envoie en cadeau les savates, le bonnet et le bâton de commandement du défunt qui sont déposés sur la tombe de l'aïeul. Des cadeaux sont aussi envoyés au naba de Fada N'Gourma que les Mossi appellent «Bingo». A la mort du Moro Naba, le chef de Fada reçoit son arc et son carquois, les deux meilleurs chevaux sellés du défunt, ses deux plus jeunes femmes, douze bœufs, un captif, trois barres de sel. Par contre, quand le naba de Fada meurt, on n'envoie rien au Moro Naba, mais on fait don de son meilleur cheval au chef de Gambaka.

Il y a donc eu des relations entre les Gourmantché de Fada, les Mossi et les Dagomse de Gambaka. Les Gourmantché disent venir du Bornou. Le premier naba de Fada était esclave du naba de Bornou. Les Gourmantché ont été maîtres de la région jusqu'à Dori. Les Peuls sont venus et les ont chassés de cette contrée après une longue guerre. Au contraire, les Gourmantché ne se battaient ni avec les gens de Gambaka, ni avec les Mossi. S'il y a eu des luttes avec ces derniers, c'étaient des guerres civiles: le naba de Fada demandait aux Mossi de l'aider contre ses propres sujets.

Jeunes Mossi.

Anthropos IX.

[facing p. 4]

2: Mangin FA28 Mossi

Voici comment les Mossi racontent la conquête du pays. Une fille du chef de Gambaka, appelée Yennenga, eut, du chasseur Riala, un fils qui reçut le nom de Weddaogo. Ce dernier a donné le jour à Zougourana qui prit Tenkodogo et s'y installa; le fils de celui-ci, naba Oubri, s'empara de la région de Ouagadougou et devint maître de tout le pays, cependant que le fils aîné de Yennenga s'était emparé de Fada, fondant la dynastie actuelle, mais n'avait pu imposer aux habitants ni sa langue, ni ses tatouages. Ainsi s'expliquent les cadeaux envoyés à Gambaka, au berceau de la race et au naba de Fada, l'aîné de la famille. Les habitants autochtones, chassés par l'invasion mossi, se retirèrent en partie vers le sud-est et sont devenus les Bousansé et les Gourounsi, tandis que les autres, restant dans le pays, furent assimilés par les Mossi et apprirent la langue des conquérants. Un fils de naba Oubri, naba Namendé, s'est emparé de Bélousa et de son territoire.

Sur ces entrefaites, le naba de Tenkodogo mourut, ne laissant qu'un fils qui lui succéda. Sa famille demanda alors au naba de Bélousa de leur donner son propre fils qui devint le Kourita — représentant après la mort — du défunt naba de Tenkodogo. Kourita voulut retourner chez son père à Bélousa, mais ce dernier lui fit dire de ne pas revenir, et Kourita s'arrêta à Zaoré, à une journée de marche de Bélousa et où résidèrent ses successeurs immédiats. Ce n'est que plus tard que cette dynastie vint s'installer à Koupéla après avoir battu et chassé, avec l'aide du naba de Bélousa, les descendants de naba Guigma qui étaient installés à Gobro, près de Soulgou. Ainsi est née la province de Koupéla, et c'est pourquoi le naba de Koupéla doit recevoir l'investiture de son suzerain, le naba de Bélousa.

Tandis que ces événements se passaient dans l'est, une des sœurs du Moro Naba, préposée à la garde des fétiches tibo, se disputa avec son frère et se sauva vers l'ouest jusqu'à Ouahigouya. Cette région est ainsi devenue mossi et prit le nom de terre de Ya[1].

Le pays ainsi conquis s'étend, dans la boucle du Niger, environ entre le 11° 30 et le 13° 30 parallèle et du 2° au 5° latitude ouest de Paris. Ses plus proches voisins sont, au nord, le Macina et les Habés; au nord-ouest, les Samos; à l'ouest et au sud-ouest, les Gourounsi; au sud, les Nancana; au sud-est, les Bousansé; à l'est, les Gourmantché; au nord-est, les Peuls de Dori. La population mossi a été évaluée à 1,500.000 habitants, auxquels il faut ajouter les Yarsé, qui sont des Mandés complètement assimilés aux Mossi, les Peuls pasteurs, les Haoussa qui ferment de petites colonies près des grands centres commerciaux de la région et quelques groupes moins importants. Nous ne nous occuperons de ces populations qu'en tant qu'elles sont en relation avec les Mossi dans le territoire desquels elles sont disséminées.

Deux grandes rivières traversent le pays du nord-est au sud-est. Ce sont les deux Volta, la blanche et la rouge. En dehors de ces deux artères plus importantes, bien qu'elles ne coulent pas toute l'année, on rencontre un très grand nombre de marigots, vrais torrents infranchissables après un orage, mais sans eau pendant la saison sèche, de novembre à juin. C'est généralement dans le lit de ces marigots que les femmes creusent les puits peu profonds qui fournissent l'eau du ménage.

[1] Pour plus de détails voir lieutenant MARC, l. c. chap. 7, et surtout DELAFOSSE: «Haut Sénégal et Niger», 1re série, tome 2, p. 305 et suiv.

Il n'y a pas de hautes montagnes au Mossi. En arrivant par le nord, on traverse la belle falaise de Bandiagara et le pays montagneux des Habés. Le Les falaises de Bandiagara (Soudan).

L'entrée dans la brousse.

pays mossi commence presque au pied de la falaise. La région du nord-ouest est cependant assez accidentée et renferme le pic Pilimpikou; les deux Volta, surtout la Blanche, sont bordées de collines, mais on peut dire d'une façon générale que le Mossi est un pays plat. C'est la brousse classique du Soudan, avec ses petits arbustes et ses hautes herbes, entremêlées de cailcédrats, de tamariniers, de fromagers, d'énormes troncs de baobabs, plus épaisse sur les bords des Volta, plus clairsemée autour des villages.

* * *

Le pays est très suffisamment fertile et nourrit sans peine ses habitants. Les différentes variétés de mil y poussent bien, spécialement le petit mil blanc (pennisetum spicatum) qui, écrasé et bouilli, fait le fond de la nourriture; le sorgho, ou gros mil rouge, qui sert à la fabrication de la bière, si réputée du pays; c'est aussi ce mil que mangent les chevaux, bien qu'ils préfèrent le gros mil blanc. Autour des cases, dans les terrains engraissés par les dépôts journaliers, le maïs vient bien; c'est une grande ressource quand la provision de mil de l'année précédente commence à s'épuiser et que la récolte de l'année n'est pas encore mûre. On entoure les champs de maïs d'une double ligne de sorgho et souvent d'une double rangée de bérensé, plante fibreuse, sorte de chanvre, dont les indigènes se servent pour faire des cordes. Quand le maïs a été récolté, on le remplace par du tabac dont on a précédemment préparé les semis. Enfin les fossées qui ont été creusées lors de la construction des cases et tous les endroits un peu humides sont occupés par des gombos, la corne grecque, très appréciée dans la sauce.

Pendant la saison des pluies, aucun coin de terre ne reste inoccupé autour des villages, et quand le mil rouge est mûr et que les épis se rejoignent de chaque côté du sentier, la circulation devient difficile. Le toit même des cases sert de support à toutes les espèces de calebassiers qui donnent aux ménagères leurs calebasses qui servent autant que nos plats, nos assiettes, nos verres et nos cuvettes; aux voyageurs, leurs gourdes; aux priseurs, leurs tabatières; aux sorciers, leur ustensile pour appeler les génies, tandis que les grosses calebasses dont sont faits les tambours croissent à travers les pieds de maïs. Dans les bas-fonds, auprès des marigots, là où l'eau séjourne, des rizières sont aménagées, mais le riz est un aliment de luxe, d'une culture difficile à cause des soins qu'elle demande; les indigènes n'en usent que les jours de fête ou quand ils veulent honorer un hôte de marque. Le coton se sème entre les pieds de gros mil rouge, dans les endroits humides et se récolte beaucoup plus tard. Les arachides et les pois occupent aussi une partie des terrains cultivés tandis que les haricots courent à terre entre les pieds de petit mil. Le piment, le sésame, l'indigo, l'igname, le manioc, la patate, et un petit tubercule, le coleus coffini que les Européens appellent oussounifing ou fabirama, et qui peut — à la rigueur — tenir lieu de pomme de terre, sont cultivés dans les terrains qui leur sont favorables.

Les champs renferment généralement des karité (butyrospermum parkii) arbre précieux, car les fruits dont la chair fraîche et légèrement sucrée, offre une friandise appréciée, renferment un noyau qui produit le beurre de karité, la graisse la plus généralement employée pour cuire les aliments et faire le savon. Autour des villages, souvent même dans l'intérieur des villages, les néré (parkia africana) produisent leurs gousses allongées; l'écorce, écrasée dans l'eau, donne un enduit qui rend plus ferme le sol des cases. La farine, délayée dans l'eau, est une boisson rafraîchissante et se mange, et les graines servent à la confection du kalre, le soumbara des Bambaras, qui entre dans toutes les sauces un peu soignées. Les dioubalé et les fromagers ou kapokiero offrent leur ombre aux tisserands, nombreux au Mossi, et aux causeurs plus nombreux encore. Le bambou pousse bien dans les régions humides du sud, et le palmier à huile se rencontre parfois. Par contre, la liane à caoutchouc n'a pas encore été introduite.

Les poules, de petite taille, courent dans toutes les directions dans les villages, en compagnie des pintades domestiques, et dans la brousse, à proximité des habitations, on rencontre partout des gamins qui gardent chèvres et moutons: c'est l'occupation du jeune âge ici, à l'heure où leurs contemporains de chez nous apprennent l'alphabet. Les ovidés les plus communs sont de petite taille; les moutons ont le poil court. Parfois, sourtout dans les villages un peu importants où se tient un marché, on peut voir des chèvres et des moutons hauts sur pattes, aux cornes longues et vrillées, mais ce sont des animaux importés; ils viennent du nord-est et sont engraissés pour être vendus comme viande de boucherie. Le grand chic pour une femme aisée de naba est de se faire suivre par un mouton de race touareg bien lavé et bien blanc. L'animal est nourri avec des déchets de mil, de bouillie de haricots, sa maîtresse lui présente souvent un morceau de sel à lécher, en un mot il est très soigné et bien gras; un jour de grande fête, il agrémentera le menu.

Les cases sont généralement gardées par des chiens très ordinaires, souvent rageurs, mais peureux, un bâton les met en fuite. Ils servent sourtout à la chasse, la grande occupation des Mossi pendant la saison sèche. Les canards domestiques se voient parfois chez les nabas, ainsi que les pigeons, mais ce ne sont pas des volatiles répandues et à la portée de tous. Enfin, presque tous les groupes de cases possèdent des chats, propriété de la femme et d'un abord difficile parce qu'à demi sauvages. Les ânes sont de taille moyenne mais robustes et résistants; ils peuvent pendant plusieurs jours consécutifs, porter des charges de soixante kilos et sont d'un précieux secours pour ceux qui se livrent au commerce des étoffes, des kolas et du sel. Il n'est guère de village qui ne possède un certain nombre d'ânes.

Les chevaux sont assez répandus dans tout le pays, et tout naba un tant soit peu important possède un ou plusieurs chevaux. Il y a deux races de chevaux très distinctes et que BINGER décrit ainsi: «La plus commune a, sans en avoir les qualités, tous les caractères du cheval arabe: tête fine, encolure courte, membres grêles et croupe fuyante, crinière et queue très longue. Les robes que l'on rencontre le plus souvent sont bai, alezan, gris isabelle et rouan; ces trois dernières ont toutes du ladre au chanfrein. Il est rare de rencontrer des chevaux sans balzane. L'autre race n'a rien du cheval arabe. C'est une forte et belle bête, ayant les caractères de notre cheval de dragon, environ 1 m 57 cm à 1 m 62 cm. Il se distingue par une tête fine et bien attachée, les membres inférieurs forts, bien musclés, un sabot large et la corne bien consistante, un beau poitrail large, la crinière et les crins de la queue courts. Les robes les plus communes sont différents bai et alezan[1].» Mais les

[1] BINGER, Du Niger au Golfe de Guinée, tome I, p. 485. Il semble cependant exagéré d'attribuer 1 m 57 cm au cheval mossi. Un cheval de 1 m 52 cm est un grand cheval ici et la

[facing p. 8]

En haut: Un baobab.
En bas: Village mossi.

Mossi, habitués sans doute à se procurer leur cavalerie par razzias, ne s'occupent guère d'élevage, aussi le nombre des chevaux diminue, et ce pays, réputé naguère pour ses montures, risque dans un avenir, qui n'est peut-être pas très éloigné, d'en manquer.

Malheureusement d'ailleurs les chevaux ne vivent pas dans toutes les régions, et Ouagadougou en particulier leur est funeste, sans qu'il ait été possible, à ma connaissance, d'établir la véritable cause de cette insalubrité. Les indigènes l'attribuent à l'eau, et il est un fait certain c'est que les chevaux abreuvés aux puits, se portent mieux que ceux qui le sont au marigot, et que les chevaux se portent fort bien à quelques kilomètres de Ouagadougou. Les Européens ont une tendance à attribuer cette mortalité à la tsétsé. Les deux opinions peuvent se concilier, car la tsétsé aime les endroits humides, et d'autre part, les puits de Ouagadougou contiennent du sel de magnésie qui purge les chevaux et enraye ainsi la maladie.

Les Peuls ont de beaux troupeaux de bovidés, les uns assez petits et sans bosse, les petits bœufs, les autres de belle taille et avec bosse, les zébus. Les commerçants se servent aussi de zébus pour le portage. Beaucoup de ces bœufs appartiennent aux Mossi, qui gardent rarement leurs troupeaux eux-mêmes et les confient aux Peuls pasteurs, qui retiennent le lait en paiement: une vache adulte en fournit deux à quatre litres par jour dans la bonne saison. Mais les gardiens savent tirer parti de cette quasi servitude. Quand une bête meurt ce n'est jamais une des leurs, et si le propriétaire du troupeau vient à mourir sans indiquer à ses héritiers le lieu où se trouve son troupeau et le nombre de ses bêtes, les Peuls se gardent bien de déclarer le troupeau à eux confié. Autrefois ils étaient un peu plus consciencieux qu'aujourd'hui, parce qu'ils craignaient les représailles, mais maintenant ils bénissent l'occupation française.

Les bœufs sont aussi parfois décimés par l'épizootie, et c'est ainsi qu'en 1910 et 1911, la région de Koupéla fut ravagée par la maladie, sans doute la peste bovine ou la péripneumonie. Les bœufs toussaient, perdaient tout appétit, et mouraient en quelques jours.

Les Mossi s'adonnent aussi à l'élevage des abeilles. Les ruches sont fabriquées avec de la paille ou des tiges d'un bois flexible, et posées dans les arbres; parfois aussi les troncs creux des baobabs servent de refuge aux essaims. La récolte du miel se fait à la fin et au commencement de l'hivernage: la ruche est enfumée et les abeilles sont détruites. Le miel sert surtout à la fabrication du bésé, sorte d'hydromel, dont les Yarsé, les Peuls, et les Haoussa musulmans sont très friands, et qu'ils peuvent boire bien que ce soit une boisson fermentée, tandis que la bière de mil leur est interdite en principe. La cire est vendue aux bijoutiers et sert à la fabrication des bracelets, faits d'après la méthode de la cire perdue.

---

moyenne ne dépasse guère 1 m 44 cm. De son côté, M. MENIAUD (Haut-Sénégal et Niger, Géographie économique II, p. 106) dit que «la population chevaline du Haut-Sénégal et Niger doit présenter les caractères des races aryenne et mongolique, parfois influencés de race germanique.» Et plus loin (p. 110) il range le cheval mossi parmi les chevaux de race mongolique, variété dougolawi ou nubienne.

Rien qu'à voir les villages on sent que les habitants se croient en sûreté. Pas de ces amoncellements de cases dans un endroit restreint et entouré de murs pour résister aux invasions d'un El-hadj-Omar ou d'un Samory, comme en pays bambara; pas de ces groupements familiaux de cases à toits plats, de ces châteaux forts réunissant toute la famille depuis le grand-père jusqu'au dernier des petits fils, afin d'être assez nombreux pour résister aux incursions d'un voisin plus puissant, comme en pays gourounsi où l'autorité des chefs est si méconnue. Ici chaque chef de famille, et il faut entendre par ce mot un homme avec ses femmes, ses enfants non mariés et ses serviteurs, occupe un certain nombre de cases dont l'ensemble forme son yri, groupe appelé par les Européens du nom bambara soukala.

Les cases sont rondes, construites généralement en terre, mais faites quelques fois de pieux fichés en terre et entourés de sékos, sorte de natte de grande paille tressée. Elles sont coiffées d'un toit également en paille à armatures de bois. Quand un indigène veut bâtir, il prend jour avec un maçon, habile à poser les mottes de terre, et prévient les gens du village. Au jour dit, chacun se rend chez lui, les femmes vont puiser de l'eau au marigot, les hommes piochent la terre à quelques mètres de la case à construire, les enfants piétinent le mortier et portent au maçon les mottes de terre préparées par les vieux qui sont gravement assis autour du tas de boue. C'est fête au village, car celui qui fait construire doit abreuver tout son monde, et même le nourrir s'il veut bien faire les choses.

Un cercle est tracé à terre pour indiquer les dimensions à donner à la case, et le maçon pose les mottes de terre suivant ce cercle, obliquement, les unes à côté des autres. Quand il a fini un premier tour, il en commence un second et continue ainsi jusqu'à mi-hauteur. Il interrompt alors son œuvre et la remet au lendemain afin de laisser à la première partie le temps de sécher, aussi construit-on généralement plusieurs cases à la fois. Aucune ouverture n'est laissée dans le mur. Quand il est sec, on perce une porte généralement ceintrée et basée de telle sorte qu'on ne peut entrer qu'en rampant sur les mains et les genoux. Les femmes à l'aise ferment leur case avec une porte en bois qui s'ouvre dans l'intérieur, et est munie d'un loquet en bois qui fonctionne au moyen d'une grosse clef composée d'un bâton sur lequel sont perpendiculairement adaptées de petites tiges de fer. C'est ordinairement dans ces cases fermées et, par conséquent, mieux défendues contre les voleurs, que les enfants et même le mari déposent leurs habits, leurs objets de luxe, leurs cauris. Ceux qui ne peuvent pas se payer ce luxe d'une porte, plantent deux piquets de chaque côté de l'entrée, et entre eux et le mur de la case glissent une natte.

Une soukala-type se compose de la case du maître, d'autant de cases qu'il y a de femmes chez lui, d'une case pour les moutons et les chèvres, d'une autre pour le cheval s'il y en a un, d'une case qui abrite le moulin familial. Enfin d'une case de réception à deux portes assez hautes pour qu'on puisse entrer sans se baisser, qui tantôt sert d'entrée, tantôt se trouve dans l'intérieur du groupe de cases. Toutes ces habitations sont disposées en cercle, et sont réunies entre elles soit par un mur en pisé, soit par des barrières en nattes plus hautes qu'un homme et soutenus par des piquets. La case du maître, à côté de laquelle se trouvent le plus souvent les cases des chevaux et des moutons, est séparée des autres cases par des nattes afin qu'il soit bien chez lui. Dans la cour intérieure, se trouve un petit mur disposé en arc de cercle: c'est la cuisine quand il ne pleut pas. Entre les cases sont disposées les grandes cruches en terre cuite qui servent à faire la bière de mil. Devant ce groupe est construit un abri, généralement assez haut pour permettre de se tenir debout et composé essentiellement de piquets fourchus sur lesquels reposent des bois et des sékos formant hangar et servant de refuge pendant les heures chaudes de la journée. Les garçons en bas âge et les filles non mariées vivent avec leur mère tandis que les grand garçons, les serviteurs et les esclaves ont chacun leurs cases distinctes construites devant le groupe d'habitations qui abritent le maître et ses femmes.

C'est tout l'ensemble de ces constructions que l'on appelle yri, la soukala. Chaque soukala est distincte, et quelque temps après leur mariage, les enfants construisent leur demeure absolument séparée de celle de leurs parents, souvent dans un autre quartier du village et parfois dans un village différent. Les soukala sont à quinze ou vingt mètres les unes des autres, de telle sorte que les villages, bien que suffisamment groupés, occupent cependant une superficie de terrain assez étendue. Les chefs de canton placent un œuf d'autruche sur la pointe du toit de leur propre habitation et quelques uns construisent même des cases terrassées plus hautes que celles qui les entourent. C'est dans cette case qu'ils enferment leurs richesses et dans son sous-sol se trouve leur prison. Un escalier en terre donne accès sur la terrasse où le maître des céans reçoit ses hôtes quand le soleil commence baisser à l'horizon.

Ce peuple d'aspect si paisible aujourd'hui était autrefois fort guerrier et pour un rien partait en guerre. Etrangers dans le pays qu'ils occupent actuellement, les Mossi ont dû le conquérir par la force des armes, et le Tarik-es-Soudan ne raconte-il pas que ceux du Yatenga, sans doute, s'emparèrent au XIVe siècle de Tombouctou et au XVe poussèrent leurs incursions jusqu'au lac Débo et même jusqu'à Oualata[1]. L'armée mossi était fort redoutée. Quand un chef rassemblait ses gens personne ne restait en arrière. Les femmes, les enfants, les invalides et les vieillards seuls gardaient les villages. Ceux qui n'avaient pas de chevaux formaient l'infanterie, armés d'un arc et de flèches le plus souvent empoisonnées et d'un grand sabre suspendu à l'épaule. Les cavaliers portaient le sabre et la lance plantée sur le bout du pied et tenue à mi-hauteur avec la main droite. La cavalerie mossi était particulièrement terrible et nombreuse. Quand ses gens partaient en guerre le Moro-Naba restait chez lui; il rassemblait le plus de chevaux qu'il lui était possible et quand des cavaliers avaient perdu leur monture ils venaient chercher un autre cheval chez le naba et rejoignaient les combattants.

Les dernières guerres qui ont précédé la conquête française de Koupéla et dont nous allons dire un mot, ont été des guerres civiles, soit entre gens de Tenkodogo et de Koupéla, soit entre les Mossi et les Gourmantché.

---

[1] Delafosse, l. c. II, p. 80.

Ces guerres, comme cela arrivait généralement en pareilles circonstances, ont suivi la mort des nabas, dont plusieurs prétendants se disputaient la succession. Et c'est pour les prevenir que seul l'entourage immédiat d'un naba connaissait sa mort. Les profanes devaient l'ignorer et croire le naba malade et dans sa case. Ce n'est que quand le chef de famille avait réuni ce qu'il faut pour honorer dignement le défunt par la célébration du kouré[1] que la fatale nouvelle se répandait.

Naba Kidba ne laissant à sa mort pour lui succéder qu'un enfant de cinq à six ans, un individu de Kazem'bouanga, puissant par ses richesses et le nombre de ses gens, résolut de s'emparer du pouvoir. Ses partisans s'étaient eux-mêmes donnés ce nom de Kazem'bouanga et disaient: «Bien que l'hyène (katré) ne soit pas égale (zéma) à l'âne (bouanga), cependant, si elle le rencontre dans la brousse, elle s'attaque à lui et le tue: de même, bien qu'ils ne soient pas aussi puissants que les habitants de Koupéla, ils sauront bien les vaincre.» Et, en effet, ils se dirigèrent sur Koupéla. Le premier ministre, qui porte le nom générique de Saman'naba (chef de la cour extérieure) et qui de son propre nom s'appelait Wenkosgaraga, prit l'enfant et se sauva avec lui jusqu'à Sapara, le premier village dépendant directement du Moro-Naba, situé à 9 km de Koupéla. Les gens de Kazem'bouanga l'ayant appris se dirigèrent sur Sapara mais les habitants de cette localité refusèrent de leur livrer l'enfant à eux confié, tandis que le Saman'naba retournait dans sa province et réunissait tous les partisans du jeune naba. Unis aux habitants de Sapara, les guerriers du Saman'naba taillèrent en pièces les gens du prétendant, en tuèrent un grand nombre et les repoussèrent jusque chez eux. Le Saman'naba prit alors l'enfant, le conduisit à Ouagadougou, obtint que le Moro-Naba lui donnât l'investiture et revint à Koupéla. C'est le naba Ibri, le père du naba actuel, et celui qui régnait à Koupéla lors de l'arrivée du lieutenant VOULET. Son concurrent défait se donna la mort.

Vers la même époque, à la mort de son père Yenkouaré, Batchandé fut élu roi du Gourma. Certains villages, entre autres Gyekango, ne voulurent pas reconnaître son autorité. Batchandé fit appel au naba de Bélousa qui réunit ses guerriers et donna à tous l'ordre de se joindre aux gens du naba de Fada. Koupéla, dépendant de Bélousa, prit part à l'expédition. Mais Gyekango fut vaillamment défendu par son chef et ses habitants, favorisés d'ailleurs par un terrain très propice, tout couvert d'épines derrière lesquelles les assiégés s'embusquaient pour tirer sur les Mossi. C'était pendant la saison sèche. La soif termina ce qu'avait commencé le courage des gens de Gyekango, et beaucoup de Mossi périrent. Le naba de Beloussa, humilié, voulut se laisser mourir de soif mais fut sauvé par le naba de Pwitenga. Sur ces entrefaites, le capitaine BAUD, venant du Dahomey, arriva à Fada. Batchandé lui demanda son secours contre ses sujets révoltés, et le capitaine BAUD s'empara de Gyékango qui, depuis cette époque, s'appelle Baudéni, le village de BAUD.

Une guerre qui a laissée de profonds souvenirs, fut celle entreprise par les gens de Koupéla en faveur de Lébréboundou, contre ceux de Tenkodogo, [1] Kouré, cérémonie funéraire en l'honneur des défunts, v. plus bas.

Comme précédemment c'est une guerre civile qui éclata à la mort d'un chef. Le naba de Tenkodogo étant mort, les anciens élurent, pour lui succéder, Naba Korongo. Mais Lébréboundou voulut s'emparer du pouvoir. Il fit appel aux gens de Fada et à ceux de Koupéla. Le naba de Tenkodogo aux abois recourut en vain au naba de Bélousa et au Moro-Naba. Ils répondirent tous deux que le vainqueur serait reconnu pour chef. Les gens de Tenkodogo furent repoussés avec pertes, mais c'était au moment de l'arrivée des troupes françaises. Le naba élu de Tenkodogo fit appel au chef de l'expédition, qui tua son prétendant et installa à Tenkodogo celui qui avait été légitimement élu.

Les dernières guerres de la région de Koupéla furent donc toutes des guerres civiles, et éclataient à la mort des chefs de provinces avoisinantes, Koupéla, Fada, Tenkodogo.

Mais le terrain le plus ordinaire de la guerre était le Bousanga. Une femme bousanga, esclave du naba de Koupéla, venait-elle à s'enfuir, le naba la réclamait. Si on refusait de la lui rendre, c'était la guerre. Quand les Mossi n'avaient pas suffisamment de mil, quand leurs troupeaux avaient été décimés par une épizootie, ou même simplement quand ils voulaient se procurer des esclaves, le naba réunissait ses ministres et les engageait à aller razzier les Bousansé. Le Saman-Naba prenait la direction de la guerre. Le Trabana, guerrier éprouvé, était chef d'état major, et tous les autres chefs, les chefs de cantons, et ceux des villages, réunissaient leurs gens: c'était une vraie fête, que beaucoup, sourtout parmi les chefs, regrettent encore d'avoir été abolie. On razziait tout ce que l'on trouvait, on se partagait les récoltes et les troupeaux, et la population était réduite en esclavage. Et puisque le cours du récit nous amène à parler des esclaves, on nous permettra d'entrer dans quelques details à leur sujet.

Car l'esclavage existait au Mossi, mais il était très doux. Peuple de cultivateurs, les Mossi avaient des esclaves pour travailler leurs champs. Ils avaient donc avantage à les bien traiter afin de pouvoir tirer d'eux un bon parti. Les esclaves étaient aussi une source de richesses. Un esclave adulte se vendait entre 50 et 100 frcs selon sa force. On ne distinguait pas entre les hommes et les femmes. Aussi était-il rare qu'un Mossi tuât son esclave. L'usage lui en donnait certes le droit, et personne, pas même son chef, ne pouvait lui demander compte de son acte; son esclave était sa chose et il en faisait ce qu'il voulait. Mais quand il désirait s'en débarasser, il le vendait, c'était plus lucratif. D'ailleurs, il fallait attacher l'esclave à la maison; l'esclave maltraité se serait sauvé au risque d'être repris, et malgré la drogue qu'on lui faisait boire, et qui comme l'eau du Léthé, devait lui faire perdre la mémoire; tandis qu'un esclave bien traité, bien nourri, avait l'espérance d'obtenir une femme et de devenir chef de case à son tour. Quand son maître était content de lui, quand il avait rendu un service signalé, son maître lui donnait parfois une de ses filles en mariage: il était libre alors et ses enfants ne naissaient plus esclaves. Un esclave pouvait être libéré quand sa famille consentait à le racheter. Le mode de libération le plus fréquemment employé était l'échange: une fille, sœur ou nièce de l'esclave à libérer, était donnée à sa place. C'est une coutume qui a existé jusqu'à ces derniers temps.

Les Mossi se procuraient des esclaves soit par achat, soit par la guerre, soit par la naissance. Aucune distinction n'existait entre ces différentes sortes d'esclavage. Les esclaves étaient tout traités de même. Les Bousansé et les Gourounsi fournirent le plus grand nombre d'esclaves, et comme partout, les Yarsé et les Haoussa musulmans étaient les grands commerçants. Mais les Mossi se vendaient aussi entre eux, et quand un homme puissant s'emparait d'un enfant ou même d'un adulte, trouvé sans défense dans la brousse, il le vendait en esclavage. Parfois l'enfant était séparé de sa mère esclave, mais c'était rare. Les esclaves faisaient partie des biens de la famille, et en cas de décès, devenaient la propriété de l'héritier. Mariés par leur maître, ils acquéraient une liberté relative, avaient leur chez eux, leur champs qu'ils cultivaient pour eux mêmes, ils pouvaient acquérir des biens, acheter des bêtes de somme, des chèvres, des moutons, des bœufs. La seule servitude qui leur restât, c'est qu'ils devaient donner en mariage, à leur maître, toutes leurs filles. C'est ainsi qu'il y a des villages entiers d'esclaves, ne se distinguant en rien des autres villages. C'est ainsi que le village de Koupéla, évalué à 2500 habitants, est entièrement composé par les esclaves du naba, excepté trois familles. Le premier ministre lui-même, le Saman-Naba, et tous les ministres sont des esclaves du naba. Il est vrai que sous cette dénomination sont compris les esclaves pour dettes. Quand un indigène avait emprunté au naba une somme assez importante, la valeur d'un bœuf, par exemple, et qu'il ne pouvait pas payer, un compromis s'établissait entre le débiteur et le naba. Le débiteur promettait de donner toutes ses filles au naba et ainsi engageait toute sa postérité. On disait alors qu'il était devenu l'esclave du naba.

Un autre moyen de se procurer des bras pour travailler la terre, c'était d'avoir des serfs. Il y a deux sortes de serfs — domestiques si l'on veut —: les dakwaba et les noakansé. Un dakonré (singulier de dakwaba, désigne, étymologiquement, celui qui n'est pas marié) a une famille, et est mis, par sa famille, au service d'un homme riche dans le seul but, quand il sera en âge, d'être marié, d'avoir une femme. Il travaille pour son maître, pioche ses champs, fait ses commissions, il peut, avec l'autorisation de son maître, avoir son champ à lui, et quelques petits biens, mais quoique libre, il ne peut quitter son maître pour se mettre en service chez un autre indigène. Un noakanga (singulier de noakansé) n'a pas de famille. Il se met librement en service pour être nourri, logé, parfois habillé, son maître le mariera plus ou moins vite selon les régions. Un noakanga est plus libre qu'un dakonré, car il peut quitter son maître quand il veut, soit pour commercer, soit pour se mettre en service chez un autre individu, mais souvent il doit tout son travail à son maître.

Les Peuls pasteurs n'ont jamais été les esclaves des Mossi par ce qu'ils ne peuvent que garder les troupeaux et sont incapables de travailler la terre; ils étaient cependant dans un vasselage très dur sous la coupe des Mossi, spécialement des nabas et servaient de victimes dans certains sacrifices. Des Mossi, vendus par des Yarsé ou d'autres Mossi, ont été parfois leurs esclaves, surtout dans la région de Dori, appelé Gyémaré par les indigènes.

[facing p. 14]

En haut: Le salut Mossi.
En bas: Un naba et ses cavaliers.

Chapitre deuxième. — Administration.

Un des traits caractéristiques du pays mossi, c'est la puissance des chefs et la soumission des sujets. Cet esprit de soumission imprègne toute la mentalité mossi. Le Mossi n'est pas très dissimulé, fermé à ses semblables, comme l'est, dit-on, le Bambara. Il cause au contraire assez librement avec ses amis, même de ses affaires personnelles; ce qui ne veut pas dire qu'il ne sait pas garder un secret, surtout si c'est le secret du roi. Mais pour qu'une certaine liberté, qui devient presque de l'intimité, mais jamais de l'amitié au sens le plus élevé du mot, s'établisse entre deux individus, il faut qu'ils soient égaux. Si le Mossi paraît dissimulé, c'est qu'il a peur de froisser un plus puissant que lui. En face d'un chef, de quelqu'un qui a la force, comme il dit, il cédera toujours quitte à garder intérieurement son sentiment et à agir à sa guise; et un chef quand il parle, n'entend que ces mots: bé néré, naba — c'est bien, c'est cela. Je suis de ton avis.

Le salut mossi, autrefois en usage dans tous les empires noirs du Soudan, spécialement aux cours de Ghana, Mali et Gao, indique bien cette mentalité et quand, étrangers, nous pénétrons pour la première fois dans ce pays, nous sommes choqués de voir un homme s'abaisser ainsi devant un autre homme. C'est que pour saluer, le Mossi, dépose tout charge, chapeau, sabre, retire ses savates, s'asseoit à terre, replie légèrement les jambes, porte le buste en avant, les coudes sont appuyés à terre et aussi écartés que possible l'un de l'autre; les avants-bras repliés devant la poitrine et les deux mains à demi fermées le pouce levé en l'air, frappent ensemble la terre trois ou quatre fois; puis l'individu se relève un peu et frotte ensemble la paume de ses deux mains. Jamais il ne regarde en face celui qu'il veut saluer, mais les yeux sont légèrement baissés. C'est vraiment une attitude très humiliée, surtout quand le chef ainsi salué, reste debout, ou se trouve à cheval et dominant son subordonné, daigne à peine lui accorder un regard. Les femmes, au lieu de frapper la terre avec les avant-bras, la frappent avec les coudes et relèvent, à la hauteur des épaules, les mains ouvertes et les doigts allongés. Le grand salut, très rarement employé d'ailleurs, consiste, après le salut ordinaire, à se retourner, à prendre de la poussière avec ses deux mains et à s'en couvrir le front, puis à revenir saluer son interlocuteur.

Deux indigènes qui se connaissent, se croissent-ils dans un chemin, le plus jeune s'accroupit le premier et commence le salut auquel l'autre répond en s'accroupissant à son tour. S'ils portent des charges, ils les déposent à terre, puis se saluent. Ils ne sont jamais pressés. Les serviteurs et les femmes, passant devant un chef, s'inclinent légèrement et joignent les mains devant la poitrine, paume contre paume. Si compliqué que soit le salut mossi, les indigènes le font avec grace et aisance; ils y sont habitués dès leur plus jeune âge, et en tous cas ne sont pas alors gauches et empruntés comme lors qu'ils s'essaient à ébaucher le salut militaire, si beau et si noble quand il est bien fait, mais geste ridicule quand il est déformé par un Noir.

Le terme générique pour désigner les chefs est naba. Cependant il y a une distinction entre naba et dimma. Le dimma est celui qui est élu selon des règles très précises, que nous étudierons plus loin, mais dont l'autorité procède directement de cette élection. Il n'y a au Mossi que cinq dimma: le Moro-Naba, le naba de Fada, celui de Tenkodogo, celui de Boussouma, et celui du Yatenga. Le naba, au contraire, tient son autorité d'un autre chef plus puissant que lui, qui l'a désigné entre plusieurs prétendants. Ce sont tous les autres chefs.

Le pays mossi est tout entier sous l'autorité du Moro-naba, assisté de cinq grands ministres: le Widi-naba, le Laralé-naba, le Gounga-naba, le Kamisoro-naba, et le Ballum-naba. Les attributions de ces ministres sont assez mal définies. Le Kamisoro est eunuque et chef des eunuques. A sa mort tous ses biens reviennent au Moro-Naba, puisqu'il ne laisse pas d'héritier. Aussi le Moro-Naba avait-il avantage à l'enrichir, et à lui donner la plus belle province de ses états. Le Widi-naba remplace le Moro-Naba depuis sa mort jusqu'à l'intronisation de son successeur. C'est lui qui préside à l'élection et proclame l'élu. Le Laralé est le gardien des tombes des ancêtres du Moro-Naba, et le Ballum est le chef des pages et des danseurs; quand le Moro-Naba marie un de ses pages, celui-ci s'installe près des cases du Ballum-naba. C'est le moins important des ministres et, avant l'occupation française, il ne commandait à aucune province.

Le Moro-Naba commande directement à une grande partie des territoires mossi. La partie soumise à ses ordres immédiats était divisée entre les quatre grands ministres, qui avaient chacun sous leurs ordres des chefs de canton. Les territoires non soumis directement au Moro-Naba, sont placés sous l'autorité de chefs puissants que l'on peut appeler chefs de province, vassaux assurément du Moro-Naba, mais vassaux très indépendants et un peu comme l'étaient les duc de Brétagne et de Bourgogne vis-à-vis du roi de France. Tels sont les nabas de Ouahigouya, de Yako, de Boussouma, de Bélousa, etc., car ils sont nombreux tout autour du pays réservé au Moro-Naba, surtout au nord, à l'est et au sud. Ces chefs de province pouvaient avoir des vassaux indépendants, mais qui cependant reconnaissaient leur autorité; tel le naba de Koupéla, vrai chef de province, mais vassal du naba de Bélousa, vassal lui-même du Moro-Naba. Le naba de Salmatenga se trouve dans la même condition vis-à-vis du naba de Boussouma.

Chaque province est divisée en cantons ayant chacun à sa tête un naba, et le canton est formé d'un certain nombre de villages qui ont, en général, chacun un naba. Certains villages dépendent directement du chef de province qui les distribue entre ses ministres. Il arrive même que certains villages n'ont pas de naba proprement dit. Ce sont principalement les villages formés par les enfants d'un grand naba. Un vieillard est alors chargé des fonctions administratives. Ces villages qui n'ont pas de naba, peuvent cependant en obtenir un, par exemple, si le chef de province a un fils qui s'installe dans ce village et que les habitants soient contents de sa présence, son père peut le nommer naba de ce village. Certains villages, très rares d'ailleurs, sont commandés par des femmes, que des anciens assistent, quand il y a une affaire à juger.

L'autorité de chaque chef est tempérée par son conseil. Le Moro-Naba lui-même n'agit pas sans prendre l'avis de ses ministres. Chaque chef de

Le Moro-Naba des Mossi.

Un chef de province mossi.

Anthropos IX.

[facing p. 16]

province a son conseil. Les noms donnés aux ministres varient d'une province à une autre province, mais les attributions restent les mêmes. Les chefs de cantons consultent les hommes les plus âgés du village dans lequel ils résident, et un chef de village ne prend aucune résolution, pouvant intéresser la communauté, sans réunir les anciens et sans les consulter.

Tout se fait par la voie hiérarchique. Jamais un chef de province ne donnera un ordre directement à un village dépendant d'un chef de canton, mais il fera prévenir ce dernier qui lui-même préviendra le chef de village, et ce dernier, réunissant ses vieux, leur communiquera les ordres reçus, et par eux préviendra tous ses administrés. Les ordres ainsi transmis régulièrement sont toujours exécutés, mais si, par hasard, un chef de canton voulait désobéir à son chef de province, il serait suivi par ses gens qui reconnaissent son autorité avant toute autre.

Les derniers Moro-Naba étaient devenus un peu des rois fainéants et le protocole auquel ils étaient astreints de par la coutume, ne laissait pas d'être gênant à l'instar de l'étiquette des cours européennes. Car le Moro-Naba est entouré d'une véritable cour. Nous avons vu que son grand conseil se compose de cinq grands ministres. A eux se joignent l'Iman qui représente les musulmans et a une certaine influence, et le Teng'Soba. Les fonctions de ce dernier sont assez spéciales. Il n'habite pas le même village que le Moro-Naba, et commande un canton. Mais en cas de guerre, c'est lui qui est consulté sur l'opportunité des hostilités et sur leurs chances de succès. C'est lui qui doit alors faire les sacrifices et questionner les mânes des ancêtres. Quand la guerre est décidée, il prend le commandement des armées, et tous, ministres et chefs de cantons, doivent lui obéir. Le Moro-Naba ne quitte pas Ouagadougou.

Autour de ces grands dignitaires s'agite tout un monde de subalternes. Les eunuques, gens peu recommandables, puisque on faisait parfois eunuques les voleurs récidivistes, et généralement les pages qui s'étaient permis trop de familiarités avec les femmes du naba. Quelques-uns pouvaient arriver à une haute situation. Le Kamisoro est toujours eunuque, et quelques cantons importants leur étaient réservés.

Les pages sont de jeunes enfants choisis avec soin parmi les mieux doués du pays. Ils doivent servir le naba et portent le nom de soroné. Jamais le naba n'est seul; il a toujours à ses côtés un ou plusieurs pages. Celui-ci tient l'éventail, celui-là est près du monarque pour l'aider à changer de position, un autre s'occupe des savates, un autre du bâton de commandement, et le grand échanson tient sans cesse dans sa main une calebasse remplie de bière de mil forte et recouverte d'un plateau en vannerie artistement tressé. Les soronés ont les bras ornés de bracelets de cuivre, souvent de cuivre jaune et rouge alterné, deux, trois, quatre bracelets. Ils ont parfois des bracelets aux poignets et au dessus du coude; parfois aussi les deux pieds sont ornés de gros bracelets ou même de guêtres de cuivre qui embarrassent singulièrement la marche de celui qui les porte, mais sont un ornement très recherché. Tous ces soronés sont aux petits «soins» autour du monarque. Tousse-t-il, les paumes des mains se frottent l'une contre l'autre; les doigts claquent. Il en est de même quand il boit, éternue ou crache. S'il se lève, toute la cour se lève, et lorsqu'il est sujet aux infirmités communes à touts les mortels, toute la cour le suit et s'accroupit comme lui.

Les jours de grandes cérémonies, la musique accompagne le naba, et il ne peut plus faire un geste, dire un mot, faire un pas, sans que les musiciens jouent des différentes espèces de tambours. Le tambour type, spécial au mossi, le bindré, celui dont seuls les membres de la corporation des tambours peuvent jouer, se compose d'une calebasse qui peut atteindre 70 à 80 cm de diamètre. Elle est vidée, le côté où s'attachait la queue du fruit est enlevé, et remplacé par une peau de chèvre fortement tendue. C'est en frappant cette peau avec ses mains que l'artiste tire de son instrument des sons très différents. C'est tout un art de bien jouer de ce tambour, et les membres de la confrérie y sont habitués dès leur jeune âge. Ce sont les troubadours, les griots du pays, qui chantent les louanges des chefs dont ils connaissent toute la généalogie, qui fréquentent les marchés, qui suivent les gens riches et les proclament les plus braves, les plus généreux, les plus beaux des hommes que la terre ait portés, afin d'obtenir quelques cadeaux. Ils sont de toutes les fêtes.

Il y a aussi le lounga, fait d'un morçeau de bois évidé en forme de sablier; les deux extrémités sont assez larges et réunies par un cylindre plus étroit; ce tambour se porte sous le bras, et ses deux ouvertures sont fermées par des peaux de chèvres; elles sont réunies par des cordes que l'artiste tend plus ou moins en serrant le tambour entre son bras et son côté gauche, tandis que de la main droite il frappe une des peaux avec un petit bâton recourbé et terminé par une boule.

La musique du naba se compose encore de flûtes, dont les indigènes, souvent les Peuls, savent tirer de jolis sons, mais trop souvent les mêmes, et de petits violons à une seule corde, qui, sous l'archet habilement manié, ne laissent pas de rendre des sons agréables.

Si le Moro-Naba doit monter à cheval, les palfreniers amènent sa monture magnifiquement caparaçonnée avec têtière en cuivre, grand tapis brodé qui couvre tout le dos et la croupe même. Une pièce d'étoffe brodée cache tout le poitrail de la bête et la selle, genre arabe, avec grands étriers de cuivre, supporte de chaque côté de grands plateaux de même métal. Les tambours jouent quand le naba sort de sa demeure, ils changent d'air quand il met le pied à l'étrier, l'air varie encore quand il se met en route, et toute la population à plusieurs kilomètres à la ronde, est avertie de tous les gestes du Moro-Naba. Un soroné le précède portant son coussin, et un autre portant son bâton de commandement. Les ministres présents à la cour et les chefs étrangers présents à la capitale s'empressent de monter à cheval. Des gardes du corps du Moro-Naba l'accompagnent, quatre forts gaillards marchent à ses côtés, les bras appuyés sur la croupe du cheval comme pour empêcher le monarque de tomber, tandis que des cavaliers, armés de lances, font la fantasia, courent 100 m devant le naba, en brandissant leurs lances, et reviennent au grand galop, puis repartent. C'est un va-et-vient continuel et une distraction pour le naba qui, lui, ne peut pas galoper.

[facing p. 18]

Anthropos IX.

En haut: Le Moro-Naba. Derrière lui son frère, âgé d'une douzaine d'années et chef d'une grande province; à ses côtés: deux pages.

En bas: Ballom-Naba entouré de ses pages. Debout derrière lui: ses deux enfants chrétiens.

Tous les chefs de province et les chefs de cantons ont leur cour, leurs ministres, leurs soronés, leurs tambours. Le privilège d'avoir des eunuques est cependant réservé au Moro-Naba. Mais pour avoir droit aux soronés, au coussin et aux éperons, il faut avoir été régulièrement intronisé. Et c'est pour avoir négligé de suivre les traditions, que le naba actuel de Koupéla ne possède aucun de ces privilèges.

C'est qu'il y a toute une tradition pour l'intronisation des naba. Chaque naba intronise ses vassaux. Le Moro-Naba intronise les chefs de provinces excepté ceux qui portent le titre de dimma; les chefs de provinces intronisent les chefs de cantons, et ceux-ci, les chefs de villages qui dépendent d'eux. Le droit de nomination est une grande source de revenus pour les nabas.

En effet, à la mort d'un chef de village, plusieurs prétendants briguent le pouvoir. Tous vont saluer le naba, qui les commande, et lui offrent de nombreux cadeaux, des cauris, des poules, des moutons, et, s'il sont assez riches, des barres de sel, un cheval, et parfois même une femme. Celui qui donnera le plus, a le plus de chances d'être choisi, et ce n'est que quand le naba électeur prévoit que les prétendants vont être à court de cadeaux qu'il se décide à désigner l'élu.

Voici comment les choses se passent à Koupéla pour la nomination d'un chef de village dépendant directement du chef de province. Les prétendants doivent s'adresser au ministre qui a la haute main sur leur village, c'est leur introducteur obligé auprès du naba dont dépend le choix, c'est le maître du chemin, le sor'soba. Quand la nomination est proche, le ministre se rend de nuit auprès de ce naba, et ils s'entendent ensemble sur le choix à faire. Ce ne peut être qu'un parent du défunt ou un parent d'un naba mort précédemment. Quand ils se sont mis d'accord, le naba désigne le jour et fait prévenir les intéressés. Chacun d'eux, plein d'espoir, vient, vers le soir, avec ses gens. Ils sont vêtus d'un pantalon, d'une peau qu'ils portent en sautoir, et d'une couverture rejetée sur l'épaule à la manière antique, de façon à ce que l'épaule et le bras droit soient libres. Devant chacun d'eux se tient une jeune fille, munie d'un bâton, qui deviendra peut-être dans quelques instants, le bâton de commandement. Cette jeune fille est censée recevoir le pouvoir en même temps que le prétendant élu, et pendant toutes les fêtes de l'investiture, c'est elle qui prendra soin des objets au service du nouveau naba, et chacun lui donnera des cauris. Après les fêtes, elle retourne chez elle.

Tous les prétendants étant arrivés sont assis dans la cour extérieure. Le naba reste dans sa case, et le ministre introducteur se rend auprès de lui. Le naba désigne celui sur qui porte son choix, et le ministre sort, prend la couverture de l'élu et lui dit que c'est lui, que le naba a choisi. Aussitôt les prétendants évincés se sauvent, tandis que leurs gens portent l'élu sur leurs épaules qui servent de pavois, et chantent ses louanges, en l'appelant Wobro, l'éléphant. Le Trabrâna, un brave entre les braves, vient alors avec une sacoche en cuir, et l'élu doit lui donner des cauris. Il en donnera encore à son introducteur pour avoir sa couverture, et pendant les trois jours de fête qui suivent son élection, il doit fournir quantité de bière de mil. Il est d'ailleurs aidé dans ses dépenses par ses nouveaux administrés qui, bientôt prévenus, viennent le saluer et lui offrir leurs cadeaux. Les prétendants non élus reviennent le lendemain, tête rasée, faire leur soumission à leur heureux concurrent. Pendant trois jours donc c'est grande fête chez le ministre introducteur. On joue du tambour, on danse, on chante:

Sen kong'nam, lébra sonkam ysa.	Celui qui n'a pas été élu, glanera les arachides.
Bamb'naba y minimini biga, ka zué waodo, dem kom.	Leur naba est comme le petit de la sarcelle, il ne craint pas le froid, il joue dans l'eau.
Sérendé wobro, n'béla.	Venez à la rencontre de l'éléphant, pour le saluer.
Sen damma nyébra, baryoro nan wa.	Quelqu'un veut-il tuer le caïman, le serpent vient de suite[1].

Le troisième jour, on rase le nouveau naba. Sa sœur ou, à son défaut, une vieille, commence l'opération; mais n'importe qui peut l'achever. Puis tous se rendent chez le naba: l'élu va recevoir un nom, et désormais il sera défendu de le désigner par le nom qu'il portait précédemment. Chaque naba, en effet, reçoit trois noms, ou mieux trois devises, choisies par sa sœur, ou par une vieille femme de la famille. Ces devises font allusion à un fait historique passé ou à la situation de l'élu. Quand tous sont arrivés chez le naba, la sœur de l'élu indique les devises au naba, qui les proclame, et les tambours les redisent au peuple. Et l'on danse, et l'on chante, et l'on boit. Le lendemain seulement le nouveau naba bien dûment intronisé, retourne dans son village pour en prendre possession officielle.

Voici quelques devises:

I° Les devises du naba de Koupéla font allusion à la guerre qui eut lieu précédemment lors de l'élection de son père, naba Ibri, entre ce dernier et les gens de Kazémabouanga:

1° Wadra yerda né kyongou. Wadra gousa menga, t'a péleum ka yd kyongou. L'étoile brille malgré la lune. Mais que l'étoile se tienne sur ses gardes, car sa blancheur n'efface pas celle de la lune. (L'étoile représente le prétendant de Kazémabouanga. La lune c'est le naba de Koupéla.)

2° Kalébdo kanenga, la son boulwaka. La sauce de kalebdo n'est pas bonne, mais elle est meilleure que celle de boulwaka. (Le naba de Koupéla n'est pas très puissant, mais il l'est plus que les gens de Kazémabouanga.)

3° Néda gwanga nan samma. Le boiteux prétend qu'il le tuera. (Le prétendant — le boiteux — prétend tuer le naba de Koupéla.)

II° Les devises du Saman-Naba, le premier ministre de Koupéla, font allusion à sa situation vis-à-vis du naba, auquel il doit tout, et qui est son appui:

1° Tl'douda béleum villi n'pam n'dou. Qui veut monter à un arbre saisit les branches pour s'aider.

---

[1] Pour dire que si quelqu'un attaque le nouveau naba, le chef de province, viendra l'aider.

2° Gigemdé sen touka séolro, wénniginamma, walpélronamma, nonga morbo, la'b zuéta gemdé. Le lion pioche la terre salée (bonne à manger), les bœufs sauvages, les kobas, aiment à en manger, mais craignent le lion. (Les ennemis du Saman'Naba voudraient bien avoir sa place mais craignent le naba.)

3° Kong'panga, bar'bala. Qui manque de force n'est que serviteur.

L'élection des grands ministres ne comporte que fort peu de cadeaux, offerts aux jours de fête qui suivent la mort du ministre, jusqu'à la nomination de son successeur. C'est le fils aîné qui généralement hérite de la charge, mais le chef de province peut nommer qu'il veut.

A la mort du naba de Koupéla, chef de province, les ministres tiennent conseil et désignent entre eux quel sera le successeur, presque toujours le fils aîné. Avant même la publication du nom de l'élu, le chef du quartier qui porte le nom de Koupéla, fait prévenir les chefs de canton, et ils se réunissent à Koupéla. Quand tout le monde est arrivé, le Tabrana proclame le nom de l'élu, et tous se rendent à Bélousa pour indiquer au naba celui qu'ils ont choisi et pour lui demander l'investiture. Généralement le naba de Bélousa accepte celui qui a été régulièrement nommé. En cas de conflit, ou si lui-même désire faire un autre choix, il le fait savoir au Moro-Naba en indiquant ses préférences, et quand son envoyé revient, il proclame l'élu, et tous se soumettent à sa volonté. N'a-t-il pas la force? En signe d'investiture, le naba de Bélousa remet à l'élu une calotte, des savates et un sceptre. Mais le nouveau naba ne peut encore ni mettre la calotte, ni enfiler les savates, ni porter le sceptre. Il doit tout d'abord se rendre au tombeau de l'ancêtre de la race, naba Kourita, auquel il offre des sacrifices, spécialement un bœuf. Il y a sept jours de fête, pendant lesquels la bière de mil coule à flots, et des bœufs sont tués en grand nombre. C'est pendant ces fêtes que l'élu se rase la tête et reçoit des mains des envoyés du naba de Bélousa la calotte, les savates, et le sceptre; c'est alors seulement qu'il est vraiment naba, et peut porter des éperons, avoir des pages et un coussin. Quand la fête est terminée à Kourit'Yaorin, le naba fait son entrée à Koupéla, sa résidence.

Quand mourait le Moro-Naba, le pays était en révolution, et livré aux serviteurs du naba défunt qui pillaient tant qu'ils pouvaient. C'est pourquoi la mort du Moro-Naba était soigneusement cachée jusqu'au jour des funérailles; c'est pourquoi quand elle était connue, personne ne sortait plus sans être armé de son arc et de ses flèches, ou au moins d'une lance. Les femmes et les enfants restaient à la maison. Pour prévenir tout désordre, on procédait le plus rapidement possible à une nouvelle élection. Le Widi-Naba faisait l'intérim et réunissait les voix des électeurs. Ils étaient vingt-cinq: les cinq grands ministres, et vingt autres chefs, peu importants dans le cours ordinaire de l'existence, non chefs de cantons et maîtres souvent de leur seule famille, mais grands électeurs de père en fils depuis la fondation de la dynastie de Ouagadougou. Ces vingt-cinq électeurs consultaient leur entourage et venaient désigner au Widi-Naba celui des prétendants sur lequel se portait leur suffrage. Car il pouvait y avoir plusieurs prétendants, mais ne pouvait être élu qu'un membre de la famille de naba Oubri, le fondateur de la dynastie. Quand les fêtes de l'enterrement étaient terminées, le Widi-Naba réunissait tous les chefs de canton et tous les nabas présents à Ouagadougou et proclamait le nom de l'élu, auquel il remettait les insignes du pouvoir. Ensuite avaient lieu de nombreuses fêtes, dont la plus solennelle se déroulait dans un petit village, situé à 2 km de Ouagadougou, et appelé Paspanga. C'est là que tous les nabas venaient, à tour de rôle, en commençant par les prétendants évincés, prêter le serment de fidélité.

Toutes ces coutumes ont été suivies lors de l'intronisation du Moro-Naba actuel, Naba Kom.

Chapitre troisième. — Droits des chefs, droits des particuliers.

Les nabas, qu'ils soient chefs de villages, de canton ou de province, étaient tout-puissants, et personne ne pouvait agir que sous leur regard et ne rien posséder que dans la mesure ou le naba le permettait.

En principe, tout le pays mossi appartient au Moro-Naba, qui peut disposer de tout à sa guise et donner des terres à qui il veut. En pratique, le Moro-Naba délègue ses pouvoirs à ses vassaux, les chefs de province, qui eux-mêmes les transmettent aux chefs de canton, et ceux-ci aux chefs de village. C'est ainsi qu'un indigène qui veut passer d'un canton dans un autre canton, ou même d'un village à un autre village, doit en obtenir l'autorisation, et demander au chef de canton ou de village de s'installer dans tel ou tel endroit, c'est le chef de village dans lequel il désire résider qui lui indique où il peut construire ses cases et quel champ il peut cultiver. Le naba peut déposséder un de ses administrés, s'il le veut, pour donner son champ à un autre. N'a-t-il pas la force? Le cas était cependant rare, et un indigène qui a défriché un coin de brousse, engraissé un espace libre pour semer du maïs, qui a semé et pioché, est généralement assuré de faire sa récolte, à moins de guerre. En cas d'éviction, le malheureux dépossédé n'a aucun recours: ni le chef de canton, ni le chef de province ne l'écouteraient; n'en faisaient-ils pas autant à l'occasion?

Il n'y a pas de propriété collective. Chaque individu cultive ses champs pour son propre compte; il récolte lui-même les fruits de son travail et en est le maître absolu. Cependant chaque indigène devait une dîme à ses chefs et à ses bienfaiteurs, et il est curieux, au moment de la récolte, de voir les particuliers partager leurs épis de maïs, tresser des tiges de sorgho, mesurer des paniers plus ou moins grands de petit mil. Le chef de village aura tant d'épis de maïs, le chef de canton, s'il n'est pas trop éloigné, en aura tant, le ou les beaux-pères auront les leurs et aussi tel ou tel ami auquel on doit des cauris, ou qui a précédemment rendu un service. Mais celui qui distribue ainsi à droite et à gauche, recevra à son tour de différents côtés et rentrera à peu près dans ses fonds. Les chefs de village font des cadeaux plus importants aux chefs de canton, et ceux-ci aux chefs de province.

C'était l'impôt, non pas l'impôt fixe et par tête, mais un impôt tout à fait arbitraire, et si le naba auquel on venait apporter son cadeau ne le trouvait pas suffisant, il savait bien le dire, et l'intéressé n'avait qu'à s'exécuter. Le naba de Koupéla payait, dit-on, chaque année 500.000 cauris, soit 500 frcs. et

[facing p. 22]

Anthropos IX.

En haut: Un naba et ses gens.
En bas: Un groupe de vieillards mossi.

trois chevaux au naba de Bélousa, et un million de cauris, soit 1000 frcs., en deux fois, au Moro-Naba, auquel il offrait aussi cinq chevaux. Les cadeaux au Moro-Naba étaient d'abord présentés au naba de Bélousa, et de là conduits à Ouagadougou: toujours la hiérarchie.

Mais cet impôt quasi régulier n'était pas le seul. Quand le Moro-Naba désirait des chevaux, des bœufs, ou que ce soit, il faisait prévenir un chef de province, et tous s'empressaient de le satisfaire. Un chef de province à son tour désirait-il quelque chose, manquait-il de mil ou voulait-il construire des cases, il faisait prévenir un ou plusieurs chefs de canton qui eux-mêmes prévenaient les chefs de villages et par leur intermédiaire tout arrivait à point, doucement, car il fallait du temps pour que tous ces ordres fussent transmis, mais les particuliers s'exécutaient toujours.

Avec ce système il était impossible à un indigène de s'enrichir. Trop de biens auraient excité la cupidité du naba, qui aurait trouvé un prétexte quelconque pour imposer plus que d'autres cet administré trop entreprenant, et c'est pourquoi ceux qui avaient quelques vaches, avaient bien soin de les cacher en les confiant à des Peuls. Mais ceux-ci non plus ne pouvaient pas espérer voir leur troupeau s'augmenter rapidement parce que, sous prétexte de sacrifice ou de fête, les nabas avaient toujours besoin de beaux bœufs bien gras.

Il y a aussi certaines circonstances dans lesquelles les chefs de canton et même de villages et ceux qui veulent se faire bien voir, doivent venir saluer le naba et lui offrir leurs présents, jamais moins de 500 cauris, soit 50 frcs. Le naba a-t-il entrepris un gros travail comme la construction de plusieurs cases, pioche-t-il son champ ou coupe-t-il son mil: les uns sont convoqués pour l'aider; il est de bon ton que les autres viennent lui offrir leurs cadeaux. Relève-t-il de maladie, c'est encore pour lui l'occasion de recevoir des cadeaux; a-t-il échappé à un danger, vite il faut le féliciter et lui donner des cauris. A chaque fête, soit le jour même, soit dans les jours qui suivent, chaque naba doit venir saluer son chef de province et lui apporter ses cadeaux, proportionnés à l'importance de son propre commandement. Le naba se déplace-t-il: le village dans lequel il s'arrête doit le nourrir, l'abreuver et donc lui offrir poules, chèvres, moutons, voire un bœuf, si le village est assez importante, et les palefreniers et les autres serviteurs de la suite du naba se débrouillent aux dépens des habitants. C'est assez onéreux. D'autant qu'une fois le naba rentré chez lui, il faut encore venir le saluer et lui offrir des cauris.

Enfin une grande source de profits c'était la guerre. Binger raconte les faits dont il fut témoin chez Boukari-Koutou, plus tard Moro-Naba sous le nom de naba Wobro, et détroné par l'arrivée de Voulet. Avant de partir en guerre, les sorciers étaient consultés, et désignaient le tangandé, le bois sacré, dans lequel il fallait sacrifier pour revenir vainqueur. Le chef de province sortait alors son drapeau, composé d'un simple bâton au bout duquel pendaient des grisgris et une queue de vache. Un homme, désigné à cet effet, portait ce drapeau sur le front de la bataille. Il ne devait jamais regarder en arrière mais toujours marcher devant lui, il ne portait aucune autre arme qu'un arc et des flèches, et s'il était tué un autre le remplaçait. Quand un village était cerné, toutes les prises appartenaient de droit au naba, qui faisait son choix, et laissait le reste à ses gens. Tous les hommes valides qui pouvaient encore se battre et refusaient de devenir esclaves, étaient mis à mort; les vieillards étaient épargnés, les femmes et les enfants étaient réduits en esclavage. Le naba était maître de ceux pris par des cavaliers montant ses propres chevaux; en cas de discussion sur la prise, le naba s'emparait des captures; si les particuliers réussissaient à s'entendre, ils partageaient à l'amiable; celui qui avait pris un cheval ou un esclave par ses propres moyens, en était le maître, mais pour éviter des représailles, il offrait le plus souvent au naba une partie de ses prises. Aucun traité de paix ne mettait fin à la guerre. Elle cessait quand le butin était jugé suffisant. C'est ainsi que les pays Gourounsi et Bousansé étaient de vrais greniers pour les Mossi, où ils allaient puiser selon leurs besoins.

Les nabas ne se contentaient pas d'administrer et de toucher l'impôt, ils rendaient aussi la justice, au civil comme au criminel. Le chef de village jugeait généralement en première instance, mais le condamné pouvait faire appel de son jugement au chef de canton et de celui-ci au chef de province ou même recourir directement à ce dernier. Les juges étaient toujours assistés par des assesseurs, par les anciens du village pour les nabas subalternes, par les ministres pour le chef de province. Un criminel était jugé dans le plus bref délai, et l'accusé n'était mis en prison préventive que pour attendre l'arrivée des témoins. Il pouvait d'ailleurs citer ses témoins, et ils étaient convoqués.

Aucun interrogatoire ressemblant à l'inquisition de nos juges d'instruction ne précédait l'audience. Tout se passait en plein jour, chacun pouvait intervenir quand il voulait, et la torture n'était pas employée pour obtenir des aveux compromettants, mais parfois pour faire avouer de faux témoins. Un fils n'était pas admis à témoigner en faveur de son père, les esclaves et les serviteurs ne témoignaient pas en faveur de leur maître: leur déposition aurait pu trop facilement manquer de sincérité.

En cas de contestation il n'y avait pas d'ordalie ni d'intervention de sorcier. Le serment n'était pas déféré aux témoins par le juge, mais un plaideur pouvait dire: «Que je ne puisse plus me lever d'ici, si je mens (i. e. que je meure).» Si celui qui est accusé d'avoir une dette envers un individu mort récemment, nie cette dette, l'héritier peut le conduire à la tombe et l'obliger à boire de l'eau dans laquelle a été délayée de la terre du tombeau. C'est une épreuve très redoutée, car les Mossi croient que le mort viendra se venger.

La culpabilité doit être prouvée par des témoins, sinon l'accusé est laissé libre; en cas de discussion sur la propriété de champs, d'animaux domestiques, etc., chacun apportait ses arguments, citait ses témoins, et les juges décidaient d'après les débats. Si deux femmes se disputaient entre elles, les maris devaient s'entendre pour les départager; s'il s'agissait de contestations au sujet de mariage, le chef de province était juge. Par exemple: Une jeune fille a été promise et la dot en partie payée, puis le père de la jeune fille s'est ravisé et l'a donnée à un autre, le prétendant frustré pouvait recourir au chef de province qui faisait rendre la dot. Quand un accusé se sauvait pour éviter le jugement, il ne pouvait être jugé que si des témoins déposaient contre lui.

2: Mangin FA28 Mossi

Le jugement prononcé était exécuté autant que possible, même en l'absence du condamné, et s'il revenait, le jugement n'était pas recommencé, mais le condamné pouvait en appeler au chef de province. Dans tous les cas, la famille est responsable. Si la condamnation comporte une amende à payer, et si les biens du condamné sont insuffisants, les biens de ses parents sont saisis; les parents répondent des dettes de leurs enfants, et si un accusé est en fuite, un de ses parents est saisi à sa place. Par contre, le chef de famille est maître absolu des siens et juge dans sa famille. Il doit payer les dettes de ses enfants et les amendes qu'ils ont encourues, mais il peut les châtier, voire même les mettre à mort, ou les expulser et les maudire, punition généralement extrêmement redoutée. Et ces faits nous indiquent déjà toute la force du groupement familial, que nous étudierons dans la seconde partie de cet ouvrage. Le naba fait exécuter la sentence, prononcée par le tribunal; le pouvoir exécutif et le pouvoir judiciaire étaient confiés à la même personne. Celui qui refusait de payer ses dettes ou l'amende infligée, était dévalisé. Aucune commutation de peine n'était admise, et celui qui était condamné aux fers ou à mort, devait subir lui-même sa condamnation, il ne pouvait se libérer en payant une amende, ni se substituer un esclave. Les exécutions capitales étaient publiques. Le chef de province pouvait exercer le droit de grâce, mais évidemment il en usait fort rarement: la vie d'un homme est si peu de chose aux yeux d'un Noir!

La procédure était la même pour tous, hommes et femmes. Cependant les fils de naba, les nakomsé, n'étaient ni jugés ni punis publiquement; ils n'étaient pas liés avec des cordes, mais avec des bandes d'étoffe, et en cas de condamnation à mort, ils étaient pendus et non assommés. D'ailleurs les plaintes contre eux étaient extrêmement rares; les fils d'un naba puissant pouvaient tout se permettre impunément.

Voici à titre d'exemple, quelques crimes punis et le châtiment infligé. Evidemment il n'y avait aucun code écrit, aucune échelle de pénalité régulièrement prévue. Tout dépendait de la coutume et du bon plaisir du juge. Aussi les riches pouvaient-ils, en payant leurs juges, obtenir des sentences en leur faveur; aussi un voleur échappait-il au supplice qui l'attendait en partageant son vol avec le naba; sinon le voleur pris en flagrant délit était fustigé et parfois ne s'en relevait pas. Il était condamné à plusieurs mois de fers et exposé à la risée publique devant la case du naba; il devait rendre ce qu'il avait pris, et sa famille était responsable. En cas de récidive, il était conduit au marché la corde au cou, abondamment abreuvé de dolo, rassasié de viande, puis assommé au pied d'un arbre à coup de bâtons. A Ouagadougou, il était parfois fait eunuque, ce qui équivalait presque à une condamnation à mort, parce que l'opération, exécutée d'une façon très barbare, était souvent suivie de mort. La justice française, plus clémente, se contente de la prison, ce dont se plaignent les honnêtes gens qui trouvent le châtiment trop doux.

En cas de meurtre volontaire, le meurtrier était mis à mort ou à son défaut, un membre de sa famille était exécuté. On ne cherchait pas à connaître qui avait commencé ou qui avait raison dans une rixe. (Le meurtre par imprudence était puni d'une amende, payée à la famille de la victime. Le droit de légitime défense était évidemment admis. S'il y avait coups et blessures, les adversaires étaient mis aux fers.)

Les vieilles femmes étaient souvent accusées d'être sorcières et de manger l'âme des enfants. Si leur crime semblait prouvé, si les sorciers consultés avaient déclaré telle ou telle vieille coupable de la mort d'un bébé, la pauvre était mise à mort d'une façon très cruelle: on prenait une marmite en terre, à laquelle on faisait une seconde ouverture pour que la tête de la malheureuse puisse entrer toute entière dans la marmite. La marmite était alors très fortement chauffée et on en coiffait la prétendue coupable.

Une chèvre, un mouton qui causaient des dégâts dans un champ pouvaient être tués sur place. Il fallait alors prévenir le propriétaire de la bête, qui n'avait rien à dire, mais enlevait son animal. Si les dégâts étaient causés par un bœuf ou un âne, le propriétaire du champ devait le faire constater et avait droit à des dommages et intérêts.

Quiconque trouvait un objet de peu de valeur, par exemple un couteau, même un habit, pouvait le garder; mais on devait remettre au naba tout ce qui pouvait atteindre un prix assez élevé, comme un mouton, un âne, à fortiori une vache, et l'objet trouvé appartenait alors au naba.

Le chef de province pouvait seul juger un ravisseur. Celui-ci était battu et mis aux fers, la fille était rendue à ses parents, et si elle mettait au monde un enfant, il était tué. Mais, si les parents donnaient la fille au naba, le ravisseur était mis à mort. Un adultère, pris en flagrant délit, pouvait être mis à mort par le mari trompé; mais s'il n'y avait pas flagrant délit, si le coupable avait réussi à s'enfuir, ou s'il avait simplement été dénoncé par sa complice, le mari trompé n'avait aucun recours. Le séducteur d'une jeune fille devient généralement maître de la fille si elle enfante, mais il doit donner une autre fille au fiancé.

Le chef de province avait un procédé spécial pour s'assurer de la fidélité de ses nombreuses épouses et de ses soronés. Quand une femme ou un soroné ne se conduisait pas bien, le poënaba devait les désigner au naba. Il procédait ainsi. Tous les vendredis, le poënaba quittait son village, à pied, un martinet à la main. Devant lui un serviteur portait une sacoche en cuir renfermant les grisgris. Personne ne pouvait l'approcher, tout le monde se sauvait dans la brousse, et le sentier qu'il avait suivi, était interdit tant qu'il n'était pas avéré que le terrible homme était arrivé chez le naba. Les femmes de ce dernier étaient réunies, le poënaba remplissait d'eau une grande calebasse, versait ses ingrédients dans l'eau et s'asseyait devant la calebasse. Les femmes s'approchaient à tour de rôle et se miraient dans l'eau. Le poënaba regardait aussi le liquide et disait reconnaître alors les femmes fidèles et celles qui ne l'étaient pas. Les premières étaient laissées en liberté, mais souvent battues afin de leur passer l'envie d'être infidèles. Celles qui étaient désignées comme infidèles, étaient saisies et devaient dénoncer leur complice. Tous deux étaient assommés à coups de bâton. Si la prétendue coupable n'avait pas de complice ou refusait de le dénoncer, elle seule était mise à mort. Les femmes montrent encore avec terreur le lieu de l'exécution. Cette manière de procéder était très barbare et les abus étaient criants. Pour éviter une dénonciation qui leur coûtait la vie, les pauvres femmes étaient prêtes à tout, et faisaient au poënaba tous les cadeaux qu'elles pouvaient faire afin d'être épargnées.

2: Mangin FA28 Mossi

Toutes les pages qui précèdent ne sont plus que de l'histoire ancienne. L'occupation française a profondément modifié toute l'administration et restreint les droits des nabas, qui ne sont plus que des fonctionnaires. Le peuple apprend peu à peu à ne plus les craindre, leur autorité se relâche, les cadeaux diminuent, et les nabas sont réduits à la portion congrue, obligés de cultiver leurs champs tout comme ceux qui ne sont pas nabas. Leur pouvoir judiciaire n'existe pour ainsi dire plus, et si quelques-uns ont conservé une réelle autorité, cela tient à leur éloignement de tout centre administratif et à leur passé; ils étaient en charge avant l'occupation française et ont su, malgré tout, conserver leur prestige. Mais peu à peu la mentalité change et le respect s'en va. Est-ce un bien? Est-ce un mal? On en pourrait discuter longuement, car si ce mode d'administration comportait des abus regrettables et qui devaient être réprimés, elle avait aussi ses bons côtés, et avait su faire des Mossi un des peuples les plus craints et les plus homogènes de la boucle du Niger.

LIVRE DEUXIEME.

Vie familiale.

Chapitre premier. — Constitution de la famille par le mariage.

La famille se constitue par le mariage. C'est donc l'union matrimoniale qu'il faut tout d'abord étudier. Evidemment le christianisme n'ayant paru que depuis fort peu de temps dans le pays, la virginité y est inconnue: les indigènes n'en ont pas même l'idée. Toute fille nubile doit être mariée. Elle est donnée en mariage par celui auquel elle appartient sans que ses goûts soient jamais consultés. Elle appartient tout d'abord à son père, mais parfois dès avant sa naissance, elle est à celui qui a donné sa mère, à cette condition, — et c'est une clause ordinaire dans les contrats de mariage libre — que la première fille qui naîtrait d'elle serait mariée par son grand-père. Ou encore elle est au maître de son père qui souvent n'a plus que cette charge vis-à-vis de celui dont il fut l'esclave. C'est ainsi que presque toutes les filles qui naissent à Koupéla, reviennent de droit au naba, les habitants de cette localité ayant été ses esclaves. Parfois la fille sert à payer des dettes; on emprunte en promettant de donner sa fille en mariage. Elle sera livrée, souvent sans autre dot que la somme empruntée, et, contrairement à la coutume déjà signalée, la première fille qui naît d'elle n'appartient pas au grand père: elle-même est considérée comme une esclave. La fille peut être donnée en échange de son frère ou de son oncle réduit en esclavage et qui recouvre ainsi la liberté. Ou bien le père été atteint d'une maladie grave. Il a fait venir un médecin qui a consenti à le soigner mais à la condition que la fille du malade lui appartiendrait en cas de guérison. Le père guérit et la fille est donnée en mariage à l'heureux docteur. Il y a aussi échange de fille: un indigène donne sa fille en mariage à un autre indigène qui lui donne la sienne.

La fille n'est mariée par sa mère que si c'est une enfant naturelle, dont le père est en principe inconnu. Seules les sœurs de certains nabas peuvent choisir leur mari à leur gré et le quitter quand il leur plaît. Il est facile de s'imaginer la vie volage qu'elles mènent! Dans les autres cas, la jeune fille est mariée par son père ou par l'héritier de ce dernier si le père vient à disparaître[1]. La mère n'est pas consultée, mais comme c'est elle qui s'occupe de sa fille, jusqu'à ce qu'elle aille chez son mari, elle peut, par ses conseils, ses promesses, au besoin par ses menaces, détourner sa fille de tel ou tel parti et la recevoir si elle se sauve de chez un mari auquel elle a été donné contre son consentement.

---

[1] Il est impossible d'énumérer tous les cas qui peuvent se présenter, ce serait fastidieux. Les sorciers interviennent assez souvent et qui sait ce qui peut passer par la tête d'un sorcier! Un cas entre plusieurs: Une femme a eu une fille après plusieurs autres morts si tôt après leur mariage; le père consulte alors le sorcier pour savoir s'il doit encore promettre sa fille en mariage. Le sorcier déclare qu'il faut la laisser libre de choisir son mari, sinon, elle mourra comme ses sœurs. Le père la laissera libre.

Si la jeune fille refuse absolument d'aller chez son fiancé, son père essaie de la persuader mais n'use guère de la force. Si la fille persiste malgré tout dans son refus, ce qui est extrêmement rare, le père rendra au fiancé l'argent qu'il a emprunté mais non ce qui lui a été donné bénévolement. Si le père vient à mourir après avoir promis sa fille, son héritier ne peut pas se dédire et donner sa sœur ou sa nièce à un autre, mais c'est lui qui désormais recevra les cadeaux. Si le fiancé meurt, son héritier aura la fille promise à son père, à la condition toutefois qu'il continue à payer la dot.

* * *

En effet, contrairement à ce qui se passe dans nos pays d'Europe, la femme, étant considérée comme une richesse, se paie et ce n'est point elle qui apporte une dot mais bien celui qui veut l'avoir pour femme. Si donc un homme désire la fille d'un ami, il va saluer le père de la jeune fille en question bien que parfois elle soit encore à la mamelle. Mais il se garde de dire ce qu'il désire. Il vient tantôt avec quelques cauris tantôt avec une poule, parfois un morçeau de sel, voire même un mouton. Le père de l'enfant comprend, et quand il a un travail à faire, son champ à piocher, son mil à battre, ses cases à couvrir, il fait prévenir le prétendant qui s'empresse de venir travailler pour celui qu'il désire avoir pour beau-père.

Au bout de quelque temps, ce dernier dit au prétendant: «Tu agis bien avec moi, je suis content de toi, j'agirai bien avec toi.» Le prétendant a compris et redouble d'assiduité. Il envoie ses amis; et à toutes les fêtes, il fait présent de quelques poules au père de sa future. Mais il n'y a pour ainsi dire jamais promesse ferme, fiançailles, au sens propre du mot. Parfois, le beau-père a des embarras d'argent, des dettes criardes, ou il a vu un bel habit et veut l'acheter; il fait demander à son ami de lui avancer l'argent. L'autre sait bien qu'il prête à fonds perdus ou plutôt sur la tête de la fille et s'il refuse c'est qu'il ne peut réellement pas donner ce qui lui est demandé car si les pourparlers venaient à être rompus, le père de l'enfant devrait rendre l'argent ainsi avancé ce qui l'embarrasserait fort et donc l'empêchera de revenir sur sa promesse. Il est d'ailleurs extrêmement rare qu'une fille ainsi promise ne soit pas donnée à celui qui a fait les premières avances et qui a été agréé. Le père qui, après avoir reçu des cadeaux pendant un certain temps, promettrait sa fille à un autre, serait fort mal vu et obligé de rendre l'argent qu'il aurait emprunté. Il s'exposerait de plus et lui-même et celui qu'il aurait préféré aux vengeances de l'évincé.

La dot, sans être excessive, puisque on peut évaluer l'ensemble des cadeaux à une cinquantaine de francs à donner en plusieurs années et sans compter, bien entendu, les journées de travail, la dot suppose cependant une certaine aisance et tout au moins la facilité de se procurer les cauris nécessaires. De plus, le père de l'enfant aimera mieux la donner à quelqu'un qui possède déjà une certaine notoriété et quelque fortune, en un mot à un homme

âgé. C'est ainsi que des fillettes sont promises à de vieux barbons et que des têtes blanches entrent en relations avec de toutes jeunes filles; tandis que les fils du vieillard, en âge d'être mariés, ne peuvent se procurer de femmes. Si le père a de quoi payer la dot, il se gardera bien d'aider son fils, même si ce dernier a trouvé lui-même un parti qui lui convient. Sans doute, toutes les femmes du père passeront dans l'héritage au fils aîné qui en donnera à ses frères plus jeunes, mais il faut attendre la mort du vieillard, et elle tarde parfois longtemps. On comprend alors que le fils aîné désire la mort de son père et que son père l'éloigne par crainte de voir sa fin hâtée. Il est juste d'ajouter que certains parents, comprenant mieux leurs intérêts, marient leurs fils quand ils commencent à prendre de l'âge.

* * *

La polygamie existe donc au Mossi comme en tout pays noir. La richesse d'un individu se mesure au nombre de ses femmes. Des femmes, ce sont des bras pour cultiver la terre, car la femme travaille aux champs tout comme le mari. Des femmes, ce sont des enfants en perspective, et si ce sont des filles, des jeunes gens se présenteront pour être serviteurs (dakonré) et un jour avoir une des filles en mariage; ou bien le père recevra des cadeaux. Si ce sont des garçons, ils aideront plus tard le père dans ses travaux. La polygamie, dans ces pays où chacun ne vit que pour soi, où l'égoïsme règne en maître, s'explique fort bien, mais elle est la cause certaine d'une diminution de la natalité: des vieillards à barbe blanche ne peuvent avoir des enfants ni aussi nombreux ni aussi bien constitués que des jeunes gens dans la force de l'âge, et ces derniers, privés de femmes, s'usent dans leurs excès. Il est vrai qu'ils ne sont pas nombreux ceux qui peuvent se procurer la douzaine de femmes; la plupart des indigènes se contentent, parce qu'ils ne peuvent faire autrement, de deux, trois, quatre femmes. Certains nabas cependant possèdent des troupeaux de femmes, ce qui constitue certainement un abus regrettable. Leurs épouses se comptent par centaines. Le désordre moral le plus complet règne dans ces harems où les jeunes gens qui servent de palfreniers et de soronés, vivent sans cesse au milieu des femmes de leur maître et ainsi s'expliquent les précautions prises par les possesseurs de toutes ces femmes, les eunuques du Moro Naba, les poènaba et leur sinistre fonction.

* * *

Le mariage est exogamique c'est-à-dire que les parents ne se marient pas entre eux tant que le lien de parenté est connu. Il n'y a pas de division de castes très tranchée. Les Mossi épousent les Yarsé Malinké, les Bousansé, les Gourounsi, mais ne peuvent épouser ni les Peuls ni les Haoussa Un Mossi qui ne fait pas parti d'une caste peut choisir son épouse parmi des Mossi castés. Mais les Mossi castés ne se marient pas indifféremment entre eux: C'est ainsi que les forgerons ne peuvent se marier avec les tambours.

Mais la jeune fille a grandi. Le prétendant a déjà fait de nombreux cadeaux, bref, il est temps de procéder au mariage. Le père de la jeune fille fait venir le fiancé et lui dit: «Viens tel jour me saluer avec une poule.» Le prétendant, tout heureux, retourne à son village et annonce aux anciens qu'un tel lui a dit de venir le saluer avec une poule. Au jour dit, le prétendant se rend chez les parents de la jeune fille avec une poule; ses amis l'accompagnent. Il remet sa poule, et tous se rendent chez le chef de la famille ou, à son défaut, chez un vieillard du village. Le père déclare alors devant tous qu'il veut donner sa fille à un tel. On échange des félicitations, et tous retournent chez eux. Il s'agit maintenant de préparer la fête, de prévenir les parents et les amis, de faire la bière de mil. Entre temps les parents et les amis qui connaissent la bonne nouvelle viennent saluer le fiancé avec cinquante, cent cauris pour l'aider à couvrir les frais occasionnés par les fêtes.

Quand tout est prêt, le fiancé prend cinq cents cauris et un coq pour aller saluer le père de la jeune fille et cinq cents cauris pour le vieillard chez lequel sa fiancée s'est rendue pour la circonstance et où elle restera jusqu'au jour du mariage. Les parents de la jeune fille ont préparé le diner tandis que le fiancé fournit la boisson. Un parent du fiancé rase en cercle le front de la fiancée qui se retire alors dans la cour intérieure. Là, les femmes de son père la lavent à grand eau et lui mettent autour une cordellete de coton. Elle revêt un habit blanc et ainsi parée vient offrir une calebasse de bière à son fiancé qui est resté dehors avec ses amis. Toute l'assemblée remercie les parents de la jeune fille et tous se retirent. Le surlendemain, le fiancé envoie ses amis saluer la parenté de sa fiancée avec un panier de farine de mil, quatre boules de kalro et du sel. Le tout est partagé entre les gens du village. C'est cette fête, avec les ceremonies qui l'accompagnent, que l'on pourrait assimiler aux fiançailles.

Mais la jeune fille est toujours chez le chef de famille ou le vieillard qui le remplace! Quand toutes ces cérémonies préliminaires sont accomplies, le fiancé envoie chaque jour demander sa femme. Lorsque le trousseau est réuni: des habits dont le nombre dépend de la richesse des parents, des calebasses, un pot pour la sauce, une cuiller en bois pour remuer la bouillie de mil, le tout dans un panier, le père annonce à l'envoyé du fiancé que la date du mariage est fixée à tel jour, presque toujours un vendredi, parfois un jeudi. Le fiancé fait préparer une seconde fois la fête et encore à manger et à boire. Dans la soirée, ses amis vont à la rencontre de la fiancée qui est accompagnée de sa famille. En approchant du village, le cortège pousse des you you joyeux, la fiancée fait mine de vouloir se sauver, les jeunes gens courent après elle, la portent sur leurs épaules jusque chez le chef de la famille du fiancé ou, à son défaut, chez un de ses oncles. Et la fête commence. Les hommes mangent de la bouillie de mil et une poule; les femmes, la bouillie de mil et une pintade. Tous boivent de la bière, dansent et chantent.

Le lendemain matin, les parents du fiancé rasent la tête de la fiancée et celle de son mari si c'est sa première femme, car ils changent de vie: de jeune homme le mari devient maître et la jeune fille, femme. Dans la soirée, les amis et parents du nouveau marié vont au village de la jeune femme portant dans l'ordre suivant: un mouton qui a été tué chez le mari, des cruches de bière et enfin le sarabo. Les parents de la jeune fille suivent dans le plus grand silence et sans saluer personne. Arrivés chez les parents, le porteur du mouton et les femmes qui portent la bière de mil et le sarabo rentrent dans la cour intérieure et déposent leur fardeau, puis resortent et dansent tandis que les beaux-parents font mettre les victuailles dans d'autres récipients. On rend aux porteurs leurs cruches et on les chasse en les battant avec des tiges de mil, en les aspergeant avec de l'eau mêlée de cendres.

Pendant tout ce temps, la jeune fille est dans le soukala de l'ancien qui la fait garder jalousement par sa première femme. Elle reste enfermée pendan plusieurs jours, jusqu'à ce qu'enfin le vieillard se décide à la faire conduire chez son mari. Sa femme prépare alors la bouillie de mil de la sauce avec de la viande et cherche une cruche de bière. Les vieilles se réunissent et accompagnent la jeune femme chez son mari. Le mari rendra la politesse le lendemain à l'ancien. Ils sont désormais mariés . . . et ce n'est pas sans peine.

Si le nouveau marié est aisé, il ira quelques jours après les fêtes remercier ses beaux-parents. Il offrira, dans des sacs en cuir entièrement cousus, 1300 cauris à son beau-père, et 1400 à sa belle-mère. S'il le peut, il offre encore de la bière, deux poules et un mouton: ces derniers cadeaux sont moins nécessaires; mais s'il n'offre pas les cauris, il risque que ses beaux-parents ne prennent les enfants de sa femme et ne les gardent jusqu'à ce qu'ils aient reçu les cadeaux de remerciement.

* * *

Il est à remarquer que ces cérémonies sont assez souvent abrégées. Elles comportent aussi quelques variantes que nous n'avons pas à relater ici. Parfois même elles n'ont pas lieu. C'est lorsque la fille a déjà un mari avant que de naître ou encore quand elle fait parti d'un héritage. Ses parents la conduisent alors tout simplement chez son mari.

Aucun sacrifice n'accompagne les cérémonies du mariage. Mais le mari fera un sacrifice le jour où il construira la case de sa femme et là où la case sera élevée. La mère consulte cependant quelques fois le sorcier pour savoir si sa fille sera bien reçue et quel sacrifice offrir pour qu'elle ne soit pas malade chez son mari. Elle vient le dire au père de la jeune fille qui offre lui-même le sacrifice prescrit.

En principe, le mari ne doit plus rien à ses beaux-parents. En pratique, il se déconsidérait lui-même s'il ne leur faisait pas encore quelques cadeaux, surtout aux principales fêtes. Au temps du mais, il en réserve quelques épis pour les parents de sa femme; quand il bat son mil, il a soin d'en envoyer à son beau-père, et quand pour une raison quelconque il célèbre une fête, ses beaux-parents sont invités; et lui-même les aide dans leurs travaux.

Le divorce proprement dit, rendu par jugement régulier, est inconnu. Un mari peut renvoyer sa femme chez ses parents si elle est voleuse, paresseuse, surtout si elle commet un adultère, mais ce renvoi est toujours mal vu, même dans ce dernier cas. Le mari doit surveiller sa femme, au besoin la corriger. Celui qui repudie son épouse verra toutes les portes se fermer devant lui, et il ne pourra pas se procurer de nouvelles épouses. Il arrive aussi, et le cas est plus fréquent, que c'est la femme qui se sauve chez ses parents, soit qu'elle se plaigne d'être maltraitée, soit qu'elle ne se plaise pas chez son mari, soit pour toute autre cause plus ou moins avouable. Si le mari peut la rattraper avant qu'elle ne soit arrivée chez elle, il n'y a pas grande difficulté; il se contente de la battre et de l'enfermer pour quelques jours. Mais si elle est chez ses parents, surtout s'ils sont de connivence, le mari sera obligé de faire quelques cadeaux même à l'infidèle. Les beaux-parents essaient, en général, de décider leur fille à rentrer au domicile conjugale, mais ne la forcent pas; le naba lui-même, appelé à intervenir, se contente d'user de son autorité morale et réussit généralement par ses menaces à décider la fugitive à retourner chez son mari, qui, lui, peut employer la force s'il le veut. Il arrive cependant, mais ce cas est fort rare, que le mari, ne pouvant amener sa femme à rentrer chez lui, reprend seul le chemin de ses cases. La femme n'est inquiétée par personne et ses parents lui laissent dès lors toute liberté. Mais la rancune du mari méprisé peut être tenace et la vengeance terrible. La dot n'est pas rendue: le mari n'avait qu'a mieux tenir sa femme. Il est cependant reconnu que les enfants, garçons ou filles, nés dans le mariage, appartiennent au père qui ne se fera pas faute de les réclamer quand ils auront grandis ou s'ils se sauvent chez leur mère.

Souvent, dans les peuplades nègres, on rencontre des castes séparées les unes des autres par des cloisons étanches dont la principale porte sur les interdictions de mariage entre les membres d'une même caste ou avec des individus non castés. Une telle interdiction n'existe pas parmi les Mossi, exceptés pour le cas déjà signalé ainsi que nous l'avons vu plus haut. Car s'il y a trois sortes de castes: en ce pays les tambours, les forgerons et les fossoyeurs, ce sont des castes en ce sens seulement que les Mossi qui ne sont pas de la famille ne peuvent pas exercer ces métiers, et il serait peut-être plus exact de parler simplement de corporations.

Les tambours (binda) sont ceux qui jouent du bindré, sorte de grosse calebasse, dans laquelle est percé un trou de 0·40 de diamètre environ et recouverte d'une peau. Ceux qui font parti de la famille des tambours, et ceux-là seuls, peuvent jouer de ce tambour qui semble spécial au Mossi, mais tout le monde peut jouer des autres sortes de tambours. Les tambours sont de tous les sacrifices offerts par le naba; le vendredi étant jour de sacrifice, ils vont en ce jour saluer le naba. Dans les sacrifices ils ont droit à la tête de la victime. Ils sont de tous les enterrements, jouent du tambour et reçoivent à cette occasion une gratification qui dépend de la richesse du défunt. Mais si c'est un des leurs qui meurt, ils ne reçoivent ni cauris ni nourriture. Ils vont à la guerre avec leurs tambours. S'ils ont le malheur d'être faits prisonniers, ils sont impitoyablement massacrés et jamais vendus soit pour les empêcher de revenir exciter les guerriers au sac du village, soit par ce que personne ne voudrait les acheter, ils appartiennent à un naba qui userait de représailles envers celui qui détiendrait un de ses tambours, soit pour ces deux raisons tout ensemble. Ce sont les griots du pays, mot à peu près consacré par l'usage. Ils connaissent la généalogie des nabas et chantent leurs louanges. Chaque chef de province a un certain nombre de tambours à son service et ne se déplace jamais sans en emmener quelques-uns avec lui. En temps ordinaire, ils vont au marché; ils suivent alors les gens les mieux habillés, chantent en leur honneur, battent furieusement la caisse et espèrent bien recevoir en échange quelques cauris, des kolas, ou tout au moins avoir de la bière.

Par forgerons (saba), on entend ceux qui travaillent le fer, l'extraient du minerai et le réduisent en pioches ou en hachettes. Ils travaillent parfois le bois, comme dans les autres régions du Soudan, mais ce sont plus souvent les membres d'une autre corporation qui se livrent à cette industrie. Les bijoutiers fabriquent les bracelets, liment les dents, réparent même les pioches usées, etc. Ils ne sont pas forgerons proprement dits, et qui le veut peut exercer leur métier.

Les fossoyeurs (lada) sont ceux qui offrent les présents faits aux mânes des défunts le jour de leur mort ou au jour anniversaire (kouré). Ce sont eux qui déposent le mort dans la tombe, et sans eux il est impossible de procéder à un enterrement si le défunt est mort de maladie. Mais tout le monde peut creuser la fosse et porter le mort. Nous les retrouverons plus loin quand il sera question des funérailles.

Chapitre deuxième. — La famille.

On admire beaucoup et à juste titre la constitution de la famille romaine et la puissance donnée au paterfamilias, fondement même de cette famille. Nous retrouverons quelque chose du paterfamilias chez les Mossi. Que n'y retrouvons-nous aussi la matrone romaine! Nous avons déjà vu que tout Mossi dépend du Moro Naba, d'un chef de province, d'un chef de canton, d'un chef de village. Il dépend aussi, et d'une façon plus immédiate, de son chef de famille et ne peut rien faire sans lui. S'il veut se marier, il prend conseil de son chef de famille, et c'est chez lui qu'il mettra sa jeune épouse lors de son arrivée au village; et de son côté, celui qui veut marier sa fille, ne le fera pas sans prendre conseil de son chef de famille, et c'est chez lui qu'il mettra son enfant et c'est de chez lui qu'elle partira pour le domicile de son époux.

La famille est donc très fortement organisée au Mossi. Chaque famille a son nom, peu usité d'ailleurs, et quand un de ses membres a été naba, c'est du premier naba qu'elle tire son nom. Les membres d'une même famille ne peuvent se marier entre eux et généralement tous ont les mêmes kisgou (chose défendue), que ce mot désigne le totem, le tabou, ou toute autre chose. Le chef est le plus vieux de la famille. A sa mort, l'autorité passe, non à son héritier, mais au membre le plus âgé de la famille. Rien ne se fait sans consulter le chef de famille, et même quand un des membres de la famille occupe un poste important, il reste plein de déférence pour son chef de famille, pour l'ancien. C'est ainsi que le premier ministre actuel de Koupéla, le Saman Naba, laisse à son oncle les prérogatives de chef de famille; il ne se permettra pas d'offrir les sacrifices le jour de la fête des morts et il consultera son aîné pour les cas qui relèvent de son autorité. Le chef de famille n'a pourtant pas droit de vie et de mort sur les membres de sa famille ni sur ses femmes qui, même voleuses, même infidèles, ne peuvent être mises à mort: tuer les siennes est une prérogative réservée au chef de province. Leur mari ou le chef de famille peut les battre, les mettre aux fers, voire même, ce qui

Anthropos IX.

Les grands tambours chez les Mossi.

Anthropos IX.

[facing p. 34] Danse de fillettes mossi.

est plus rare, les chasser, mais non les tuer. Le chef de famille ne peut pas davantage disposer des biens de la famille, ni obliger les siens à les lui donner. Cependant il peut demander à ses parents de l'aider à payer ses dettes, à avoir une femme, mais il ne peut les forcer. Ses parents l'aident pourtant toujours dans la mesure du possible.

Les enfants dépendent directement de leur père, et si ce dernier consulte le chef de famille quand il a une détermination grave à prendre, c'est leur père que consulteront les enfants, et le père en référera à son tour au chef de famille, et celui-ci souvent au chef du village, qui aura recours à son chef de canton, qui consultera le chef de province, si la chose en vaut la peine. Toute décision grave n'est donc prise qu'après mûre réflexion.

Le père est maître absolu de ses enfants. Il a sur eux droit de vie ou de mort et il en usait parfois, surtout si son enfant naissait difforme ou devenait voleur incorrigible. C'est à lui à marier ses filles, il peut les échanger contre d'autres femmes, il peut les donner en mariage à son créancier pour payer ses dettes. Il peut mettre ses fils en service chez un parent ou un ami, et il est rare que le fils aîné reste chez son père, surtout s'il est naba ou riche: le père a trop peur que son fils ne le fasse disparaître pour avoir plus tôt l'héritage. Et puis donner son fils à un autre est une façon commode de se débarrasser du souci de son mariage; celui chez lequel il se trouve, doit y pourvoir lui-même.

Le père ne s'occupe guère de l'éducation de ses enfants. La fille reste toujours avec sa mère jusqu'à son mariage. Sitôt que le fils est en âge de travailler il aide son père, mais n'en recevra jamais un conseil. Les Mossi le père comme la mère, ne savent pas élever leurs enfants. Sous prétexte qu'un petit enfant ne sait pas ce qu'il fait, ses parents le laissent agir à sa guise, satisfaire tous ses caprices sans le corriger, et des bambins qui peuvent à peine articuler deux mots, disent les plus grossières injures à leur mère, lèvent sur elle leurs petits poings, sans s'attirer de correction. Les témoins se contentent de dire qu'un jour il sera batailleur. D'ailleurs le corriger c'est le faire pleurer et les pleurs d'un enfant sont toujours une gêne qu'il faut, autant que possible, s'épargner. Si un enfant agit mal, s'il se bat, s'il vole; s'il fréquente des voleurs de profession ou de mauvais garnements, s'il raconte à tous ce qu'il a vu ou entendu et ne sait pas garder un secret, s'il y a des plaintes portées contre lui, son père, sa mère le puniront, lui recommanderont de ne pas recommencer mais ils ne préviendront pas le mal, et le cas échéant, payeront les dettes de leur fils, car tous les membres de la famille, tout d'abord le père, sont solidaires. Le père n'enseigne pas à son fils le culte et les sacrifices, mais se fait aider par lui. L'enfant regarde faire son père et quand il a grandi il fait comme il a vu faire.

Des gamins de douze à quinze ans peuvent ne pas rentrer le soir au foyer paternel pour quelque raison que ce soit, et sans avoir prévenu, personne ne s'en inquiète: «il reviendra toujours». Le jeune homme d'une vingtaine d'années se construit une case en dehors de celles de son père afin d'être plus libre et de pouvoir recevoir telle visite qu'il lui plaira. En dehors du champ de son père, il pioche son champ à lui, dont il vendra les produits à sa guise pour s'acheter des vêtements, car son père le nourrit mais lui fait rarement cadeau d'un habit quand il est en âge de travailler pour son compte. S'il tisse des étoffes pendant la saison sèche, il en fait ce qu'il veut, les vend ou se confectionne des habits, son père n'a rien à y voir. C'est cependant le père qui apprend à son fils les divers travaux de culture, qui lui montre à tresser des nattes et parfois à tisser. Si le père exerce un métier, il l'apprend à son fils; les tambours apprennent à leurs enfants à battre du tambour et à chanter les louanges des chefs, les bijoutiers, les forgerons, enseignent leur métier aux leurs.

Le père aime généralement ses enfants et joue volontiers avec eux quand ils sont encore tout petits. Il les garde pendant que la maman s'occupe des soins du ménage. Des parents pleurent sincèrement la mort de leurs enfants et des frères celle de leur frère. Sans doute, il y a des parents qui témoignent d'une profonde indifférence vis-à-vis de leur descendance, mais le cas est rare. Moins rare est le cas d'enfants qui s'inquiètent peu de leurs parents. Cependant les vieillards sont généralement entourés de respect et bien traités. Un fils qui abandonne son vieux père ou sa vieille mère, est très mal vu. La mère aime mieux mettre au monde des filles qui l'aideront dans le travail journalier, mais elle désire un ou deux garçons chez lesquels elle pourra se retirer dans ses vieux jours.

La fille vit avec sa mère. A peine sait-elle marcher qu'elle accompagne sa mère au marigot, elle en reviendra portant une calebasse d'eau sur sa tête. A mesure qu'elle grandit, la cruche grossit et des fillettes portent des cruches d'eau d'un poids de quinze à vingt kilos. A la maison, la jeune fille moud le grain qui servira à la nourriture de toute la famille, elle attise le feu, remue la sauce, lave les écuelles et le linge, balaie, enfin s'occupe de tous les soins du ménage sous la direction de sa mère. Une femme qui a deux ou trois filles grandelettes, n'a plus qu'à les surveiller. Vivant sans cesse avec leur mère, les jeunes filles sont généralement plus sérieuses et mieux élevées que les jeunes garçons. Mais malheureusement elles rattrapent le temps perdu et ce sont elles qui, le plus souvent, vont de leur plein gré rejoindre les jeunes gens, la nuit, dans leurs cases. Un jeune homme peut d'ailleurs faire des cadeaux à une jeune fille déjà promise en mariage, et celà en présence de sa mère, qui ne dit rien.

Les jeunes gens aident leur père sitôt que leurs forces le leur permettent. Sitôt qu'ils le peuvent les plus jeunes accompagnent leur frère aîné dans la brousse; ils gardent ensemble les moutons et les chèvres. Ce sont les jeunes garçons qui vont tous les matins, avant que le soleil ait eu le temps de sécher la rosée, chercher les termitières fraîches et encore pleines de bestioles et dont les poussins sont très friands. Pendant la saison sèche, ils couperont l'herbe pour couvrir les toits et les tresseront; s'ils sont assez grands, ils iront même couper le bois. Quand l'enfant a grandi, si leur père ou celui chez lequel il se trouve a un cheval, c'est l'enfant qui le garde, le conduit au marigot pour le faire boire et le laver, va dans la brousse couper l'herbe, nettoie les écuries. A l'hivernage, quand l'herbe verte a poussé, chaque cheval de naba riche est soigné par trois ou quatre enfants. Les uns vont couper de l'herbe, les autres la mettent presque de force dans la bouche du cheval tandis qu'un bambin chasse les mouches avec un bâton au bout duquel est fixée une sorte de semelle de cuir flexible. Aussi l'hivernage est-il le bon temps pour les chevaux et sont-ils gros et gras. Malheureusement le Noir ne prévoit pas l'avenir et ne sait pas calculer combien il faudrait d'herbe sèche pour passer la morte saison, et les animaux souffrent alors beaucoup de la faim.

Tout comme les enfants de chez nous, les jeunes Mossi aiment à jouer. Les tout petits ont leur hachette en os qu'ils mordillent, les fillettes ont leurs poupées en bois, et les jours de grandes fêtes, elles viennent gracieusement les offrir en faisant la révérence, et qui accepte ces poupées doit donner quelques cauris en les rendant. Les garçons façonnent des chevaux, des selles, des cavaliers avec de la terre glaise et font des dessins dans la poussière avec leurs doigts comme à leur âge nous faisions des pâtés de sable ou des bonshommes dans les marges de notre abécédaire: oh! évidemment tout celà est très grossier, mais dénote bien que les hommes sont les mêmes et ont les mêmes goûts par toute la terre.

Tout enfant aime le bruit, et nos Mossi n'y manquent pas: quand les tiges de mil sont encore vertes, ils se font des sortes d'harmonicas dont la languette vibratoire est un morceau de tige de mil attaché avec un fil; ou bien ils évident par son milieu une tige de mil ne laissant qu'une lamelle qui vibre sous les coups répétés d'une baguette. Le son est renforcé par une calabasse cassée qui sert de résonnateur. Ce sont des joujoux à deux sous, bons à jeter le lendemain quand ils ont séché, mais il est si facile d'en fabriquer d'autres! Ils font aussi des cercles en paille qui, en temps ordinaire, sont passés au poignet comme des bracelets, mais peuvent aussi devenir un jeu. Les bracelets sont déposés à terre devant chacun des joueurs qui fait rouler à son tour un des petits cerceaux. Si le cerceau tombe sur celui d'un partenaire, le joueur a gagné le cerceau lancé; s'il tombe à une distance déterminée, c'est l'adversaire qui a gagné le cerceau lancé; s'il dépasse cette distance, le coup est à recommencer.

Les jeunes gens et les hommes ont des jeux plus compliqués. Ils ont une sorte de jeu de dames, les casiers sont formés par de petits trous faits à la main et les pions sont représentés par des pierres. Il y a surtout le jeu des cauris, jeu de hasard, jeu où l'on gagne et où l'on perd et, comme tous les jeux d'argent, jeu passionnant. Qui s'est adonné à ce jeu, va aussi loin que ses émules d'Europe. Il devient tricheur, menteur, voleur, fait des dettes. Il y en a qui ont joué jusqu'à leur dernière culotte, jusqu'à leur dernier pagne et ont fini par se jouer eux-mêmes. C'est un jeu à prohiber aussi sévèrement que les jeux de hasard chez nous.

* * *

Mais le jeu des jeux, la distraction des distractions, celle à laquelle on se livre dans toutes les circonstances gaies ou tristes de la vie et souvent sans motif, c'est la danse. S'ils la connaissaient, la muse Terpsichore n'aurait pas de fidèles plus dévoués. Tous, hommes, femmes, et enfants ne se tiennent plus quand ils entendent des airs de danse.

2: Mangin FA28 Mossi

Et pourtant, à vrai dire, le Mossi ne sait pas danser. A part les danses des circoncis, à part quelques villages de danseurs qui s'adonnent avec méthode à la chorégraphie, le commun du peuple ne sait pas danser avec grâce, ce qui ne les empêche pas de se livrer tous à la danse. Les hommes et les femmes dansent séparément. La danse la plus ordinaire des hommes consiste en un mouvement rapide du buste de gauche à droite et de droite à gauche; les pieds ne quittent pas terre et le danseur les avance très lentement. Les bras sont repliés à la hauteur et à l'écartement des épaules; les doigts sont allongés et bras et mains s'agitent avec tout le corps. Fait par des professionnels, et on en trouve parfois dans les villages, le mouvement n'est pas disgracieux mais manque d'ampleur. Le costume des danseurs se compose d'un cimier en carton qui sert de coiffure et dont la crête est ornée d'une bande de cauris: souvent les côtés portent des morceaux de miroir, des plumes, et toutes sortes de petits objets voyants. Le buste est vêtu d'un maillot à grosses mailles dont la ceinture est ornée de pompons ou de cauris et de grelots. Le danseur porte au médius un morceau de fer qui ressemble, en plus gros, aux écailles de la moule, et au pouce une bague de fer. Il frappe l'une contre l'autre en cadence, l'écaille de fer et la bague. Souvent le poignet est orné d'un bracelet fait d'une certaine quantité de ces écailles de fer auxquelles pendent de petites lamelles de même métal et qui résonnent au moindre mouvement. Ceux qui n'ont aucun costume, essaient de s'affubler avec des oripeaux.

Les femmes dansent deux à deux chacune de leur côté, tournoyant sur elles mêmes et prenant les poses qu'elles jugent les plus gracieuses. Quand elles passent à proximité l'une de l'autre, elles se retournent et se frappent dos contre dos, et l'une se retire tandis qu'une autre vient prendre sa place. Pendant ce temps les spectatrices battent des mains en cadence et chantent. Parfois même, l'une d'elle pousse un cri strident pour exciter les danseuses ou en l'honneur de l'une d'elles qui s'est distinguée par sa grâce et sa souplesse.

Il n'y a pas de danses spéciales pour les morts, et il ne semble pas que les danses mossi comportent l'obscénité de certaines danses nègres.

Mais retournons à nos enfants. Il est donc vrai de dire, d'une façon générale, que les enfants font ce qu'ils veulent pourvu qu'ils aident dans les travaux ordinaires, que le fils aide son père et la fille, sa mère. Heureusement, il y a des exceptions et certains parents surveillent leurs enfants d'assez près, mais ce sont des exceptions. Les garçons préfèrent leur mère à leur père par ce que ce dernier a souvent à les réprimander, tandis que le rôle de la maman est, comme partout, de gâter ses enfants.

Les enfants des différentes femmes s'aiment assez entre eux, se rendent volontiers service, et quand le père meurt, le fils aîné ne fait guère de distinction entre ses frères et les aide tous dans la mesure du possible. La polygamie ne semble pas avoir d'inconvénients de ce côté.

Quand un individu a plusieurs femmes, c'est sa première femme (porkyéma) qui est maîtresse de maison et non pas sa mère. Toutes les autres femmes sont sur le pied d'égalité, même les esclaves, excepté, bien entendu celles pour lesquelles le mari a quelques préférences. Plus le nombre des femmes augmente, plus augmente l'autorité de la première épouse, qui désire

Anthropos IX.

Dansoure mossi.

[facing p. 38]

Dansoure mossi.

Anthropos IX.

vivement que son mari ait de nombreuses femmes. Chaque épouse a sa case séparée dans laquelle elle vit avec ses enfants, ce qui évite bien des querelles. Le mari se rend dans la case de celle qu'il désire ou la fait venir dans sa propre case. Quand l'homme pioche son champ, toutes ses femmes et tous ses enfants doivent l'aider, car c'est le maître de la maison qui nourrit toutes ses femmes et tous ses enfants et leur distribue chaque jour la ration de mil, il n'est donc que juste que tous prennent part aux travaux des champs dans la mesure de leurs forces.

Mais pourvu que la femme soit à la disposition de son mari et qu'elle l'aide dans les cultures, elle est libre de faire ce que bon lui semble. C'est elle qui ira au marché vendre les grains ou les condiments pour la sauce, le fil pour tisser les étoffes, mais c'est le mari qui vend les bandes et le coton brut. Pendant l'hivernage, chaque femme peut avoir son champ, se faire aider par ses enfants et la récolte lui appartient en propre, le mari n'a rien a y voir. Si la femme file du coton, elle le vendra au marché ou même à son mari; si elle fait de la bière, elle en offrira une cruche à son époux, mais si celui-ci reçoit des amis et désire d'autres cruches, il les paiera argent comptant, et il n'est pas rare de voir des femmes refuser de vendre à crédit à leur mari: qui sait quand il paierait?

La femme peut aller visiter ses parents avec l'autorisation de son époux qui lui fixe un jour de retour. Mais rarement la femme revient au jour dit, et son mari vient la chercher lui-même ou envoie un de ses amis avec un morçeau de sel ou un menu cadeau. C'est surtout quand elle est dans un état intéressant ou peu après la naissance de son bébé que la mère aime à se rendre chez ses parents. Elle sait qu'elle y sera bien soignée et surtout qu'elle y jouira d'une liberté absolue. Aussi n'est-il pas rare que des femmes quittent, pour plusieurs mois, le domicile conjugal et qu'elles se fassent un peu prier pour le réintégrer. La plupart des difficultés que les Mossi ont entre eux, viennent de leurs femmes ou de leurs dettes; on ne peut cependant pas dire, d'une façon générale, que la femme soit malheureuse et maltraitée.

Mais le rôle de la femme est d'avoir des enfants. Sitôt que la femme se sait enceinte, elle ne consent plus à s'approcher de son mari, mais elle se garde bien de lui faire part de son état: l'enfant qu'elle porte en mourrait. Si ses parents viennent à trépasser pendant sa grossesse, elle ne porte pas leur deuil, elle ne se rend pas à leur enterrement. Si c'est une jeune femme qui n'a pas encore eu d'enfant, une des autres femmes de son mari, ou, à son défaut, la sœur même du mari, vient de nuit asperger d'eau le mari et sa femme. La jeune femme l'appelle désormais son mari et lui prépare la bouillie de mil et fait chauffer l'eau pour qu'elle se lave. Quand la grossesse devient visible une parente de la femme va consulter le sorcier pour savoir quel sacrifice offrir afin que tout se passe bien, mais le mari ignore cette consultation. Parfois le sacrifice est renouvelé quand le terme approche. A la naissance du premier-né, le mari envoie chez les parents de sa femme un enfant avec un coq ou une poule, selon le sexe du nouveau né. L'enfant jette le volatile dans la cour sans rien dire et se sauve: tout le monde a compris.

Un enfant difforme, estropié, aveugle dès sa naissance est supprimé: il est tout simplement noyé sans autre forme de procès s'il est jugé incurable. Autrefois, les jumeaux étaient souvent noyés eux aussi parce que leur naissance entraîne des embarras pour la famille qui doit faire des sacrifices spéciaux; parfois un seul est supprimé. S'ils ont été épargnés et meurent de leur belle mort, leur mère porte un grelot au pied jusqu'au jour de la fête du mort (houré). Mais la mère vient-elle à mourir ou le père est-il malade, le sorcier n'a qu'un mot à dire: les enfants seront mis à mort, car c'est eux qui sont cause de la maladie ou de la mort de leurs parents. Des parents vinrent un jour apporter aux frères de Koupéla un bébé qui savait à peine marcher. Il était né un vendredi et sa mère était morte; c'en était assez pour qu'il fut lui-même sacrifié. Ses parents essayèrent sans succès de l'empoisonner; ils l'exposèrent trois jours dans la brousse et l'enfant ne mourut pas. C'est en désespoir de cause qu'ils l'amenèrent aux missionnaires, qui s'empressèrent de recueillir le pauvre petit. Un enfant dont on constate la folie est abandonné dans la brousse et y meurt de faim.

Il n'est cependant que juste d'ajouter que ces coutumes barbares renouvelées des Spartiates, ne sont pas toujours appliquées. Des enfants estropiés et atteints de maladies incurables sont fort bien soignés par leurs parents, et des jumeaux, nés avant l'occupation française, se portent actuellement fort bien.

Trois jours après la naissance d'un enfant mâle, quatre jours après celle d'une fille, le père et la mère réunissent les parents afin de se réjouir de ce que la famille vient de s'augmenter d'un nouveau membre. En ce jour, le front du nouveau né est rasé en cercle et il reçoit un nom. Ce sont les sœurs du mari ou ses autres femmes qui donnent un nom au premier enfant, et le père choisit celui des autres.

Ce nom est tiré d'une circonstance qui a précédé, accompagné ou suivi la naissance. La mère a-t-elle, même par mégarde, même dans sa jeunesse, tué une poule, son premier enfant s'appellera du nom de la poule (noara), sinon l'enfant mourra. Si le père ou la mère ont vu deux serpents au même endroit, l'enfant portera le nom de ganda. Si plusieurs enfants sont morts précédemment, le nouveau né prendra le nom de yéwaya «il est arrivé». S'il y a plusieurs raisons réunies pour donner un nom à l'enfant, par exemple s'il doit s'appeler Noara, Ganda, Yéwaya, on l'appelera Ywawa «celui qui a beaucoup de noms». Le puiné porte souvent le nom de son aîné avec l'adjectif Bila «petit», «plus jeune», ainsi l'aîné s'appelle Tibo, son cadet s'appellera Tibila (Tibo Bila, le petit fétiche Tibo). Le nom n'est donc pas donné au hasard. Certains noms sont assez jolis: Zuényendé il est timide; Nongabamba elle les aime (ses parents); Danimmamyé ne m'oublie pas. Le nom indique parfois simplement le sexe: Daore mâle; Poko femelle; ou bien la fête, ou le jour de la semaine qui a vu naître l'enfant.

Si le nom n'est pas donné au hasard, les tatouages ne diffèrent pas non plus sans raison. Le tatouage national se compose essentiellement de chaque côté de la figure de trois raies parallèles qui partent des tempes et coupent la joue verticalement jusqu'au menton et d'une autre raie qui part du nez et tombe perpendiculairement sur les trois premières, traversant ainsi la joue

2: Mangin FA28 Mossi

Anthropos IX.

Femmes mossi tatouées.

Anthropos IX.

Type de jeune homme mossi tatoué.

[facing p. 40]

horizontalement. Parfois, il n'y a que deux raies verticales, et entre ces raies, de petites hachures horizontales en forme d'échelle: c'est la marque des hommes libres et des fils de chefs. Les trois raies verticales peuvent aussi être arrêtées au milieu de la joue par trois raies horizontales et reprendre ensuite jusqu'au menton: c'est la marque que porte un enfant né chez les Peuls, par ce que ses aînés sont morts et que le sorcier a déclaré qu'il faut que sa mère aille enfanter chez les Peuls. Ce tatouage est propre à une tribu distincte des Mossi, vivant au milieu d'eux et parlant cependant une langue différente, les Marensé, plus connus sous le nom de Marka. Si la mère ou la grand'mère est Yarga, l'enfant ne portera qu'une barre horizontale sur la joue droite et les trois barres verticales: c'est le tatouage des Yarsé.

Les enfants sont tatoués à n'importe quel âge, parfois quand ils sont déjà âgés. Beaucoup de Yarsé ne tatouent pas leurs enfants, et les Mossi eux-mêmes ne semblent pas tenir d'une façon spéciale à cette coutume barbare qui défigure quelque fois un individu. Le tatouage se fait à l'aide d'un rasoir et dans la plaie on met du charbon pilé, pour adoucir la peau et rendre la souffrance moins vive, la figure est toute entiere enduite d'huile jusqu'à ce que les plaies soient fermées, ne laissant que des cicatrices plus ou moins profondes selon que l'opération a été plus ou moins bien conduite. Certains indigènes ont, en guise de tatouages, de gros bourelets de chair qui les défigurent complètement; c'est que le tatouage a été mal fait.

Les sorciers ont parfois l'idée bizarre de faire tatouer sur le ventre ou sur le bas du dos les enfants dont les aînés sont morts. Ainsi une femme a perdu trois de ses enfants. Elle consulte le sorcier à la naissance du quatrième, et celui-ci déclare sans rire que l'enfant mourra si on ne marque pas chacune de ses fesses par des raies et si on ne marque pas son ventre de tatouages partant du nombril comme centre. L'enfant a été ainsi marqué et a vécu!! Les jeunes filles se tatouent presque toutes le ventre, le nombril servant de centre et les tatouages de rayons; beaucoup ornent le dessus des seins de petites raies perpendiculaires aux seins et parallèles entre elles. Nous ne donnons évidemment ici que les types les plus répandus car il y a beaucoup de variétés de tatouages.

S'il n'y a pas d'âge pour le tatouage, il n'y en a pas non plus pour la circoncision. Des bambins de sept à huit ans la reçoivent en même temps que des jeunes gens, voire même des hommes faits. La circoncision ne semble pas être une coutume mossi, puisqu'elle n'est pas générale. Dans la province de Ouagadougou, cependant, la plupart des enfants sont circoncis, c'est au contraire la minorité dans celle de Koupéla; mais cette coutume fait chaque année des progrès dans cette dernière province. Souvent le chef de famille se fait circoncire par ce qu'il est malade et ses enfants l'imitent: voilà la circoncision introduite dans cette famille, car le père étant circoncis, les enfants le sont aussi. Parfois c'est la mère qui est Yarga, donc de famille musulmane, et ses enfants se font circoncire; c'est encore un nouveau gain pour la circoncision. Il arrive aussi que les enfants vont à la circoncision par simple curiosité et alléchés par les belles promesses que leur font les Peuls et les Yarsé qui, musulmans en principe, sont circoncis et font de la propagande autour d'eux. L'excision est, au contraire, absolument générale.

Quand un groupe de futurs circoncis est formé, les parents prennent jour avec le Peul qui doit procéder à l'opération. Dès l'aurore, le chef de la circoncision, un Yarga ou un Mossi riche et qui a le moyen de nourrir plusieurs des circoncis, choisit un arbre qui servira d'abri à ceux-ci. Il n'y a pas à craindre la pluie, la circoncision se fait toujours pendant la saison sèche, de décembre à avril, alors que les travaux des champs sont terminés. L'arbre est entouré de nattes en paille: c'est le téoo, le lieu sacré dont aucun incirconcis ne peut approcher sans risquer d'être injurié et souvent battu; les plus grands malheurs le frapperont s'il ose franchir l'enceinte sacrée. Le Peul prend une pierre plate, immole une poule pour rendre le génie de l'arbre favorable aux circoncis, et les enfants lui sont amenés l'un après l'autre. Pendant toute l'opération, on joue du tambour pour étouffer les cris des victimes.

Durant les trois premiers jours, les nouveaux circoncis ne font rien. Ils se reposent et soignent leurs plaies. Ils demeurent séparés du reste de la population pendant deux ou trois mois, parfois davantage. Si l'on en juge par les danses qui clôturent les fêtes, la danse doit être la grande occupation durant ces jours. Les circoncis vont aussi battre le mil de ceux qui les y convient, mais aucun incirconcis ne doit se mêler à eux, aucun profane ne peut les approcher. Ils ne parlent plus d'ailleurs le mossi entre eux, mais une langue spéciale dont ils apprennent ce qu'il faut pour le commerce ordinaire de la vie. Malheur à qui s'oublie et emploie sa langue maternelle: il est battu de verges faites d'une sorte d'osier. Leur nom même est changé et personne ne peut les appeler de leur nom mossi.

Les circoncis sont divisés par groupe de deux, l'un représente le mâle et l'autre la famelle. Un des groupes porte le nom de l'hyène (kwara en leur langue) et un autre s'appelle masalro, nom dont nous ne connaissons pas le correspondant en français. Le groupe hyène doit s'ingénier à dérober la nourriture, même des autres circoncis, ce qui les oblige à être toujours sur le qui vive. L'autre groupe a pour fonction de faire des gestes inconvenants pendant la danse.

Les circoncis sont enduits de poussière grise afin de les rendre méconnaissables. Derrière leur pagne est attachée une queue qui pend jusqu'à terre. Elle est faite de fils de coton tressés et terminée par un pompon, elle a pour but d'éloigner les génies kikirsi, qui, paraît-il, n'aiment pas les circoncis. Ceux-ci marchent courbés vers la terre et appuyés sur un bâton comme des vieillards: c'est un moyen comme un autre de mettre leur obéissance à l'épreuve et de savoir s'ils écouteront bien ce qui leur sera dit.

En se rendant dans la brousse, soit pour couper de la paille, soit pour toute autre raison, ils chantent des invocations aux génies des chemins et des arbres afin se les rendre favorables, s'attirer leur bénédiction et écarter les maladies. Ils chassent alors tout le monde devant eux, ils s'approchent des villages et s'ils peuvent s'emparer de quelques poules, chèvres ou moutons, c'est autant de gagné et un bon morceau à mettre dans la marmite. C'est d'ailleurs la coutume, et ils volent ainsi même les bêtes de leurs parents. La nuit, ils s'approchent des cases et battent tous ceux qu'ils rencontrent, ils prennent tout ce qu'ils trouvent, et il ne viendra à l'esprit de personne de

Anthropos IX.

Danseur mossi avec son cimier fait de cauris.

[facing p. 42]

leur résister. D'ailleurs, durant ces jours, les parents soignent bien leurs enfants et leur envoient une nourriture abondante. Avoir un enfant à la circoncision est une charge pour la famille.

Quant le groupe des circoncis est surtout composé de musulmans, Yarsé ou Peuls, pendant les temps de repos, le soir, parfois au milieu de la nuit, le chef de la circoncision les réunit et leur fait une instruction. Il ne semble pas qu'il y ait une doctrine ésotérique, et cette instruction a pour suje la glorification des aînés qui ont été circoncis en ce lieu et sont morts. Seuls les circoncis peuvent entrer au ciel et avoir beaucoup d'enfants; les incirconcis ne pourront pas jouir du bonheur dans l'autre vie et seront stériles. On leur enseigne aussi que Dieu est assis sous un arbre noir, sur une peau de mouton, qu'il a une assiette pour manger et une bouteile pour boire. C'est enfantin. A tous on dit qu'ils ne doivent raconter à personne, sous peine de mort, ou au moins de maladie grave, ce qu'ils ont vu et appris à la circoncision afin qu'ils ne racontent pas les déprédations commises pendant ce temps et n'écartent pas ceux qui voudraient y venir car s'il est tentant de bien manger, de beaucoup jouer et surtout d'avoir de beaux habits, il est aussi désagréable d'être battu de verges à la moindre peccadille, si l'on ne danse pas bien, si l'on se dispute ou s'injurie, si l'on s'oublie à parler mossi, si l'on est lent à se mettre au travail.

Parfois pendant le temps de la circoncision, on rencontre sur le chemin près du marché, deux bâtons, placés là volontairement, et si l'on regarde à droite et à gauche, on aperçoit deux enfants, tout couverts de poussière et au pagne crasseux. Ce sont des circoncis qui mendient et les passants jettent à terre quelques cauris.

Mais bientôt toutes ces cérémonies vont prendre fin. Les habits sont prêts et les enfants commencent à être fatigués et s'énervent. Le chef de la circoncision décide alors que l'on va raser les nouveaux circoncis, c'est à dire, que la circoncision prendra fin quinze jours plus tard. Les circoncis ne sont pas entièrement rasés, mais ils portent au sommet de la tête une raie de cheveux et une raie rasée alternant entre elles; les côtés sont rasés en forme de demi lune et de la même manière. Le septième jour, les anciens circoncis viennent avec des poules offrir des sacrifices aux génies des chemins afin que tout se passe bien, mais les nouveaux circoncis n'y prennent pas part. Les enfants se lavent, se graissent et revêtent leurs beaux habits. Tout est neuf, le pagne, comme le pantalon et la veste, la couverture comme la coiffure; la ceinture est ornée d'un couteau dans une gaîne en cuir et d'un étui à aiguilles terminé par un pompon en cuir aux lanières desquelles sont [illegible] des cauris. Ils ont en main une queue de vache dont le manche est [illegible] lui aussi, de cauris: c'est pour chasser les génies scheuyan qui n'ai[illegible] les petits faquins ni les gens trop bien habillés. Les deux poignets portent des bracelets en cuivre. Evidemment, tout cet attirail flambant neuf, tous ces cauris qui sonnent comme des grelots, attirent les yeux, fascinent les jeunes qui se disent qu'à la première occasion, ils iront eux aussi à la circoncision afin de bien manger et d'avoir de beaux habits.

2: Mangin FA28 Mossi

Les circoncis continuent à marcher courbés, appuyés sur leurs bâtons, mais leur bâton grossier a fait place à deux cannes, ornées de dessins faits au feu, et liées ensembles. La queue a disparue. Ils vont saluer les chefs, remercier ceux qui leur ont fait quelque cadeaux. Ils vont au son du gros tambour, car le bindré est interdit à la circoncision, chantant aux génies des mélodies plaintives. Ils vont se montrer au marché, se faire admirer dans les villages. Chez les chefs ils dansent, et vraiment leurs danses sont très gracieuses. Ils dansent en chœur, faisant tous les mêmes gestes avec ensemble, ou deux par deux, au son du tambour, variant les figures suivant la cadence qui leur est indiquée. Au bout de sept jours, les fêtes sont terminées, tous rentrent dans leur famille et reprennent la vie commune comme si rien ne s'était passé.

C'est cette vie de tous les jours qu'ils nous faut maintenant étudier.

LIVRE TROISIEME.

Vie active et industrielle.

Chapitre premier. — Occupations d'un Mossi.

Les Mossi sont un peuple essentiellement cultivateur et il semble qu'on puisse dire qu'il n'y a pas un Mossi qui vive d'un métier et qui, quelque profession qu'il ait embrassée de par ailleurs, au moment des pluies ne cultive ses champs, laissant de côté tout autre ouvrage. L'année d'un Mossi est donc toute entière divisée comme il suit, et les années succèdent aux années sans amener de changement dans cette existence monotone.

De mai à octobre c'est la saison des pluies, c'est l'époque du grand travail des champs, et tous s'y donnent tout entier. Hommes, femmes, enfants sont sans cesse dans les champs. Ils coupent les épines au début de mai sitôt que les Pléiades se montrent à l'horizon et quand les baobabs commencent à bourgeonner. C'est le printemps (sigu). Pour ce travail ils emploient une petite hachette large de quelques centimètres, au manche court et bien en main, et un bâton fourchu qui sert à rabattre les épines afin qu'on puisse les couper commodément au pied. Les épines sont réunies en tas avec les brindilles et brûlées, un soir, sitôt sèches. En juin, généralement, tombent les premières pluies abondantes et tout de suite les indigènes sèment le petit mil blanc qui sert à faire le sarabo, le fond-même de la nourriture indigène, et le gros mil rouge ou sorgho pour fabriquer la bière de mil.

Les semailles sont considérées comme un des plus pénibles travaux parce qu'elles obligent à rester courbé vers la terre sans se relever afin de ne pas perdre de vue le terrain ensemencé. Les indigènes sèment avec une vieille pioche usée dont ils frappent deux fois la terre afin de faire un petit trou. Le grain est dans une calebasse retenue dans la main gauche par une ficelle et les doigts sont ainsi libres et peuvent saisir quelques grains qui sont déposés dans le trou: la pioche ramène un peu de terre par-dessus les grains. Quand les pluies ont mieux détrempé la terre, quand le mil a commencé à lever, ils sèment le maïs autour de leurs cases.

Après le premier sarclage dans les champs, ce sont les haricots qui se sèment entre les pieds de petit mil et le coton entre ceux de gros mil rouge ou près des marigots. Puis, on s'occupe à préparer la terre pour sémer le riz, les arachides et les pois indigènes, et entre temps, il faut piocher sans cesse pour arracher les mauvaises herbes qui étoufferaient les jeunes pousses de mil. Si la pluie est un peu abondante fin juin, les cultivateurs sont facilement débordés et se plaignent de ce qu'il n'y a plus moyen de nettoyer leurs champs. Le gombo (corne grecque) et tous les condiments pour la sauce, le piment, les tomates, etc. se plantent outre des champs de maïs, près des cases, ainsi que le chanvre indigène et toutes les espèces de calebassiers. Dans les terrains propices, et, par conséquence, dans certaines régions seulement, les fabiramas, le manioc et l'igname sont l'object d'une culture spéciale.

2: Mangin FA28 Mossi

En se rendant aux champs, celui qui élève des poussins, les emporte dans une cage en paille tréssée ou en osier, de forme oblongue. Arrivé au lieu du travail, il ouvre la porte de la cage et la mère-poule sort. Elle est attachée par une ficelle au panier et ses poussins courent autour d'elle. Quand le maître trouve une bonne termitière il va la porter à ses élèves et la casse devant eux. Le soir, il rentre la poule et ses poussins et s'en retourne à la maison portant la cage suspendue à son épaule.

Les grandes pluies tombent en juillet et en août. C'est l'été (seoro). Quand la terre n'est pas trop détrempée, vite tout le monde court aux champs dès l'aube et travaille jusqu'au soir. Une ou deux femmes restent à la maison pour préparer la nourriture pour les travailleurs car il faut soutenir ses forces afin de pouvoir fournir un travail plus intense. Personne n'a droit au repos, seuls les malades et les vieillards impotents restent au logis et encore ces derniers sont-ils préposés á la garde des bébés. C'est alors que les plus riches convienent leurs amis à venir les aider. Le propriétaire d'un vaste champ fait dire à tous ceux du village, aux jeunes gens de préférence, à tous ceux qui lui ont quelques obligations, à ceux qui recherchent ses filles, qu'à tel jour il piochera son champ, et dès l'aube, tout le monde se réunit et pioche tandis que des tambours excitent les travailleurs. Un autre jour, c'est lui qui ira à son tour aider ceux qui sont venus travailler pour lui. Cette façon de s'entr'aider est très profitable quand un champ commence à être envahi par les mauvaises herbes parce qu'il est nettoyé en un jour, mais elle devient onéreuse s'il faut faire appel à ses voisins plusieurs fois pendant la saison.

Les fortes pluies cessent avec le mois d'août et en septembre, le maïs est mûr, la bombance commence. Les épis de maïs grillés sont une friandise recherchée surtout quand les grains sont encore tendres. Il est telle espèce de maïs, légèrement sucrée, qui sautée au beurre rappelle vaguement nos petits pois frais. Partout les enfants, voire même les anciens, se régalent de maïs, partout ceux que l'on va saluer offrent quelques épis de maïs, qui sont souvent grillés sur place. Quand la récolte du maïs est terminée, la bouillie de maïs, qui rappelle la fameuse polenta des Italiens, remplace aventageusement la bouillie de mil et varie agréablement le menu journalier d'autant plus que les gombo commencent à mûrir et permettent de varier aussi la sauce. Les ventres se remplissent, les visages sont resplendissants de santé et, par une suite toute naturelle, les coeurs sont à la joie. Si la fin de la saison sèche a été dure parce que le mil commençait à manquer, si les travaux de l'hivernage ont été pénibles, on se rattrape maintenant. Le maïs coupé est remplacé par du tabac, dont les semis ont été préparés à l'approche de la récolte.

En fin septembre, commencement d'octobre, le gros mil rouge est mûr. C'est l'automne (houpéla). Le maïs est devenu trop dur pour être mangé grillé, il est remplacé par les épis de mil encore verts et mangés crus après avoir été battus avec une petite baguette et ainsi débarrassés de leur bale. Certaines

2: Mangin FA28 Mossi

Les Mossi.

Anthropos IX.

En haut: Porteurs d'eau.
En bas: Jeunes gens revenant de la brousse avec des bottes de paille.

En haut: Battage du mil.
En bas: Le mil battu est vanné. Au fond: Greniers à mil.

variétés de gros mil sont sucrées et pas trop désagréables à manger ainsi. Et comme le mil est leur principale nourriture, les chevaux engraissent alors parce qu'ils ont du mil à volonté. Les hommes en profitent aussi largement, car la bière de mil nouveau est bien plus agréable que celle faite avec du vieux mil, et quand le mil abonde, la boisson ne fait pas défaut. C'est alors que le riz est récolté, battu sur les aires et mis soigneusement à part pour les jours de fête.

A la fin d'octobre, les pluies ont presque entièrement cessé; lorsque les haricots sont ramassés et placés dans les champs sur des tiges de mil ou des séko, isolés de terre par des piquets fourchus afin que les termites ne les mangent pas ou bien rapportés à la maison et jetés sur les séko qui servent d'abri devant les soukala, c'est le moment de récolter le petit mil qui est sec. Les tiges de mil sont coupées à ras de terre par les hommes et placés de telle sorte que les épis soient dirigés dans le même sens pour faciliter le travail des femmes qui coupent les épis et les mettent en tas. Quand le mil est coupé, les femmes remplissent leurs paniers. Les plus grands paniers sont sortis pour la circonstance, et chacune s'ingénie à faire tout un échaffaudage avec les épis les plus longs ou avec des tiges de haricots, afin de pouvoir mettre le plus de mil possible en dehors du panier, tels les zouaves qui rivalisent à qui aura le paquetage du sac le plus élevé. Quand la série des femmes rentrant au village rencontre un individu connu pour sa générosité, elles chantent, elles crient, elles l'entourent jusqu'à ce qu'il ait jeté quelques poignets de cauris qui serviront à acheter une cruche de bière.

Près de l'aire, les cris redoublent, et chaque femme s'approche du grenier et tend son panier à l'homme qui est dans le grenier pour le recevoir. Ces greniers sont très grossièrement construits et se composent essentiellement de baguettes de bois fichées en terre en cercle et servant à tenir un séko qui les entoure tandis que le fond du grenier est formé d'un autre séko, reposant généralement sur la terre, parfois sur des pierres ou des piquets fourchus pour éviter les termites. C'est là que le mil attendra le moment du battage. Les greniers sont alignés autour de l'aire en terre battue qui est située à cent ou deux cents mètres du village, parfois plus loin. Les voleurs sont peu à redouter. Ils iront bien couper le mil encore sur pied dans la brousse mais ne volent que fort rarement le mil déjà rentré. Seuls les chèvres, les moutons et les pintades sont à craindre, et contre eux les greniers sont protégés par des épines.

Sitôt que ces plus gros travaux sont terminés, toute la famille s'occupe à déterrer les arachides et les pois. Toute la famille se réunit sous un arbre à l'ombre duquel les hommes apportent les touffes d'arachides, et tout en grignotant les pistaches encore vertes, tout en devisant, chacun sépare les gousses des fanes. Ces dernières sont mises précieusement de côté ainsi que les feuilles de haricots: ce sera une excellente nourriture pour les chevaux pendant la saison sèche quand le soleil aura brûlé toutes les herbes de la brousse.

En novembre, toute la récolte est rentrée. Le soleil a déjà séché bien des herbes et c'est le moment de couper la paille pour faire les séko et arranger les toitures. C'est un travail généralement réservé aux enfants et aux serviteurs (dakonré). Le maître de la maison indique à chacun le nombre de bottes de paille qu'il aura à couper, et tous les matins les enfants partent en bandes, la faucille sur l'épaule. Ils vont chercher la paille sur le bord des marigots et reviennent quand le soleil commence à darder ses rayons brûlants. Le travail est alors terminé, et il n'y a plus qu'à se reposer toute la journée. La saison sèche est en effet le temps du repos et de novembre à mai il n'y a plus de travaux pressants.

En décembre, le froid se fait sentir. C'est l'hiver (sapolro). Les indigènes se groupent à l'aurore autour de feux de tiges de mil ou de brindilles ou de paille, tout sert de combustible. Chaque nouveau venu doit apporter sa brassée et c'est à ce prix qu'il sera admis à s'asseoir autour du feu. A la fin de décembre, la provision de paille pour couvrir les cases a été faite et c'est alors que le petit mil est battu. Chaque habitant du village dispose à son tour de l'aire. Il a soin de prévenir ses amis et connaissances comme au jour où il a pioché son champ. La bière de mil est prête, et la veille, les femmes ont enduit l'aire de bouse de vache délayée dans l'eau pour affermir le sol. Au petit jour les amis arrivent, le mil est retiré du grenier et étendu sur l'aire à l'aide de tiges de mil liées ensemble et traînées par terre au moyen de cordes tandis qu'un indigène appuie les tiges de mil sur le sol. Les fléaux sont composés d'un simple bâton coupé dans la brousse; c'est une branche d'arbré choisie de telle façon que la tige du fléau soit assez mince et flexible tandis que la partie qui sert à battre est assez grosse et forme un angle obtus avec la tige tenue en main. Les jeunes gens se mettent sur une seule ligne dont les bambins occupent les extrémités; les joueurs de tambour se tiennent soit devant, soit derrière les batteurs et les fléaux tombent en cadence, écrasant les épis et séparant les grains très secs de la tige. Cependant que les vieillards sont assis à l'ombre des greniers, devisent, fument, cousent des habits. Quand les batteurs sont arrivés au bout de l'aire, ils reviennent sur leurs pas, puis se reposent tandis que les plus âgés rassemblent avec des balais de paille les grains qui ont été projetés en dehors de la masse.

Quand le mil a été suffisamment battu, au bout de quelques heures, les épis vides et brisés sont balayés à part pour ne laisser que les grains. Ces derniers sont réunis en un tas, et un fort gaillard les jette en l'air à l'aide d'une pelle en bois afin de séparer la paille du bon grain qui est mis en tas. Quand tout le mil est ainsi vanné on l'entoure d'un cercle de cendre pour le défendre contre les génies malfaisants. Puis un des batteurs, étranger à la famille, met du mil dans une calebasse et l'asperge d'eau. Il le jette ensuite par poignées sur le tas de mil en disant: «Un tel craint la pluie» et il prononce le nom du propriétaire de la moisson et le nom de tous les membres de sa famille. Il termine en disant: «Quand on aura fini de sarcler vienne la sècheresse. Quand on aura fini de planter vienne une grande pluie.» Si le propriétaire d'un cheval se trouve dans l'assemblée, il recevra une calebasse de mil pour sa monture. Chacun des anciens prélève une part pour ses poules. Si cette cérémonie n'a pas lieu, le mil ne peut servir à ensemencer les champs l'année suivante quand ces formalités sont terminées.

Les femmes arrivent avec leurs paniers, un homme saisit un des balais laissés sur place et l'enfonce dans le tas de mil en plusieurs endroits, puis les hommes emplissent les paniers et aident les femmes à les charger sur leur tête. Elles déposent le mil à la maison dans les greniers faits de terre glaise mélangée à de la paille coupée très fin. Ces greniers ont la forme de grandes jarres de 1·50 m de haut; ils reposent généralement sur de grosses pierres et ont été au préalable enfumés afin d'éviter les termites. Ils sont fermés par un couvercle fait comme le grenier lui-même et recouvert par un petit tois de paille pour le protéger contre la pluie parce que ces greniers sont, le plus souvent en plein air, dans la cour intérieure. C'est pendant que l'on vanne le mil que la bière de mil est apportée et bue sur place; parfois, la fête se termine par des danses, et chacun se retire chez soi pour recommencer un autre jour. Ainsi s'écoule le mois de janvier.

Février, mars et avril sont les mois de vacances, les mois de chasse et de pêche.

A vrai dire, aucun Mossi n'est chasseur et tous le sont plus ou moins. Depuis l'occupation française, on rencontre parfois sur la lisière de la grande brousse qui borde le Volta et qui renferme du gros gibier, des individus armés de fusil à pierre très primitifs, si primitifs qu'ils éclatent fréquemment et blessent leur propriétaire assez imprudent pour forcer la charge de poudre. Ces indigènes connaissent parfaitement la brousse et peuvent être d'un précieux secours pour qui veut s'aventurer à chasser le koba, le buffle, l'éléphant, la panthère ou même le lion bien que ce fauve soit pour les Mossi comme pour nous le roi des animaux, le maître de la brousse (wé'naba) et qu'ils ne l'attaquent que s'il a déjà tué un homme.

Ces chasseurs fabriquent eux-mêmes leur poudre avec du charbon de bois pilé et du salpêtre extrait de terre imprégnée d'urine. Cette terre est lavée soigneusement et, à l'évaporation, laisse un fond de cristaux de salpêtre. Le plus souvent, ils n'ajoutent pas de soufre parce que ce dernier produit est trop coûteux. La poudre ainsi obtenue brûle bien et faite avec soin produit de bons effets. Les chasseurs la mettent dans de petites calebasses ou dans des cornes de béliers; ils n'en fabriquent que de petites quantités à la fois. Une pierre dure fait l'office de balle.

Les indigènes peuvent facilement se dissimuler et ne tirent le gibier que de très près et au posé ou arrêté. Ils restent facilement à l'affût pendant des heures, des nuits entières et, connaissant les mares où vont boire les animaux, et leurs habitudes, ils se construisent de petites huttes en branchage ou creusent des trous dans lesquels ils se dissimulent sous des feuillages. D'autres, plus ingénieux, tracent un vaste entonnoir dont la base ouverte a parfois 1 ou même 2 km et dont les côtés, formés par des haies d'épines, ont une égale longueur, tandis que le sommet, situé près d'un arbre touffu, laisse juste assez de place pour que l'animal puisse passer. Le chasseur se poste dans l'arbre avec son arc et ses flèches et s'installe commodément car il lui faudra peut-être attendre longtemps. Les bêtes suivent sans défiance la haie d'épines, aboutissent à l'arbre, et sont tués. Les chasseurs arrivent ainsi à tuer quelques belles pièces, même des éléphants, bien que leurs armes soient très primitives.

Mais si les chasseurs de profession, les vrais chasseurs, ceux qui ont toujours des aventures à raconter et, disent-ils, ne manquent jamais leur coup, tout comme ceux de Tarascon, sont rares, ceux qui se livrent à la chasse par délassement, sont aussi nombreux que les Mossi. Un Mossi ne sort jamais sans un bâton, et si on lui en demande la raison, il répond que c'est pour tuer les serpents qui, hélas! font de trop nombreuses victimes, écarter les chiens et puis: «On peut toujours rencontrer un lièvre ou une bête dans la brousse, et avec quoi le tuerai-je si je n'ai pas de bâton?» Beaucoup ont des chiens, peu terribles à vrai dire, mais qui sont mal nourris et gardent toute leur agilité. Un Mossi qui se rend dans son champ ou va d'un village à l'autre, est toujours l'oreille aux aguets et a l'œil bien ouvert: il cherche de la viande! Et n'ayant pas beaucoup d'idées, il est rarement absorbé dans ses réflexions et distrait.

Mais la saison que nous étudions est spécialement celle de la grande chasse. Plusieurs villages s'entendent et fixent un jour et un lieu de rendez-vous, et chaque village s'y rend par groupe, brûlant la brousse et chassant le gibier devant lui. Si l'entente a été parfaite, le gibier se trouve enfermé dans un cercle de feu derrière lequel se trouvent les indigènes, les uns à cheval et armés de la lance, les autres à pieds et avec leurs chiens, munis simplement de bâtons ou même d'un arc et de flèches. Les arcs sont de taille moyenne et faits d'un bois dur. La corde est ordinairement tirée d'un rotin ou d'une tige de mil. Les flèches sont fabriquées avec la tige résistante et légère des hautes herbes et ne sont pas bardelées, mais la pointe est en fer et en forme de harpon avec deux et parfois trois paires de dents. Le carquois en cuir est suspendu à l'épaule.

Les lièvres, les biches, les différentes espèces d'antilopes, les pintades, les perdrix affolées courent tout autour du cercle de feu, et ceux qui franchissent ce premier obstacle tombent sous les coups des chasseurs. Ces chasses sont parfois assez fructueuses, et des buffles, des koba, font, de temps à autre, partie du tableau. Malheureusement, toute bête tuée dans la brousse appartient de droit au naba, qui sait bien visiter les sacs des chasseurs et prend ce qui lui plait. A-t-il appris qu'un chasseur fortuné a tué une antilope et ne lui en a pas fait don, il le fait appeler, lui reproche durement son manque d'égard et le roue de coups. Il est vrai, cependant, de dire que ces cas sont de plus en plus rares et que les indigènes refusent tout net de livrer leur capture.

Souvent, la chasse manque, parce qu'un village n'a pas répondu à l'appel, et les bêtes se sont sauvées par l'espace non gardé. Somme toute, ces chasses sont surtout un passe-temps et un amusement. Les chasseurs qui rapportent quelque chose sont peu nombreux, vu le nombre de ceux qui prennent part à la chasse. Il est vrai qu'au départ tous espèrent être heureux. Tous du moins ont soif parce qu'à cette époque de l'année le soleil est très chaud et il y a cependant avantage à chasser en plein midi parce que le gibier est alors couché dans les buissons et ne peut fournir une longue course. Ces chasses sont chaque année moins nombreuses. Les cultures, en effet, prennent plus d'extension et le gibier s'est retiré dans la brousse; les indigènes, d'autre part, s'entendent moins facilement pour opérer de grandes battues; ils aiment mieux chasser par petits groupes, loin des yeux des chefs, qui alors ne pourront rien leur prendre.

* * *

La pêche est, avec la chasse, le grand divertissement à cette époque de l'année. Il n'y a pas plus de pêcheurs de profession qu'il n'y a de chasseurs de profession. Evidemment, ceux qui habitent le bord des rivières savent généralement nager, surtout au bord des marigots les plus difficiles à passer. Chaque marigot, ou plus exactement chaque mare, appartient à un naba et porte un nom spécial, de telle sorte qu'aucune rivière ne porte le même nom pendant tout son cours. A la saison sèche le lelek des marigots est le plus souvent à sec. De distance en distance se trouvent des mares plus ou moins importantes et dans lesquelles vont boire les troupeaux. C'est dans ces mares que pêchent les indigènes. Ils attendent pour cela que le niveau de l'eau soit assez bas, et ne dépasse pas les genoux, sinon la pêche serait trop difficile.

Les engins de pêche sont, en effet, aussi primitifs que les engins de chasse. Un petit filet écarté par trois branches formant triangle et traversé par un bâton solide que l'on tient dans la main, assez semblable aux épuisettes qui servent à pêcher la crevette; et surtout une sorte de nasse en osier de forme conique ouverte à la base et fermée au sommet par un couvercle mobile. Dans cette première nasse se trouve parfois une seconde nasse faite de bois très flexibles qui sont attachés à la base de la première nasse. Ces deux nasses ont donc une base commune. Mais la deuxième s'ouvre dans l'intérieur de la première. Le poisson entre dans la nasse et est retenu par les bois de la petite nasse qui se ferme sous l'effort que fait le poisson pour sortir. Le pêcheur sort la nasse de l'eau, ou bien la laissant enfoncée dans la vase, ouvre le couvercle, plonge sa main et retire le poisson qui est ainsi enfermé et facile à saisir. Le pêcheur le met alors dans un filet ou dans une sacoche en cuir.

Au jour fixe, le maître de la mare offre des sacrifices aux caïmans afin qu'ils ne mordent personne. C'est ainsi que le naba de Koupéla, avant de pêcher dans la mare qui lui appartient, doit sacrifier une chèvre noire et une poule. Aucun caïman ne doit être tué pendant la pêche sinon le naba mourra dans le courant de l'année. Un caïman n'avait-il pas été tué dans la mare de son père l'année même pendant laquelle mourut ce dernier? Avant de se rendre à la pêche, les indigènes font des grisgris en brûlant des racines et des écorces d'arbres dans l'intérieur de leur nasse. Si le grisgris est bon, le poisson se précipitera tout seul dans le filet ou la nasse.

Les pêcheurs se réunissent à une des extrémités de la mare. Ils se mettent sur une seule ligne de façon à barrer le marigot et avancent lentement plongeant et replongeant leurs filets et leurs nasses. Tous les poissons pris sont mis dans des sacs ou jetés à des amis qui se tiennent sur la rive, mais comme pour la chasse, le naba prélève largement sa part et prend les plus belles pièces. Les marigots ne renferment d'ailleurs presque que des silures, qui aiment la vase et en conservent l'odeur et le goût même après la cuisson. Cependant les Voltas sont plus poissonneuses et on y trouve une plus grande variété de poissons. Quand les indigènes ont passé et repassé un certain nombre de fois, il ne reste plus guère que du menu fretin, et tous s'en retournent chez eux heureux d'avoir quelques pièces à mettre dans leur sauce et surtout d'avoir échappé à la dent des caïmans, car malgré les sacrifices qui leur sont offerts, ces amphibies ne se gênent pas pour mordre quelques pieds ou quelques mollets. Il est vrai que ceux qui vivent dans ces mares sont rarement assez forts pour briser un membre.

Dans les endroits où l'eau est peu profonde et coule pendant un certain temps, les riverains établissent des barrages faits de branches d'arbre et de tiges de mil entrelacées, disposées en biais par rapport au courant et conduisant à une sorte d'entonnoir fermé par un filet. Le poisson suit le barrage, pénètre dans l'entonnoir et est arrêté par les mailles du filet.

C'est aussi pendant cette saison qu'ont lieu les principales fêtes. On célèbre ainsi à cette époque l'anniversaire des morts, qu'on fait le kouré. Sitôt que le premier coup de vent a découvert quelques cases ou tout au moins indiqué celles qui ont besoin d'être recouvertes, tout le monde se met à ce travail, et c'est alors qu'est employée la paille coupée en décembre. Devant les soukala, les enfants et les jeunes gens sont occupés à réunir entre eux les brins de paille avec des liens de chanvre, à tresser des séko. Ils vont dans la brousse couper les bois et les écorces qui serviront à attacher les bois entre eux. Quand tout est prêt, le maître de la maison appelle tous ses gens et réunit quelques voisins. En une petite matinée, le toit est fait et posé. C'est un travail qu'il faut recommencer tous les deux ans environ et qui est réservé aux hommes. Au début de l'hivernage, les villages ont un petit air coquet de renouveau. C'est alors aussi que celui qui a vu son harem s'augmenter d'une femme, que l'enfant qui est devenu jeune homme et ne peut plus habiter dans la case de sa mère, que celui qui a vu sa richesse s'accroître de quelques têtes de bétail, voire d'un cheval, songe à construire une nouvelle case. Les femmes iront chercher l'eau, les enfants pétriront le mortier avec leurs pieds et porteront au maçon les boules que les anciens ont préparées. Tous ces travaux n'ont rien de pénible et se font en jouant.

Mais les épines ont repoussé, les pluies vont bientôt tomber, déjà quelques coups de vent ont annoncé l'approche de l'hivernage, les Pléiades ont reparu à l'horizon et les baobabs bourgeonnent de nouveau. Il va falloir se remettre à piocher, à semer, et c'est heureux car le mil baisse dans les greniers; il va falloir recommencer le cycle des occupations que nous venons de décrire. Et les années succèdent aux années sans apporter de grands changements dans l'existence des simples particuliers.

Chapitre deuxième. — Industries et commerce.

Telles sont donc les occupations ordinaires de tout Mossi. Il faut cependant y ajouter pendant toute l'année, la visite des marchés, et pendant la saison sèche, les travaux auxquels se livrent certaines corporations ou simplement certains individus, en d'autres termes, les différentes industries exercées par les Mossi.

Les Mossi. Anthropos IX.

En haut: Intérieur d'une soukala.
Au milieu: Porteurs.

En haut: Les habitants d'une soukala.
Au milieu: Tisserand.

En bas: Place d'un marché.

[Facing p. 52]

Tout Mossi qui se respecte, homme, femme, enfant, vieillard, doit au moins de temps en temps, se rendre au marché, ne serait-ce que pour voir... et être vu, s'il peut arborer de beaux habits neufs. Si l'on veut admirer les indigènes dans leurs plus beaux atours, il faut se rendre au marché qui suit les grands jours de fêtes. Les gens affluent en ces jours, les Yarsé, les Peuls tout comme les Mossi, et c'est à qui se fera le plus remarquer par la richesse ou l'originalité de son costume. En temps ordinaire, ceux qui vont au marché y vont pour leurs affaires, sauf quelques particuliers qui ne s'y rendent, même en ces jours, que pour se faire admirer.

Chaque localité un peu importante a son marché tous les trois jours. Tout est combiné de telle sorte que les marchés ne soient pas trop éloignés les uns des autres et que les villages les plus rapprochés qui ont un marché, ne le tiennent pas le même jour afin de ne pas se faire concurrence. Un indigène peut, s'il le veut, passer sa vie au marché en allant tantôt dans une localité, tantôt dans une autre; il y a toujours un marché non loin de chez lui. Ils n'ont pas tous la même importance. Certains villages, parfois peu considérables par eux-mêmes, sont situés au croisement de plusieurs routes suivies par les caravanes et deviennent un centre important de commerce. On cite au Mossi: Pwitenga, Kaya, Rakay, Bélousa, Mané, Téma, Yako et La, comme centres spécialement fréquentés.

Ces marchés étaient autrefois les lieux où venaient s'approvisionner les marchants d'esclaves. Aujourd'hui, on y trouve plus que partout ailleurs des chevaux, des bœufs, des ânes, des moutons, des chèvres, du sel, des kolas, des étoffes indigènes ou européennes, des pacotilles d'importation, allumettes, verroterie, mouchoirs, cuvettes, assiettes, parfums; on y voit même des pétards. Chaque produit important a son quartier. Les bouchers ont le leur ainsi que les marchands de sel, d'étoffes ou de kolas. Toute la bière de mil se vend au même endroit, les condiments pour la sauce et les grains dans un autre. Mais les transactions les plus importantes se font en dehors du marché, dans les cases que les étrangers de passage et qui pensent séjourner quelque temps dans la localité, se sont élevés à la hâte dans le quartier haoussa ou yarga et parfois chez les Mossi. C'est pourquoi seul un indigène, habitué aux transactions, et qui fréquente régulièrement le marché, pourrait se faire une idée du chiffre des affaires qui se traitent sur la place même du marché ou dans les environs et encore faudrait-il tenir compte de la morte saison que l'on trouve ici comme sur toute place de commerce[1].

---

[1] Voici, à titre de curiosité, le prix approximatif de quelques denrées, évidemment pendant une année de récolte moyenne et peu après la récolte, car les prix augmentent rapidement au fur et à mesure que l'on s'éloigne de cette époque et, pendant les années de famine, il n'y a plus de prix.

Mil 0·02 fr. le kilo, riz 0·10 fr. le kilo, tabiramas 0·05 fr. le kilo, beurre de karité 0·50 fr. le kilo, beurre de lait 1·50 fr. le kilo, arachides 0·07 fr. le kilo, huile d'arachides 0·50 fr. le litre, une cruche de bière de mil ordinaire, d'environ 6 à 8 litres 0·20 fr., une cruche de bière de mil forte (tôoé), d'environ 6 à 8 litres 0·40 fr., hydromel (bèzé) 0·15 fr. le litre, poule 0·40 fr., chèvre ordinaire 3 à 4 fr., chèvre grande 8 à 10 fr., mouton ordinaire 3·50 le mâle, 4 fr. le brebis, mouton grand 8 à 10 fr., âne 25 à 30 fr., cheval 150 fr., bœuf petit (sans bosse) 50 fr., bœuf zebu 70 fr., peau de chèvre 0·30, peau de mouton 0·50, peau de bœuf 1 fr., sel en barre 1·50 et jusqu'à 2 fr.

Mais ces gros marchés sont la minorité. Dans les marchés des villages les transactions se font entre indigènes qui se connaissent et ont presque uniquement pour objet les produits indigènes: mil, riz, haricots, beurre de karité, arachides grillées vendues par petits tas d'un centime, arachides crues et toutes les épices pour la sauce. Des jeunes filles yarsé ou haoussa se promènent de groupe en groupe avec de petites cuvettes remplies de kolas, et les chefs et les richards achètent une ou deux kolas qu'ils partagent généralement avec ceux de leur suite. Sous des abris de feuillage ou de tiges de mil, des étrangers vendent quelques perles, des barres de sel ou de cuivre, du henné ou du bleu, tandis que les vautours à tête chauve, planant au dessus d'eux, indiquent à tous où se tiennent les bouchers. Une chèvre, un mouton constituent toute la viande de boucherie, parfois un bœuf, crevé dans la brousse, plus rarement égorgé à l'occasion du marché, vient augmenter la quantité de viande. Quelques individus apportent des poussins, parfois des poules adultes. C'est à peu près tout ce que l'on trouve.

Mais à ces comestibles il faut ajouter la boisson. Tout un coin du marché est occupé par les vendeuses de bière de millet; ce n'est le coin ni le moins fréquenté ni le plus calme. Les vautours ont indiqué l'emplacement des bouchers, il suffit de tendre l'oreille pour connaître celui des cabaretiers. Les cris, le battement des tambours, le brouhaha inséparable des foules légèrement prises de boisson, l'ont vite indiqué. Les Mossi boivent assurément beaucoup de bière de mil, mais cette boisson telle qu'elle est vendue au marché, ne monte que difficilement à la tête. Bien autrement dangereuse est la bière recuite (tèsé), dont le degré d'alcool est assez élevé, et surtout l'hydromel (bésé) fait de miel et de farine de mil, bouillis dans l'eau et auxquels on ajoute de la levure de bière pour produire la fermentation. Ces deux dernières boissons sont vraiment capiteuses surtout si on boit les deux alternativement. Aussi il y a assez souvent des rixes, parfois une vraie bataille avec blessés: ce sont des ivrognes qui se sont disputés. Les hommes sont bien partout les mêmes et y a-t-il chez nous beaucoup de foires sans quelque ivrogne? Il est pourtant juste d'ajouter que l'on rencontre ici plus d'indigènes pris de boisson que chez nous.

Le marché commence vers dix heures et est généralement terminé à deux heures; les grands marchés commencent vers midi et se terminent à la nuit. En étudiant les autres industries, nous verrons quels sont les autres produits qui s'y vendent.

L'industrie la plus répandue, celle que tous les hommes peuvent exercer et que tous exercent plus ou moins, est celle du tissage. Le coton est égrainé et le fil est confectionné par les femmes. M. DELAFOSSE, dans son ouvrage sur les Siéna a parfaitement décrit le procédé employé: «Le coton étant sorti de sa coque, on en retire les graines en les chassant de la bourre au moyen d'une tige de fer que l'on roule à deux mains sur la bourre placée elle-même le kilo, kolas de 0·03 à 0·10 la pièce, une pioche 0·50, habits: bande d'étoffe blanche 0·05, la coudée d'environ 0·60, couverture blanche 2 fr., couverture teinte à l'indigot 3 fr., couverture rayée 4 fr., veste, taille moyenne 2·50 fr.

---

2: Mangin FA28 Mossi

sur une pierre plate; les graines se trouvent ainsi chassées en avant et sont ensuite retirées à la main . . . Le coton est enroulé autour d'une tige de bois que la fileuse tient de la main gauche; de la droite, elle saisit et étire un brin de coton se détachant de la quenouille et l'enroule sur l'extrémité supérieure d'une aiguille de bois qui porte à son extrémité inférieure une sorte de boule pesante en terre cuite et que le mouvement des doigts de la main droite fait tourner rapidement, comme un tonton ou une toupie, sur le fond d'une assiette de bois. Le coton, étiré entre la main gauche qui soutient la quenouille et la main droite qui retient et fait tourner la tige du tonton, s'allonge et se transforme en fil, lequel s'enroule autour de l'aiguille du tonton . . . Le fil est après cela déroulé, puis enroulé de nouveau autour d'une tige de bois, de façon à former de grosses pelotes cylindro-coniques. Lorsqu'on veut l'utiliser pour le tissage, on le tend en le faisant passer autour de quatre pieux fichés en terre et disposés en forme de quadrilataire très allongé[1].»

Tous les jeunes gens apprennent à tisser, c'est une partie de leur éducation. Le métier est comme le fuseau précédemment décrit celui qu'emploient tous les Nègres de l'Afrique Occidentale et que décrit ainsi M. Delafosse: «Métier à lamelles suspendu à une pièce de bois reposant sur deux fourches, navette évidée en forme de pirogue, levier à pédales permettant de croiser alternativement les deux rangées de lamelles du métier; les fils sont tendus au moyen d'une grosse pierre reposant sur le sol en avant du tisserand et ce dernier est assis sur un tréteau grossier placé en arrière de celui supportant le métier (ici généralement le tisserand est assis par terre), de façon à ce que les pieds du tisserand viennent s'appuyer sur les pédales. Cet attirail est installé en général à l'ombre des grands arbres qui se dressent sur les places des villages ou encore sous des abris de feuillages construits tout exprès. Les lais de cotonnade obtenues sont des bandes de 10 à 15 cm de large; on en coud un certain nombre ensemble pour arriver à la largeur exigée par les pagnes et les vêtements[2].»

Les bandes d'étoffe ne sont pas toujours d'une couleur uniforme. Souvent, la chaîne est composée de fils teints en bleu foncé ou en rouge, mêlés à des fils blancs, tandis que la trame est blanche. D'aucuns savent faire des bandes à petits carreaux bleus ou rouges d'un joli effet. Tous n'ont pas la même habilité mais certains savent tisser des étoffes fines et dont les mailles très serrées sont assez résistantes. Ces bandes cousues ensemble, puis coupées selon des patrons immuables, se transforment en pagnes, en pantalons, en larges vestes, en un ample vêtement qui entoure tout son propriétaire et surtout en couvertures d'hommes et de femmes, blanches ou bleues foncé, indispensables contre le froid et dans lesquelles ils s'enroulent. Les étoffes mossi sont assez réputées dans les pays environnants et, comme nous le verrons, font l'objet d'un commerce assez important.

Les habits confectionnés ou le fil avant d'être tissé, sont souvent teints. La teinturerie est assez répandue au Mossi, et il n'est guère de village important qui n'ait ses teinturiers. Ces derniers se réunissent afin de creuser leurs puits au même endroit, souvent ils choisissent pour cela un petit terre et creusent une dizaine de puits de deux ou trois mètres de profondeur et dont la surface intérieure a été cuite par un feu de charbon. Le liquide de teinture est versé dans ces puits, et les habits ou le fil à teindre sont plongés dans le liquide et remués à l'aide de bâtons terminés par des bois disposés en forme de croix. Les étoffes sont laissées dans la teinture plus ou moins longtemps selon leur volume et étendues au soleil pour y sécher. Les couleurs obtenues vont du bleu très foncé, presque noir, au bleu clair. Certains habits sont teints en couleur terre de Sienne, couleur aimée des chasseurs parce qu'elle est sombre. Il faut plusieurs lavages pour supprimer l'odeur forte qui se dégage des étoffes ainsi teintes, mais chaque lavage emporte une partie de la couleur.

---

[1] Delafosse, Le peuple Siéna, p. 58.
[2] Ib., p. 59.

Tout le monde sait tisser, presque tout le monde sait faire des ouvrages en vannerie. Quand les herbes sont mûres, les enfants s'amusent à confectionner des chapeaux de paille dont certains ne sont pas mal réussis; d'autres font des vide-poches aux dessins variés, obtenus en entremêlant des pailles jaunes, noires ou rouges, teintes avec les feuilles d'une variété de mil cultivée dans le but d'obtenir la couleur rouge recherchée pour teindre le cuir, d'autres tressent de simples plateaux de paille qui servent à couvrir les calebasses ou à porter la viande.

Ceux qui sont habiles, et c'est alors une véritable industrie, font des chapeaux solides ornés de dessins en cuir. Il y a deux variétés principales de chapeaux: les chapeaux en forme de cônes pointus et les chapeaux en forme de cloche et à larges bords. Ils sont d'ailleurs assez grands pour que l'on puisse garder sur sa tête une calotte, parfois entourée d'une bande d'étoffe souple, et mettre son chapeau par-dessus sans être gêné. Un cordon de cuir muni d'une coulisse, maintient le chapeau sur la tête ou permet de le laisser tomber sur le dos, le cordon le retient au cou. Saponé est le centre de la fabrication des chapeaux.

Mais c'est surtout dans la confection des paniers que s'exerce l'art de la vannerie. Les paniers sont utiles à tout; il y en a de toutes les formes et de toutes les tailles, depuis les grands paniers en osier qui servent à défendre les poussins contre les oiseaux de proie, les petits paniers, en osier aussi, qui servent à ramasser les ordures, jusqu'aux paniers en herbes tressées qui servent à porter le mil, le riz et généralement toutes les denrées. On rencontre parfois des paniers soignés, ornés de dessins obtenus on entremêlant des herbes teintes et de fines lanières de cuir et bordés de cauris.

Les hommes seuls font les ouvrages en vannerie, eux seuls travaillent le cuir et là encore quelques particuliers arrivent à faire des objets presque artistiques et fort bien cousus. Malheureusement, les indigènes ne savent pas suffisamment tanner le cuir qui, par suite, n'a aucune solidité. La peau est simplement étendue et séchée au soleil; parfois elle est passée dans un bain d'eau dans laquelle on met des écorces de tamariniers. Elle est débarrassée des poils de la manière suivante: on verse de l'eau chaude sur la peau et on racle les poils avec un couteau. Pour assouplir la peau, on la passe et la repasse sur un pieu fiché en terre et rendu légèrement tranchant à son sommet ou bien plus simplement en la froissant entre ses mains. La peau ainsi assouplie est tendue à l'aide de petites chevilles de bois fichées en terre pour sécher de nouveau au soleil; elle peut être teinte en rouge, en vert ou en noir au moyen d'herbes spéciales.

Les uns savent faire des gaînes de couteaux ou des fourreaux de sabres, les autres se spécialisent dans les grandes guêtres qui s'attachent à la ceinture et que porte tout cavalier en grande tenue; d'autres font des tapis de selles, bourrés avec du kapok ou du coton et ornés de dessins, et les diverses parties du harnachement: la bande de cuir qui couvre le poitrail et le grand tapis qui protège la croupe du cheval. Le cuir sert aussi à fabriquer toutes sortes de sandales, depuis la simple peau qui est fixée aux pieds par des lanières, lesquelles passent entre le pouce et l'index et font le tour du pied, depuis la sandale-babouche, jusqu'aux sandales ornées de dessins, auxquelles sont fixés les éperons et qui accompagnent tout naturellement les grandes guêtres. Il y a des cordonniers vraiment adroits et qui pourraient faire des chaussures très présentables s'ils avaient des formes et surtout du cuir mieux travaillé.

Les peaux servent aussi à la fabrication de ceintures ornées de cauris, de bourses, d'amulettes, de sacoches parfois joliment ornées, etc. Ces dessins sont généralement obtenus ainsi: de petites lanières de cuir de différentes couleurs sont cousues par-dessus une peau de couleur uniforme et qui sert de fond; plus rarement, comme au Maroc la première épaisseur de peau est enlevée.

Les industries qui précèdent sont exercées uniquement par des hommes et par qui veut. Ce sont eux aussi qui préparent la poudre et le tabac. Les industries qui vont suivre sont l'apanage des femmes et toute femme sait, plus ou moins, fabriquer la bière de mil, le savon, le beurre de karité, le kalro (soumbara).

La bière de mil se fait avec du mil germé, cuit et recuit dans une quantité d'eau proportionnée à la quantité de mil et à laquelle on ajoute le dernier jour de la levure. Le tout est passé sur des brindilles qui arrêtent le résidu de mil. Plus la bière est recuite, plus elle est forte, et si on y ajoute du houblon, on obtient une boisson qui rappelle notre bière.

Le savon est fabriqué avec du beurre de karité et de la cendre de tiges de mil en guise de potasse.

L'huile est extraite des arachides préalablement grillées et écrasées entre deux pierres; les femmes n'ont aucun pressoir et perdent ainsi une quantité d'huile appréciable qui reste, il est vrai, dans le résidu qui lui aussi est vendu.

Le kalro est fabriqué avec la graine que renferment les gousses de néré. Il a une odeur caractéristique et forte mais relève la sauce et lui donne un goût qui n'est pas désagréable.

* * *

L'industrie de la poterie, celle du bois et du cuivre, demandent des spécialistes; non pas que seuls ceux qui font partie d'une caste peuvent les exercer, mais parce qu'il faut avoir fait un apprentissage que tous ne font pas et les parents lèguent à leurs enfants les secrets de la fabrication.

La poterie est une industrie plus spécialement exercée par les femmes bien que les hommes puissent, eux aussi, fabriquer des objets en terre et en pratique, ce sont souvent les hommes qui font les cruches (canaris) et les femmes qui fabriquent les grandes cruches qui servent à la confection de la bière de mil, les petites marmites dans lesquelles elles cuisent le sarabo et la sauce et les plats creux qui servent à présenter les mets à table.

Les procédés de fabrication et de cuisson sont d'ailleurs les mêmes. Un simple trou peu profond est creusé en terre, plus ou moins grand selon la capacité que l'on veut donner au récipient. Il est bien battu afin d'offrir une surface uniforme. La fabricante place, sur cette forme, sa pâte préparée à l'avance. C'est une sorte de terre glaise qui est pétrie avec les pieds et dont on a retiré les pierres. Le trou est saupoudré de terre bien sèche tandis que la masse à pétrir est légèrement humide. La femme écrase la pâte avec une pierre en granit bien polie et fait tourner la masse pour que chaque partie passe entre les parois du trou et sa pierre. Elle obtient ainsi, après un certain temps de travail, le récipient qu'elle désirait obtenir et de l'épaisseur voulue.

Quand il y a dans le village plusieurs fabricantes, et c'est ordinairement le cas, elles s'entendent pour la cuisson. Les cruches sont marquées et réunies dans une dépression de terrain. Entre elles et même dans l'intérieur de chacune d'elles, on met de la paille sèche, des brindilles de bois ou des morceaux d'écorce. Le tout est recouvert de paille et allumé le soir. Plus la cruche est petite, plus le combustible doit dégager de chaleur. Le lendemain matin, les femmes vont rechercher leur bien. Certaines cruches sont fendues, d'autres insuffisamment cuites resteront trop poreuses et devront être recuites, les autres sont réunies et seront vendues au marché.

Ce sont les hommes qui travaillent le bois. Ils emploient à cet usage une hachette pour couper les arbres, une herminette pour le travailler et un couteau. En bois sont fabriqués les mortiers et les pilons qui servent aux femmes pour écraser le maïs, les herbes, les arachides et généralement les condiments pour la sauce; les plats en forme de calebasse, les écuelles, qui servent à mettre le sarabo; les manches d'outils. On rencontre parfois aussi des tabourets dont la forme est quelque peu originale. En bois aussi sont faites les portes grossières qui ferment la case des femmes qui peuvent faire cette dépense. Mais toutes ces industries n'ont rien de particulièrement intéressant et restent très primitives.

* * *

Enfin le fer et le cuivre font l'objet de travaux trop peu communs pour que ceux qui s'y livrent ne soient pas des spécialistes. Les forgerons forment même une caste à part et tout le monde ne peut pas en faire partie. On nait forgeron, mais on devient bijoutier, ce dernier métier n'étant inderdit à personne. Les forgerons extraient le fer et confectionnent les outils en fer: pioches, haches, herminettes, couteaux. Quand ils extraient le fer du minerais, ils ne doivent, dit-on, être vus d'aucun profane ce qui explique pourquoi les indigènes ne savent pas comment ils procèdent. N'ayant pas eu l'occasion de visiter la région plus spécialement habitée par les forgerons, le Yatenga, le procédé d'extraction m'est inconnu.

Les bijoutiers travaillent aussi quelque fois le fer, mais en sous main. Ils peuvent raccommoder les outils cassés, aiguiser les haches, les pointes de flèches, transformer un morceau de fer, par exemple une vieille pioche en clous, charnières, etc. Mais leur grand travail est la fabrication de toutes sortes de bracelets et de tous les ornements de cuivre que comporte le harnachement complet d'un cheval, la têtière, le mors, les éperons, les étriers, les plats de cuivre qui pendent à la selle. Ces plats sont un ornement étrange et qui semble spécial aux Mossi; ils peuvent avoir jusqu'à 40 cm de diamètre et le bord du plat a parfois jusqu'à 10 cm de largeur. Les naba et les cavaliers riches les attachent, derrière les étriers, de chaque côté de leur selle et ils pendent sur les flancs du cheval. Les serviteurs s'en servent parfois pour boire la bière quand ils n'ont pas d'autres récipients. Pour faire fondre le fer ou le cuivre, ils se servent de charbon de bois obtenu exactement par le même procédé que nos charbonniers. Le feu est entretenu au moyen d'un double soufflet de peau de chèvre ou de mouton qu'un enfant fait manœuvrer. Le fer, chauffé au rouge, est martelé sur une pointe de fer fichée en terre, ou sur une pierre, à l'aide d'une barre de fer cylindrique qui sert de marteau. Le cuivre et le zinc sont fondus dans de petits creusets en terre cuite et dont la capacité dépend de la grosseur du bracelet que l'on veut obtenir. Le bracelet a d'abord été fait en cire, la cire a été entourée d'une terre argileuse bien pétrie et qui a pris la forme exacte de la cire. La cire est enlevée au moyen d'eau bouillante et le cuivre est coulé dans le moule ainsi obtenu. Au moyen d'une lime grossière, le bijoutier enlève les scories qui restent attachées au cuivre, polit le bracelet, fait des dessins en creux. Les plus adroits obtiennent de jolis ornements en faisant des torsades composées de fer, de cuivre rouge et de cuivre jaune. Un chrétien de Ouagadougou, habile à modeler la cire, fabrique des objets de toutes espèces, ronds de serviettes, presse-papier, encrier, groupes, etc. et qui ne manquent pas d'un certain cachet.

Les Mossi ont toujours un peu voyagé et allaient assez régulièrement à Tombouctou, mais grâce à la paix française, les voyages deviennent de plus en plus fréquents. Les Européens établis tant à Tenkodogo, qu'à Ouagadougou, Léo et Koudougou, les emploient comme boys et les emmènent jusqu'à Ségou, parfois Kayes et même Saint Louis. Au retour ces indigènes émerveillent leurs camarades et les excitent à entreprendre eux aussi de grands voyages.

Le recrutement des troupes noires a encore développé ce désir de voir de nouveaux pays. Plusieurs ont fait le voyage de Bandiagara pour s'engager comme tirailleurs, d'autres ont été à Kati et, trouvant les engagements suspendus, ont poussé jusqu'à Saint Louis.

Mais c'est surtout le commerce qui attire les Mossi pendant la saison sèche. En octobre-novembre, bien des jeunes gens qui ont pu se procurer un mouton ou deux ou des chèvres, les indigènes plus riches qui disposent de bœufs, pensent les vendre avec bénéfice sur les marchés éloignés, et les caravanes s'organisent. Autrefois, les Yarsé et les Haoussa avaient le monopole du commerce. Les Mossi leur font actuellement concurrence. C'est qu'aujourd'hui il faut trouver l'argent pour payer l'impôt au Blanc, la fameuse pièce de 5 Fr. Et puis, les routes sont sûres. Il n'y a plus à craindre les voleurs de grands chemins, il n'y a plus à payer des droits de passage chaque fois que l'on arrive sur le territoire d'un nouveau chef et, à ce point de vue, mais à celui-là seulement, la paix française est appréciée des indigènes, et encore trouvent-ils bien onéreux de payer l'impôt, de faire des routes et des ponts et par-dessus le marché de payer un droit de douane en quittant le territoire français et en y rentrant. Mais quand donc un homme sera-t-il content quand on lui demande quelque chose, même pour son plus grand bien?

Seuls les marigots présentent quelques difficultés quand ils sont pleins d'eau. L'administration qui fait tout son possible pour favoriser le commerce, à beau faire construire des ponts; comme ils sont uniquement composés de matériaux que l'on trouve dans le pays, de bois fourchus et de poutres recouvertes de terre battue, une crue un peu violente emporte le tout et, après une forte pluie, il faut attendre que le niveau ait baissé et recourir aux passeurs qui, à juste titre, font payer leur travail.

Ils procèdent ainsi: l'individu est placé sur une grosse poutre, ou une calebasse ou une simple cruche en terre qui le soutient hors de l'eau; parfois ce sont deux gros bois glissés sous les aisselles qui font l'office de ceinture de natation; dans quelques rares endroits il y a des radeaux. Composés de bois reliés entre eux par des séko et sur lesquels on met un lit d'herbes sèches. Le passeur nage près de celui qui veut traverser et empêche le courant de l'emporter trop loin. En certains gués favorisés, près des postes français, on trouve des bacs. Le bétail traverse à la nage et le passeur à soin de tenir hors de l'eau le museau des bêtes afin qu'elles ne se noient pas. Ces traversées prennent beaucoup de temps, reviennent à la longue assez cher, et souvent des animaux sont entraînés par le courant ou happés par des caïmans. Malheur à qui veut se passer des riverains s'il ne connaît ni le fond de la rivière ni la force du courant! Il est bien souvent noyé sans que ceux dont il a dédaigné l'aide fassent rien pour le sauver. Mais d'autre part, si la caravane attend trop longtemps pour partir, les rivières seront à sec, l'herbe sera brûlée, et les animaux mourront de faim ou de soif ou bien arriveront exténués et maigres sur les marchés et se vendront mal.

Il y a donc, dans ces voyages, un certain nombre d'aléas à courir, d'autant plus que, si la marchandise importée se vend cher, la vie est non moins chère, et si l'on veut faire quelques profits, il ne faut pas compter engraisser en route: on se rattrapera au retour dans le village.

Un autre aléa est celui qui prévient de la nécessité de se servir d'intermédiaires et que le lieutenant Marc, qui était bien placé pour avoir des renseignements sur la question, puisqu'il a commandé à deux reprises le poste de Léo, décrit ainsi: «Le bétail arrivé à destination est acheté par des courtiers interprètes, intermédiaires entre les bouchers et les marchands de viande, à qui les caravaniers sont en quelque sorte forcés de s'adresser. Ces individus achètent aux indigènes de la forêt tout ce qu'ils apportent de kolas et ils sont les maîtres du cours sur le marché .... Il semble que ces courtiers-interprètes spéculent sur le bétail d'une façon extrêmement curieuse. Ils ont des pisteurs qui vont au devant des caravanes quelque fois à deux jours de

2: Mangin

FA28 Mossi

Les Mossi.

En haut: Cuisson du Sarabo.
En bas: La cuisine en plein air.

En haut: Greniers à mil.
En bas: Un bœuf porteur.

[facing p. 60]

2: Mangin FA28 Mossi

marche vers le nord. Ceux-ci cherchent par des renseignements tendancieux à inquiéter les propriétaires du bétail et à les amener à céder leur troupeau à vil prix. Parfois, au plein de la saison des affaires, c'est-à-dire en janvier et février, les fluctuations du cours du bétail varient de cent pour cent en quelques semaines. Les Mandé-Dioulas font assaut d'éloquence, les Yarsé et les Mossi de politesse, les Haoussa de bonhomie. En réalité, il y a là, avec des méthodes exclusivement indigènes, tout un embryon de place de commerce, une véritable bourse[1]».

Les commerçants vont dans toutes les directions. Les routes les plus suivies sont celles qui de Ouagadougou, se rendent au sud, dans la Gold-Coast à Gambaga, Daboya, Salaga, Kintampo, Sékondi, ou partant de Léo, passent par Oua, Salaga, ou de Tenkodogo rejoignent la route de Cambaga, en passant par Bitou. Les communications avec le Togo allemand et les marchés de Sansané-Mango, voire de Lomé sur le bord de la mer sont moins fréquentes.

Ces deux colonies anglaises et allemandes sont ravitaillées par le Mossi en bétail et en étoffes indigènes. En effet, elles manquent complètement de viande de boucherie parce que la tsétsé ne permet pas aux animaux de vivre au delà de la grande forêt. D'autre part, les étoffes d'importation ne résistent pas à quelques lavages, de telle sorte que les bandes indigènes, bien que moins voyantes, sont plus recherchés des Gourounsi et des habitants de la forêt, qui autrefois ne portaient pour tout vêtement qu'une peau de chèvre ou de mouton mais qui apprécient mieux les habits depuis que les Européens ont pénétré dans leurs villages. Ils ne sont pas gênés entre eux par la légèreté de leur costume mais ont honte quand un Européen les aperçoit. Les Mossi rapportent de leur voyage des kolas qui forment le fond des importations; mais ils rapportent aussi du cuivre, des denrées européennes de toutes sortes, étoffes généralement de qualité inférieure, allumettes, parfums, perles, sucre, cuvettes de toutes sortes et de toutes grandeurs. Le commerce est très actif de ce côté, et le lieutenant Marc écrit à ce sujet: «L'administration de la Gold-Coast, qui dispose d'un réseau de postes plus serré que le nôtre, a enrégistré en 1904 et 1905 environ 16.000 bœufs et 75.000 moutons ou chèvres venant du Mossi. Etant donné que le Mossi approvisionne encore en partie les marchés du Togo et le marché de Boudoukou, on peut évaluer au bas mot l'exportation annuelle à 20.000 bœufs et 100.000 moutons. L'importation des kolas est d'au moins 500 tonnes[2].»

Et la preuve que le commerce tend à prendre une extension croissante chaque année, c'est la facilité avec laquelle les indigènes se procurent actuellement la pièce de 5 Fr., monnaie indispensable pour payer l'impôt. Les Européens qui séjournent au Mossi, y compris tous les tirailleurs et les gardes cercle, ne mettent pas sur le marché le quart des pièces de 5 Fr. qui sont demandées chaque année aux indigènes. Au début, les Mossi furent surpris et ils furent obligés de donner dix et même quinze mille cauris pour se pro-

[1] Marc, «Au pays des Mossi», p. 173.
[2] Ib., p. 178.

curer cette fameuse pièce, ce grisgris, qui devait les délivrer de toute difficulté avec le Blanc. Or la pièce vaut 5.000 cauris, taux officiel. Aujourd'hui, il est fort difficile de trouver un indigène qui consente à donner 5.000 cauris en échange d'une pièce. Le cours ordinaire est de 3.500 à 4.000: l'argent français est déprécié. D'où vient cela sinon de ce que les indigènes trouvent autre part, donc par le commerce, cette pièce si nécessaire? Ils ont vu que tous les ans il faudrait la verser pour l'impôt et au lieu d'attendre jusqu'au dernier moment, sitôt qu'ils ont amassé les cauris nécessaires, ils se la procurent auprès de ceux qui ont été la chercher au loin: les pièces affluent, le taux baisse.

Les relations sont actuellement moins actives vers le nord. Cela tient à ce qu'autrefois le Mossi fournissait d'esclaves Tombouctou, le désert et même le Maroc. Les Gourounsi et les Bousansé étaient fréquemment razziés dans le seul but de faire des esclaves. Les Mossi se vendaient même entre eux et avant l'occupation française, une femme, à plus forte raison une fillette ou un jeune garçon, ne se seraient guère hasardés à s'éloigner de leur village de quelques centaines de mètres; ils auraient eu trop peur de n'y plus rentrer. Les Mossi fournissaient même d'eunuques la cour de Constantinople, dit-on, et du temps où le grand cardinal Lavigerie dirigeait l'orphelinat arabe d'Algérie, des officiers lui amenèrent des petits enfants délivrés au désert. C'étaient de tout jeunes Mossi qui avaient été vendus à Saraféré ou à Tombouctou et que nos officiers avaient trouvés, enfermés dans des sacs sur le dos des chameaux d'une caravane arrêtée en cours de route par nos troupes. Ces enfants ont été élevés à Malte et sont revenus au Mossi où ils ont rendu de réels services. Mais l'établissement d'un centre administratif à Kaya, près du grand marché de Salmatenga, va, sans aucun doute, favoriser le commerce dans cette région du nord.

Actuellement le commerce entre Ouagadougou et Tenkodogo, d'une part, et Ouahigouya, qui est encore Mossi, Saraféré et Tombouctou ou Dori que les indigènes appellent Gyémaré, d'autre part, se réduisent à fort peu de chose. Les Mossi exportent des kolas qu'ils ont rapportées du sud, des bracelets, des bandes d'étoffe et importent du sel et des pioches. Souvent même les Mossi n'emportent rien que de l'argent et reviennent avec des barres de sel qui se vend sur le marché 1 Fr. à 1 Fr. 50, parfois jusqu'à 2 Fr. le kilo. Vers Fada N'Gourma (Binge pour les indigènes), Say et Niamey, le beurre de karité, la farine de néré et surtout les boules de kalro, sont les marchandises exportées tandis que les oignons, l'ail et parfois les chevaux sont articles d'importation. Il n'est pas question de commerce avec le Dahomey.

* * *

Les indigènes voyagent à petites étapes de 20, 25 au plus 30 km par jour. Ils partent à l'aurore ou quand la lune brille suffisamment et s'arrêtent quand le soleil devient trop chaud. Ils repartent quand le soleil baisse à l'horizon et s'arrêtent assez tôt pour avoir le temps de préparer la nourriture si leur femme les accompagne, ce qui est rare, d'acheter quelque chose à manger s'ils sont seuls. Ils passent la nuit chez un ami s'ils connaissent

2: Mangin FA28 Mossi

quelqu'un dans le village et font l'étape plus ou moins longue selon qu'ils espèrent rencontrer une connaissance dans tel ou tel village. Les bestiaux se nourrissent en marchant, les ânes portent les marchandises d'échange et surtout serviront à rapporter les kolas.

Presque tous les voyageurs portent sur leur tête une partie de leur bagage. Et puisque nous venons de parler de portage, qu'il nous soit permis à cette occasion de citer encore M. DELAFOSSE: «On a beaucoup médit du portage en France ces dernières années, on en a parlé comme d'une coutume barbare, comme d'une forme d'esclavage que nous aurions introduits en Afrique et imposée aux malheureux Nègres. Cela prouve simplement que l'on aime à parler en France de ce que l'on ne connaît pas. Les plus anciens géographes et voyageurs qui nous ont parlé des Nègres du Soudan — Hérodote chez les Grecs, El Bekri chez les Arabes — ont raconté que, une fois passé le Sahara, comme les chevaux et les chamaux ne résistaient pas au climat, les indigènes transportaient eux-mêmes leurs fardeaux sur leur tête et cela à de très longues distances[1].» Remarques absolument exactes. Là où il y a abus de notre part, c'est lorsque nous voulons forcer la marche et obliger les indigènes à courir ainsi chargés et par le plus fort soleil, ou encore lorsque nous dépassons le poids réglementaire. Mais si on reste dans des limites raisonnables, les Noirs habitués dès l'enfance à porter de lourdes charges sur la tête — et tout se porte sur la tête en ce pays — ne sont pas plus à plaindre que nos soldats qui font de longues étapes chargés de leur sac d'ordonnance, de leurs cartouchières pleines et de leur fusil. Et la preuve c'est qu'actuellement il est très facile de trouver des porteurs volontaires qui acceptent de porter à 200 et même 400 km et plus encore une caisse de 25 à 30 kg, moyennant Fr. —·50 par jour.

Les étoffes sont roulées en énormes roues pleines qui pendent de chaque côté de l'âne ou du bœuf porteur, ou bien, quand l'indigène les porte lui-même, pliées dans des paniers de 1·50 m à 2 m de long, faits de tiges de bambous coupées en deux dans leur longueur. Ces paniers ont une forme demi-cylindrique et serviront à porter les kòlas au retour. Au milieu du panier est attaché un petit coussinet, et quand le voyageur veut se reposer, il choisit un arbre touffu, appuie un des côtés du panier au croisement de deux branches et l'autre extrémité sur le bambou qui lui sert de bâton de voyage: il n'a de la sorte aucun effort à faire quand il veut partir pour soulever sa charge.

* * *

Le retour au village se fait toujours de nuit pour éviter les indiscrets qui se précipiteraient pour voir les marchandises rapportées. Ces dernières sont soigneusement rangées, et le lendemain le voyageur se mêle aux gens du village comme s'il ne les avait jamais quittés. Ce n'est que peu à peu, à la veillée, qu'il raconte ses aventures de voyage. Mais à la première fête, il arbore des habits neufs, aux couleurs voyantes, une chéchia rouge, parfois des bas et des chaussures et se promène fièrement. Ceux qui ont goûté de cette vie de voyage et d'aventure ne peuvent plus s'en passer et repartent chaque année. Quelques-uns même parmi les jeunes gens indépendants et insouciants, vivent pendant l'hivernage du profit de leur expédition lointaine et ne travaillent plus la terre au grand scandale des anciens, qui n'y comprennent rien ou plutôt s'aperçoivent que quelque chose est changée dans leur pays.

[1] DELAFOSSE, Le peuple Sièna, p. 53.

* * *

Des Européens ont voulu, comme les indigènes, se livrer au commerce du bétail. Un Européen entreprenant et courageux s'était installé à Ouahigouya et un autre près de Mané; une maison de commerce avait envoyé un représentant à Ouagadougou; un Syrien s'y est installé. Il semble qu'aucun n'ait réussi. N'ayant pas leurs confidences il nous est difficile de dire pourquoi, mais ne serait-ce pas, du moins en grande partie, parce qu'un Européen se fera difficilement à la vie indigène? Et pourtant, si les Noirs font quelque profit, c'est qu'ils dépensent peu en voyage, vivent de rien, et au lieu d'avoir des porteurs, portent eux-mêmes une partie de leur marchandise. Et puis, les indigènes s'aident entre eux, et s'ils se font gruger parfois, trop souvent même par les intermédiaires, — et il semble que les différentes administrations européennes, quelque soit leur nationalité, devraient empêcher, dans leur intérêt bien compris, de pareilles spéculations — si les indigènes sont grugés, un Européen qui ignore tout des mœurs et de la langue, le sera à plus forte raison. Et qui surveillera ses troupeaux pendant son absence, et qui les conduira sur les marchés éloignés s'il reste au logis? Il est difficile de trouver un indigène en qui on puisse avoir pleine confiance. Pourtant le commerce du bétail est actuellement la seule source de profit possible ici.

Mais le chemin de fer qui approche, changera bientôt les conditions du commerce et favorisera par là même les Européens sans nuire aux indigènes. C'est à désirer, car le Mossi ne prendra toute son importance que le jour où il pourra écouler ses produits. Les indigènes ont été trop longtemps repliés sur eux-mêmes par suite des guerres incessantes qu'ils ont eu à soutenir; les nabas, il faut bien le dire, étaient trop portés à tout accaparer, pour que le commerce ait pu prendre un développement sérieux. La paix française, en donnant la sécurité aux routes, a déjà beaucoup fait pour ce pays, elle aura fait plus encore lorsque le chemin de fer traversant le Mossi de part en part, le réunira d'un côté à la côté d'Ivoire, de l'autre au Niger. Le commerce se fera alors non plus seulement avec les Allemands et les Anglais, mais avec les produits indigènes, ayant un écoulement certain, l'élévage et l'agriculture elle-même prendront une plus grande extension. Les Mossi ne sont pas réfractaires au commerce, il semble même qu'ils aient de vraies qualités de commerçants, ils n'ont pas eu jusqu'ici à les faire valoir, n'ont pas encore suffisamment saisi les avantages certains des transactions, et c'est pourquoi ils ont paru à certains n'avoir aucune disposition pour le commerce. Ils s'y feront et déjà s'y font.

Chapitre troisième. — La hygiène, la maladie, la mort, la sépulture.

Une partie de la vie surtout de la vie d'un Noir, se passe à dormir, et parfois des songes plus ou moins étranges viennent troubler le dormeur. Les songes sont attribués par les Mossi aux esprits, aux mânes des ancêtres ou aux génies. Ils disent aussi que c'est l'âme qui est sortie du corps pendant le sommeil et qui a fait ce que l'on a rêvé. C'est au sorcier qu'on s'adresse pour connaître l'origine des songes et ce qu'il faut faire pour conjurer les mauvais présages.

La vie se termine pour tout Mossi, comme pour tout homme, par la mort précédée ou non de maladie. Les Noirs ne savent pas prévenir les maladies et savent bien peu les combattre. L'hygiène est presque inconnue. Les cases sont mal aérées, les poules et en général tous les animaux de basse-cour se promènent partout et salissent tout. Sans doute, la cour est souvent balayée mais les moutons et les chèvres sont enfermés dans une case située au milieu des autres cases, le cheval est dans la soukala même, chacun satisfait ses besoins n'importe où, là où il trouve un endroit propice. Le fumier est sans doute réuni en un tas, mais tout près des cases, et cet ensemble dégage, surtout au commencement des pluies, une odeur nauséabonde et des miasmes délétères.

Le Mossi n'est pas sale, mais on ne peut pas non plus dire qu'il soit propre. Les habitants des villages qui ont en tout temps de l'eau en abondance sont les plus propres; les femmes qui vont puiser de l'eau tous les jours et ont par là-même l'occasion de se laver, sont en général plus propres que les hommes. Un Mossi ne passe jamais près d'une mare sans boire copieusement et sans se laver entièrement, et tout ces traits semblent prouver que ceux qui sont sales le sont malgré eux: ils n'ont pas d'eau à proximité et il faudrait faire un trop grand effort pour aller jusqu'à la rivière se laver. Les habits, surtout le pagne, sont parfois d'une saleté repoussante. Le lavage en effet use les habits et qui sait quand on pourra s'en procurer d'autres. Il n'est donc pas étonnant que la maladie ait une grande prise sur ces gens.

Les soins donnés aux enfants sont tout à fait élémentaires; quelques bains, des lavements deux ou trois fois par jour sans lesquels, paraît-il, ils ne pourraient aller à la selle, et c'est tout. A la moindre indisposition le sorcier est consulté ou l'enfant est laissé à lui-même: il guérira ou mourra: personne n'y fait rien. Aussi la mortalité enfantine est-elle fort grande. Ceux qui sont atteints de maladies contagieuses ne sont pas isolés. Un enfant sain couchera sur la même natte qu'un varioleux, un lépreux boit à la calebasse commune, à moins que ses lèvres ne soient couvertes de plaies. On hésite cependant à s'assoir où s'est assis un syphilitique qui a des plaies. L'éducation des Mossi, au point de vue de l'hygiène, est tout entière à faire.

La politesse mossi veut que, quand on rencontre quelqu'un, on lui demande des nouvelles de sa santé et de celle de tous les siens. La réponse invariable est celle-ci: «Il se porte bien», à quoi on répond: «Que Dieu augmente sa santé». Ce n'est qu'après un moment de conversation que l'on racontera qu'un tel ou une telle est malade ou va mieux. On ne dit pas de quelqu'un qu'il est mort, mais qu'il a manqué de force, qu'il a passé, qu'il nous a laissés ou quittés.

C'est que la maladie est généralement attribuée à un génie mauvais qu'il ne faut pas irriter en ayant l'air de se plaindre de lui. Pourtant dans le langage courant c'est Dieu qui est cause de tout, de la santé, comme de la mort. Ce sont les sorciers consultés qui indiquent lequel il faut apaiser, à qui il faut offrir des sacrifices; ou bien qui déclarent tout net que l'heure du malade est arrivée, qu'il a fini sa vie et va s'en aller rejoindre ses ancêtres, car souvent ce sont eux qui l'appellent et viennent le chercher. S'il s'agit d'un vieillard ou d'une vieille surtout, leur mort est considérée comme une mort naturelle. Il a donné le jour à beaucoup d'enfants qui pouvont lui faire de belles funérailles, il est temps qu'il laisse la place à son fils aîné. Si c'est un batailleur qui tombe malade, sa maladie est facilement attribuée à un mauvais sort que lui a jeté un ennemi. Lorsqu'un ancien va mourir ceux qui l'ont offensé viennent lui demander pardon et ne sont tranquilles que quand ils l'ont obtenu: le vieillard pourrait venir se venger. Une mort subite est généralement attribuée à un empoisonnement, et hélas! c'est souvent vrai; parfois aussi à un mauvais génie, surtout s'il s'agit d'un accident, d'une chûte, d'une morsure de serpent, etc.

* * *

Malgré tout, l'instinct de conservation est si grand chez l'homme, que les Mossi, bien que lui attribuant une origine surhumaine, luttent contre la maladie. Il est vrai que dans tous leurs remèdes ils mêlent la partie médicale et la partie superstitieuse pour éloigner le mauvais génie et quelque soit le remède, remède véritable ou grisgris, c'est toujours un tim, il n'y a qu'un mot pour le désigner. Certains indigènes connaissent le remède pour telle ou telle maladie et on vient les consulter souvent de fort loin. Celui-ci a le remède contre les serpents et il le fabrique en grand secret à jour fixe; tel autre sait soigner les rhumes ou les bronchites, tel autre la dyssenterie, tel autre les plaies. Les rebouteurs sont parfois très adroits et sous la simple pression des doigts, remettent en place un membre luxé, une jambe cassée, et l'enferment en guise de gouttière, entre des tiges de mil fortement liées. Ces médecins indiquent les remèdes sans recourir aux sacrifices ni aux sorcelleries, parfois ils viennent habiter chez le malade et lui donnent leurs soins, évidemment contre rémunération, surtout si le malade guérit.

La variolisation est pratiquée, mais souvent trop tard, sur des sujets qui ont déjà le germe de la maladie; le vaccin est pris, sans aucune précaution antiseptique, sur un malade gravement atteint, de telle sorte que celui qui a été vacciné est généralement très malade et parfois en meurt. D'ailleurs, il est admis que la variole ne revient pas sur ses pas (évidemment quand elle a déjà tué tous ceux qui pouvaient l'être), et l'appréhension de gagner la maladie empêche bien des indigènes de recourir à ce procédé. L'administration rend de très grands services par les tournées de vaccinations qui auront d'autant plus de succès que les expériences faites par nos Pères, il y a quelques années, au moyen des tubes de vaccin que M. l'administrateur de Ouagadougou avait bien voulu leur envoyer, ont eu des résultats excellents et ont enrayé une épidémie qui décimait la population. Le varioleux est soigné aussi bien que possible. Il est couché sur un lit de sable qui retient bien la chaleur. Quand les boutons sont mûrs ils sont percés au moyen d'une épine, le malade est ensuite frotté avec du sable. Les yeux sont lavés avec une décoction antiseptique et le malade se gargarise fréquemment avec de l'eau pimentée.

Les simples, les feuilles d'arbres, les écorces sont la base de tous les remèdes, qu'ils servent à faire des tisanes ou à confectionner des cataplasmes. Il serait sans doute intéressant, pour un spécialiste, d'étudier cette question. Mais les indigènes, détenteurs des secrets de fabrication, les livreraient-ils?

* * *

Quand un ami est malade, même au loin, il est de bon ton d'aller le visiter, de lui offrir ses condoléances et, ce qui lui est plus sensible, quelque cadeaux. Les parents du malade vont consulter le sorcier, car il s'agit de savoir à qui attribuer la maladie. Il est fort rare qu'un sorcier indique un remède. Son rôle se borne à indiquer la partie malade et surtout le génie auquel il faut offrir le sacrifice. C'est un autre indigène, qui le plus souvent n'a rien d'un sorcier, qui connaît les remèdes. Quand les sacrifices indiqués ont été offerts, si le malade se porte mieux, c'est que le sorcier connaît bien son métier, sinon c'est qu'il a voulu tromper.

Tout sorcier qui se respecte doit imposer un traitement négatif en ce sens qu'il indique un certain nombre de choses que le malade ne doit pas manger. Tantôt la viande de chèvre ou de poule est défendue pour le temps de la maladie ou définitivement. Tantôt c'est telle ou telle espèce de sauce ou encore les beignets de mil ou de haricots. Comme, par ailleurs, les Mossi ne mangent pas d'œufs, surtout crus, et ne boivent guère de lait, ils soutiennent les malades en leur donnant à boire beaucoup de bière de mil et à manger une pâte peu apétissante de mil grossièrement écrasé, souvent mêlé de poudre de charbon. Le malade n'absorbe que difficilement une telle mixture et meurt parfois d'inanition. Le sorcier indique aussi parfois l'amulette qu'il faut se procurer. La feuille qui couvre une plaie doit être retenue par une cordelette de coton au bout de laquelle sont attachés trois cauris pour un garçon et quatre pour une fille. Une corde de chanvre, portant trois ou quatre nœuds et mise autour du cou ou du poignet ou de tout autre membre l'empêche d'enfler et est un remède souverain pour prévenir les vers de Guinée. Il arrive aussi qu'il est plus difficile de se procurer l'amulette designée, par exemple si c'est un bec ou des griffes d'épervier, la corne d'une biche, certaines parties d'un buffle ou d'un koba. Et le pauvre Mossi se met en quatre pour se procurer l'amulette indispensable.

Mais il a beau faire, un jour ou l'autre il faut mourir. Le vieillard sent sa fin prochaine. Il appelle les siens, leur fait ses dernières recommandations, il s'entretient avec son fils aîné, lui indique où sont ses bœufs, quelles sont ses cachettes, à qui il doit et qui a des dettes envers lui. Mais parfois la mort est plus rapide, elle vient à l'improviste, et le vieux n'a pas le temps de causer à son héritier; une grande partie de la fortune est alors perdue, car un Mossi en bonne santé n'indique jamais à personne, surtout à ses enfants, à qui il a confié la garde de ses biens, et les détenteurs ne les restituent pas. Certains Peuls se sont fait ainsi assez de jolis profits.

La mort d'un jeune homme ou d'une jeune fille ou plus encore d'un petit enfant, est généralement attribuée à une vieille femme qui, dit-on, a mangé l'âme de l'enfant, et certaines vieilles prétendent avoir ce secret. Le sorcier désigne alors la coupable qui est saisie et mise à mort. Toute mort subite ou accidentelle est attribuée à un mauvais génie et les cérémonies funèbres s'en ressentent.

Le suicide est fort rare mais existe. Voire un cas de suicide dont nous connaissons les acteurs: Un individu s'était disputé avec sa femme. Plus forte que le mari, la femme avait terrassé son maître et les voisins en avaient fait des gorges chaudes; le lendemain, on trouva le mari pendu dans sa case. Un trou fut rapidement creusé dans son champ le plus rapproché et il y fut jeté tout nu sans autres cérémonies: le suicide est un acte criminel qui est puni jusque dans le cadavre du suicidé.

Tout Mossi, comme tout homme, craint la mort. Ne plus pouvoir manger de bouillie de mil ni boire du dolo lui semble le plus grand des malheurs. Pourtant, quand il la voit arriver il s'y résigne et l'accepte stoïquement. Sa tête repose sur les genoux de sa première femme, les autres l'entourent, les amis et les anciens du village sont assis devant la soukala et tous attendent en silence des heures et des heures que leur vieillard ait passé. Tout à coup un cri lugubre et strident poussé par la garde du malade traverse l'air et annonce à tous qu'une âme vient de quitter un corps et de paraître devant Dieu. Toutes les femmes répondent à cet appel, et pendant quelques minutes les lamentations les plus plaintives emplissent la soukala du mort.

Bientôt tout rentre dans le silence. Un des membres de la famille va chercher le fossoyeur, le lada, sans lequel il est impossible de procéder à la sépulture. Pendant ce temps, on arrache un des séko qui ferment la cour intérieure afin que l'âme puisse passer et laisse en paix les vivants. Une vieille femme et les enfants du défunt procèdent alors à la toilette funèbre et n'emploient pour cette besogne que la main gauche. Le corps est lavé à l'eau chaude et vigoureusement savonné, puis oint de beurre de karité. La tête est rasée et les cheveux sont enterrés, à moins que cette opération n'ait eu lieu avant que le mourant n'ait rendu le dernier soupir, auquel cas les cheveux sont jetés au vent. Quand le corps est bien lavé, le fossoyeur assouplit les articulations du cou, des bras et des jambes afin que le cadavre puisse facilement glisser dans la fosse, puis dépose le mort dans la case de sa première femme si elle vit encore, sinon dans la case même du défunt.

Le mort est couché sur une natte, sur le côté dans l'attitude d'un dormeur, les bras et les jambes repliés, et recouvert d'une couverture blanche. Quand le cadavre est en place, les cris lugubres se font entendre de nouveau, et les jeunes gens et les hommes vont creuser la fosse tandis que les femmes restent assises dans la cour et veillent le mort. Des amies et les voisines s'occupent à préparer à manger pour toute la famille qui a visitée la mort.

La tombe est creusée généralement dans le champ de la famille, là ou reposent déjà les ancêtres. Les villages n'ont pas de cimetières communs mais chaque famille a le sien. Pourtant les environs des bois sacrés servent parfois de cimetière. Etre enterré loin des siens est un grand malheur et qui meurt loin de son village désire vivement que son corps y soit rapporté, et la famille satisfait toujours à ce dernier vœu quand la chose est possible. Sinon le mort est enterré au bord du chemin qui conduit à son village. Afin de dormir près des siens son dernier sommeil, un indigène, quand il sent ses forces diminuer: construira parfois ses cases en pleine brousse, au lieu où s'élevait autrefois le village, aujourd'hui abandonné, où vécurent ses ancêtres. Un vieillard estimé et aimé des siens aura sa tombe devant la soukala et c'est de règle pour les nabas.

Le fossoyeur indique la dimension à donner à la fosse et sa forme, mais tout le monde peut la creuser. Une tombe mossi se compose d'un trou rond de 1·50 m environ de diamètre et de 0·70 m de profondeur. Au fond de ce premier trou ou contre la parois, un second trou de 0·75 m de diamètre est creusé. Le fond de ce dernier trou est agrandi de manière à former comme une chambre de 1·50 m à 2 m de longueur et 0·75 m de profondeur. C'est dans cette chambre que le corps sera couché. Cette chambre est enduite de néré de façon à ce que la parois soit bien lisse.

Toute la nuit des jeunes gens sont occupés à ce travail tandis qu'à la maison mortuaire les amis et les parents absents sont accourus sitôt qu'ils ont eu connaissance du décès, les tambours, à l'affût de quelques cruches de bière à boire et de quelques cauris à gagner, sont aussi venus, et tout le monde danse et chante et s'amuse.

Les enfants et les frères puînés du mort sont revêtus des habits de deuil: vaste tablier et vaste poche, orné de banderolles de toile et de dessins variés sur fond rouge ou bleu; la tête est couverte par une petite calebasse, la figure est marquée par un cercle de cendre, une croix de cendre est faite sur le dos; les filles et les sœurs du mort ont en plus un bouquet de feuilles par derrière et des cordelettes de coton blanc autour du cou; le fils aîné porte une peau de mouton en sautoir. A l'aube, la bière de mil arrive, la bouillie de mil est prête, et on en porte à ceux qui ont creusé la fosse. Le fossoyeur jette un peu de bière sur la terre extraite de la tombe et la mêle à de la bouillie de mil. Puis les jeux cessent et tout le monde boit, mange et va se reposer. Parfois les danses recommencent vers midi. Quand le soleil baisse à l'horizon on procède à la sépulture.

* * *

Une ouverture est pratiquée dans la case où repose le mort et c'est par cette ouverture que l'on passe le cadavre. Il est couché en travers, et tous ses enfants doivent passer par ce même trou et enjamber le corps de leur père. Le corps est alors déposé sur une civière mais non encore attaché; il est reporté dans la cour en passant par le seko arraché au moment de la mort. Le fils aîné s'approche alors avec une chèvre ou une poule selon ses ressources et la donne au fossoyeur qui l'offre au mort en l'avançant par trois fois et en disant: «Ton fils t'offre cette chèvre pour qu'elle t'enfante des chevreaux.» Les autres enfants peuvent faire aussi leurs offrandes ainsi que les amis et le fossoyeur présente toutes au mort de la même manière. Les animaux ainsi donnés sont, en certains endroits, emportés par le fossoyeur et tués et mangés par lui sans que rien ne soit sacrifié sur place; tandis que dans d'autres endroits, les victimes sont immolées près du corps.

Quand la dernière poule à été offerte, le cadavre est entouré d'une natte très flexible et lié fortement sur la civière. Le cortège funèbre s'organise. Les femmes et les enfants marchent devant le corps, les amis et les gens du village suivent ainsi que les tambours. Si c'est un gros personnage, des cavaliers sont venus à l'enterrement, la poudre parle. Trois fois le cortège fait le tour de la soukala si c'est le maître de la soukala qui est mort. Les femmes, n'étant jamais chefs de case, sont privées de cet honneur. Le cortège se dirige alors vers la fosse, non sans faire des détours dans le village pour passer aux endroits préférés du défunt. On conduira ainsi une vieille femme au marigot où elle allait puiser de l'eau, au marché où elle allait vendre les grains. Les tambours battent avec fureur, tout le monde crie, chante, échange des injures si grossières que je n'ai pu obtenir d'aucun indigène qu'il me les répète. Trois fois le cortège s'arrête si c'est une vieille, deux fois si c'est un vieux, et les cris redoublent.

Arrivés près de la fosse, tout le monde s'arrête une dernière fois et se tait. La civière est abaissée, et les parents font entendre un chant doux et mélancolique: «Que le chef de la haine (celui qui a tué le mort) s'en aille!» Le corps est alors déposé près de la fosse. Un fossoyeur, car eux seuls peuvent enterrer quelqu'un mort de maladie, un fossoyeur est dans le premier trou et un autre dans la chambre funéraire pour recevoir le cadavre. Les liens qui attachient le corps à la civière sont coupés, la natte enlevée. Les fossoyeurs qui ne sont pas occupés prennent alors des couvertures et les tendent autour de la fosse pour cacher le cadavre aux spectateurs. Le fossoyeur du premier trou saisit le mort et le passe par l'ouverture de la chambre funéraire au second fossoyeur qui y est descendu et reçoit le corps dans ses bras, le couche sur une natte la tête au sud, sur le côté, le visage vers l'est pour un homme, vers l'ouest pour une femme, les bras et les jambes repliés.

Sitôt que le corps a disparu, les couvertures sont enlevées, et le fils aîné s'approche. Il offre au mort un tablier de deuil dans la poche duquel il a mis 444 cauris pour une femme et 333 pour un homme ou même 4444 ou 3333 cauris selon sa fortune, et le fossoyeur les offre au mort en disant que son fils aîné lui donne ces cauris pour acheter de l'eau pour boire (traduisez: de la bière). Il donne aussi des habits, deux pantalons, deux vestes, deux couvertures, un bonnet, pour un homme, s'il veut faire les choses grandement; et des couvertures s'il s'agit d'une femme, les unes pour se couvrir, les autres pour porter les cruches, d'autres pour aller au marché. A une femme on offre une calebasse pour cuire la sauce avec du piment, des épices de toutes sortes, du sel. On lui donne aussi son fuseau avec lequel elle filait le coton mais on brise la tige, comme d'ailleurs on détériore ou déchire tout ce qui est offert au mort. Les amis riches offrent aussi des habits et les autres jettent des cauris au mort. Mais les fossoyeurs ont bien soin de fermer le petit trou avec des couvertures afin d'empêcher les cauris de tomber dans la fosse. De temps en temps, ils en font glisser quelques-uns, mais gardent pour eux le plus grand nombre. Quand tous ont jeté leur offrande, les fossoyeurs enlèvent un, deux, ou plusieurs habits, c'est leur part et ces pratiques sont reconnues par la coutume. Ils retirent aussi quelques poignées de cauris du tablier de deuil et vite quelqu'un se précipite pour les compter. Tous les regards sont anxieusement dirigés vers celui qui compte car c'est un homme ou une femme qui mourra bientôt selon que le nombre des cauris se rapproche plus de 333 ou de 444.

Enfin les fossoyeurs ferment la fosse. Si c'est une vieille, la petite ouverture est bouchée avec une des grosses cruches dans lesquelles elle faisait la bière de mil; si c'est un homme, avec une petite cruche, parfois, surtout si l'ouverture est plus grande, avec des morceaux de bois aussi rapprochés les uns des autres que possible. De la sorte, le corps est absolument isolé dans sa chambre funéraire. Le grand trou est ensuite bouché avec la terre enlevée de la fosse, et au sommet on dépose une cruche et un pot en terre pour cuire la sauce si c'est une femme, un pot en terre et une grosse pierre si c'est un homme.

Chacun alors se retire pour boire, manger et se reposer: cette nuit, il n'y a pas de danses. Mais on se rattrape le lendemain et même encore le surlendemain si la fortune du défunt le permet. Le surlendemain de l'enterrement, si c'est un homme âgé, le troisième jour, si c'est une vieille femme, les enfants et les frères plus jeunes du mort se rasent la tête, vont remercier ceux qui les ont aidés et déposent les habits de deuil. Il ne sera plus question du défunt avant la fête de l'anniversaire, le kouré.

Telles sont les cérémonies qui accompagnent généralement la mort et la sépulture d'un homme ou d'une femme mariés, qui ont des enfants. Nous disons «généralement», car toutes ces cérémonies compliquées peuvent être écourtées, plus ou moins modifiées, selon les régions et les coutumes particulières à telle ou telle famille.

La mort des nabas, avons-nous dit, est soigneusement cachée, d'autant plus soigneusement que le naba était plus puissant et cela par crainte des troubles que ne manqueraient pas de susciter ceux qui aspirent à la succession ou les vauriens qui profiteraient de l'absence de toute autorité pour se livrer à tous les actes de brigandage. A la mort du Moro-Naba, sa province était ravagée par des bandes armées et personne ne sortait sans armes. Le lendemain de la mort du Moro-Naba Sigri, nous eûmes à aller chercher du mil dans un village situé à quelques kilomètres de Ouagadougou. Tous les porteurs étaient armés d'arcs, de flèches et de lances. Le spectacle n'était pas banal au clair de lune.

Si donc un naba meurt — et malgré toutes leurs amulettes et tous leurs sacrifices, les nabas meurent tout comme leurs sujets —, ses parents creusent rapidement une fosse dans la case d'entrée de la soukala et y déposent le corps sans cérémonies. On dira désormais à qui veut voir le naba qu'il est souffrant. Le naba de Koupéla est même favorisé à cet égard. Il y a, dans sa soukala, près de la porte d'entrée, une case qui lui est réservée; c'est là qu'il sera enterré. Dans cette case, un trou a été creusé, et chaque jour le gardien vient verser du dolo dans ce trou. Ce gardien ne doit pas avoir de femme, et s'il en avait une avant d'être promu à cette charge, le naba la lui prendrait. Par contre, il mange les mêmes mets que le naba et boit la même bière de mil. Inutile de dire que cet emploi n'est pas très recherché. Le naba ne peut entrer dans cette case et quand la toiture a besoin d'être refaite, les tambours sont convoqués et le naba doit s'enfuir: malheur à lui s'il entend le bruit des tambours, il mourra dans l'année. Quand le naba de Koupéla meurt, ses mains et ses pieds sont immédiatement percés avec de grosses épines afin qu'il ne puisse plus revenir et s'il s'avisait de vouloir saisir un des siens après sa mort, les épines le feraient tellement souffrir qu'il lâcherait immédiatement sa proie. Le cadavre est jeté dans la fosse et tombe comme il peut. Pleins d'égards pour leurs chefs de leur vivant, les Mossi se rattrappent à leur mort.

* * *

Un jeune homme ou une jeune fille non mariés, sont enterrés avec une vieille de leur famille, morte précédemment, afin que quelqu'un prenne soin d'eux dans l'autre vie. Leur disparition est vraiment considérée comme un malheur et entouré de deuil. Aucune danse, aucune cérémonie. Le père, la mère et les frères puînés se rasent la tête le surlendemain ou le troisième jour après l'enterrement.

Un petit enfant est enterré sur le bord d'un chemin. Il reviendra bientôt car c'est lui que sa mère met au monde dans la personne du premier enfant dont la naissance suit cette mort.

Les suicidés sont enterrés comme des chiens chez nous — car ici, tous les chiens sont mangés; les lépreux, de nuit et sans réjouissances. La mort par accident, qu'elle soit occasionnée par une chûte, par une piqûre de serpent ou par toute autre cause, est attribuée à un mauvais génie qu'il ne faut pas irriter en rendant des honneurs funèbres à sa victime, sinon il reviendra tuer un autre membre de la famille. C'est pourquoi ceux qui meurent d'accident sont enterrés sans cérémonies, sans la présence des fossoyeurs; on ne leur rase pas la tête, car Dieu les a appelés avec leurs cheveux, disent les Mossi. On creuse la fosse et on les enterre, et tout est dit. Ils n'ont personne qui les représente; jusqu'au jour anniversaire de leur mort, jusqu'au kouré, ils n'ont pas de kourita.

C'est que tout Mossi mort de maladie, quelqu'il soit, homme, femme, enfant, naba, se survit dans la personne de la kourita. S'il s'agit d'un homme marié, la kourita ou koutoarsa (qui imite le mort) est une femme de la famille du défunt, généralement une des femmes d'un de ses plus jeunes frères, et qui a une certaine ressemblence avec celui qui n'est plus. Elle est choisie par la famille et parfois désignée par le mourant. Elle prend les habits du mort, sa veste, sa couverture, son chapeau, ses savates, ses bracelets et ses bagues, elle porte la ceinture et les couteaux du défunt, marche avec son bâton, sa pioche, son doré, elle porte sa lance, le fer dirigé vers la terre. Elle marche comme celui qu'elle représente et doit l'imiter en tout, elle le continue au milieu des siens. Si le mort était généralement accompagné d'un enfant portant sa sacoche, la kourita aura son enfant qui la suivra avec cette même sacoche mais mise à l'envers. Si le défunt était lépreux et ne possédait plus de doigts, elle fera comme si elle n'en avait plus; s'il aimait à rire, elle rira; s'il était grognon et disputait tout le monde, elle ne décolerera pas. Les enfants du défunt l'appelleront leur père, les femmes la nommeront leur mari et lui prépareront la bouillie de mil. Si le mort était naba, on l'appellera naba; s'il ne l'était pas, on lui donnera le nom du mort.

Elle agira ainsi jusqu'au jour du kouré. Ce jour-là, elle se rase la tête comme les autres membres de la famille et son rôle est terminé. Elle garde cependant le nom de kourita et au jour du partage reçoit un habit en échange duquel elle rend les habits du mort, et si l'héritier est généreux, si l'héritage le permet, elle recevra quelques bestiaux, parfois un enfant. La kourita mourra plus tôt que si elle n'avait pas rempli ce rôle, dit-on, parce que les mânes des ancêtres viendront la chercher, aussi cette fonction est-elle peu recherchée.

A côté de cette kourita, la fille aînée du défunt lorsqu'il est chef de case, ou, à son défaut, sa petite fille, joue parfois un rôle et s'appellera aussi kourita; mais cette dernière coutume est moins générale. Son costume de deuil s'agrémentera de cordelettes de paille rouge (bini) autour du cou, des poignets, au-dessus du coude et à la cheville de chaque pied, 13 pour un homme et 14 pour une femme. Sa tête est entourée de fils de coton (pana) qui pendent sur le dos comme une longue queue terminée par un pompon. La première kourita dont nous avons parlé, porte parfois ces insignes. Cette dernière kourita n'a d'ailleurs qu'une chose à faire, c'est à planter du gros mil là où se trouvaient les cases de son père. Quand le mil est mûr, elle le met de côté et c'est elle qui fera la bière de mil le jour du kouré. Parfois son office dure trois ans, pendant qu'elle ne peut pas se raser. Par contre, c'est elle qui fait la bière le jour de la fête des morts (basra). Au bout de trois ans, elle se rase et reprend la vie commune. Une vieille femme n'étant pas chef de case n'a pas cette dernière kourita.

La mère est kourita de son enfant mort avant d'être marié. Elle met à son pied une cordelette de coton à laquelle chaque jour elle fait un nœud tant que dure le deuil, 33 jours pour un garçon, 44 pour une fille.

Le Moro-Naba a sa kourita tout comme les autres Mossi, mais le jour du kouré on désigne un jeune garçon de sa famille qui, sa vie durant, représente le Moro-Naba défunt. Ce kourita prend le nom du naba décédé et pendant toute la saison sèche, se promène de canton en canton, ce que n'a pu faire le vrai Moro-Naba de son vivant. Partout il est reçu avec de grands honneurs et hébergé, il reçoit beaucoup de cadeaux et ses gens ne se privent pas de piller. Une seule localité lui est interdite c'est Ouagadougou, parce que c'est la résidence du successeur, et s'ils venaient à se rencontrer, l'un d'eux mourrait dans l'année. Actuellement, il y a au Mossi deux kourita de Moro-Naba, celui du naba Sanem qui reçut Binger et celui du naba Sigri, intrônisé lors de la conquête par Voulet et décédé en 1905. Naba Wobre, détrôné par nos troupes, n'a pas de kourita parce qu'il n'était plus Moro-Naba à sa mort: il avait manqué à la tradition en quittant Ouagadougou et par là même renoncé à ses droits de souverain.

Ces premières funérailles ne sont que provisoires, car le corps humain se décompose vite et il a fallu procéder rapidement à la sépulture avant que tous les amis et les parents n'aient pu être réunis. D'ailleurs, la mort à surpris, les cauris manquaient, les animaux n'avaient pu être rassemblés en nombre suffisant, bref il importe de rendre au défunt les honneurs dûs à son rang et de lui offrir de nombreuses victimes. C'est le kouré, ce que nous avons appelé l'anniversaire, faute d'un terme plus exact, bien que cette fête puisse se célébrer quelques jours après l'enterrement si tout est prêt.

Le kouré a toujours lieu un dimanche. La kourita, le fils aîné, ou le chef de la famille désigne une première fois le jour, mais ce n'est pas le jour véritable. Quelques jours plus tard, il indique à tous le vrai jour. Les parents et les amis se réunissent le samedi au grand diner de famille avec viande, sel, bière et sarabo. Le dimanche à l'aube, les femmes se lamentent, pleurent, crient, et à l'aurore, les membres de la famille du défunt se rasent la tête, se font les raies de cendre et revêtent les habits de deuil, exactement comme au jour de la mort. Vers midi, chacun des parents et amis amène sa victime pour l'offrir à celui qui n'est plus. C'est au fossoyeur (lada) à l'offrir au mort. Il prend donc d'abord le mouton donné par le fils aîné et se présente devant la porte de la case dans laquelle le vieillard a été couché après son trépas. Il lui offre trois fois le mouton en le faisant avancer et reculer tout en disant: «Ton fils te donne un mouton, prend-le et mange-le avec toute ta famille.» Il saisit alors le mouton et serre fortement ses mâchoires pour l'empêcher de bêler. Les assistants entraînent le mouton hors de la cour intérieure et l'égorgent. Une vieille femme vient recevoir le sang dans une calebasse. La viande est cuite à part, le sang mêlé à de la farine de mil est cuit avec les entrailles, le foie, le poumon et du sel. C'est le semdlé dont tous les membres de la famille doivent manger. C'est une des coutumes auxquelles les Mossi tiennent le plus. Tandis que le mouton du fils aîné est ainsi égorgé, chacun des enfants présente au fossoyeur sa victime, et celui-ci l'offre au défunt comme précédemment. Puis viennent les autres parents et les amis.

Quand tous les animaux sont offerts, le fossoyeur prend de la bière dans une cruche qui est restée au soleil et va vider une calebasse sur la tombe. Le reste de la cruche lui appartient. La fin du jour est occupée à égorger toutes ces victimes dont le nombre varie selon la richesse et la notoriété du défunt, à les faire cuire, à les manger et à boire. Le soir, une des filles du mort prend une calebasse pleine d'eau, la met sur sa tête sans coussinet et fait trois fois le tour de la soukala de son père en criant et en pleurant. Tout le monde la suit et mêle ses gémissements aux siens. Elle rentre alors dans la cour intérieure l'eau dans la marmite dans laquelle cuit la bouillie de mil. Si le maître du logis avait un chien, il est alors tué et mangé. Pendant toute la nuit, ce ne sont que danses et jeux sans fin.

Le lundi, on prépare la bière de mil pour le mercredi, et tout le monde continue à danser et à jouer; il en est de même du mardi. Ce jour là, toutes les femmes du défunt se sauvent parce qu'elles ne doivent pas assister à la cérémonie du lendemain, le battage de la tombe.

Le mercredi dans la matinée, toute la famille se rend à la tombe avec des battoirs et accompagnée par les tambours et le fossoyeur. Les femmes ont apporté de l'eau, et tout le monde bat la terre qui recouvre la tombe au sommet de laquelle on laisse un pot en terre pour une femme, une pierre pour un homme. Quand la tombe est bien battue, le fossoyeur tue une poule sur la pierre ou le pot et dit: «Reçois la poule du tombeau, prends-la pour la manger avec ta famille et laisse tes enfants en paix». Il prend ensuite une calebasse de bière et la répand sur la tombe. La poule est rôtie et mangée et la cruche de bière est bue sur place. Tout le monde retourne alors à la maison mortuaire, et le jeu et la danse recommencent de plus belle.

Le jeudi, toute la famille se rend au marché et va remercier les amis qui sont venus assister aux fêtes et les ont aidés.

Les funérailles sont complètement terminées, et il ne sera plus question du vieillard ou de la vieille que chaque année à la fête des morts.

Un jeune homme, une jeune fille, morts sans enfants, ont aussi leur kouré, très généralement le même jour qu'un vieux ou une vieille décédé précédemment. Si personne de la famille n'est mort, on fait le kouré des enfants sans cérémonie. Le père, la mère et ses plus jeunes frères se rasent, on construit une petite case qui représente celle du défunt et c'est là que lui sont offertes des poules, parfois une chèvre. La bière de mil est évidemment distribuée aux parents et amis qui sont venus, mais il n'y a ni danses ni battage de la tombe.

* * *

La mort des naba est, en principe, ignorée, et le pauvre a été enterré sans cérémonie. Quand ses héritiers ont réuni ce qu'il faut pour faire à leur père des funérailles dignes de lui, ils font répandre partout, un samedi matin, la nouvelle que le naba est mort. Un mannequin, fait des habits du défunt, est déposé dans la case de sa première femme ou dans la sienne propre, et toutes les cérémonies se font le samedi soir comme pour un grand enterrement. Le mannequin est porté comme sont portés tous les morts et la terre qui recouvre la fosse est légèrement grattée et les habits sont enfouis. Le lendemain dimanche, ont lieu toutes les cérémonies du kouré, d'autant plus solennelles que le naba défunt était plus puissant.

Tout le monde a donc son kouré, les petits enfants morts à la mamelle qui reviendront bientôt, et les suicidés en sont seuls généralement privés.

Mais quand un chef de case meurt, il laisse un héritage plus ou moins important. Personne n'y a touché jusqu'au jour du kouré. Mais sitôt que les fêtes sont terminées, le fils aîné convoque le chef de la famille et tous ses oncles, ses frères et ses sœurs. Il faut procéder au partage. En principe, tout l'héritage, toutes les femmes, tous les bestiaux, tous les cauris appartiennent au fils aîné s'il est marié ou en âge de l'être. Si l'enfant est trop jeune, c'est un des frères plus jeunes du defunt qui est son tuteur et doit gérer la fortune et la passer à son neveu quand il sera en âge d'hériter de son père. Mais l'oncle dilapide évidemment les biens de son pupille. Si le défunt ne laisse pas d'héritier mâle, l'héritage revient à l'aînée de ses filles. S'il n'a pas d'enfant, c'est son frère plus jeune, ou, à son défaut, le fils de son frère aîné qui hérite, mais jamais son frère aîné lui-même à moins qu'il ne s'agisse d'un naba, auquel cas c'est le frère aîné qui, s'il n'y a pas d'autre héritier, rentre en possession de la fortune.

Mais si le fils aîné est, en principe, maître absolu de tous les biens de son père, en réalité il doit les partager en partie. S'il a des frères plus jeunes en âge d'être mariés, il leur donne une des femmes de son père. Celui qui en hérite doit raser lui-même la tête de sa nouvelle épouse. Si celle-ci refuse, c'est qu'elle ne veut pas de ce nouveau mari. Si les frères de l'héritier sont trop jeunes, celui-ci leur donne quelques bêtes, bœufs, moutons, chèvres. Si l'héritage le permet, les oncles auront aussi leur part. Mais personne ne peut obliger le fils aîné à procéder au partage. Il peut déclarer purement et simplement qu'il garde tout, mais il se créera des ennuis, se suscitera des ennemis, surtout si son père a dilapidé la fortune d'un neveu. A la mort de son oncle, le neveu, frustré de l'héritage paternel, le rapelle à son cousin et demande des indemnités qui sont généralement accordées sous forme de femmes ou de bestiaux.

Le nouvel héritier devient chef de case à son tour, et souvent il habite dans la soukala de son père, parfois il en fait construire une autre. Il est désormais son maître et ne dépend plus que du chef de mille tandis que ses sœurs non mariées et ses jeunes frères sont sous sa dépendance. Il a hérité des biens mais n'a pas hérité de la puissance, et si son père était naba et qu'il veuille lui succéder, il faut maintenant briguer la place auprès du naba plus puissant qui peut la donner.

Telle est la vie de famille des Mossi. En résumé, grande soumission vis à vis des nabas et des chefs de famille, grande indépendance vis à vis de ceux qui ne sont pas revêtus de l'autorité. Les femmes vivent les unes à côté des autres sous la direction de la première femme du mari; les filles ne s'appartiennent jamais, quelque soit leur âge, et sont ainsi dans un quasi esclavage. Les enfants eux-mêmes ne se fréquentent guère entre eux. Ils s'aiment assurément et savent se le prouver à l'occasion et leurs parents les aiment, mais il n'y a pas entre eux ce lien, cet esprit de famille que seul le christianisme pourra leur donner.

LIVRE QUATRIEME
Vie religieuse.

Chapitre premier. — Dogme et morale.

Jusqu'ici nous avons étudié les manifestations extérieures de la vie des Mossi: leur constitution politique avec toute sa hiérarchie, leur constitution familiale avec tout ce qui en dépend, mariage, naissance, vie et mort. Il nous faut faire un pas de plus et pénétrer dans l'intimité de ce peuple, analyser ses sentiments dans ce qu'ils ont de plus profond et de plus tenace. Et s'il est déjà très difficile de comprendre un individu et de saisir à quels motifs il obéit dans la conduite ordinaire de sa vie, que dire quand il s'agit d'un peuple — surtout quand ce peuple ne sait pas s'analyser soi-même, qu'on n'a pour se guider aucun écrit qui reflète son âme et qu'il faut la surprendre dans ses manifestations les plus spotanées, dans ses conversations les plus familières? Cependant nous ne saurions presque rien des Mossi si nous ne connaissions quelles idées ils se font de Dieu, du monde, des génies, des mânes, et quelles relations ils ont établies entre eux et ce monde invisible. La vie religieuse joue un très grand rôle dans la vie de tout peuple, serait-il exagéré de dire que son rôle est d'autant plus grand que ce peuple est plus primitif et, par conséquent, plus porté à attribuer à une intervention préternaturelle tout ce qu'il ne s'explique pas?

Ils n'aiment pourtant point à aborder ces questions avec des étrangers, surtout avec des Blancs, dont ils savent les croyances si différentes des leurs. Non seulement ils ont peur de déplaire à leurs génies en dévoilant des secrets, mais encore ils craignent le sourire moqueur. Il faut bien se garder de rire de leurs conceptions si enfantines qu'elles nous paraissent. En rire c'est le meilleur moyen de les froisser et de les fermer à jamais. D'ailleurs, toute croyance sincère n'est-elle pas digne d'un certain respect, même si à ce respect se mêle quelque pitié?

La difficulté est encore accrue par ce fait que les Mossi n'ont aucune théorie religieuse et n'ont pas l'habitude de raisonner leurs croyances. Ils restent interdits devant le plus simple des «pourquoi», le plus élémentaire des «comment cela se fait-il». Il a donc fallu, pour répondre au besoin d'ordre et de clarté de nos esprits européens, en mettre un peu dans les idées que nous avons recueillies de ci de là. C'est ici surtout que nous avons évité le plus qu'il nous a été possible tout esprit de système, et nous pouvons dire qu'il n'est rien de nous dans les deux chapitres qui vont suivre. Nous avons écouté les indigènes, provoqué des explications, posé des questions et pris note des réponses. Ce sont ces réponses que nous allons transcrire. Mais, évidemment, les réponses n'ont pas toujours concordées et il nous a fallu faire un choix basé sur les témoignages qui nous ont paru les plus dignes de foi. Pourtant les divergences n'ont jamais porté que sur des détails et, dans l'ensemble, elles ont toujours été les mêmes sur les points les plus importants. D'ailleurs, quand il y aura un doute sérieux nous aurons soin de l'indiquer.

Comment le lieutenant MARC a-t-il pu écrire: «Nous ne pensons pas que les Mossi aient l'idée d'un Dieu unique et créateur[1]?» L'idée de Dieu est partout chez ce peuple. Le plus simple des souhaits, le moindre des bonjours, renferme le nom de Dieu. Quand quelqu'un s'en va, le partant et ceux qui restent se saluent réciproquement ainsi: «Que Dieu m'accompagne», dit le partant; «Que Dieu te reconduise! Que Dieu te fasse retourner! Que Dieu te lève la jambe!» répondent ceux qui restent.

Celui qui reçoit un cadeau, dit à son bienfaiteur: «Que Dieu vous garde! Que Dieu vous fasse rester longtemps (sur la terre)! Que Dieu vous récompense! Que Dieu vous le rende!»

Un ami a-t-il revêtu un habit neuf, c'est une nouvelle occasion de le saluer: «Dieu fasse que tu le retires usé!»

S'il mange, on lui dira: «Dieu fasse que cela te soit profitable!»

S'il vient annoncer la naissance d'un héritier: «Que Dieu te donne de le suspendre à ton epaule», lui dira-t-on.

Et s'il s'en va pour revenir dans la journée: «Que Dieu nous redonne le plaisir de causer ensemble!»

A la fin du jour, les Mossi se saluent réciproquement: «Que Dieu vous donne le lendemain!» A quoi il faut répondre: «Que Dieu vous ouvre un bon demain!»

Un jour de fête, tous les gens qui se rencontrent se disent: «Que Dieu vous fasse parvenir à l'an prochain! Que Dieu vous fasse voir une année nouvelle!»

Dieu donne la santé, l'entretient et la rend aux malades:

«Dieu te donne la santé!» se souhaitent-ils, Que Dieu t'augmente la santé! Que Dieu te rende heureux!»

A quelqu'un qui est en danger ou malade, on dit:

«Que Dieu te sauve du malheur! Que Dieu te rende la santé! Que Dieu vienne avec la santé et une brise rafraîchissante!»

Quand la mort a frappé quelqu'un, on offre ainsi ses condoléances à la famille:

«Que Dieu entrave le jour (de la mort)!»

A un cavalier qui arrive on dit: «Que Dieu te fasse descendre!» et à celui qui vient de perdre un cheval: «Que Dieu te rende un piquet!» (car on n'a de piquet pour attacher un cheval, que si on possède la bête elle-même.)

Si on demande à un Mossi: «Qui donne la puissance aux remèdes et aux amulettes?», il répond infailliblement que c'est Dieu.

Dieu sait tout, on le prend à témoin de ce que l'on dit: «De par Dieu!» Injustement condamné, le Mossi en appelle à Dieu: «Dieu connait mon intérieur,

---

[1] MARC, Au pays des Mossi, p. 158.

dit-il, et il sait qu'il n'y a rien dedans!» — et si on ne sait pas le nom d'une chose, on ajoute aussitôt: «Mais Dieu le connaît.»

Dieu dispose de tout, et les Mossi se disent fréquement entre eux:

«Si Dieu me donne le jour d'après demain, je viendrai. Il allait tomber mais Dieu l'a secouru. Nous causons dès le matin et nous sollicitons la protection de Dieu.»

Dieu est partout, il est impossible de se cacher de Dieu. Dieu nous conserve, et un naba qui n'a aucune teinture d'islamisme, me disait: «Nous sommes dans la main de Dieu, nous sommes les brebis de Dieu qui nous garde, comme mon fils garde les miennes.» On croirait entendre un écho de l'Evangile: «Je suis le bon pasteur.» Et il nous serait facile de multiplier les exemples. Dieu est supérieur a tous les génies, c'est lui qui les a créés, c'est lui qui les envoie aux hommes, mais ce n'est pas lui qui les rend méchants. Pourtant Dieu peut nous aider à nous venger de nos ennemis et son nom sacré revient souvent dans les imprécations: «Que Dieu te suspende au cou le sac de la pauvreté! Que Dieu te détruise! Qu'il le détruise entièrement! Que Dieu le brûle dans le feu[1]!» Il n'est pas de sacrifice qui ne renferme une imprécation contre les ennemis.

Cependant aucune prière n'est adressée directement à Dieu en dehors des souhaits; aucun sacrifice qui lui soit offert sans qu'en même temps ne s'y mêle le nom des génies. Pourtant, nous le verrons au chapitre suivant, c'est surtout Dieu qui est invoqué dans la formule sacrificatoire, et quand le sacrifice est terminé tous ceux qui y ont participé, saluent le sacrificateur par cette formule: «Que Dieu accepte ton sacrifice; Que Dieu le reçoive!»

Mais ce Dieu quel est-il? Est-il un ou plusieurs? A-t-il un corps ou est-il esprit? Où réside-t-il? Autant de questions qu'un Mossi ne s'est jamais posées et qui le laissent un moment interdit. «Dieu est-il un ou plusieurs?» — «Je ne sais pas», telle est la réponse ordinaire. Si on insiste, ils disent qu'il est un. Mais une difficulté se présente: «Pourquoi alors, dans les sacrifices, faites-vous appel à Dieu roi-mâle, et à Dieu roi-femelle?» Nouveau: «Je ne sais pas, c'est comme cela que disaient nos pères.»

Dieu a-t-il un corps? Oui, assurément, car une intelligence très exercée peut seule concevoir un pur esprit. Mais comment est ce corps? «Je ne sais pas.» — Où est Dieu? — Partout. — Mais encore, occupe-t-il un lieu quelconque? — Dieu c'est le soleil.

Identifient-ils Dieu et le soleil? Il nous est difficile de nous faire une opinion ferme à ce sujet. Il semble bien qu'ils admettent l'identité, et dans les sacrifices — car enfin la formule du sacrifice doit bien correspondre à leur concept de la divinité — dans les sacrifices, ils offrent à Dieu de l'eau pour son lever et versent l'eau à l'est, pour son coucher, et la versent à l'ouest. Dans une dispute, le plus faible dira: «Dieu m'est témoin que je ne t'ai rien fait, Dieu te le rendra», et il montre le soleil. Les sacrifices ne sont jamais offerts au milieu de la nuit; mais il est vrai qu'ils ne le sont pas non plus au milieu du jour et peuvent l'être le soir, même quand le soleil a déjà disparu à l'horizont. Pourtant, les noms de Dieu et du soleil sont différents. Wendé est le nom propre de Dieu; Wennam indique la puissance de Dieu (Wendé nam) et aucun de ces noms n'a de pluriel, ce qui est un indice de la croyance à l'unité de Dieu. Le soleil se dira Winniga et à midi, quand il brûle, Wintoro (winniga toro). Mais il faut ajouter que, parfois, le soleil se dira Na Wendé — Dieu-roi. La nuit, Dieu est censé rentrer dans sa case puisque le soleil n'est plus visible et cependant il continue à être partout et «si tu commets une faute la nuit, Dieu le sait». Un Mossi dira fort bien quand le soleil est à son midi: «C'est Dieu qui fait que le soleil fait mal aujourd'hui.» Il semble donc bien qu'en pratique ils établissent une distinction entre Dieu et le soleil: le soleil est sa demeure mais n'est pas lui. Mais que d'incohérences en tout cela!

---

Nous devons à l'obligeance du R. P. THUEUX, l'Européen qui, sans contredit, possède le mieux la langue Mossi, la communication de toutes ces formules. Qu'il nous soit permis de l'en remercier ici très sincèrement.

Les phénomènes de la nature sont parfois attribués à Dieu. La foudre tue ceux qui ont fait le mal, tue l'animal mal acquis par fraude ou volé, et c'est Dieu qui l'envoie pour punir . . . à moins que ce ne soit un ennemi. Les amulettes, les fétiches, tirent leur puissance de Dieu, avons-nous dit, et il en est de même des remèdes véritables. La maladie est généralement attribuée à un génie malfaisant qu'il faut apaiser, mais parfois aussi à Dieu. Il ne semble pas que les Mossi donnent une âme aux êtres inanimés, seuls les êtres animés en ont une, plantes, animaux, hommes. Mais le plus souvent les phénomènes inexplicables ou anormaux sont attribués aux génies, résidant dans un être inanimé.

Il y a trois espèces de génies: les tisé (pluriel de tiga, arbre), qui résident exclusivement dans les arbres; les kikirsi (pluriel de kikiriga), qui sont les génies proprement dits, et les tangamma (pluriel de tangandé), qui sont les génies protecteurs des villages et résident dans le bois sacré.

Les tisé résident donc dans les arbres, de préférence dans ceux qui entourent les cases; il y en a cependant dans la brousse. Ils affectionnent spécialement le tamarinier, le cailcédrat, mais n'aiment pas du tout le doubalé qui est un réceptacle de chauves-souris. La nuit, ils quittent leur habitacle et vont se promener dans les cases. Ils ont un corps à forme humaine, mais imperceptible au commun des mortels. Ils sont beaucoup plus grands et plus gros que les hommes; ils sont noirs et marchent les pieds en l'air et la tête en bas.

La nuit donc, ils se promènent, et leur présence est révélée par ce fait que l'entrée de la case est assombrie: ils sont si gros qu'ils interceptent la lumière. Malheur à celui qui n'a pas d'eau dans sa soukala, qui n'a pas laissé de bière de mil! Le tiga qui s'est présenté et qui n'a rien trouvé, lui jettera des boutons par tout le corps, c'est la maladie propre aux tisé. Mais heureux sera-t-il s'il s'en tire à aussi bon compte; car les tisé peuvent lui infliger beaucoup d'autres maladies, voire même le tuer. Si le tiga trouve le moyen de toucher quelqu'un, l'endroit touché enfle; si on fait du bruit dans la brousse sous certains gros arbres, les joues enflent. Les tisé parlent, même pendant le jour; ce sont eux qui causent quand le vent agite les feuilles. Nous avions distribué tout autour de nous des graines de papayers. Elles avaient levé et parfaitement poussé; les fruits mûrissaient déjà. Un beau jour, plus de papayers à Koupéla! Le naba avait déclaré que c'était un arbre qui parle et qu'il donnerait des maladies à qui en aurait dans sa soukala . . . et les papayers avaient été coupés!

Heureusement, on peut se défendre des tisé. D'abord, on peut couper les arbres qui leur servent d'abri, ils iront ailleurs, et de très beaux arbres disparaissent ainsi dans les villages. Ils peuvent aussi être apaisés par des sacrifices. Donc culte des arbres, dendrolatrie! Oh que non! Les Mossi distinguent fort bien l'arbre et le génie qui l'habite, et sacrifient au génie. Parfois aussi, l'arbre a été planté sur la tombe d'un vieillard, fondateur du village et on sacrifie aux mânes de l'ancêtre, au pied de l'arbre. Enfin, il y a des fétiches plus puissants que les tisé. Il suffit pour cela de connaître les racines et les écorces que n'aiment pas les tisé, de les mettre à infuser dans l'eau et de déposer la marmite à la porte des cases. Le tiga qui voit ce fétiche se sauve infailliblement. Certains Peuls ont, paraît-il, le pouvoir de distinguer entre les arbres habités par des génies et ceux qui ne le sont pas et de tuer ceux qui servent de refuge aux génies, rien qu'en frottant le sus-dit arbre avec du beurre! Mais il y a la manière de s'en prendre.

Les kikirsi sont de petits diablotins tout noirs ou tout rouges, hauts de quelques centimètres seulement. Leur corps a la forme du notre mais est bien plus agile et plus subtil, c'est quelque chose d'éthéré, d'impalpable, seuls les sorciers peuvent les voir. Ils les appellent en sifflotant ou en agitant une calebasse d'une forme spéciale, représentant un manche terminé par une boule. La calebasse est séchée sans être ouverte et les graines sont réunies dans la boule. En agitant son instrument, le sorcier fait du bruit et les kikirsi accourent en chantant.

Il y a des kikirsi bons et des kikirsi méchants et les bons ne font du mal que si on les y force, par exemple si on met du piment dans leur sauce. Ils ont horreur du piment, par contre ils aiment beaucoup le miel et toute bonne ménagère qui veut conserver son miel, a bien soin de le couvrir de piment, sinon les kikirsi viendraient le manger. Ils raffolent du sésame et les gateaux de mil (samsa) font leurs délices, et c'est pourquoi toute faiseuse de ces gateaux leur en offre quelques uns. Quiconque en mange, en se promenant, a soin d'en laisser tomber quelques miettes. Au contraire, ils ne boivent pas de bière de mil fermentée, il faut la leur offrir avant de mettre la levure (da'nodo). Ils ont donc leurs goûts tout comme le commun des mortels. Ils ont leurs haines, leurs jalousies et vont parfois jusqu'à s'entre tuer. De sexe différent, dit-on, ils s'unissent en mariage et procréent. Ils ont même la spécialité de mettre toujours au monde des jumeaux, et c'est purquoi les jumeaux portent leur nom et leur sont consacrés; on croit que des génies résident en eux.

La naissance des jumeaux crée à leur mère beaucoup d'embarras et au temps jadis, ils étaient parfois supprimés tous les deux, parfois un seul était tué. Quand donc une femme a donné le jour à des jumeaux, elle construit, à la porte de sa case, une petite case minuscule, c'est là qu'iront se réfugier les génies qui habitent ses enfants. Troisfois par an si ses moyens le lui permettent, au printemps, à l'hiver et au milieu de la saison des pluies ou tout au moins une fois l'an, il leur faut offrir une pintade en sacrifice, car la pintade est le sacrifice exclusivement réservé aux kikirsi eux-mêmes. Il faudra aussi ce jour là leur offrir leur mets préférés et donc acheter du miel, du sésame, des gateaux de mil et faire de la bière et réserver une cruche dans laquelle on n'a pas mis du levain, cuire la bouillie de mil et surtout ne pas mettre de piment dans la sauce, sinon gare, le mari la femme ou les enfants seraient atteints d'une maladie d'yeux terrible car telle est la maladie que les kikirsi ont le pouvoir de donner aux mortels.

Quand ces enfants sont en bas âge, ils ne peuvent porter que le kankabra, habit fait de fils noirs et d'autres presque blancs-mélangés, c'est l'habit distinctif des kikirsi. Heureusement, plus tard, ils pourront s'habiller comme ils voudront. Ouand la mère vient à disparaître, ce sont les jumeaux eux-mêmes qui offrent les sacrifices, ce sont eux qui construisent la petite case qui sert de demeure à leur petit génie. Le dernier-né est considéré comme l'aîné. Tous les deux portent le même bracelet, ils partagent tout ce qu'on leur donne et il est de bon ton de ne pas faire de cadeau à l'un sans donner la même chose à l'autre. Ces contumes d'ailleurs se retrouvent de l'Afrique en pays bambaras jusqu'au Tanganika.

Mais revenons aux kikirsi eux-mêmes. Il y en a partout. Dans la brousse, ils affectionnent les petites termitières et les grosses; les endroits découverts; il y en a autour des villages, il y a des mares consacrées aux kikirsi, des puits qui leur appartiennent. Il y a des génies préposés à la garde de chaque champ, et avant de semer, comme avant de couper le mil, le maître du champ sacrifie une poule en son honneur, sur une pierre, au milieu du champ. Par contre, le kikiriga doit écarter tout ce qui peut nuire à la récolte, oiseaux, chenilles, voleurs et le reste et remplir de grains un grenier grand comme celui que l'on déssine à terre avec de la cendre au moment de la récolte, et si vraiment il a bien rempli son office, il aura encore une poule quand tout le grain sera réuni en tas. Les femmes enceintes sont sous la protection d'un kikiriga spécial et les petits enfants ont le leur qui écarte d'eux les maladies et les dangers. Ne disons-nous pas qu'il y a une Providence spéciale pour les tous petits?

D'ailleurs chacun a son kikiriga. Les uns l'ont méchant, ce sont ceux qui se disputent avec tout le monde, ceux auxquels rien ne réussit, ceux dont les animaux meurent, car ce sont souvent les kikirsi qui tuent chèvres, moutons, chevaux, qui meurent de maladie. D'autres ont un bon kikiriga, pour ceux là tout prospère; ils sont nés sous une bonne étoile. Ce sont les gens sympathiques, doux, qui ont un bon caractère, ceux qui s'enrichissent et ont beaucoup d'enfants. Pour dormir, un Mossi appuie sa tête dans sa case sur une pierre ou un petit tertre en terre battue. C'est le lieu où réside son kikiriga, et de temps à autre, surtout quand il éprouve le besoin d'une protection spéciale, il lui offre une pintade et parfois même une chèvre, en sacrifice, à charge à lui désormais de chasser ceux de ses compagnons qui voudraient nuire à son protégé, d'écarter de lui toute maladie, tout danger.

Le tangandé est un génie, revêtant la forme d'un animal et considéré comme protecteur d'un village, et, par extension, le lieu de sa résidence, le bois sacré, car le plus souvent cet animal-protecteur réside dans un bosquet, mais parfois dans une simple pierre ou même dans un endroit découvert. Le tangandé peut être un caiman, un boa, une panthère, une tortue, une biche, un lièvre, etc. C'est un animal sacré pour tout le village, il est défendu de le tuer dans le bois sacré, mais on peut le tuer ailleurs, même à peu de distance du bois sacré.

Le tangandé est un génie parce qu'il protège les hommes, envoie ses serviteurs qui accompagnent les gens du village en voyage, s'ils l'ont prié. Sans cesse, les indigènes recourent à sa protection; sans cesse, le sorcier consulté renvoie au tangandé pour obtenir la guérison et lui demander de délivrer l'âme captive d'un mauvais sorcier; si quelqu'un meurt, on lui sacrifie encore et on lui demande de protéger les survivants et d'écarter toute maladie. Quand les âmes quittent le corps pendant le sommeil, elles vont souvent au bois sacré. Tout le monde peut sacrifier au tangandé et dans le tangandé, mais le naba sacrifie plus que tout autre, et le jour de la fête des morts (basra), il y sacrifie toujours et généralement les anciens du village l'accompagnent.

Un village peut avoir plusieurs tangandé, mais l'animal-protecteur ou les animaux protecteurs, car ils sont le plus souvent deux, sont les mêmes dans tous les bois sacrés répétés autant de fois qu'il y a de tangandé. On ne peut rien prendre dans le bois sacré, tout y est sacré. Défense d'y couper du bois, de ramasser même le bois mort qui est tombé de lui-même. A fortiori ne peut-on pas mettre le feu aux herbes sèches, même aux environs du bois sacré; mais si, les précautions ayant été prises, le feu se communique au bois sacré, il n'y a rien à faire, les gens du village n'y sont pour rien. Par contre, on empêchera tout étranger de prendre quoi que ce soit dans le bois sacré, fallut-il pour cela employer la force. Mais si c'est un puissant auquel il est impossible de résister, après son départ, des sacrifices expiatoires seront offerts.

Le tangandé est donc un animal-protecteur, et pourtant, certains tangamma ont mauvais caractère. Si on leur a manqué de quelque manière que ce soit, ils se vengent en envoyant des maladies au coupable. Si un des sorciers qui mangent les âmes (seuya), lui offre des cadeaux, le tangandé lui viendra en aide et refusera de rendre l'âme qui lui aura éte confiée, à moins qu'on ne lui offre des cadeaux plus importants. On peut prier un tangandé et lui faire un vœu, par exemple lui promettre un bouc ou un mouton s'il tue l'ennemi qui lui est désigné. Le bouc est acheté et attend que l'ennemi soit mort. Le tangandé prend parfois son temps et fait attendre plusieurs années; on va le gourmander, lui dire de se hâter, et à la fin, il se décide à faire disparaître celui qui lui a été indiqué. Le bouc est alors immolé.

Tous les tangamma viennent, disent d'aucuns, de la région de Fadá N'Gourma, où se trouve le père de tous les tangamma. C'est au sorcier à indiquer quel est le tangandé et le lieu de sa résidence. Un village venait de se fonder. Les vieillards avaient trouvé un terrain favorable pour les cultures, à proximité d'un marigot; ils avaient construit leurs cases. Au début de l'hivernage, quand l'époque des semailles fut arrivée, ils se partagèrent la brousse avoisinante et se mirent en devoir de préparer leurs champs. Un jour, une panthère, délegée de son répaire, prit la fuite devant eux et se réfugia dans un fourré. Appeler les gens, entourer le fourré, le fouiller de toute part fut bientôt fait. De panthère point. Le lendemain, la même scène se reproduisit au même endroit et cela par trois fois, et toujours il fut impossible de découvrir la panthère, devenue tout à coup invisible. Les anciens intrigués, en bons Mossi, allèrent consulter le sorcier, qui leur déclara que la panthère est leur tangandé et le fourré où elle s'est réfugiée, son bois sacré. Il indiqua de plus les sacrifices à faire.

Mais tandis que coulait le sang des victimes, les enfants aperçurent une tortue qui se dirigeait vers le bois sacré et voulurent la saisir. Les anciens les en empêchèrent et de nouveau recoururent aux lumières du sorcier pour savoir ce que cela pouvait bien signifier: une tortue entrant dans le bois sacré pendant le sacrifice au tangandé! Et le sorcier rendit cet oracle: la tortue est l'enfant du tangandé et, par conséquent, devient sacrée pour votre village. Et depuis cet époque, ce village a pour tangandé la panthère et la tortue.

Le tangandé peut à la vérité être une pierre, un arbre qui sont considérés comme protecteur du village, mais le cas est plus rare. On peut, peut-être, considérer le tangandé comme une sorte de totem du village. Si on définit le totem avec SALOMON REINACH: «L'animal, le végétal, ou plus rarement le minéral ou le corps céleste en qui le clan reconnaît un ancêtre, un protecteur et un signe de ralliement[1]», on voit que c'est généralement un animal, un animal-protecteur qui est considéré comme tangandé, mais il n'est pas considéré comme un ancêtre, il ne sert pas de signe de ralliement car plusieurs villages peuvent avoir le même tangandé, beaucoup ont le caïman et le boa, sans se considérer pour cela comme liés entre eux.

Monseigneur LE ROY de son côté définit ainsi le totémisme: «Une institution consistant essentiellement en un pacte magique, représentant et formant une parenté d'ordre mystique et supranaturel, par lequel, sous la forme visible d'un animal, et exceptionnellement, d'un corps végétal, minéral ou astral, un esprit invisible est associé à un individu, à une famille, à un clan, à une tribu, à une société secrète en vue d'une réciprocité de services[2]». Cette définition ne correspond pas non plus dans tous ses détails avec le tangandé parce que le village seul peut avoir un tangandé, et il ne semble pas qu'il y ait un pacte magique quelconque à moins que les sacrifices offerts ne soient considérés comme pacte magique, ce qui ne semble pas être. Jamais l'animal-tangandé n'est offert en sacrifice, il n'y a pas d'initiation spéciale.

Ce qui, chez les Mossi, se rapproche le plus du totem, semble-t-il, c'est la conception qu'ils se font de l'âme humaine et encore n'est-ce pas le totem proprement dit, tel que les auteurs cités l'entendent. Chaque homme, en effet, a une âme, une âme qui subsiste après la mort et prend le nom de kyma, tandis que tant qu'elle vit, elle s'appelle siga. Elle prend le nom de toullé à

[1] SALOMON REINACH, Cultes mythes et religion, p. 81.
[2] Mgr. LE ROY, La religion des primitifs, p. 132.

2: Mangin FA28 Mossi

Ouagadougou, toundo à Koupéla, peu avant la mort; mais siga, toundo, kyma, sont une seule et même chose, un seul et même principe. Cette âme, d'après les Mossi, est un animal, invisible bien entendu, un serpent, un caïman, une biche, un lièvre. L'âme est apparentée à cet animal, elle est de sa famille, si bien que tuer un serpent ou un caïman dans un village dont l'âme des habitants est un serpent ou un caïman, c'est tuer un habitant de ce village car tout individu apparenté au serpent a dans ce village un serpent qui le représente, et il mourra quand son animal-âme mourra.

Cependant, et voilà qui va contre les définitions du totémisme, il n'attend de cet animal aucun secours, il ne lui offre jamais de sacrifice, jamais il ne le tue lui-même pour renouveler le pacte d'union. Il est défendu à celui dont l'âme est un caïman, de tuer un caïman dans son village, mais il peut le tuer ailleurs bien qu'il ne puisse jamais en manger, tandis qu'il peut tuer l'animal tangandé, pourvu que ce soit en dehors du tangandé, et il peut toujours en manger. Certains, rencontrant mort près de leur village l'animal-âme de leur famille, lui rendent les honneurs funèbres, pleurent, et se lamentent, l'enterrent comme l'un des leurs, mais ne lui font aucun présent, ne font pas son kouré; la plupart se contentent de le couvrir de terre. Les plus répandus sont une sorte de couleuvre (bosombodro) et le caïman. Plusieurs familles peuvent avoir le même animal-âme, et les mariages, bien qu'exogamiques, ne sont pas interdits entre ces individus.

L'âme peut quitter le corps, et en fait le quitte souvent, surtout pendant la nuit. Des enfants se sont-ils bien amusés en un lieu, s'est-on plu chez un individu, l'âme y retourne la nuit, et c'est alors qu'il faut tout craindre des sorciers qui peuvent la saisir à l'improviste et le malheureux possesseur de cette âme mourra.

L'âme peut avertir en songe son propriétaire d'un danger qui le menace. Un jour, un indigène, dont on m'a cité le village et le nom, rêva que son ennemi lui offrait une noix de kola. A son réveil, grand émoi, car c'est le signe que l'âme emploie pour indiquer que l'on est menacé de mort par un ennemi. Dans une telle occurrence, il ne reste plus qu'un remède, c'est d'aller déposer quelques cauris sur une fourmilière de grosses fourmis rouges, afin qu'elles détournent ce malheur. Notre homme se dirigea aussitôt vers la fourmilière la plus rapprochée. Hélas, un serpent le mordit en route et il mourut avant d'avoir pu faire son offrande aux fourmis! De tels faits frappent évidemment beaucoup l'imagination des indigènes qui font immédiatement le sophisme: Post hoc, propter hoc. Il suffit de quelques faits de ce genre, et l'on m'en a cité d'innombrables, pour les ancrer à tout jamais dans leurs superstitions.

Si l'âme quitte le corps, il est donc possible de la saisir et de l'empêcher de rentrer dans son corps, et c'est pourquoi nos Noirs n'aiment pas à être photographiés. Ils disent que dans la boîte est un mauvais génie qui prend l'âme et la mange. La preuve c'est qu'ensuite on peut voir sur le papier l'individu ainsi saisi.

L'homme est malade quand son âme ne peut plus revenir dans son corps parce qu'elle est retenue prisonnière par un mauvais sorcier ou par un kikiriga, et il faut alors offrir bien des sacrifices pour obtenir sa délivrance et son retour. C'est le tangandé qui est le plus souvent supplié dans ce cas parce qu'il est plus fort que tous les autres génies et que les sorciers mêmes et qu'il est, de par sa fonction, le protecteur du village.

Mais il arrive que l'âme a été si bien cachée, que le tangandé n'arrive pas à la découvrir, le sorcier l'a mangée de suite ou même le tangandé est de connivence ou bien ce sont les mânes qui appellent le malade ou enfin c'est Dieu qui a envoyé la maladie. Il n'y a plus rien à faire, l'homme meurt. Son âme change désormais de nom et s'appelle kyma. Elle quitte le corps au moment même de la mort. Si elle a été prise par un sorcier ou par les mânes d'un ancêtre, elle quitte le bois sacré où elle est détenue au moment de la mort et se rend au lieu des âmes d'où elle reviendra à la tombe chaque fois qu'on lui offrira des sacrifices, d'où elle reviendra encore quand elle voudra affliger les survivants de quelque maladie.

Est-elle punie du mal qu'elle a commis ici-bas et récompensée du bien qu'elle a fait? Les opinions sont partagées. Certains disent que si on fait l'aumône à un pauvre — et les Mossi la font fréquemment —, si l'on est généreux et hospitalier, Dieu reçoit tout ce que l'on donne et le met de côté et le rend à l'âme au moment de sa séparation d'avec le corps, d'où le souhait de remerciement: «Que Dieu te le rende!» Si le défunt a mené une mauvaise vie, s'il était batailleur, voleur, s'il a tué, il est condamné à passer sur des charbons ardents pour arriver jusqu'à Dieu; ou bien, si c'est un assassin, il ne peut s'approcher de Dieu qu'après avoir bu tout le sang qu'il a répandu et que Dieu a conservé pour le lui faire boire. Les grands coupables sont arrêtés par la cime des arbres et ne parviennent jamais au lieu des âmes. Mais il faut avouer que la plupart des Mossi ne se soucient guère des peines qui peuvent les attendre dans l'autre vie ou en nient l'existence.

Les âmes vont à Bourtenga, au «lieu de rassemblement des âmes», d'après l'étymologie du mot, lieu dont la situation géographique reste indéterminée, ou à Pilimpikou, montagne située dans le Kipirsi. Là, leur seule occupation est d'aller au marché la nuit, et c'est pourquoi, au jour de l'enterrement, on donne au mort des cauris pour qu'il puisse acheter de la bière de mil, des habits pour qu'il n'ait pas l'air d'un gueux.

Les âmes sont blanches mais pour tout le reste ressemblent aux hommes, bien que plus agiles et pouvant se transporter sans effort et avec une très grande rapidité d'un lieu dans un autre. Elles font tout à l'envers, mangent avec la main gauche et font avec cette main tout ce que nous faisons avec la droite et c'est pourquoi le cadavre est lavé avec la main gauche. Elles mettent leurs habits à l'envers et la poche du pagne en dedans; elles portent le fer de la lance en bas, marchent à reculons, dit-on, par ce que leurs yeux sont derrière la tête, et c'est pourquoi la kourita qui représente le mort, porte tout à l'envers.

L'âme de ce qui lui est offert sur la terre, va les rejoindre: poules, moutons, chèvres, bœufs etc., et ils peuvent faire bombance et appeler leurs amis et réunir leur parenté car on se retrouve là-haut, et si les nabas ne le sont plus, du moins ceux qui sur terre leur furent soumis, reconstituent leur cour, et c'est pourquoi encore on dit que les parents viennent chercher leurs enfants, les nabas leurs pages et leurs épouses favorites, les amis, leurs amis, à moins que les vivants ne les traitent fort bien et ne leur donnent force victuailles.

En effet, les âmes des défunts reviennent sur la terre recevoir les présents qui leur sont offerts, boire le sang des victimes qui sont immolées en leur honneur, et la bière de mil qui leur a été préparée au jour de la fête annuelle des morts (basra). C'est pourquoi tout Mossi fidèle à ces coutumes ne boira jamais de bière de mil sans en avoir d'abord versé un peu à terre; il verse encore ce qui reste au fond de la calebasse afin que les âmes puissent se réjouir avec lui. Et c'est un grand honneur qu'un naba fait à un ancien quand il lui dit de prendre un côté de la calebasse et de verser à terre avec lui.

Il ne faut pas rire des âmes des défunts et de leur venue sur la terre. Si vous doutez de leur retour, écoutez ce que me racontait un vieux naba: «Un jour, j'étais allé rendre visite à un naba, mon voisin et mon ami; nous nous étions donnés rendez-vous chez lui avec un autre chef des environs. Il nous reçut fort bien et la journée avait été des plus agréables. Nous reposions, la nuit, sous l'abri de sa soukala quand nous fûmes soudain réveillés par un bruit de grelots et de galop de chevaux. Le lendemain, nous quittâmes notre hôte. A peine nous étions partis, qu'il tomba malade. Huit jours plus tard, il n'était plus. Les âmes étaient venues le chercher. Oh! père, ne ris pas des âmes des défunts!» Et le bon vieux tremblait d'émotion. C'est qu'ils y croient, nos Mossi, à toutes ces histoires de revenants, ils y croient fermement.

Mais les âmes se réincarnent-elles? Pour les petits enfants morts avant l'âge de raison, il est admis que c'est eux qui reviennent dans la personne du premier enfant que la mère met au monde. C'est pourquoi, surtout si la même femme a perdu plusieurs enfants de suite, l'enfant, dès sa naissance, est marqué de signes distinctifs, spécialement de tatouages sur le ventre et sur le bas du dos; parfois, s'il meurt, on lui coupe un morceau du pavillon de l'oreille, ou on lui casse la phalange d'un doigt de la main ou du pied: et, paraît-il, celui qui naît ensuite, porte les mêmes marques, mais ce dont on n'a pu me citer aucun exemple actuellement en vie. Souvent après la mort de son bébé, la mère quitte la case où il est mort. Une vieille, le soir, répand des cendres devant la porte, et le lendemain matin, si on trouve des traces de petits pieds, c'est que l'enfant est revenu et désire rentrer dans le sein de sa mère.

Mais en dehors des petits enfants, la reviviscence n'est pas admise, même pour les jeunes gens non mariés. Ils restent au lieu des âmes des années et des années, sans qu'il soit possible d'en fixer le nombre, et aucune distinction n'est faite, de ce chef, entre les riches et les pauvres, les puissants et leurs sujets.

Les suicidés, maudits dans leur mort, le sont encore dans leur âme qui n'a généralement pas droit aux cérémonies funèbres et errent par le monde sans nuire à personne mais sans pouvoir trouver de repos.

La morale indigène est réduite à sa plus simple expression. Est mal tout ce qui nuit à autrui. Pense en ton cœur et désire tout ce que tu veux, pourvu que tu ne nuises pas au prochain, il n'y a pas de faute. Si la fornication et l'adultère sont des fautes, c'est quelles renferment une atteinte à la justice. Je ne parle pas des fautes contre nature qui sont à peu près inconnues. Si le vol, l'assassinat, si même les injures, les coups et les blessures sont punies, c'est en tant qu'injustice. La calomnie est en horreur chez eux, et dire de quelqu'un qu'il a calomnié, c'est lui faire une très grosse injure. Une injure contre sa mère est une de celles qu'un Mossi ne pardonne pas parce que c'est nuire à l'honneur de la famille et lui causer un préjudice. Il est donc nécessaire de veiller à ne pas manquer à la justice dans les relations qu'on peut avoir avec les indigènes; ils y sont très sensibles, et s'ils reçoivent sans murmurer une punition juste parce que le délit est prouvé, ils repoussent avec indignation toute accusation dont on ne peut pas faire la preuve, même d'ailleurs si l'accusation est fondée.

* * *

Mais à côté de cette morale générale, que de choses sont interdites non point parce qu'elles sont mauvaises, mais parce qu'elles entraînent des conséquences funestes! Les tabous (kisgou pour les Mossi, de kisé «défendre») sont presque innombrables. Ils peuvent se diviser en deux classes: les kisgou perpétuels, qui atteignent toute la famille; et les kisgou personnels et transitoires.

Les premiers consistent généralement dans l'interdiction de manger tel ou tel animal, ou de faire telle ou telle chose. C'est ainsi qu'il est défendu à certains nabas de se rencontrer, de se voir, et s'ils manquent à cette défense, l'un d'eux mourra dans l'année. Cette défense est facile à expliquer, si on se rappelle les guerres incessantes que se faisaient les grands chefs et la crainte qu'ils avaient d'être empoisonnés ou supprimés d'une manière quelconque par un de leurs adversaires. Ainsi encore, parti en guerre sur un fringant coursier, un Mossi a-t-il été obligé de fuir. Les ennemis allaient le saisir et il n'a dû son salut, le brave, qu'à la vitesse de son cheval. Rentré chez lui, il décrète que le cheval est un animal sacré pour lui et ses descendants et que, désormais, tous ses enfants et leurs enfants ont à bien traiter le cheval et à ne pas en manger la viande sous peine de devenir aveugles ou lépreux. Là d'ailleurs se borne l'interdiction. Le cheval n'est pas considéré comme un animal protecteur, aucun sacrifice ne lui est offert, et les Mossi ne l'appelleront ni tangandé, animal protecteur du village, ni siga, animal âme, mais kisgou, défense.

Le kisgou atteint parfois seulement certains membres de la famille. Un père a mangé du chien et a été malade et cela à deux ou trois reprises différentes; il consulte le sorcier et celui-ci déclare que le chien lui est interdit à lui et à ses enfants mais non aux autres membres de la famille. Ou bien encore, celui qui est né chez les Peuls, auxquels le chien est interdit, peut avoir le chien pour kisgou. Parfois, le kisgou n'atteint que lui, son fils, et son petit-fils, mais n'atteint pas ses autres descendants, parce que les premiers suivront son âme à lui, tandis que l'âme de ses autres descendants suivront l'âme de sa mère donc de leur arrière-grand'mère à qui le chien n'est pas interdit. Raison de sorcier contre laquelle il n'y a rien à dire.

Ce kisgou est le plus astreignant mais il peut cesser si celui qui l'a établi offre les sacrifices nécessaires ou par la volonté d'un des descendants qui s'en affranchit et en affranchit ses enfants. C'est ainsi que la famille du Saman-Naba, premier ministre à Koupéla, a le lièvre pour kisgou. Mais voyant ses frères et son fils chrétiens manger impunément du lièvre sans devenir ni aveugles ni lépreux, le naba s'est mis à en manger et ne s'en porte pas plus mal.

Les parents mettent les enfants au courant des différents kisgou de la famille et leur inspirent une crainte salutaire afin qu'ils n'en mangent pas. Si l'on vient à manquer involontairement à son kisgou, on peut tomber malade et le sorcier consulté dira ce qu'il y a à faire et quel sacrifice offrir au tangandé pour obtenir son pardon. Mais si on a fait exprès, s'il y a eu mépris, pas de pardon possible.

La seconde espèce de kisgou est toute particulière et personnelle. Ce sont les nombreuses défenses que le sorcier impose à un malade. Telle viande, telle sauce, lui est interdite, il ne peut boire de l'eau dans laquelle a été délayée de la farine de mil, il ne peut manger de gâteaux de mil ou de haricots. C'est ainsi qu'un pauvre enfant rachitique et atteint d'une maladie de cœur, s'est vu défendre ainsi successivement à peu près tout ce qui se mange. Ses parents avaient toutes les peines du monde pour trouver la nourriture qui ne lui était pas interdite, et finalement, il est mort d'inanition. Tous ces kisgou cessent évidemment avec la maladie qui les a fait imposer, à moins que la maladie, étant incurable, ne dure toute la vie du malade.

Chapitre Deuxième. — Culte.

Si l'on définit la religion, avec Mgr. Le Roy[1]: «L'ensemble des croyances, des obligations et des pratiques par lesquelles l'homme reconnaît le monde surnaturel, s'acquitte envers lui de ses devoirs et lui demande son assistance», après avoir étudié, dans le chapitre précédent, les croyances des Mossi sur le monde surnaturel, il reste à voir comment ils correspondent avec ce monde surnaturel, comment ils s'acquittent de leurs devoirs envers lui et lui demandent son assistance. C'est toute la question des sacrifices et des fêtes.

Mais à côté de ce culte, reconnu et raisonnable, il y en a un autre, la magie, qui est «l'art de réduire à son service, par certaines pratiques occultes et d'aspect plus ou moins religieux, les forces de la nature, ou de capter les influences du monde invisible[2]» et c'est toute la question des superstitions, des amulettes, fétiches, grisgris; c'est surtout celle des sorciers et de leur façon d'agir.

Le sacrifice est l'acte principal du culte dans toutes les religions et généralement le sacrifice est sanglant. D'où qu'ils tiennent leur origine, les Mossi ne manquent pas à cette règle générale qui domine le genre humain tout entier. Ils font des sacrifices sanglants et communient au sacrifice par la manducation de la victime à tel point que ceux même qui n'ont pas vu immoler l'animal peuvent en manger et sont dits avoir offert le sacrifice avec le sacrificateur.

---

[1] Mgr. Le Roy, l. c., p. 49.
[2] Id., p. 331.

Pour un oui, pour un non, le sang des poules, des chèvres, des moutons, des bœufs, coule; parfois, celui des ânes, des chevaux et jadis même des hommes. Un Mossi n'entreprend rien sans sacrifice à son tangandé (animal-protecteur) ou à ses kikirsi (génies). S'il ne sait à qui sacrifier, il consulte le sorcier.

Quelqu'un de la famille est-il malade, un sacrifice ou plusieurs sont offerts; quelqu'un part-il en voyage, va-t-il à la chasse ou à la pêche, il offrira des sacrifices. Sacrifices encore quand deux hommes se sont disputés et veulent se réconcilier, sans compter tous les sacrifices qui doivent être offerts à la suite des rêves, de mauvais pressentiments, de dangers qui semblent menaçants. On sacrifie pour se rendre les kikirsi ou les mânes favorables, pour demander la réussite d'une affaire, pour accomplir un vœu, pour écarter une maladie, pour nuire à un ennemi, pour apaiser un ancêtre irrité, les tisé, les kikirsi, les tangamma courroucés. Il n'est guère de remède qui ne soit préparé sans sacrifice, et le sacrifice fait partie de tous les sortilèges, de toutes les préparations qui doivent nuire à un ennemi. On sacrifie avant les semailles, avant la moisson. avant de construire une case pour sa femme. On sacrifie pour tout et pour tous et presque à tout.

On sacrifie partout. Le bois sacré est le lieu le plus souvent choisi, avec la pierre qui sert de demeure au kikiriga protecteur du logis. Mais on peut sacrifier dans les champs, dans les endroits découverts où rien ne pousse, sur le chemin qui conduit au tangandé soit du village que l'on habite, soit de son propre village quand on a entendu dire qu'il demande un sacrifice et que l'on ne peut s'y rendre soi-même.

Tout homme peut sacrifier quand il a atteint l'âge de raison, et l'on voit parfois des enfants d'une dizaine d'années, offrir leur sacrifice aussi sérieusement que les plus âgés. Les femmes ne peuvent sacrifier elles-mêmes, elles doivent avoir recours au ministère des hommes, mais elles peuvent donner la victime et participer à la manducation. Un naba, un homme un peu riche, a son ou ses sacrificateurs attitrés. La règle est obligatoire pour un chef de province qui ne sacrifie jamais lui-même dans les grandes circonstances, et bien rarement en son particulier.

* * *

Il y a plusieurs espèces de sacrifices que nous allons étudier les unes après les autres afin de mieux saisir la manière dont les Mossi communiquent avec le monde invisible.

Tout d'abord, le sacrifice type, celui qui sert de base à tous les autres, le mand'zollé.

Le sacrificateur, accompagné de son fils portant un coq aux plumes blanches, ou de toute autre couleur, et une calebasse dans laquelle se trouve de la farine de mil délayée dans de l'eau, se rend au lieu du sacrifice, par exemple au tangandé.

En arrivant il dit:

Kabré, Kabré. Pardon, excuse-moi.

Puis il s'asseoit, le visage tourné vers l'ouest et prend en main la victime et dit:

Na-Wend'daogo, sak'a tan!	Dieu-roi mâle, réponds trois fois!
Na-Wend'poko, sak'a nasé!	Dieu-roi femelle, réponds quatre fois!
Na-Wend'ka kou ned'yé, kon ky yé.	Si Dieu-roi ne tue pas, on ne meurt pas.
Na-Wendé ka léo, ned'kon lu'yé. — Pilimpik'dim n'yélé; lila kom'dim n'yélé t'eb y noara, ti no'pelra t'eb kis'tangandé t'a déé n'di né teng'-kikirsi lé teng'portapa.	Si Dieu-roi n'enchaîne pas, on n'est pas enchaîné. — Les papillons ont dit; les génies de l'eau ont dit de prendre un gallinacé que ce soit un coq blanc et de l'offrir au tangandé pour qu'il le prenne et le mange avec les kikirsi du village et leurs femmes.

Cette formule peut varier suivant les cas. Ici, le sacrificateur expose ce qu'il désire. Il raconte, par exemple, au tangandé que son fils est malade et que lui-même a été consulter le sorcier qui lui a dit de prendre un coq blanc pour l'offrir au tangandé avec de l'eau, pour que le tangandé rende la santé à son fils. Ensuite, il verse l'eau derrière lui, par conséquent à l'est, et dit:

Na-wendé, déé a ybou kom!	Dieu-roi, reçois l'eau de ton lever!

Puis il verse l'eau devant lui, à l'ouest en disant:

Na-wendé, déé a kyenbo kom!	Dieu-roi, reçois l'eau de ton coucher!

Enfin il verse l'eau sur la pierre du sacrifice ou devant ses pieds et dit:

Tangandé, yk'n'déé kom nyou la kwen la biga lafi!	Tangandé, lève-toi, reçois l'eau et bois-la et donne à mon fils la santé!
Nyé lé zouanga, nini ka yé.	Il est comme un aveugle, il n'a plus d'yeux.
Tangandé nyé youngo né wintoro la ko biga lafi.	Le tangandé, lui, voit la nuit et le jour et donne la santé à mon enfant.

Si le sacrifice comporte l'offrande de la bière de mil, il en verse sur la pierre du sacrifice en disant:

Na-Wendé ka nyou dam yé, la poré-dimma nyouda.	Dieu-roi ne boit pas de bière, mais sa suite en boit.

Il prend alors le coq de la main gauche, renverse la tête en tirant la crête et lui coupe le cou. Il fait couler le sang sur la pierre, là où il a versé l'eau, tout en disant:

Tangandé déé noara n'di, la kwen la biga lafi né sounoro!	Tangandé, reçois ce coq et mange-le, et donne à mon enfant la santé et la joie!

Il jette alors le coq devant lui en disant:

Noara bé Wennam, ba souk'ba'a.	Le coq est à Dieu, qu'il écarte la maladie.

Il envoie ensuite son enfant chercher le coq. L'enfant saisit la bête en choisissant le moment où elle est sur le dos et il l'aide au besoin à prendre cette position. Il la traîne à terre par les pattes jusqu'auprès du sacrificateur qui dit:

T'a vouda bemdaoge. Traîne à terre mes ennemis.

Le sacrificateur prend alors la poule et la met sur ses pattes en tenant la tête droite:

T'a timma biga! Qu'il donne la santé à mon enfant!

Il retourne le coq, lui met la tête en bas et les pattes en l'air:

T'a terlda bema! Qu'il fasse mordre la poussière à mes ennemis!

De la main gauche, il arrache des plumes du cou, crache dessus et les colle sur la pierre ou par terre avec le sang de la victime et dit:

Yelbandé tou sébro! Que tout ce qu'il y a de mauvais s'en aille avec le vent!

Ta toubré oum! Que ses oreilles entendent (mes imprécations)!

Ta nif ka nya yé! Que son œil ne voie pas!

Il brise une patte du coq.

T'a kao bemdaogo karga! Brise la jambe de mes ennemis!

Il brise l'autre patte:

T'a kao bempoko karga! Brise la jambe de mes ennemies!

Et il rend la victime à l'enfant qui l'emporte. Le reste de l'eau et du dole est répandu au lieu même du sacrifice.

Le coq est plumé soit sur place, soit à la maison et rôti ou cuit à l'eau, selon le sacrifice. Le sacrificateur enlève les ongles des pattes, le bec, les ailerons et le foie, et les met dans la main gauche de son enfant qui va les déposer à quelque distance sur le bord du chemin en disant:

Mand'déé gobra, la kwen détogo nyé masem. Le sacrifice se reçoit de la main gauche, mais de la droite donne lui la santé.

Il revient au lieu où sont réunis les gens, et la victime est partagée entre toutes les personnes présentes. Quand toutes ont mangé ce qui leur revient elles se réunissent en groupe devant le sacrificateur et le saluent:

Wennam déé mando! Que Dieu recoive ton sacrifice!

Wennam tou taoré! Que Dieu l'accepte!

Le sacrifice est terminé.

Si c'est une chèvre ou un mouton ou un bœuf qui sont sacrifiés, au lieu des plumes du cou, on enlève des poils sur le sommet de la tête, on y ajoute un morçeau de la corde qui a servi à attacher la victime, et on colle le tout là où le sang a coulé; on ne brise pas leurs jambes.

Telle est la formule régulière du sacrifice, sauf évidemment les variantes qu'y peuvent introduire les particuliers ou la coutume de telle ou telle région. C'est le mand'zallé.

Le mand'lingdem ou mand'dédem que nous pourrions appeler «sacrifice caché», s'offre pour un malade qui est sur le point de mourir. Sa maladie tient à ce que son âme est sortie de son corps. Le sorcier a déclaré qu'elle se trouve au tangandé. A l'insu du malade, d'où le nom de «sacrifice caché», son père se rend au tangandé, accompagné d'un autre enfant qui porte la victime et l'eau, et de la mère du malade qui porte une grande calebasse à moitié remplie d'eau et dans laquelle elle place une calebasse plus petite.

Le sacrifice se fait comme précédemment, mais tandis que l'enfant fait rôtir la poule, le sacrificateur jette à terre trois cauris si c'est un garçon qui est malade, quatre si c'est une fille, et verse un peu d'eau, puis appelle le malade par son nom: «Bila, viens, réponds-moi.» Il appelle trois fois un garçon, quatre fois une fille. Puis il prend les cauris et une partie de la terre mêlée à l'eau et au sang de la victime. La femme soulève la petite calebasse qui nage dans l'eau, le sacrificateur met la boue et les cauris au fond de la grande calebasse et la femme met vivement la petite calebasse sur le tout et la maintient au fond de l'eau. Le même manège se répète trois et quatre fois selon le sexe du malade, puis la femme prend la route de la maison, tenant la calebasse d'une main et maintenant toujours la petite calebasse pour qu'elle ne surnage pas, tandis que le sacrificateur la suit, agitant son sabre ou sa lance derrière elle, afin d'écarter les mauvais génies. L'âme est au fond de l'eau, parmi la boue ensanglantée et les cauris, il faut à tout prix l'empêcher de se sauver de nouveau.

Quand le cortège est arrivé auprès du malade, on le fait asseoir, et la femme verse sur sa tête l'eau de la grande calebasse, toujours sans soulever la petite. Si le malade, surpris par cette aspersion qu'il n'attend pas, fait un sursaut, il est sauvé, son âme est rentrée dans son corps; sinon, il n'y a plus rien à faire qu'à l'abandonner à son malheureux sort, le tangandé n'a pas voulu rendre l'âme. Le sacrificateur et ses aides mangent alors la victime, mais le malade n'en mange pas.

* * *

Le sacrifice muet, mand'moukou, appelé aussi sacrifice de l'œuf, mand'gellé, parce que c'est un œuf qui est offert, se fait dans les circonstances suivantes. Il est des maladies qui ont la triste propriété de parler comme des gens. Elles appellent un individu qui, croyant que c'est réellement quelqu'un qui l'appelle, répond à son nom. C'en est fait, il tombera malade et mourra.

Le sorcier a annoncé qu'une telle maladie menace le village et qu'il faut faire un sacrifice muet. Le naba et les anciens, en émoi, délèguent l'un d'eux pour offrir ce sacrifice. Le lendemain matin, le vieillard désigné prend un œuf, souvent aussi une noix de kola et des racines spéciales, et suit le chemin que devrait suivre la maladie si elle venait dans le village. Il garde le plus profond silence. Arrivé à une certaine distance, il approche l'œuf de ses lèvres et lui dit mystérieusement qu'une maladie menace leur village et que si elle veut suivre ce chemin, il a à l'arrêter. Puis, il dépose à terre ou enfouit l'œuf, la noix de kola et les racines et s'en retourne. L'œuf qui est une poule future mais qui ne peut parler est choisi comme emblème du silence qu'il faut garder pour conjurer la maladie.

* * *

Dans le sacrifice appelé «mauvais sacrifice», la victime n'est pas consommée par les assistants mais abandonnée sur place où elle pourrit ou sert à repaître les vautours ou les hyènes. Toutes les victimes peuvent être ainsi offertes. Le sorcier seul décide des cas où il faut faire un tel sacrifice; c'est généralement pour conjurer un malheur publique, par exemple pour éloigner une maladie contagieuse qui dévorera la victime et laissera les gens. La victime est parfois abandonnée vivante et chassée dans la brousse.

* * *

Tout peut être offert en sacrifice si le sorcier le dit. Les noix de kolas, les cauris, la cendre de certaines écorces ou de certaines racines, des pierres rouges, le fruit intérieur du karité, etc. Les poules sont la victime le plus généralement choisi mais les sacrifices de chèvres et de moutons ne sont pas rares. Nous avons vu que la pintade est le sacrifice préféré des kikirsi. Les nabas sont tenus de sacrifier parfois des bœufs et, dans certaines circonstances, des ânes. Quelques-uns peuvent sacrifier des chevaux mais pas tous. Enfin autrefois, même des hommes étaient offerts en sacrifice. Certains tangamma étaient avides de sacrifices humains, et les Peuls en faisaient souvent les frais. Les indigènes à teint clair, tirant sur le rouge, se rapprochant par conséquent de la couleur des mânes qui sont dites être blanches, étaient sacrifiés aux mânes de préférence à tous les autres. Mais ces sacrifices étaient rares et réservés aux plus grands chefs.

* * *

Parfois, au lieu d'offrir tout de suite un sacrifice, on fait un vœu. C'est le poulongo mando. Par exemple, une maladie sévit dans le pays, ou bien on a une grave affaire sur les bras et on se demande comment les choses vont tourner, ou encore on veut se débarrasser d'un ennemi. Celui qui fait le vœu, se rend au tangandé ou à la pierre des kikirsi, portant une calebasse d'eau. Il verse l'eau en disant: «Tangandé, si cette maladie s'éloigne, ou bien si mon affaire réussit, ou encore si mon ennemi meurt, je te sacrifierai un bouc ou un bœuf.» Et pour témoigner de sa bonne volonté, celui qui fait le vœu, achète, à la première occasion, le bouc ou le bœuf promis. Si le tangandé ou les kikirsi répondent à sa demande, il accomplit son vœu et dans la formule du sacrifice, au lieu de dire que c'est le sorcier qui lui a dit d'offrir telle ou telle victime, il rappelle son vœu et souvent promet un autre sacrifice pour l'année suivante.

Les musulmans ont inventé un autre sacrifice non sanglant à leur usage. Voici la recette: «Si quelqu'un est malade, dans ta soukala prends une kola, du miel, des gâteaux de miel, des haricots, du maïs, des cauris et mélange le tout dans une calebasse remplie d'eau. Puis appelle un Musulman-Yarga ou Peul, pour faire la prière. Bien entendu, ce dernier ne se déplacera que moyennant finance. Un mouton tout au moins doit accompagner la demande. Grave, majestueux et réservé comme tout bon musulman doit l'être, il s'assied dans la cour intérieure, près de la case où gît le malade, et tout le monde s'assied autour de lui, les deux mains ouvertes devant les yeux en forme de livre, les petits doigts réunis.» Le Musulman commence sa prière en mossi, répétant ce qu'on lui a demandé: la santé du malade. Quand il a terminé, il passe ses deux mains sur sa figure et toujours trois fois pour un garçon et quatre fois pour une fille, puis chacun reprend sa première position et notre homme baragouine n'importe quoi en arabe ou en peul. Quand il a fini, tout le monde se passe et se repasse les mains sur la figure, le maître du logis trempe sa main dans la calebasse qui renferme le mélange décrit plus haut et la porte à son front; les enfants emportent le tout et tous saluent le bon apôtre: «Que Dieu t'exauce!» Et notre homme reprend, toujours aussi grave, le chemin de sa demeure. L'eau servira à faire des ablutions sur le malade, on en mettra aussi quelque peu dans ce qu'il mangera. Ce n'est pas bien terrible, et si des malades guérissent par auto-suggestion, c'est tant mieux.

La bénédiction et la malédiction sont aussi en usage. Mais rentrent-elles dans le culte ou dans la magie? Quoiqu'il en soit, il y a des indigènes qui ont le pouvoir de tuer quiconque ils veulent, rien qu'en disant un mot, de faire sécher la récolte sur pied, de donner aux bestiaux la maladie qu'il leur plaît de donner. Il en est aussi qui peuvent bénir, rendre un voyage favorable, faire réussir une affaire, et si vous êtes blessés, recourrez à eux, ils vous mettront autour du membre blessé une corde graisseuse avec trois ou quatre nœuds selon votre sexe et le membre n'enflera pas, et la plaie sera très vite guérie.

Tels sont les principaux sacrifices et les actes du culte. Il n'a pas été question des sacrifices offerts aux mânes soit le jour de l'enterrement, soit le jour du kouré, car les animaux offerts alors ne sont pas, à proprement parler, sacrifiés, kou mando, mais offerts, donnés, fabré. Des sacrifices faits le jour de la fête des morts, nous allons parler à l'instant.

Les Mossi de Koupéla ont deux fêtes principales: la fête des morts ou basra et la fête musulmane du mouton, la kibsa, toutes deux fêtes intimes, fêtes familiales.

La basra est la fête des morts. Tout chef de famille doit, en ce jour, offrir des sacrifices aux mânes de ses ancêtres, lui seul peut sacrifier au tombeau; même si un membre de la famille est devenu puissant et riche, il ne se permettra pas d'offrir lui-même ce sacrifice qui revient de droit au chef de famille. Tous ceux de la famille qui veulent donc offrir un sacrifice au tombeau des ancêtres, doivent en ce jour passer par lui; mais les sacrifices offerts aux kikirsi et au tangandé — et presque tout le monde leur en offre en ce jour — peuvent être faits par n'importe qui. C'est en ce jour surtout qu'on peut voir des bambins immoler gravement leur poule à leurs kikirsi et au tangandé, et chacun tient à honneur d'offrir la sienne. Les coqs et les poules sont seuls sacrifiés en ce jour.

La basra n'est pas célébrée le même jour par toutes les familles. Les unes la célèbrent avant le chef de province, les autres après lui, la plupart le même jour.

Voici comment procède le naba de Koupéla, et les cérémonies sont les mêmes pour les particuliers à cela près que, moins riches, ils ne peuvent offrir autant de sacrifices. La basra est toujours célébrée par le naba un samedi. Dès le jeudi, il a pris de la bière non fermentée dans les cuves, et il est allé en verser sur la tombe de son père et de son grand-père. Il a aussi sacrifié une poule sur chacune des tombes. Partout où se trouve la tombe d'un de ses ancêtres, le gardien de la tombe y sacrifie une poule. Le vendredi soir, même cérémonie. Le sacrifice est le sacrifice ordinaire décrit plus haut, mais la formule d'invocation est remplacée par celle-ci: «Ame de mon père, étend la main et prend cette poule que je t'offre; fais que j'atteigne l'année prochaine en bonne santé, et je reviendrai te donner une poule.» La poule immolée au tombeau n'est pas grillée comme dans les autres sacrifices, mais cuite à l'eau.

En ces jours, il faut avoir bien soin de ne pas coucher dehors car les âmes viennent boire de la bière dans les cuves et malheur à qui se trouve sur leur chemin; elles le tueront ou tout au moins le rendront gravement malade.

Le jour même de la fête, s'ils ne sont pas venus la veille, tous ceux qui ont quelque obligation envers le naba, ou envers celui qui célèbre la fête, ceux auquels il a donné une femme, ou qui lui en ont demandé une, viennent le saluer avec un coq et des cauris. Beaucoup de ses administrés, surtout les chefs de cantons, viennent aussi offrir leur coq et leurs cauris. Par contre, si un visiteur de marque se présente ce jour-là, il est de la plus élémentaire politesse de lui offrir un coq.

Le jour même de la fête, il n'y a généralement pas de sacrifices sur les tombes. Les victimes sont offertes aux kikirsi protecteurs de la case, de la cour intérieure, de la cour extérieure, de la soukala toute entière. Les poules immolées sont d'autant plus nombreuses que les cadeaux ont été plus abondants. Quand les sacrifices sont terminés, le naba réunit ses gens, la bière est apportée et présentée au naba qui commence par en verser un peu à terre en offrande aux mânes, puis boit et fait partager les cruches entre ses gens. Si on a une affaire à traiter, ce n'est évidemment pas ce jour-là qu'il faut choisir, car, après midi, tous nos gens sont plus ou moins ivres.

Le lundi et le mercredi suivant, le naba se rend en grande pompe, au petit jour, dans deux villages voisins (Nakalbo et Sabré) afin d'y sacrifier un bœuf au tangandé. C'est grande fête ces jours-là dans ces villages; le naba y perd un bœuf mais y gagne force poules et quelques milliers de cauris. Il se rend aussi au village de Toulgou le jour où se célèbre la basra dans cette localité, parce que sa famille est originaire de Toulgou.

La kibsa est la fête musulmane du mouton et se célèbre quarante jours après la fin du grand jeûne. Tous les Mossi célèbrent cette fête en leur particulier, chaque famille a fait de la bière de mil et, en ce jour, la bouille de mil est remplacée par du riz et de la viande. C'est une fête encore plus intime que la précédante en ce sens qu'elle se célèbre partout le même jour et que les gens restent à peu près chez eux pour boire et pour manger. Ils se congratulent les jours suivants.

Le lendemain du jour où la lune a paru à l'horizon, c'est à dire neuf jours avant la fête même, le chef des Yarsé de Kalmodo vient solennellement saluer le naba de Koupéla. Il porte à la main la lance du naba Silga, un des prédécesseurs du naba actuellement régnant, et tient à peu près ce petit discours: Naba Gado (le naba des Yarsé de Kalmodo) et le naba Silga étaient amis. L'esclave du naba Gado se sauva et ce dernier le chercha partout et ne le trouva pas. Naba Gado alla donc trouver naba Silga et lui dit: «Mon esclave s'est sauvé et je l'ai cherché partout mais en vain.» Naba Silga répondit: «Je ne l'ai pas vu non plus.» Et naba Gado continua à chercher son esclave. Enfin il le trouva et revint prévenir naba Silga qui le lui fit rendre. Pour prouver sa reconnaissance, naba Gado offrit au naba Silga la fête du feu. Mais naba Silga refusa en disant: «C'est du feu, et le feu brûle.» Naba Gado proposa alors le jeûne, le ramadan. Naba Silga refusa encore car le jeûne c'est la faim et la soif et un ami fait-il un tel présent à son ami? C'est alors que naba Gado proposa la kibsa mais à la condition que naba Silga lui préparerait tous les ans une nourriture abondante, pour lui et tous ses gens, et que tous viendraient célébrer la fête ici même et joueraient le cœur plein de joie. Naba Silga accepta avec empressement.

Quand le naba de Kalmodo a fini ce petit discours, la première femme du naba lui offre une calebasse d'eau, car les musulman ne boivent pas de bière fermentée, et le naba de Kalmodo chante les louanges de tous les prédécesseurs du naba actuel de Koupéla. Puis tout le monde fait du bruit et danse. Huit jours plus tard, il revient toujours avec la lance et le tambour de guerre. Le naba lui offre un bœuf que le naba de Kalmodo égorge. Il répand le sang sur la lance et dit: «Que Dieu donne la santé au naba et à ses ministres!» Le naba fait apporter les victuailles et quand tous sont repus, ils viennent saluer le naba: «Que Dieu t'accorde l'an prochain!», et ils se retirent.

Ces deux fêtes de la basra et de la kibsa, sont célébrées par tous les Mossi[1]. Il en est d'autres qui sont propres au naba de Koupéla, nous n'en dirons qu'un mot.

Le naky (naba ky «mil du naba») est la fête personnelle du naba. Elle est toujours célébrée le samedi — comme toutes les fêtes du naba d'ailleurs —. Vingt et un jour à l'avance, elle est annoncée au marché par le crieur public. Sept jours avant la fête, le naba sacrifie à l'aire une chèvre, la mange sur place après l'avoir fait griller, et les trois nabas préposés à la garde du mil du naba battent un peu de mil, et tous les jours ils reviendront ainsi à l'aire pour battre un peu de mil jusqu'au jour de la fête. La quantité de mil ainsi battue ne dépasse pas d'ailleurs deux paniers.

Le jour de la fête, de bonne heure, les grands ministres vont, avec leurs gens, saluer le naba: «Que Dieu t'accompagne; que Dieu te donne de voir toute cette année!» Le cortège se forme et se rend à l'aire du naba. Ses sœurs et ses femmes enlèvent une partie du mil battu les jours précédents et le portent en criant et dansant jusqu'à un grenier situé en dehors de la soukala du naba. Puis tous boivent copieusement.

[1] Pour être exact, il faut avouer que le nom même de basra n'est pas employé partout au Mossi, mais il semble bien que la fête elle-même soit célébrée partout. A Bélousa, c'est la fête appelée kytouara. Le nom de la kibsa, au contraire, est connu partout, mais des circonstances particulières peuvent en empêcher la célébration. Ainsi les guerriers d'un canton ont été vaincus ce jour, la kibsa leur est néfaste et ils ne la célèbrent plus.

Le surlendemain, dans la soirée, nouvelle cérémonie. Les parents du naba se rendent à l'aire, mettent dans des tiges d'herbe le mil qui reste et en font un paquet que l'on porte au son des tambours et dansant, jouant, criant, comme au jour d'un enterrement. Ce mil est déposé dans le grenier avec celui qui a été porté le jour de la fête et un mouton et une poule sont sacrifiés auprès du grenier et partagés entre tous les assistants, mais le naba n'en mange pas, et pendant toute cette cérémonie il se cache, car s'il apercevait le cortège, il mourrait.

D'où vient cette coutume qui rappelle au naba que, si puissant soit-il, il est mortel comme tous ses sujets? D'où vient cette autre coutume que nous avons vu précédemment de construire à proximité de chez lui la case dans laquelle il sera enterré? Les Romains rappellaient au triomphateur qu'il n'était qu'un mortel. La pensée de la mort est saine et salutaire.

La fête des haricots est ainsi appelée parce que, en ce jour, le naba mange pour la première fois de l'année de la sauce faite avec des haricots.

La fête du piochage du naba (na-kobo) se célèbre vingt et un jour après la précédente et comme elle, comme le naky, toujours un samedi. Si le naba avait été solennellement intrônisé par le naba de Béiousa, il irait en grande pompe, avec un grand nombre de cavaliers, piocher un champ situé à quelque distance de Koupéla. Aujourd'hui, il se contente de piocher un sentier qui réunit ses cases à celles de ses deux premiers ministres. Il donne les premiers coups de pioche au son du tambour, et ses gens continuent. Si les Peuls et les cavaliers sont venus en nombre suffisant, ils font des courses, et comme toujours en ces circonstances, la bière coule à flots, et à la fin de la journée tout le monde est ivre. Ces fêtes ont surtout l'avantage de procurer au naba quelques milliers de cauris que ses administrés viennent lui offrir.

Ces fêtes maky, nakobo, ne sont-elles pas comme un hommage rendu à l'agriculture et ne rappellent-elles pas les mêmes fêtes célébrées jadis par les Romains et aujourd'hui encore par les Chinois?

Le marché qui suit chacune de ces fêtes, est toujours très fréquenté. On y tue plusieurs bœufs et quantité de moutons. Chacun tient à honneur de s'y rendre revêtu de ses plus beaux atours, et vraiment le spectacle de cette foule bigarée n'est pas banal.

Chapitre troisième. — Magie.

Mgr. LE ROY, avons-nous dit, définit la magie: «L'art de réduire à son service, par certaines pratiques occultes et d'aspect plus ou moins religieux, les forces de la nature, ou de capter les forces du monde invisible.» C'est elle que nous allons tâcher d'étudier et pour essayer de mettre de l'ordre dans un sujet qui en manque totalement dans l'esprit des indigènes, nous parlerons tout d'abord des superstitions, puis des sorciers.

Les Mossi, comme tous les primitifs d'ailleurs, qu'ils soient noirs ou blancs, sont très superstitieux. Nos pères ne l'étaient-ils pas au moyen-âge, et les croyances superstitieuses de treize à table, de la salière renversée, du trèfle à quatre feuilles, du lièvre qui traverse la route, etc. ont-elles été complètement extirpées par la science?

Quoi qu'il en soit de nous, la superstition règne en maîtresse ici. Les amulettes et les talismans sont très recherchés. Tout peut servir à en fabriquer, depuis la tête de grue couronnée, très prisée, jusqu'à celle de l'épervier et du héron cendré. Il y a de tout dans les nombreux sachets qui pendent au cou des indigènes, depuis le chiffon de papier sur lequel sont griffonnés quelques mots d'arabe et que les marabouts répandent à profusion dans tout le Soudan, jusqu'à un cauri ou à la cendre de toutes les racines possibles et imaginables. Il y a les bracelets amulettes qui se portent au bras gauche et protègent des sorciers seuya (v. p. 215) si on a soin de les remonter précipitamment quand on se trouve en présence d'un de ces terribles mangeurs d'âmes. Il y a le bracelet qui protège dans les combats et l'anneau de fer qui protège contre la morsure des serpents. Voulez-vous que celui dont vous désirez la fille en mariage vous reçoive bien et agrée votre demande? Portez à votre bras droit un certain bracelet et vous serez heureux dans vos démarches.

Les amulettes se portent autour de la tête ou du cou au bras ou au poignet. On en coud à sa calotte ou à ses habits, on en met à sa ceinture, à sa pipe, à son bâton, n'importe où. Nous n'en finirions pas s'il nous fallait indiquer toutes les espèces d'amulettes. L'omoplate d'un bœuf, fichée au bout d'un bâton, une chaîne de fer tendue à l'entrée d'une soukala, protègent les habitants contre une foule de malheurs et de visites nocturnes fort désagréables, et il est heureux qu'il soit possible de se défendre à si bon compte de ces esprits malfaisants, de toutes ces mânes en quête de victimes.

Si vous avez des chiens, prenez garde à ce qu'ils font. S'oublient-ils jusqu'à se coucher dans un panier, à y déposer leurs ordures, ou à vomir dans la case, tuez-les au plus vite, sinon vous mourrez vous-même. Si votre chienne ne fait qu'un petit, exécutez-la sans pitié. Lorsque le héron cendré passe au-dessus des cases en riant, les mères frappent sur leurs cruches de peur que leurs enfants n'aient la diarrhée. Les chasseurs ne doivent pas manger de la viande de koba avant de s'être divertis, et s'ils veulent être adroits, ils doivent se procurer certaines racines et les cuire dans l'eau et se laver les mains avec cette mixture.

Le dimanche est le jour des mânes, c'est en ce jour que se célèbre le kouré. Ce jour est aussi favorable pour construire des cases. Le lundi n'a rien de spécial. Mais il faut se défier du mardi, on ne peut jamais savoir ce qu'il réserve. Le mercredi est franchement mauvais, et il faut se garder de commencer un travail ou de partir en voyage ce jour-là. Le jeudi et le vendredi sont très favorables au mariage, surtout le vendredi. Les sorciers font grève le samedi et suspendent leurs consultations en ce jour. D'ailleurs chaque particulier a son jour faste et son jour néfaste, c'est à lui à le connaître et à en tenir compte.

Certaines pierres sont dites tombées du ciel et le jour où elle sont tombées, le chef de village a immédiatement couvert toutes les cruches qui, dans sa case, renferment les grisgris. Si, dans sa précipitation, il en a renversé une, il mourra dans l'année. Cette pierre devient sacrée. Qui peut la soulever n'a rien à craindre, mais qui ne peut y réussir mourra bientôt. On peut aussi l'interroger, et la réponse sera favorable ou non selon qu'on pourra la soulever ou qu'on ne le pourra pas. Les passants jettent dessus des tiges de mil, des brindilles coupées au passage, parfois des cauris pour obtenir d'elle que leurs affaires prospèrent.

Une comète est signe de guerre ou présage la mort d'un grand chef, et quand la comète de HALLEY fut visible à notre horizont, les poules, les chèvres et les moutons passèrent un mauvais quart d'heure. Il fallait détourner tous les malheurs qu'elle présageait. Il est vrai qu'elle fut superbe, et pendant plusieurs jours s'étendit presque d'une extrémité du ciel à l'autre ce qui était bien fait pour émotionner les indigènes: tant de gens, dit-on, ont été émus dans nos pays civilisés et ne l'ont pourtant pas vue dans tout son éclat. Malgré tous les sacrifices, le chef d'un des principaux cantons de la province, le naba de Pwitenga, est mort cette année là!

Mais il faut nous borner, et ces quelques exemples, qu'il nous serait facile de multiplier, suffisent pour faire comprendre le rôle que jouent les amulettes et les superstitions dans la vie de ce peuple.

Un mot cependant encore sur les superstitions. Le lecteur a pu remarquer que sans cesse les nombres trois et quatre et leurs composés revenaient sous notre plume, selon le sexe de la personne dont il s'agissait. Trois est réservé aux hommes et quatre aux femmes. Dans les sacrifices Dieu-roi mâle est appelé trois fois, Dieu-roi femelle, quatre fois. La corde du grisgris a trois ou quatre nœuds selon le sexe, une mère porte le deuil de ses enfants 33 ou 44 jours. Un mort reçoit 333 ou 3333 cauris; une morte 444 ou 4444, etc.

De même les cheveux doivent tomber chaque fois que l'indigène change d'état. Un enfant est rasé avant de recevoir un nom, une jeune fille avant de s'approcher de son mari et une femme quand elle passe à un autre par héritage, tandis que le mari n'est rasé que quand il reçoit sa première femme puisque de jeune homme il devient chef de case, mais il ne sera plus rasé quand il recevra de nouvelles épouses parce qu'alors il ne change pas d'état. Un indigène, élu naba, doit quitter ses cheveux de sujet qui ne conviennent plus à un chef. Un mort ne peut être enterré avec ses cheveux de vivant que s'il est mort d'accident, etc.

La croix joue aussi un rôle qu'il ne faut pas exagérer mais qui est réel. La poignée des sabres est en forme de croix, on oint souvent les pieds et les mains et la poitrine des malades avec du charbon, délayé dans de la graisse, et toujours en form de croix. La croix est le signe dont sont marqués la poitrine et le dos des habitants d'une soukala pour les préserver de la foudre. Les cases sont marquées de même, et la croix est tracée jusque dans la bouche du cheval et de l'âne. La croix marque la porte de la case d'un malade gravement atteint et doit écarter les mauvais génies. La croix de cendres sur la poitrine et le dos fait partie du costume de deuil.

D'où viennent ces coutumes? Les indigènes ne peuvent en rendre compte et répondent invariablement: «Nos pères faisaient ainsi.»

Mais à côté de ces pratiques superstitieuses qui n'engagent à rien et ne font de tort à personne, il en est d'autres qui peuvent être très utiles pour ceux qui les emploient et d'autres qui semblent bien ressortir de la magie. Nous voulons parler de ce que les indigènes désignent sous le nom générique de tim sans mettre de différences entre les remèdes véritables qui relèvent de la médecine et les superstitions, ou les maléfices qui relèvent de la magie, et il nous est souvent bien difficile de distinguer entre les uns et les autres.

Les amulettes et les grisgris sont des tim pour les indigènes, au même titre que les remèdes que les spécialistes leur indiquent et qui semblent avoir une efficacité réelle. Nous avons brièvement parlé de ces derniers en parlant des maladies. Mais ce que nous n'avons pas assez dit alors, c'est qu'il est bien rare que quelque sorcellerie ne se mêle pas à la confection de ces remèdes, et tout au moins celui qui a été guéri, grâce à un remède, doit en conserver quelque peu dans un sachet et tous les ans lui offrir une poule en sacrifice. Tout se passe comme pour les sacrifices ordinaires, mais la formule imprécative est remplacée par celle-ci: «Dieu-tim, avance la main et prend cette poule. Dieu m'a donné un puissant remède. Que ce remède me garde la nuit, le matin, au milieu de la nuit et sur le sentier et là où l'on joue et dans les cases. Ferme la greule du serpent, pour que l'an prochain je sois encore en bonne santé, qu'il ne m'arrive rien de fâcheux, que mon cœur se réjouisse sans cesse. Je reviendrai alors avec une poule, pour que tu te réjouisses aussi et que tu continues à garder mes femmes et mes enfants.» Puis il finit le sacrifice. Cette formule indique bien que c'est à Dieu qu'est rapportée toute la puissance que renferme le remède.

* * *

Certaines pratiques superstitieuses rentrant dans la catégorie des tim, sont employées pour des cas spéciaux. Voici, à titre de curiosité, ce qui se fait quand un indigène a tué une hyène, et pour préserver les cases de la foudre.

Quand un indigène a tué une hyène, il doit se hâter de recourir à un autre indigène qui en a tué une précédemment, sinon il deviendra fou furieux. Le chasseur va donc consulter celui qui connaît le remède contre cette folie furieuse et lui apporte une poule. L'indigène consulté indique quelles sont les racines qu'il faut ramasser, et le chasseur se met en devoir de les chercher dans la brousse. Il les coupe en morçeaux, puis les apporte à son médecin qui prend une cruche, saisit la poule, l'approche des racines et dit, en versant de l'eau dans la cruche: «Dieu-tim et son kikiriga, lève-toi, avance la main et prends de l'eau pour boire; prends cette poule pour la manger et fais que celui qui a tué l'hyène ne devienne pas fou furieux.» Il sacrifie la poule et verse le sang dans la marmite. Puis il met la moitié des racines dans la cruche et brûle l'autre partie et la réduit en cendres.

Le chasseur emporte le tout chez lui et pendant sept jours, il met dans sa bouillie de mil, de l'eau de son remède et mélange des cendres des racines à sa sauce.

Le septième jour, toute la famille se réunit et vient, avec les amis, saluer le chasseur. Chacun jette des cauris dans la calebasse qui renferme le remède, puis tous vont au marché en grande pompe. Le chasseur emmanche la tête de l'hyène au bout d'un bâton et la porte triomphalement au marché. Il a droit de prendre gratis des pistaches, des haricots, du mil, des gâteaux, etc. tout ce qu'il veut. Quand il a fini sa provision, volant comme l'hyène, le cortège se réforme et se rend sous un gros arbre, à proximité du marché. Là, le chasseur enfonce son bâton en terre, et tous se mettent à danser autour de lui; puis chacun saisit une baguette et en frappe le chasseur qui se sauve vivement. Il est certain de ne pas devenir fou et de plus il peut désormais tuer sans crainte toutes les hyènes qu'il voudra.

* * *

L'eau en général, la pluie en particulier, sont un grand bienfait en ce pays de soleil. Les caimans ont la réputation d'attirer l'eau dans les endroits où ils se trouvent et si tuer un caiman n'est pas toujours commettre un homicide, c'est au moins dessécher un marigot ou une mare, car les caimans quitteront ce lieu et l'eau s'en ira avec eux. Si la pluie tarde trop, les récoltes n'auront pas le temps de mûrir; si elle tombe trop abondante, surtout au début et à la fin de l'hivernage, les mauvaises herbes étoufferont le mil ou les fleurs tomberont avant que le fruit ne soit formé.

Aussi la pluie est-elle la désirée ou la redoutée selon les cas, et c'est au naba, le maître de la vie et de la mort de ses sujets, qu'est réservée la puissance de faire ou d'éloigner la pluie. En vérité, tout homme puissant est réputé avoir ce pouvoir et que de fois ne m'a-t-on pas demandé de faire la pluie! Les Blancs ne peuvent-ils tout ce qu'ils veulent, eux qui sont apparentés aux mânes, leur couleur en fait foi? Ne viennent-ils pas du pays de l'eau, ne sortent-ils pas eux-mêmes de l'eau? J'avais beau dire que Dieu seul peut faire la pluie, et qu'il fallait le prier pour l'obtenir, un sourire incrédule me prouvait que je n'étais pas cru.

Le naba a donc le grisgris, le talisman qui doit attirer la pluie et pour cela, il lui suffit, quand l'orage menace, de sortir de sa case une certaine cruche pleine de certaines racines et de la remplir d'eau à déborder. Si, au contraire, il veut chasser la pluie, il brûle d'autres racines et le vent emporte la fumée du côté où le naba veut envoyer les nuages; ou bien, il suspend par un fil, à un bâton, une queue de vache ou de cheval: le vent l'agite et par là chasse les nuages. C'est pourquoi, quand la saison des pluies approche, le naba envoie au marché un de ses gens, ramasser des fruits de karité qu'il prend à chacune des femmes qui en a apporté, car ces noyaux entrent dans la confection du grisgris et doivent avoir cette provenance. Si c'est un autre que le naba qui essaie d'attirer la pluie et s'il ne réussit pas, il attribuera son échec à un plus puissant que lui; si c'est le naba lui-même qui échoue, personne n'en parlera, ou bien on dira que le naba n'a pas voulu sérieusement attirer ou chasser la pluie, selon le cas.

La foudre accompagne tous les orages et tue souvent des gens dans ce pays où les orages sont si violents. Ses effets sont attribués à un génie malfaisant, à un ennemi qui peut envoyer la foudre contre son ennemi s'il connaît le tim, enfin à Dieu même. La foudre frappe un voleur, un assassin, et c'est un châtiment. Si elle ne le tue pas lui-même, elle tuera le produit de son vol, le cheval volé, les moutons volés, elle ne tue jamais personne sans raison.

Heureusement, il est possible de s'en préserver. Pour cela, il faut trouver dans la brousse un produit blanc, assez semblable à une crotte d'hyène et que les indigènes appellent: «crotte de la pluie» et certaines racines d'arbres. Une partie de ces racines est mise à infuser dans l'eau pendant trois jours, l'autre partie est réduite en cendres. Une poule est offerte au tim en sacrifice, puis l'eau dans laquelle les racines ont infusée est employée pour cuire la bouillie de mil et la sauce est faite avec des feuilles de baobab. Tous les habitants de la soukala doivent manger de cette bouillie de mil et chacun est marqué d'une croix sur le dos et la poitrine avec les cendres, mélangées à du beurre de karité. Le cheval et l'âne, et eux seuls parmi les animaux, sont marqués sur le dos, sur la poitrine et dans la bouche. Les cases sont marquées à l'est du côté d'ou vient la pluie et à l'entrée. Il n'y a plus rien à craindre. Nous pensons que le paratonnerre protège mieux.

Tous ces tim, remèdes véritables, amulettes, talismans, recettes superstitieuses, sont indiqués soit par des médecins veritables qui connaissent réellement les propriétés des simples et opèrent de véritables guérisons, soit par les sorciers. Les médecins sont souvent consultés, et comme ils sont spécialisés dans telle ou telle maladie, on n'a recours à eux que dans cette maladie. D'ailleurs, tout individu auquel un remède a réussi, l'indique volontiers à un ami qui a été saisi par la maladie. Les médecins sont nombreux comme sont nombreuses les maladies qui atteignent les hommes.

Certains ne se contentent pas d'être médecins, ils sont aussi empoisonneurs, et ceux-là sont très craints. Si l'on veut se débarrasser d'un ennemi, le plus sûr moyen est de s'adresser à eux, mais ils font payer cher. Ils ont des poisons lents qui minent peu à peu leur victime, ils en ont de foudroyants qui tuent en quelques heures. Ils les mettent dans la boisson, dans la bouillie de mil, plus souvent encore dans la noix de kola. Il y en a aussi, et ceux-ci sont plus sorciers que médecins, qui disent avoir le pouvoir de tuer à distance et qui savent pratiquer l'envoûtement. Leur prestige a baissé depuis l'occupation française, puis qu'ils n'ont pas pu tuer ainsi les Blancs qui se sont installés dans le pays; mais ils se défendent en disant que nos tim sont plus puissants que les leurs.

* * *

Les sorciers sont nombreux eux aussi. Il y a ceux qui le deviennent de leur propre volonté et ceux qui naissent sorciers. Les premiers sont les bagré et les seuya; les autres sont les tibo, les bartibo, les waongo et enfin les nyonnyonsé. Qu'on excuse ces mots barbares, mais il est impossible de les traduire en français.

Le bagré, c'est le sorcier bon enfant, le sorcier à l'eau de rose, celui qui vient en aide au pauvre peuple moyennant une redevance d'un ou deux sous. On les consulte pour tout. Pour savoir l'avenir: le feu détruira-t-il mes cases ou ne les détruira-t-il pas? Mon voyage sera-t-il heureux ou non, etc. et si la réponse est défavorable, que faire pour conjurer le mauvais sort? On a recours à eux surtout en cas de maladie pour connaître le génie, cause de la maladie et pour savoir ce qu'il demande. Le rôle du sorcier est donc principalement d'indiquer quel sacrifice il faut offrir et à qui l'offrir. Rarement ils indiquent un remède, et quand cela leur arrive on n'a guère confiance en ce remède; plus souvent, ils prescrivent un traitement négatif en disant ce qui est défendu au malade.

Pour connaître la maladie, ils procèdent par élimination. «Il a mal à la tête», déclare le sorcier. Si la réponse est négative, il indique un autre membre: «au ventre — non — au bras — non.» Il faut bien qu'il finisse par tomber juste. Si le malade guérit à la suite du sacrifice indiqué, le sorcier est déclaré habile, il est vraiment en relation avec les génies, et sa clientèle augmentera et par le fait même ses revenus. Si le malade ne guérit pas ou meurt, c'est que le sorcier a trompé ou qu'il ne voit pas. On recourt à un autre sorcier, espérant toujours trouver le vrai voyant.

Au reste les sorciers sont fidèlement écoutés et tout ce qu'ils prescrivent est fidèlement accompli. Comme le sorcier devine quelquefois juste, comme le plus souvent encore le malade guérit par auto-suggestion parce que le sorcier a déclaré qu'il guérirait, comme parmi ceux qui tombent malades, ceux qui guérissent sont, heureusement, plus nombreux que ceux qui meurent, leur prestige est grand et leur clientèle nombreuse, ce sont tous les Mossi. Mais les bara (pluriel de bagré) ne sont pas redoutés. En cas de non réussite, ils sont injuriés et jamais ils ne sont consultés dans les jugements pour connaître le nom d'un coupable.

Par contre, les particuliers leur demandent parfois qui a tué leur enfant, leur femme, leur bestiaux, et le bagré indique parfois à qui il faut s'en prendre, d'où inimitié entre la personne lésée et celle qui lui est signalée comme coupable. Souvent dans ce cas, l'accusé pour se défendre recourt à l'ordalie. Lui-même propose de boire un poison, d'être brûlé par un fer rouge ou étranglé au moyen de brins de paille entrelacés. S'il est innocent, le poison ne lui nuira pas, le feu ne le brûlera pas, les pailles se déferont d'elles-mêmes. Mais ne se soumettait à l'ordalie que celui qui le voulait bien et jamais les juges n'y recouraient. En jugement, il fallait apporter la preuve.

Tout le monde peut être sorcier, et ceux qui embrassent cette profession sont généralement de pauvres héros qui n'ont rien pour vivre, manquent de force pour piocher ou qui veulent simplement vivre sans travailler. Quand un individu entre dans la confrérie des bara, on dit de lui qu'il veut apprendre la paresse, et on en rit.

A la saison sèche, le pays est infesté par des bandes de Gourounsi et de Nankana, crasseux et loqueteux, qui font profession de tout savoir et d'avoir un grisgris pour tout, même pour faire pousser les arachides. Sous la conduite d'un chef qui baragouine plus ou moins mal le mossi, ils se promènent de village en village, dansant et chantant chez les nabas, comme les saltimbanques à la porte des roulettes des diseurs de bonne aventure pour attirer la clientèle... et ils sont consultés et ils s'en retournent dans leur pays bien nippés, grâce aux cauris que les badauds leur ont donnés.

* * *

Bien autrement redoutés sont les seuya, les mangeurs d'âmes. La mort d'un indigène, surtout d'un enfant, leur est très souvent attribuée. Ils ont le pouvoir de sortir du corps de l'homme qu'ils habitent et d'aller partout à la recherche d'une âme à manger. Le feu est leur véhicule, et ce sont eux qui passent, la nuit, sur les feux follets qui errent autour des cases, dans les champs. Ils peuvent s'arrêter dans les arbres, tomber à terre, et qui possède une amulette plus puissante qu'eux, peut les chasser.

Le seuya est extrêmement dangereux car il est impossible de se défendre complètement contre lui. C'est la nuit quil opère. L'âme de tout mortel sort souvent de son corps, la nuit, et va se promener partout. Malheur à elle si elle rencontre un seuya. Ce dernier se précipite sur elle ou la met sous une grosse pierre, et le malheureux corps, propriétaire de cette âme, tombe malade et finit par mourir. Le seul remède est de sacrifier au tangandé et l'animal protecteur du village se mettra en quête, jusqu'à ce qu'il ait retrouvé et délivré la malheureuse âme; il la fait alors rentrer dans son corps et le malade guérit. Mais si le seuya a mangé l'âme, s'il est d'accord avec le tangandé, il n'y a rien à faire, c'est la mort à bref délai.

Les sorciers bagré peuvent dire qui est seuya et qui ne l'est pas. D'aucuns ont un tim qui leur permet de distinguer les seuya dans une assemblée. Il leur suffit de fumer leur pipe; les yeux de l'homme mangeur d'âmes deviennent rouges et se remplissent de l'armes. Ceux qui sont accusés d'être seuya s'en défendent généralement et une des plus grosses injures est de traiter quelqu'un de seuya. Nous avons vu la mort atroce réservée à ces malheureux. Les vieilles femmes surtout sont accusées de manger l'âme des petits enfants, et j'en ai connu qui se vantaient d'avoir ce pouvoir!

* * *

Les tibo sont une famille de sorciers. On nait tibo et le village habité par eux s'appelle tibin. Le naba de ce village a la spécialité de connaître toutes sortes de choses, et particulièrement si on a un ennemi, rien qu'en regardant dans une calebasse pleine d'eau dans laquelle on a mis un certain grisgris. Une poule a été immolée au préalable sur la calebasse. Le naba, mais lui-seul, peut aussi tuer à distance. Pour obtenir sa protection, il faut lui apporter une chèvre, une poule, de la farine de mil délayée dans de l'eau et de la bière de mil. Tot ou tard, celui qui a été désigné, meurt! Mais si cela tarde trop, le sorcier trouve toujours une excuse.

A Tibin se trouve la case dans laquelle sont alignés les fétiches tibo. Ils se composent essentiellement d'une marmite en terre cuite qui contient de l'eau, des branches et des feuilles d'arbres. Elle est fermée par une calebasse en terre qui sert à faire cuire la sauce et sur laquelle les sacrifices sont offerts. Des serpents et des tortues sont, dit-on, dans la marmite, mais seuls les sorciers tibo peuvent les voir. Chaque village a sa cruche tibo qui se trouve chez le naba, à la porte de sa case ou suspendue à l'intérieur. Ces tibo sont la demeure de kikirsi puissants.

* * *

Les bartibo sont des danseurs de profession. Ils ont la faculté, tout en dansant, de découvrir ceux qui ont le pouvoir de tuer les gens, que ce soit les donneurs de poison ou les seuya. Eux-mêmes, prétendent-ils, ont le pouvoir de monter sur le vent et d'aller tuer quiconque ils veulent. Mais leur spécialité est le grisgris pour enfantement à l'usage des femmes stériles.

* * *

Les waongo, sont aussi une famille spéciale. On naît tibo, bartibo, waongo et nyonnyonga. Les waongo se revêtent, dans leurs cérémonies, d'habits faits avec l'écorce du baobab et qui les couvrent entièrement. Quand ils portent cet habit étrange, il est impossible de les voir. On distingue bien quelque chose qui marche, mais il est impossible de savoir qui c'est, et une maladie terrible atteindra celui qui les frappera. Aussi qui voit cette masse informe, se sauve au plus vite. Quand ils font le kouré (anniversaire de la mort) d'un des leurs, ils mettent un masque. Le vent leur sert de monture et ils peuvent infliger des maladies, voire même tuer s'ils le veulent.

* * *

Les nyonnyonsé chevauchent aussi sur le vent. Les membres de cette famille de sorciers tuent qui leur est désigné. Celui qui désire se défaire d'un ennemi, va trouver un nyonnyonga et lui demande ce qu'il veut pour tuer celui qui lui est indiqué. Le sorcier demande une vache, un mouton, n'importe quoi, et une poule. La poule est sacrifiée sur le manche d'une hachette dont l'extrémité, là où le fer est emmanché, est percée de trois trous et entourée de cordelettes. Après ce sacrifice, le sorcier s'endort et de jour ou de nuit, son âme s'en va sur le vent, la tête en bas, la hachette à la main. Quand elle rencontre l'âme de celui qu'elle doit tuer, elle la frappe avec sa hachette et la tue, puis retourne animer le corps de son propriétaire. Les femmes, paraît-il, sont les plus féroces!

Qui le veut, peut obtenir communication de ce pouvoir, mais il faut le payer. La vie de ces sorciers est d'autant plus longue qu'ils tuent plus de gens, aussi qui veut être initié doit donner, à celui qui l'initiera, la vie d'un de ses enfants ou tout au moins d'un parent car le sorcier ne se contente pas d'un étranger ou d'un esclave.

Il serait curieux de rechercher quels sont les sacrifices et les cérémonies qui accompagnent de telles initiations. Il semble bien qu'avec ces derniers sorciers, tibo, waongo, nyonnyonsé, nous soyons en pleine magie noire, car les indigènes racontent sur eux des histoires effrayantes et citent leurs victimes. Force nous est d'avouer que nous n'avons pu avoir plus de détails sérieux sur le compte de ces sorciers et que nous n'avons été personnellement en relation avec aucun d'eux, de telle sorte que nous n'avons pu contrôler tout ce qui nous a été raconté à leur sujet et c'est pourquoi nous n'en parlons pas plus longuement. D'ailleurs, eux-mêmes interrogés n'auraient rien dit, avant d'être convertis.

Mais ces familles de sorciers sont une infime minorité chez les Mossi, et si on peut dire que ce sont là des sectes fermées, des sociétés secrètes, ce sont les seules qui existent à notre connaissance. Il n'y a donc pas au Mossi de sociétés secrètes proprement dites, rien qui ressemble à ce qui se voit en pays bambaras[1], et c'est heureux. Il n'y a pas non plus d'initiation, de culte caché et célébré la nuit, ni de doctrine ésotérique. N'est-ce pas par ce que les nabas, tenant à rester les maîtres, n'ont pas permis qu'à côté de leur pouvoir, s'élève une puissance plus formidable que la leur? Ou est-ce pour toute autre raison, peu importe.

Il semblerait qu'au milieu de tous ces génies qui envahissent l'air, la terre, le feu, les maisons, les champs, tout, et qui ne sont pas toujours d'humeur commode les Mossi devraient vivre dans des transes perpétuelles; ayant tout à craindre, le jour des empoisonneurs, la nuit des seuya. Pourtant il n'en est rien. C'est un peuple gai, qui aime à rire et n'a pas du tout l'air préoccupé. Comme j'en faisais la remarque à un vieillard, il me répondit: «Tout le monde n'a pas des ennemis. Et puis, pourquoi se tracasser de choses inévitables?» En effet, ces terribles sorciers ne sont guère à redouter que de ceux qui se connaissent un ennemi qui peut faire appel à leur puissance. Les génies s'apaisent par les sacrifices, et si l'âme a été prise la nuit par un seuya, qu'y faire sinon essayer de la délivrer si on le peut.

Au reste, comme tant d'autres, les Mossi, dans la pratique de la vie, oublient facilement toutes ces croyances et agissent comme s'ils étaient maîtres de leurs actes et assurés d'atteindre leur but. C'est en riant et comme en jouant qu'ils lancent des bâtons et des pierres aux tourbillons qui passent, soulevant la poussière et les feuilles mortes. Pourtant que de génies et de sorciers plus terribles les uns que les autres ne renferment-ils pas? Les plus fervents consultent les sorciers et offrent des sacrifices avant d'entreprendre quoi que ce soit; les autres ne s'occupent guère des sacrifices qu'à la fête des morts et quand le malheur vient les visiter. N'est-ce pas la souffrance qui ramène à la vie religieuse parce qu'elle nous rappelle notre dépendance d'un plus puissant que nous? Ici comme partout encore, il y a des fervents et des tièdes; des indifférents, il ne semble pas qu'il y en ait et l'athéisme est inconnu parmi eux. Ils ne sont pas encore assez civilisés pour avoir de telles conceptions!

Il semble que leur conversion au catholicisme n'est qu'une question de temps. «Messis quidem multa, operarii autem pauci.» Puisse le maître de la moisson envoyer en ce pays de nombreux ouvriers et hâter l'heure où ce peuple tout entier entre dans le divin bercail!

---

[1] Abbé Henry, L'âme d'un peuple africain (Bibliothèque-«Anthropos», I, 2) — passim.

2: Mangin FA28 Mossi

Conclusion.

Nous sera-t-il permis, en guise de conclusion, d'essayer d'ébaucher à grands traits la silhouette morale d'un Mossi, tel que nous le comprenons?

Le Mossi est un mélange de défauts et de qualités. Le Mossi en général, n'est guère scrupuleux sur le vol et le mensonge, mais ces défauts ne sont pas tellement invétérés qu'une formation de la conscience plus délicate ne puisse les corriger. Le Mossi est voleur parce qu'il trouve souvent l'occasion de s'approprier le bien d'autrui, surtout les cauris, monnaie d'un maniement très compliqué. Il est si facile, tandis que l'on compte des cauris, d'en glisser quelques uns dans sa poche sans que le maître s'en aperçoive! Les voleurs de grands chemins existent, sont fort redoutés et plusieurs arrivent à une réelle habileté. Mais ils ne sont, bien entendu, qu'une infime minorité.

Les dettes fournissent l'occasion la plus fréquente de voler. Tout Mossi doit être débiteur et créancier à la fois, et quand il a emprunté, Dieu seul sait quand il rend. Quand quelqu'un a une dette envers lui, il emprunte en disant: «Un tel me doit tant, quand il m'aura rendu, je te paierai», et il trouve toujours quelqu'un pour lui prêter. Peut-on refuser un service à un ami? Pour se faire payer, il faudra faire démarches sur démarches, et bien heureux sera-t-on quand on pourra rentrer dans ses fonds. Ce défaut est si invétéré chez eux que les plus riches n'en sont pas exempts et, bien que pouvant rendre facilement ce qu'ils ont emprunté, ils ne le rendent pas.

* * *

Le Mossi est menteur, mais surtout il pratique la restriction mentale. Interrogé, il excelle à poser lui-même une autre question pour voir si son interlocuteur est réellement au courant des faits. S'il peut tromper, il trompera; mais s'il voit qu'il y a avantage à avouer, il avouera, même si ses aveux compromettent des complices; mais il faut alors qu'il soit bien sûr de s'en tirer indemne.

Il n'est pas fourbe ni dissimulé, mais souvent ne dit pas la vérité par crainte de déplaire à un plus puissant que lui. Il cherche qu'elle est la réponse que désire son interlocuteur, et il faut se défier quand on veut obtenir un renseignement précis. Il trompe encore en ne disant que la moitié de la vérité; interrogé, il répondra parfois à la question posée, mais taira tel ou tel détail qui modifierait la réponse ou mettrait sur la voie d'une autre question à faire.

Il est discret et sait garder un secret, surtout le secret du roi. Quand il ne veut rien dire, il répond: «Je ne sais pas», ce n'est pas compromettant et cela coupe court à toute question indiscrète.

* * *

Le Mossi a des passions, et ce sont les mêmes que les nôtres. L'ambition, la jalousie, la gourmandise, la paresse, la luxure, parfois même, mais plus rarement, l'avarice, règnent chez lui, et, comme il ne sait pas se dominer, ne sait pas résister à ses mauvais penchants, ses passions deviennent tyranniques avec l'âge. Les enfants sont généralement assez souples. L'esprit d'obéissance et de soumission complète aux parents leur est inculqué dès l'âge le plus tendre de telle sorte que, pris assez tôt, ils sont susceptibles de formation, et on peut obtenir d'eux de véritables actes de vertu qui leur coûtent. Mais laissés à eux-mêmes, ils s'écoutent en tout et recherchent ce qui peut leur apporter quelque satisfaction. C'est un peu la morale à l'usage de l'esclave qui ne craint que le bâton.

Le Mossi est vaniteux et susceptible. Un mot, même dit en riant, mais mal compris, le froisse facilement. La pratique de l'humilité est loin d'être passée dans ses habitudes. Le Mossi est batailleur, irascible, surtout quand il a bu un peu plus de bière de mil qu'il ne conviendrait. Il n'est pas de fête, guère de marché un peu important sans que quelques indigènes ne se prennent de querelle et souvent pour un rien, parce qu'en passant l'un a frôlé l'autre. La rixe commence par des injures, continue par des coups de bâton et se termine par des coups de couteau. Personne ne cèdera. Un Mossi qui cède dans une querelle, se croirait déshonoré; qui cède prouve par là-même qu'il est le plus faible et à la première occasion, un des témoins de la scène, injuriera à son tour celui qui a cédé: à quoi bon se gêner avec lui puisqu'il ne se défend pas? C'est pourquoi un Mossi injurié, surtout si c'est son père et sa mère qui sont injuriés — et toute injure en arrive vite là —, ne cèdera qu'à la dernière extrémité. Séparés, les adversaires continuent à s'invectiver à distance. Un Mossi en colère ne se possède plus. Quand la querelle est terminée, il en reste souvent quelque chose; il est vindicatif; surtout s'il s'est trouvé le plus faible, il cherche à se venger d'une façon ou d'une autre pour qu'il ne soit pas dit qu'il a eu le dessous.

* * *

Si le Mossi a ses passions comme nous, il a aussi son tempérament comme nous. Il y a des lymphatiques, mous, incapables d'efforts; il y a des nerveux qui sont toujours en mouvement, susceptibles à l'excès, ils pleurent à la moindre observation; il y a des taciturnes qui ne rient presque jamais, croient que personne ne les aime et que tout le monde cherche à leur nuire, ils aiment la solitude et parlent peu; il y a les bilieux, plus portés que les autres à la colère, plus rancuniers aussi, mais plus énergiques.

L'énergie n'est pourtant pas la qualité maîtresse de ce peuple, habitué par ses chefs à une obéissance aveugle et exacte. Atrophier la volonté, détruire l'esprit d'initiative, ce sont les grands méfaits de cette forte organisation que nous avons décrite. C'est sa rançon. Un Mossi ne sait pas résister à un plus puissant que lui. Mais souple, presque lâche en face d'un supérieur, il se rattrape avec ses inférieurs et est plein de morgue et de mépris pour celui qui est plus faible que lui.

* * *

Le Mossi ne sait pas vouloir, il ne sait pas réfléchir, non qu'il manque d'intelligence, mais parce qu'il n'a pas l'habitude de la réflexion, excepté si ses intérêts sont en jeu, car alors certains se montrent vraiment intelligents et diplomates.

Le Mossi ne sait pas rechercher le pourquoi des choses, et alors que les petits enfants de chez nous sont raisonneurs et nous embarrassent parfois par leurs questions, un Mossi ne se demandera jamais: Comment cela se fait-il? Pourquoi est-ce ainsi et pas autrement? La première réponse lui suffit.

Ce manque de réflexion est cause de son retard dans la civilisation, car si nous avançons sans cesse, n'est-ce pas parce que nous cherchons à nous rendre compte de tout? D'où encore manque d'idées. Les conversations ne roulent guère que sur les femmes, la nourriture et, dans la saison des pluies, les cultures. Leur cercle d'idées est fort restreint, mais il est susceptible de s'agrandir car le Mossi peut être considéré comme intelligent.

Et si les proverbes sont la sagesse des peuples, les Mossi ne manquent certes pas de sagesse et ils y joignent souvent une grande finesse. Qu'on nous permette, pour le prouver, de citer ici quelques proverbes, saisis au passage dans les conversations par le R. P. THUEUX, qui a bien voulu nous les communiquer et qu'il s'est fait expliquer car certains sont de veritables énigmes pour nos cerveaux européens.

1° Kota ningri, ka kot' sen kong'ye.
Donne en haut, ne donne pas qui manque.
Qui donne à plus puissant que soi, en retire toujours quelqu'avantage.

2° Maokasankaré ñarda kon lo'é naobi taoré.
Le talon s'il se presse ne passera pas le doigt de pied devant.
Ce n'est pas à la poule à chanter devant le coq.

3° Pang'sen tu soré, bûm buta mo'en.
La Force lorsque suit le chemin la Justice s'écarte dans la brousse.
La Force prime le Droit.

4° Ka suét'nil ba'a, nan ñóka.
Qui ne craint pas le nez du chien, il le saisira.
Ne ris pas, car il pourrait t'en cuire.

5° Soam' garedga, mamma n' so.
Un lièvre conteste, le maître de la chasse en est le maître.
Tout lièvre conteste, appartient au maître de la chasse.

6° M'ba di sarabo, n' long'zom.
Mon père a mangé la bouillée de mil, il va vers la farine.
Qui a bu, boira.

7° Fo nan ka suk'korgo, l'e kurn sa'a
Tu n'as pas encore louillé le sac, et tu pleures la foudre.
Tu cries avant d'être battu.

8° Dunna benda, saon beo' kurga
Aujourd'hui un caleçon, mieux que demain un pantalon.
Un tien vaut, se dit-on, mieux que deux tu l'auras.

9° Kobré sen kyama, ya kob' kaodga.
Un os qui (est) solide, c'est un os (qui) cassera.
Tes forces finiront par trahir ton courage.

Les Mossi. Anthropos X—XI.

En haut: L'ensemble de la Mission de Ouagadougou.
En bas: Un campement.

[facing p. 110]

10° Sarab' ki n' beng' a menga.
La bouillie qui n'est plus bonne se reduit en eau elle-même.
Il s'est fait tort a lui-même.

11° Yind' kondro, ka bé sokr'ye.
Une chanson vieille, elle n'est pas demande (on n'en demande pas le sens).
On ne demande pas l'explication de ce que l'on connait.

12° Abra kud' ka leb n' tul' bé ias' yé.
Une panthère vieille ne retourne pas là encore.
On ne retourne pas chez celui à qui on a fait quelque tort.

13° Katré yi no'o, ka ginn' yé.
La hyène a été bon, ne se détourne pas.
On retourne là où on été bien accueilit.

14° F' sen ka nong' néda, a kurga ya yobro.
Toi si tu n'aimes pas un homme, son pantalon c'est un sac.
Un ennemi fait tout mal.

15° Sosra sen kaosda, wata ne korg' wenbsego.
Un conversation qui dure, vient avec du sac le tâtement.
La familiarité engendre le mépris.

16° Pu' pidya, bango luéya.
Le ventre (est) plein, l'indiscrétion (est) liée.
Qui a besoin de vous est discret.

17° Sad' no' o, yid noa' karga.
Un rire bon, plus que d'une poule la cuisse.
Bon accueil vaut mieux que bon repas.

18° Ned' kon wok' a bâka, ti pemsom yi ye.
On n'ouvre pas son épaule, pour que le vent sorte.
On n'abandonne jamais un ami dans le malheur.

19° Bunbundi ka dod' zaloin yé.
Celui qui se donne de la peine ne se relève pas avec rien.
Travaillez, prenez de la peine, c'est le fonds qui manque le moins.

* * *

Le Mossi aime à causer, et si par lui-même il a peu de pensées, si on sait se servir de ce qu'il connait pour l'élever plus haut, il suit facilement un raisonnement, comprend assez vite ce qu'on lui dit, saisit l'enchainement des idées et même les nuances, en un mot a une facilité d'assimilation assez remarquable. Que de fois ne m'est-il pas arrivé de montrer á un chef le maniement d'un fusil, le mécanisme d'une montre ou d'une bicyclette dans ses grandes lignes. Survenait un étranger, le naba reprenait les explications pour montrer évidemment qu'il est intelligent et les a bien saisies, et vraiment j'ai été souvent étonné de voir que la plupart s'en tiraient tout à fait à leur avantage.

Ils aiment les images; au début, ils les regardent souvent à l'envers, mais il suffit généralement de quelques explications pour qu'ils en saisissent le sens. Ils reconnaissent d'abord ce qu'ils ont vu eux-mêmes, les hommes, les chevaux, les chiens, les arbres, et se l'expliquent mutuellement. Ils arrivent à saisir la scène représentée, la raison d'être de l'attitude de tel ou tel personnage.

Dans les conversations, s'ils ne sont pas gênés, ils sont vifs, gais, ils aiment à rire et c'est un compliment qu'ils font de quelqu'un quand ils disent qu'il rit volontiers. Ils font parfois de l'esprit, comprennent les allusions, mais savent garder les distances et ne pas se permettre de familiarités, même en paroles, vis-à-vis d'un supérieur.

Ils sont très capables d'instruction, et les petits esclaves, élevés à Malte, se sont très bien assimilés la langue française, et tous ceux qui les ont fréquentés les disent intelligents. Nous avons eu à l'école des enfants qui ont rapidement appris à écrire, à lire, à compter, et qui n'ont guère oublié quand, mariés, il leur a fallu quitter l'école pour reprendre la pioche. Lire reste pour eux une distraction et ils s'entretiennent dans la connaissance de notre langue. Nous n'avons pas remarqué parmi eux ce qui a été si souvent signalé chez les petits Arabes qui, en bas âge, promettent beaucoup, donnent des signes d'intelligence réelle et dont il n'y a plus moyen de rien tirer quand ils ont grandi. L'intelligence du Mossi se développe au contraire avec l'âge et il y a là un grand moyen d'influence sur eux. Mais il ne faudrait pas que l'instruction, en leur ouvrant l'esprit, leur fasse perdre leur sens religieux et ne mette rien à la place. Ce serait en quelque temps la démoralisation et la ruine de ce peuple, susceptible, semble-t-il de rapides progrès et ce serait dommage.

* * *

Ils aiment raconter des fables, et il serait facile de faire tout un volume de littérature mossi en réunissant les légendes historiques, les proverbes et les fables qui ont cours parmi le peuple. Voici, à titre d'exemple, quelques histoires qui nous ont été racontées. Comme dans tous les contes primitifs, ce sont les animaux qui jouent le rôle de personnages intelligents: il y a longtemps que le roman de la rose nous a habitué à ce genre de littérature.

Le vautour chauve et l'épervier blanc.

Un vautour chauve se promenait de la brousse. Survint un épervier blanc qui dit au vautour: «Pourquoi n'as-tu rien à manger?» Le vautour répondit: «C'est vrai, je n'ai rien à manger. Dieu fasse que je trouve.» L'épervier dit: «Dieu ne peut pas donner assez à manger aux gens pour qu'ils soient rassasiés.» Le vautour répondit: «Si ce n'est pas Dieu qui me donne à manger, je ne mangerai pas.»

L'épervier blanc vit une colombe se poser sur un bois. L'épervier fondit sur elle mais le bois lui perça la poitrine et ressortit derrière la tête. Et le vautour vint et mangea l'épervier.

Le singe et la tortue.

Le singe dit à la tortue de l'accompagner dans sa promenade dans la brousse. Ils virent des fruits de karité, le singe monta dans l'arbre, le secoua et fit tomber tous les fruits. La tortue lui dit: «Singe, ce sont des fruits verts.» Le singe insulta la tortue parce qu'elle l'avait appelé par son nom et qu'il craint le chien. Enfin, la tortue appèle le singe qui descendit de l'arbre et celui-ci dit à la tortue d'aller chercher du feu afin de rôtir de la viande. La tortue alla chercher du feu et trouva un chien couché près de l'âtre. Le chien interrogea la tortue: «Qui t'a envoyé chercher du feu?» La tortue répondit: «C'est le singe qui m'a envoyé chercher du feu.» Le chien lui dit: «Est-ce bien vrai?» La tortue lui dit: «C'est vrai.» Alors le chien fit le mort. La tortue le saisit par la queue, prit du feu et retourna dans la brousse.

Le singe interrogea: «Le chien est-il mort ou est-il vivant?» La tortue lui dit qu'il est mort. Le singe lui dit alors de l'apporter. Il saisit donc le chien par les jambes pour le soulever et prit une pierre pour lui casser les dents. Mais le chien ouvrit les yeux. Le singe dit alors à la tortue: «Viens prendre ce fils de chef pour que je puisse me lever.» La tortue répondit qu'elle ne viendrait pas. Le singe poussa le chien pour le faire tomber, se leva et se sauva. Mais le chien poursuivit le singe, l'attrapa, le tua et la tortue se sauva et se cacha.

Le bouc et l'hyène.

Un bouc était allé à Dori acheter du sel. L'hyène le rencontra et voulut prendre son sel. Sitôt donc qu'elle l'aperçut, elle fut saisie du foie et se mit à courir. Elle vit un lion couché parce qu'il avait mal au ventre et lui dit qu'elle connaît un homme qui a un remède contre les maux de ventre. L'hyène alla appeler le bouc. Le bouc vint, salua le lion et le lion lui raconta qu'il a mal au ventre et que l'hyène lui a dit que le bouc connaît un remède. Le bouc répondit: «En effet, j'ai un remède, mais on le confectionne avec du foie d'hyène.» Le lion dit à l'hyène: «Enlève toi un morçeau de viande et donne-le moi.» L'hyène s'enleva elle-même un morçeau de viande, la donne et le bouc prit la viande, la fit cuire avec du sel et la donna au lion. Le lion lui demanda: «Faut-il en ajouter?» Le bouc répondit: «Que l'hyène se donne elle-même toute entière.» Le lion dit à l'hyène d'enlever sa propre cuisse. L'hyène se mordit et cela lui fit mal et elle prit la fuite. Le lion saisit l'hyène et la tua. Le bouc se sauva avec son sel et retourna chez lui.

C'est pourquoi l'hyène prend les troupeaux. —

* * *

Le Mossi est poli. C'est une de ses qualités qui frappe dès l'abord tous ceux qui ont quelques rapports avec lui. Nous avons vu que les indigènes se saluent toujours entre eux. Craignant ses nabas, il se tient devant eux dans une posture respectueuse sinon presque humiliante; il est aux petits soins avec un étranger de marque, veille à ce que rien de ce qu'un indigène peut désirer ne lui manque: tabouret, natte, sont apportés, tout aussitôt ainsi que la boisson; la nourriture est abondante et généralement soignée et propre.

Le Mossi est très hospitalier et il fait volontiers l'aumône pour elle-même, c'est à dire à un pauvre qui ne pourra pas lui rendre. Il est généreux et partage toujours avec ses voisins, et quand il a de la bière de mil, il en distribue largement. Aucune faiseuse de bière ne laissera passer un étranger de quelque importance sans lui offrir une calebasse à boire et elle ne sera pas contente s'il refuse. Une chose offerte n'est pas reprise et il faut user de ruse pour obtenir que l'indigène reprenne, sous un prétexte quelconque, ce qu'il a une fois donné.

Il offre toujours de la main droite. Passer la calebasse ou de la prendre de la main gauche est une injure. Dans un groupe, l'aîné doit mettre le premier la main au plat et chacun le suivra par ordre d'ancienneté jusqu'au plus jeune. Par contre, l'aîné cesse de manger le premier et c'est le plus jeune qui finit la calebasse et la nettoie. Quand on boit cependant, c'est le plus digne qui doit boire la dernière gorgée.

Un enfant ne salue pas ses parents chez lui, parce qu'il est chez lui; mais si une fille bien élevée voit sa mère arriver avec une cruche pleine ou un panier, elle se précipitera pour la débarrasser, fût-ce à quelques mètres de la soukala. Il est de bon ton, quand une amie est venue en visite, de porter sa charge quelque temps quand elle s'en va. D'ailleurs, un visiteur est toujours reconduit souvent jusqu'à la sortie du village.

Le Mossi ne manque ne de tact, ni de délicatesse. S'il désire quelque chose, il enverra d'abord un ami avec un cadeau, puis fera dire qu'il a une petite affaire à traiter, parfois laissera entendre de quoi il s'agit et partira sans attendre la réponse. Ce n'est que quelque temps après qu'il enverra encore son ami solliciter ce que lui-même désire ou viendra lui-même le dire.

* * *

Sensible, capable d'attachement et même d'affection, le Mossi sait très bien reconnaître le bien qui lui a été fait et cherche à témoigner sa reconnaissance d'une façon ou d'une autre. S'il peut offrir un cadeau, œufs, mil, miel, poule, il l'offre discrètement: «Prends ce mil pour ton cheval; donne cette poule à ton enfant.» S'il n'a rien, il sera aux aguets pour éviter une peine, un travail quelconque à son bienfaiteur, prendra sa pioche pour nettoyer le champ à sa place, l'aidera à soulever un fardeau. Il témoigne sa reconnaissance comme il peut, moins par des paroles que par des actes.

* * *

Le Mossi n'est pas paresseux. On peut même dire qu'en général, il aime le travail et les paresseux sont montrés du doigt, on s'éloigne d'eux, on les méprise. A l'hivernage, tout le monde doit être aux champs depuis le matin jusqu'au soir, hommes, femmes, enfants, ne restent à la maison que ceux qui ne peuvent travailler ou qui y ont de la besogne. En cette saison, le Mossi travaille beaucoup. Pendant la saison sèche, au contraire, il a du loisir. Mais outre que la plupart tissent ou voyagent pour leur commerce, outre que les enfants ont encore à couper la paille pour couvrir les toits, qu'il y a tout le mil à battre, il faut avouer qu'il n'est pas possible de travailler en ces pays de soleil torride comme en nos pays tempérés d'Europe. Et puis, pourquoi travailler puisqu'il y a fort peu de débouchés? Depuis que la paix française assure les communications, le commerce a pris une grande extension. Les indigènes, certains de récolter le fruit de leur traveil, développent leurs cultures et tous les ans, les champs gagnent sur la brousse. Les villages les plus importants sont tout entourés de cultures à perte de vue. S'ils ne travaillent pas davantage, ce n'est donc pas par paresse, mais faute de

[facing p. 114]

Les Mossi.

Anthropos X–XI.

En haut: Clocher de l'église de Ouagadougou.
En bas: L'intérieur de l'église de Ouagadougou.

débouchés. Il semble bien que le pays se développera très rapidement sitôt que des voies de communications l'auront ouvert au commerce européen.

* * *

Tels sont, très succinctement exposés en toute impartialité, les qualités et les défauts de ce peuple. Lesquels l'emportent? Le lecteur en jugera. A nos yeux, le Mossi est un peuple extrêmement intéressant et susceptible d'un brillant avenir mais à une condition, c'est de devenir chrétien. Ce qui frappe surtout en lui, nous l'avons dit et redit, c'est son sens religieux et sa soumission absolue à tout ce qui est revêtu d'autorité.

Evidemment, notre civilisation européenne battra tout d'abord en brèche ces deux tendances, et par quoi les remplacera-t-elle? Le jour où l'instruction sera assez développée pour faire douter les Mossi de l'existance de leurs génies, de la puissance de leurs sorciers; le jour où ils sentiront que leurs chefs n'ont plus d'autre autorité que celle qu'ils tiennent d'un Blanc qui réside souvent à plusieurs journées de marche mais auprès duquel il est toujours possible de réclamer et qui écoute volontiers les plaintes déposées contre les nabas, qu'on peut faire mettre ainsi son naba en prison ou tout au moins lui causer de graves ennuis: ce jour là, le Mossi relèvera la tête, et comme il ne laisse pas d'être indépendant quand il n'a pas peur, ses chefs n'auront plus aucune autorité; ce sera l'anarchie. Les croyances superstitieuses ayant perdu toute force, les indigènes deviendront sceptiques, et l'égoisme règnera en maître avec tout son cortège de vices.

Seul le christianisme peut empêcher cette décomposition morale en donnant à tous une juste notion de ce qu'est l'autorité et en remplaçant la crainte des génies et des sorciers par la crainte ou mieux par l'amour de Dieu. L'Eglise a toujours été la grande initiatrice de la civilisation car celle-ci ne consiste pas seulement dans un certain développement économique ni dans un bienêtre materiel plus grand, mais surtout dans l'élévation morale des pensées et des sentiments.

La conversion de ce peuple au catholicisme n'est d'ailleurs qu'une affaire de temps, de tact et de bonté de la part des missionnaires. Se faire aimer des indigènes; gagner sinon la confiance et l'affection des nabas, du moins leur estime et, si possible, leur sympathie en respectant tout ce qui en eux est respectable, en se montrant plein de déférence pour eux; expliquer à tous, grands et petits, ce que l'on attend d'eux, le leur faire bien comprendre, car ils sont capables de le saisir, mais avec ceux sur lesquels on a quelque autorité, savoir veiller à l'exécution de ce que l'on a commandé et être ferme au besoin, et on obtiendra tout des Mossi.

Mais les missionnaires sont, hélas! trop peu nombreux. Jusqu'ici, en effet, il n'y a que huit missionnaires et deux postes pour évangéliser 1,500.000 âmes. On ne peut donc que désirer voir leur nombre s'augmenter considérablement car les emplacements favorables à l'installation des missions ne manquent pas, et partout où les missionnaires pourront s'établir et dépenser leur zèle, ils sauront, en répendant la civilisation chrétienne, faire accepter, bien mieux faire aimer la domination de la France qui les envoie, au nom de Dieu. Mais il faut se hâter. L'Islamisme peut devenir un danger et, dans un avenir plus ou moins rapproché, de grandes voies de communications traverseront ce pays. Le chemin de fer s'approche rapidement, amenant avec lui le développement matériel mais aussi tous les déchets de notre civilisation. Puisse-t-il trouver le cœur de nos Mossi cuirassé contre tous les appâts du monde, prêt à s'ouvrir à tout ce qu'il y a de beau et de noble dans nos conceptions européennes, mais assez fort pour résister à leurs attraits dissolvants et corrupteurs.

2: Mangin FA28 Mossi

Encore une fois, le christianisme seul peut les sauver d'un esclavage bien plus redoutable que celui du corps, l'esclavage de toutes les passions. Mais comment connaîtront-ils le christianisme si personne ne le leur enseigne? Qui le leur enseignera s'il n'y a pas de prédicateurs? Et comment les prédicateurs pourront-ils évangéliser s'ils n'ont pas de ressources? Oh! qui nous donnera le moyen d'inonder ce pays de missionnaires zélés? qui ajoutera, à la couronne royale du Christ ce beau fleuron que le Divin Maître a conquis au prix de son sang!

3:Tauxier G-4, 5 (1908-1923) 1924 FA28 Mossi FA28

000

New Notes on the Mossi and the Gourounsi
/Nouvelles Notes sur le Mossi et le Gourounsi/

by

L. Tauxier

Paris: 1924

Émile Larose, Libraire-Éditeur

Translated from the French by Paul A. Mankin

Human Relations Area Files
1959

/title page/

FIRST BOOK

Chapter 1

The Origins of the Mossi

174 Most of the people who have dealt with the history of the Mossi have said that they come from the southeast, from the region of Gambakha or Gambaga (Dagomba). From there they are said to have occupied successively, going toward the north, the regions of Fada-N'Gourma, Ouagadougou, and Ouahigouya.

But before that where did they come from?

Captain Lambert, who commanded the circle of Ouagadougou in 1906-07, has tried to find an answer to this question in his study of the Mossi country, published in the Bulletin de la Société de Géographie de l'Afrique Occidentale française /Bulletin of the Geographic Society of French West Africa/, 1908.

174 171 "South of Bornu, " he writes (op. cit. No. 7, page 166), "in the German Cameroons, people still exist who are known as Mossah and who, according to local tradition, were once master of the whole country. At present they are confined to a rather restricted area (the valley of Logone-Cameroons).

"The Mossah today bear such a striking physical resemblance to the Mossi that one could not have lived among them without recognizing the similarities; the tattooing is identical except for the circumflex accent which has been more recently acquired, as we shall demonstrate. The physical resemblance is almost total, and, besides, the Mossah have the same social organization as the Mossi, with all its characteristic hierarchy. In brief, /2/ there is no doubt as to the common origin of the two groups, and we can be certain that the presence of the Mossah in one part of Bornu and their traditional supremacy in the country in bygone days establish with certainty the habitat where the people we are dealing with must have been formed and developed. All this, of course, occurred during a period long before the events that allowed the Arab chroniclers to reveal their existence to us." (1)

114
171
174

1. Actually, these "Arab chroniclers" is simply Es-Sadi, the author of Tarikh-es-Soudan /History of Sudan/, who wrote as late as the seventeenth century. As a matter of fact, it was the Portuguese writer, the great historian and geographer, Jean de Barros, author of l'Asia (1552-53), who was the first to reveal the existence of the Mossi in the sixteenth century. Léon, the African, did not know of them, nor did the Arab geographers and historians of the Middle Ages. Let us add that one should verify exactly in the area whether the Mossah resemble the Mossi other than by name. The matter has become relatively easy since the French occupation of the Cameroons.

171 Captain Lambert adds in a note:
174 "A new question arises here: can one consider the Mossi as being autochthonous to Bornu, or should their long stay in that region be considered as a step in the great migratory movement that, in successive phases, has brought them to the heart of the Niger estuary?

"In the present state of our knowledge, it would be unwise to take a firm position. We shall merely show that the feudal system that characterizes the political constitution of the Mossi can be compared to the system prevalent in Abyssinia. The hierarchical set-up seems to be identical in certain respects; leaders are appointed under analogous conditions, and the election of the Negus is accompanied by a period of anarchy which we also find here and which seems to go back to ancient traditions.

174 "It may well be that this goes beyond pure coincidence. While 197 we were in the process of editing a small dictionary of the Mossi language, we took the trouble to find out whether the dialects spoken in Abyssinia were likely to give us some clues on this point. We must admit, however, that the vocabularies of the Galla, Ahmaris /sic/, and Tigré languages that we consulted have not provided us /3/ with convincing arguments. But it is a proven fact today that, from the

174 viewpoint of ethnographic research, text similarities do not mean
197 very much, and idioms that are not fixed by writing may, within a few centuries, become deformed to the extent of being unrecognizable. While the value of grammatical comparisons is much more important, we have unfortunately had neither the time nor the means to make use of this method. We will, therefore, merely indicate this point of view which, in our opinion, could lead to fruitful observations. On 174 the other hand, missionaries have claimed that the Mossi traditionally would have preserved the symbolic notion of the Christian cross, a fact we have been unable to verify and which, without being impossible a priori, seems unlikely."

After this parenthesis about the distant origins of the Mossi, Captain Lambert continues:

"It is indeed highly probable, and here again, lacking written documents, we have only oral traditions to base our opinions on, that the Mossi people, split up by the impact of a Moslem invasion from the east, must have, through successive waves and losing ground in the opposite direction, spread further toward the west, so that the Mossi-bé (1), who still form several agglomerations in the western

1. Mossi-bé is simply the plural of the word Mossi in Peuhle /Peul/ language.

part of Sokoto and even in the Dounzou circle and who also show striking analogies with the Mossi proper, can also be used as a reference. (Captain Lambert adds in a note: "Among the Mossi-bé we [304 find the circumflex accent which would complete the ethnic tatooing
171 of the Mossi as it is today. This mark rightly belongs to the natives
69] of the left bank of the Niger river up to the angle formed by the Dollol-Maouri.") These agglomerations indicate, in a very approximate fashion, the location of the Mossi empire at the historical period that evidently marks its apogee of power; toward 1350, as we saw /4/ in the Tarikh, Timbuktu was conquered by the sultan of Mossi."

174 The incident to which Captain Lambert refers here is the con-
114 quest of Timbuktu by the Mossi (in 1333 exactly, according to the most advanced calculations) (1), which is mentioned by Es-Sadi in

114
174

1. See the book by Lieutenant Marc, Le Pays Mossi /The Land of the Mossi/, pp. 136-138. The author sets the date of the fall of Timbuktu to the Mossi at 1333 or 1334. Delafosse, in his book Haut-Sénegal-Niger /Upper Senegal and Niger/, took the date of 1333. Binger (op. cit. Vol. I, pp. 481, 482) gives the date of 1329 according to the Tarikh, but assumes it to be wrong and that it was in 1326 that the Mossi, who he says were then part of the kingdom of Mali, captured Timbuktu for the sake of and by the order of the Mali kings. We know now that this assumption is false, that the Mossi were never under the domination of Mali, and that they sacked Timbuktu on their own behalf in 1333. Besides, the Malinké recaptured Timbuktu fairly soon thereafter and held it until 1433, at which time the leader Targui Akil took possession. The Mossi expedition against Timbuktu was, everything considered, nothing more than a raid, perfectly executed, but without any follow-up.

the Tarikh-es-Soudan /History of Sudan/; but one cannot conclude, as Captain Lambert does, that in the fourteenth century the Mossi were still living on the east bank of the Niger River, in what today is Djerma, and that they had not yet reached, at that time, the Mossi of today, nor even the Dagomba, and that it was from Djerma that they conducted their triumphant raid on Timbuktu. If the Mossi really did come from Bornu and ended up in Dagomba, and, as is only natural, spread on to Haoussa and Djerma (2), they did so in the very

2. As a matter of fact, one can explain the Mossi colonies of Sokoto as having come from the regions of Ouagadougou, Yatenga, or Fada N'Gourma at a relatively recent date, the thirteenth, fourteenth, or fifteenth centuries.

114 distant past, since we must place Rawa, the first conqueror of
174 Ouagadougou and Ouahigouya (see further on), in the twelfth century A. D., and his parents came from Dagomba where it is clear the Mossi have lived for some time. The crossing of Haoussa and Djerma by the forefathers of the Dagomba Mossi takes us back to a period that obviously cannot be precisely established, but which is definitely earlier than the fourteenth century (when the Mossi conquered Timbuktu), and one must recognize, contrary to Captain Lambert's opinion, that the Mossi who took Timbuktu came from the south (probably from Ouahigouya) and not from the east (the Say region). We would like to point out /5/ also that they were a great deal closer to Timbuktu in Ouahigouya than in Say. Once this point has been cleared up and the ensuing mistakes corrected, the plausibility of the discovery of the road followed by the Mossi who came from Bornu (if they came from there), which was re-traced by Captain Lambert, is acceptable.

These observations also apply to the continuation of Captain Lambert's report. He says that the wars waged by the second Songhaï empire against the Mossi (sixteenth century) forced the latter to leave the Djerma country to go southwest toward Dagomba. Obviously, all of this is quite inaccurate, but, without accepting Captain Lambert's cause for the emigration and his establishing it further in the past, we can accept the route he traces.

174 "This movement," says Captain Lambert, speaking of the march from Djerma to Dagomba, "took place in a southerly direction, and the Mossi, after having followed the Niger River, crossed it at a point located between Say and Ilo, but much closer to Ilo.

"North of Ilo, the custom of shaving the heads of the chieftains'
[301] [302] wives still persists. These women also wear metal leggings (1), particularly characteristic of the Mossi peoples and sometimes encountered among peoples who have been in contact with them.

[556] 1. Captain Lambert undoubtedly is referring to the beautiful copper leggings, about 20 centimeters high, worn by the rich Mossi women.

"From this point, the migration, leaving the Bariba country on the left (2), went in a straight line through Gourma and the Pama region

174 2. One may wonder whether the Bariba were not part of this Mossi or pre-Mossi migration, since the Bariba have certain points of resemblance, from a sociological viewpoint, with the Mossi: like the Mossi, they are warrior-horsemen, pillagers, and courageous. On the other hand, Delafosse (Vocabulaires comparatifs /Comparative Vocabularies/) wonders, on page 224, if one should not connect the Bariba to the Mossi-Gourounsi, from a linguistic viewpoint.

173 Also, Captain Lambert says in a note on page 170: "The leader of Djougou (Dahomey) is of Mossi origin. Tradition claims that the inhabitants of this village, divided by internal strife brought about by the rivalry of several pretenders to power, offered the leadership to a weaver who had been living for a long time in Djougou where he most certainly kept out of local squabbles; the latter refused the offer. But the people of Djougou refused to give up and made him a prisoner in his hut. Having to choose between the disadvantages of power and his own captivity, the weaver could not but make a decision; at the end of the sixth day, he consented to take command. His descendants have succeeded him since that time without interruption, and, in memory of the incident described, a custom was set up which requires that the new leader remain enclosed in his hut for the six days following his election."

174 as far as Gambakha, the present-day capital of the northern territories /6/ of the English colony of the Gold Coast. This is where the leader who had organized the exodus chose his residence. We have no positive information about him as a person, but it is certain that the establishment of the Mampourssi and Dagomba kingdom can be traced to him or his immediate successors."

174 [114] Captain Lambert adds in a note: "According to Colonel M.-P. Northcott, the founder of the Gambakha dynasty was called Tosogo; but the information that he provides about him seems hardly in agreement with the tradition we are relying upon here." (See Report on the Northern Territories of the Gold-Coast, London, 1890).

Captain Lambert continues as follows:

"The creation of the actual Mossi empire came later; it is nevertheless safe to assert that from that period on, some of the new inhabitants of Mampoursi undertook to open a passage toward the north and achieved it in two different ways. One group, after leaving Gambakha, pushed the Boussanga back into the region they occupy today and reached Béloussa country where they spread toward the west and north, occupying a vast stretch of land which is today almost exclusively inhabited by the Mossi. The other group, blazing a path in Nankana country, went north of Tiébélé and pushed the Boussanga back from the opposite side, thus crushing them in a vice, so to speak, and spread out in the country circumscribed by the Red Volta, toward Ouagadougou.

"One has only to glance at a map of the Mossi country to recognize the direction of these two parallel movements which came together north of the present-day Boussangsé, an almost uninhabited region at the time of the great Mossi migration. It was there that the autochthonous Boussanga, who were then occupying the whole Tenkodogo country, were forced to find refuge and have since been just existing, hostile to any fusion with the invader."

173 Captain Lambert then goes on to the legend of the origins of the true Mossi empire:

"A naba of the Gambakha (the Gambakha, as we have seen, were directly descended from the leader who had led the great immigration to the Mampoursi River), having reached the end of his life without an heir, believed this fact to be a fulfillment of destiny. Nothing in this world is permanent, and doubtless his glorious dynasty had to make way for a new line of leaders. He was at least resigned to this, but his lonely old age was what saddened him above all else. He therefore implored the spirits to give him a child, pronouncing the solemn vow that he would dedicate it to virginity, whether it be a boy or girl. As if by a miracle, a girl was born to him at once. He called her Pogotoenga (woman of the tree) (1), considering her, therefore, from

173 1. Pogotoenga, or rather Pogotoéga, means "woman of the baobab, " and comes from pogo, meaning "woman, " and toéga, meaning "baobab" /a species of tree/. One may wonder what relation there is between this name and the fact that Pogotoenga was dedicated to virginity, if one ignores the customs of the Sudanese. A woman dedicated 568 to a baobab (a powerful vegetal divinity) is considered the spouse of the baobab. Therefore, she cannot enter into marriage with a man, which means forced celibacy. It is true that certain Blacks (for instance, the Dialonké of the Faranah circle, French Guinea) consider that a woman married to a spirit owes him only her spirit or spiritual form, and that her material body is free. From this arises the fact that with those Blacks, and some others as well, women-fetishes, women married to spirits or divinities, are actually prostitutes and practice
[786] prostitution. They are, besides, very rare. In short, they are allowed to prostitute themselves but not to marry. It is sacred prostitution, well known to the whole of oriental and Greco-Roman antiquity. Thus, virginity (sacred), on the one hand, and prostitution (sacred), on the other, are rather strangely derived from the same order of ideas.

173 her birth as being a stranger to her sex, and he had her given masculine clothes.

"Pogotoenga developed quickly. At the age of ten, she reached a degree of incomparable beauty, and at about the same period, torn by the ardors of puberty, she succeeded--despite the strict vigilance of the old man, anxious to remain faithful to his oath--in fleeing the paternal household.

Although pursued for a long time, she managed to evade all /8/ attempts at capturing her, until the day when, wandering in what is 173 today the Tenkodogo country, she met, in the midst of the bush, the elephant hunter Rialé, a lonely and violent man who seduced her. She had a son, Widiraogo, and a daughter, Wedaogo, by Rialé. (1)

1. In other legends (see my Noir du Yatenga /Blacks of Yatenga/, p. 58) Pogotoenga is called Yennenga, or simply Poko (woman). As far as the name Ouidiraogo or Widiraogo is concerned, it means male horse, stallion. I do not know exactly what the name Wedaogo or Ouédaogo means, but it seems to me to be unsuitable for a girl, since it contains the word daogo or raogo which means "male" in Mossi.

"In order that the quality of royal blood inherited by these children not be debased by exogamy, Rialé and Pogotoenga decided to marry them to each other, and from this marriage were born also a boy and a girl, Zunghrama (2) and Yuganemdo. For the same reason,

2. This is the Zoungourana of the Moulins-Carrier and Vadier legends (See my Noir du Yatenga, p. 60).

Zunghrama married his sister (3), and from this union, three sons

3. The unions of brothers and sisters are not indicated in the other variations of the legend.

were born: Oubri, Oubrogo, and Yampango. Oubri was to found the dynasty of Ouagadougou; Oubrogo, that of Tenkodogo; and Yampango, that of Gourma (4). Oubri's offspring were the most glorious and the

4. The Moulins-Carrier and Vadier variations present things somewhat differently. Zoungourana is supposed to have founded the Tenkodogo dynasty himself; his brother, Diaba, is supposed to have founded the Fada-N'Gourma dynasty; and Rawa, his eldest brother (in Mossi, "Rawa" means the courageous, the strong), is supposed to have founded the Rawatenga dynasty which has since become the Yatenga. As for the Ouagadougou dynasty, it was indeed Oubri, son of Zoungourana, who is said to have founded it. On this last point, all the traditions are in agreement, the one on which Captain Lambert bases his theories, as well as those of Moulins and Vadier.

173

[631] most powerful. The relations between the naba of Ouagadougou and those of Tenkodogo and Gourma, their cousins, were always those of a sovereign to his vassal (5).

5. It is unlikely that this situation prevailed from the beginning, since the higher authority should have been that of the Tenkodogo naba. But when the Mossi kingdom of Ouagadougou subsequently became the more powerful, it established its primacy over the neighboring, less powerful kingdoms of Tenkodogo and Fada-N'Gourma.

"Their common ancestor, Zunghrama, died in Komtoéga, where his grave is still shown."

174 In conclusion, Captain Lambert states:

1. That the Mossi come from south of Bornu, an area still inhabited by a people, the Mossah, who greatly resemble them. /9/

2. That the Mossi went through Haoussa and Djerma in order to come to Dagomba.

3. That the Mossi of today come from those of Dagomba.

He also states, but we can ignore this claim as being absolutely contrary to the facts known to us today, that the journey from Djerma to Dagomba was made during or after the sixteenth century A. D. and was occasioned by the crusades that the second Songhaï empire

174 led against the Mossi. In fact, the Mossi had left Dagomba long before the fourteenth century and occupied their present sites, including Yatenga.

173 Dr. Ruelle as well admits that the Mossi came from the east before settling in Dagomba. "The same tradition," he says (1), "has it that warriors who came from the east defeated at Gambakha the Dagomba tribe who was them master of the land, and they set up their own leader. His daughter, Ouiaraouga, fell in love with an elephant hunter with whom she ran away, and, as her father tried to apprehend her, she took refuge in Tenkodogo. There she married the local chief, a Boussanga called Zangoumana, whose grave in Komterga is still a place of pilgrimage for the Mossi. Their son, Bougoum, after several expeditions in that region, conquered Koupéla. He, in turn, had three sons: Houbri, Nabakéré, and Kouda, all of whom made further conquests. The first pushed on as far as Yako, made Ouagadougou his capital, and forced his two brothers to recognize him as suzerain." (2).

1. L'Anthropologie /Anthropology/, Vol. XV (1904), p. 675. The tradition mentioned refers to the tradition of the old people.

2. I quote this version which is somewhat different from the others and which also has some mistakes since the name of "Ouiaraouga" (Ouidiraogo, "stallion, male horse") is given to the young girl whom the other traditions call Poko, Pokotoéga, Yennenga, etc. The name rightfully belongs to her son and not to her. It should be noted that Zoungourana (or Zangoumana) here becomes a Boussanga, the second husband of the ex-maiden, daughter of the king of Dagomba.

174 Lieutenant Marc also believes that the Mossi originated in the east. "Where did the Mossi come from when they arrived in the

174 country of Gambaga?" he asks (op. cit., p. 134). "It is rather difficult to /10/ speak authoritatively on this subject: probably from the central African Sudan, the region of the Chad. All Mossi traditions are unanimous in placing their country of origin very far in the east ..."

Lieutenant Marc had already said on page 130, "Local traditions have it that the Mossi come from very far in the east. Very long ago, they occupied a country located beyond the Niger River, whose capital was called Aliaman. This country is presently inhabited by the Songhaï. Then the Mossi came to live in Dagomba, defeated its inhabitants, and the leader of the Mossi settled in Gambaga." (1)

173
174

1. There follows the legend of the daughter of the king of Gambakha. She is wrongly called Ouidiraogo, "stallion," as in Dr. Ruelle's version. Lieutenant Marc goes on to make another mistake by saying that Ouidiraogo means "hoof" (instead of male horse). Zoungourana (whom Lieutenant Marc calls Zoungourouma or Zougourouma) is presented here, as he was by Dr. Ruelle, as the second husband of the daughter of the king of Gambakha and as a Boussansé king. In Lieutenant Marc's version, he "waged war against his father-in-law and conquered the whole country from Gambaga to Koupéla." Then "Zougourouma had three sons: Séré, Oubri, and Couda. The first became naba of Boussouma; the second, Naba Oubri, conquered the country of Ouagadougou, set up his capital there, and took possession of Yatenga. Naba Oubri is considered by the Mossi as the first of the Moro-naba and founder of the present dynasty. His successors were his brother Couda, and then his son Nigamenda."

174 In this tradition reported by Lieutenant Marc, there is obviously an element of Moslem imaginations; Aliaman probably designates

174 Yemen. But the indication that this country is presently inhabited by the Songhay /sic/ certainly points to Djerma or Zaberma, slightly east of the Niger River in the Say and Dosso region. By dissociating the Moslem legend (undoubtedly created by some Yarse Moslem of the Mossi) from the rest of the tale, one still comes back to the temporary and distant occupation of Djerma by the ancestors of the Mossi.

174 Delafosse, on the other hand, contrary to Dr. Ruelle, Captain
114 Lambert, and Lieutenant Marc, although, like the others, he has the Mossi come from Dagomba to their present habitat (see Haut-Sénégal-Niger /Upper Senegal and Niger/, Vol. I, pp. 305-310), seems disinclined to accept the idea of an eastern origin. He says (page 310, in a note), "Lieutenant Marc seems to want to attribute an eastern 174 origin to the Mossi. To strengthen his hypothesis, he says that the 171 organization of the court of the Morho nâba (emperors of the Mossi)
644 is unique in western Africa, while there are /11/ equivalents in 114 Haoussa, Bornu, etc. I should like to point out that this argument is of little value, precisely because, contrary to Lieutenant Marc's theory, one finds in all ancient states of western Africa (Ghana, Mali, Tekrour, Gao, Dahomey, Benin, etc.) an organization absolutely analogous to that of the Mossi court (see part IV of this work and compare with the reports of Arab geographers and early European 174 travelers)." Of course I agree with Delafosse in not finding Lieutenant 114 Marc's argument very penetrating (1), but Ruelle, Lambert, and

1. Here is the argument as developed by Lieutenant Marc (op. cit., p. 134, 135):

"The feudal organization of the Mossi country, the court of the Moro-Naba, its pages, and its eunuchs, are all unique in western Africa. On the other hand, the black monarchs, as they are known in central Africa, seem to live in a setting that greatly resembles the one in which the Moro-Naba lives. The sultans of Zinder, Bornu, and Wadai have also a court, eunuchs, and pages. The little we know about the organization of their empires seems rather similar to what we have seen among the Mossi. But our > documentation on this matter is not extensive enough to enable us to attempt a comparative study."

174
114

Marc do not base themselves exclusively on this argument. They also use a tradition of the Mossi themselves, and it would doubtless be unwise to reject it without examining it further. An argument that could be cited in favor of a very ancient occupation of Djerma by the ancestors of the Mossi is Binger's following remark: "The Mossi must have remained in contact with the Touareg /Tuareg/ for a fairly long time (2) ... since they partially adopted their dress and use, as they do, the crutch-handled [poignée en croix] sabor."

[171 411]

> 2. In this quotation, I have omitted the word "after," since Binger assumes that the Mossi, after taking Timbuktu in 1326 by order of the Mali, remained there until 1433, having, therefore, one century of contact with the Touareg. In reality, the Mossi stayed in Timbuktu only a very short time, and this raid could not have given them a prolonged contact with the Touareg, from whom they were separated before the fall of Timbuktu, and again as soon as they left the town, by the entire Songhaï country stretching along the banks of the Niger River. On the contrary, if they had formerly occupied Djerma, before the Djermabé or the Songhaï, one can easily understand this contact with the Touareg as well as the existence of the sword with the short crutch-handle /poignée en croix (Binger wrongly calls this straight sword a saber). In addition, when Binger speaks of the Targui /Tuareg/ dress, adopted in part by the Mossi, he doubtless thinks of the lithâm (or face veil) which was then worn by the Mossi horsemen. At the present time, they are no longer worn, and I have never seen them among the Mossi, where I lived 1908-1909.

[291]

174 do, the crutch-handled /poignée en croix/ saber."
114 Actually, we must admit that we know nothing certain about the Mossi outside of Dagomba. This is what I /12/ clearly stated in my Noir du Yatenga /Blacks of Yatenga/ (1917) (1). The move into

1. See pp. 57 and 58.

Djerma is conjectural, and the question concerning the Mossah would have to be settled by an inquiry made in the Cameroons. At one
174 time I was tempted to connect the Mossi with the races of the south,
197 the Agni-Achanti /Ashanti/, and it seems certain that close relationships exist (2) between the numerical vocabularies of the Voltaic

[171]

2. See Appendix No. I. In addition, a woman called Aoura-Poko plays as important a part in the Baoulé historic tradition as in the Mossi historic tradition. And, although the word for woman is oba, eba, bla in Achanti, Abron, and Baoulé, the Baoulé heroine is called Poko, like Poko (woman) or Pokotoéga (woman of the baobab) of the Mossi tradition.

group and the Agni-Achanti group. But can one base a linguistic comparison on vocabulary alone? It would also have to be proven, grammatically speaking, that the Voltaic linguistic group is very close to the Agni-Achanti group. (3) And this has not yet been done.

174
114

3. Delafosse says that there is no special relation between these two groups from a grammatical viewpoint. In a more general manner, Delafosse would now like to believe, as far as Mossi origins are concerned, that Mossi residence in their present country goes back far before the eleventh century A. D. Apparently only a band of pillagers and happy warriors, a princely dynasty came from Gambakha in the eleventh century to found small kingdoms in a country which had already been colonized by the Mossi. However, there is a drawback to this opinion: the existence among the Mossi of an autochthonous people (Nioniossé or Foulsé /Fulse/) still extant, who are far from having, always and everywhere, merged with the Mossi. According to my observations made in the area (I spent three years in Yatenga, from 1913 to 1916), there are still more Nioniossé than Mossi in Yatenga, 100, 000 as against 70, 000 (see my Noir du Yatenga, pages 665 and 666). The existence of this earlier people proves that the Mossi colonization is a relatively recent one. Also, the Mossi could not have penetrated and survived in an already inhabited region in any way other than by forming small, conquering military monarchies. I think therefore, that the Mossi came, with their chiefs, from Dagomba, and that they didn't reach the present Mossi country until ... But we are coming back to the chronological question which we will deal with later on.

174
114

[563]

174 For the moment, then, we are still reduced to dealing with hypotheses insofar as the origins of the Mossi are concerned. We know that the Mossi come from Dagomba and that they probably entered the country as conquerors. But where did they come from then? From the north-east? From the south? From the east? We cannot yet answer with certainty, just as we cannot for so many other historical, philosophical, and scientific questions, alas!

Grammatici certant et adhuc sub judice lis est.

174 /13/ This lack of certainty concerning the origins of the Mossi
141 should not prevent us from treating the anthropological question of the Mossi. On the contrary, for it is quite evident that, while linguistics can give us valuable information about the origins and affinities of the Mossi, anthropology can give us even more valuable and far-reaching information since, as we know, it is obviously easier for a people to change its language than the form of its skull. Let us, therefore, look to anthropology and consult Dr. Ruelle to find out what the Mossi are from a somatic viewpoint.

14 Dr. Ruelle, in the work cited below (1), has worked with 100

[118]

1. L'Anthropologie, Vol. XV (1904), pp. 519-561 and 657-703.

Mossi men (unfortunately, he did not measure women, which is a regrettable shortcoming and can invalidate certain averages, for instance, the ones concerning stature). From the viewpoint of skin color, which he generally finds dark brown (not only for the Mossi but for the other tribes of the IInd military territory which he studied at the same time as the Mossi), he gives for the Mossi the following numbers on Broca's chromatic scale:

70 Mossi out of 100 have no. 42
14 Mossi out of 100 have no. 41
19 Mossi out of 100 have no. 37 (2)

[84]

2. Page 522.

For the horizontal cephalic index:

2 Mossi have 65	15 Mossi have 75
4 Mossi have 68	11 Mossi have 76
4 Mossi have 69	7 Mossi have 77
2 Mossi have 70	8 Mossi have 78
3 Mossi have 71	6 Mossi have 79
13 Mossi have 72	1 Mossi has 80
17 Mossi have 73	2 Mossi have 81 (3)
5 Mossi have 74

141 /14/ 3. Page 524. If Dr. Ruelle had taken care to measure Mossi women, it is probable that the cephalic index would have been larger, since we know, for instance, that Lobi women have an average horizontal cephalic index of 75.89, while the men have only 74.36; Birifon women have 77.35, while the men have only 74.58; and finally, Dagari women have 72.32, while the men have only 72.09. This means that the women have a shorter skull than the men, yet it is no broader, that is to say, they have a smaller cerebral capacity. This also undoubtedly means that these women's ancestors probably belonged, more or less, to the pygmy or Negrito race whose unequivocal traces are still found on the Ivory Coast, a racial group with skulls shorter than those of the tall Negroes without being commensurately broader, quite the contrary.

We see, thus, that 12 Mossi out of 100 are ultradolichocephalic or hyperdolichocephalic, 53 are properly called dolichocephalic, 32 subdolichocephalic, and 3 are subbrachycephalic.

The average is 74.65, that is, clearly dolichocephalic. The extremes of the indices are: maximum, 81.76; minimum, 65.62. The spread is 16.14.

141 171 The peoples who most resemble the Mossi on Dr. Ruelle's table are:

the Ouangarbé or Yarsé	74.95	(average)
the Samo	74.90	"
the Nounouma	74.40	"
the Birifon	74.58	"
the Lobi	74.36	"

141 The nasal index for 100 Mossi is:

1 where the nasal index figures between 80 and 84.9

141

2	where the nasal index figures	between 85 and 89.9
9	-	between 90 and 94.9
14	-	between 95 and 99.9
29	-	between 100 and 104.9
17	-	between 105 and 109.9
11	-	between 110 and 114.9
15	-	between 115 and 119.9
2	-	above 120

The average is 104.60. Considered in detail, we find one mesorrhine (up to 85), 23 platyrrhine (from 85 to 100) and 74 hyperplatyrrhine (from 100 to 120) (1).

1. Page 538.

[171] The Mossi is thus decidedly platyrrhine and even hyperplatyrrhine, although less so than the Bambara.

As far as height is concerned, the average of 94 Mossi men is 1.71 /15/ (exactly 1.712). But this average would be quite a bit lowered if Dr. Ruelle could have measured women (1).

[171]

1. Lobi women measure on the average 1.66, while the men measure 1.75; Birifon women measure 1.62, while the men measure 1.75; Dagari women are 1.59, while the men are 1.72 (p. 550).

141 In conclusion, Dr. Ruelle's study tells us that the Mossi are 144 dolichocephalic, platyrrhine, and tall. These are characteristics usually attributed to the Black race in general (tall Negroes, not Negritos). These traits do not differentiate the Mossi to any extent from the peoples surrounding them. In order to reach anthropological conclusions about the origin of the Mossi, more far-reaching somatic studies than those now in existence will need to be made on the Mossi themselves and on the hundreds of Negro tribes living in the Sudan, between Abyssinia and the Atlantic and between the Sahara and the Gulf of Guinea.

Chapter 2

Mossi Chronology

174 Mossi chronology is still a hypothetical construction, at least insofar as the beginnings of Mossi history are concerned. Since the beginning of the fifteenth century, historians are almost in agreement, and for the eighteenth century they have reached complete accord. Delafosse, in his Haut-Sénégal-Niger /Upper Senegal and Niger/ (1912), has given a complete chronology of the Mossi (the regions of Ouagadougou, Yatenga, and Fada-N'Gourma) (1), while I have traced

1. See Vol. I, pp. 306-312, and Vol. II, pp. 126, 139-140 and 149-150.

one myself in my Noir du Soudan: Pays Mossi et Gourounsi /Blacks of the Sudan: Country of the Mossi and Gourounsi/ (1912), for the naba of Ouagadougou (2). In 1917, I took up this question more thoroughly in my Noir du Yatenga /Blacks of Yatenga/ (pp. 667-677). I give here these three different chronologies insofar as they concern Yatenga, that is, the northern kingdom of all the Mossi, which is the one that dealt with the Mali, the Songhaï, and the Bambara throughout the ages— which is the one, therefore, for which we have some points

2. See pp. 458-462. In truth, these pages do not give an actual chronological list, but there are various indications from which one can deduce the dates referring to the kings of Ouagadougou which I have given on page 674 of my Noir du Yatenga /Blacks of Yatenga/, under the title : "Chronologie du Mossi (région de Ouagadougou /Chronology of the Mossi (region of Ouagadougou)/, from my Noir du Soudan /Blacks of the Sudan/, 1912" (Appendix No. V).

174 of reference given us by the chroniclers of Timbuktu or by the Portuguese. Once these chronologies have been set down, we shall be able to discuss them again with the help of an important bit of information which is given by the Tarikh-el-Fettach /History of Fettac./

174 Mossi Kings 173	Delafosse's Chronology	Tauxier 1912	Tauxier 1917
Nédéga (Dagomba)	1000	"	1233
Riâlé	"	"	1253
Ouidiraogo	dead in 1050	"	1273 /17/
Rawa	11 century	"	1293
Oubri	1050-1090	1175-1199	1313
Ouemtanango	1130	"	1333
Yadega	1170	"	1353
Yaouloumfao	1200-1225	"	1360
Guéda	"	"
Tounougoum	"	"	1360-1375
Possinga	"	"
Nasségué	1320-1340	"	1375-1385
Somna	"	"
Vanté-Baragouan	1350-1380	"	1385-1395
Bonga	1380-1410	"	1395-1415
Sougounoum	1410-1430	"	1415-1430
Kissoum	1430-1435	"	1430
Zangayella	1435-1460	"	1430-1450
Lanlasse	1460-1475	"	1450-1475
Nassodoba	1475-1500	"	1475-1505
Yamba	1500-1530	"	1505-1535
Niago	1530-1560	"	1535-1565
Parima	1560-1590	"	1565-1595
Koumpaougoum	1590-1620	"	1595-1625
Nabasséré	1620-1660	"	1625-1655
Toussourou	1660-1690	"	1655-1685
Sini	1690-1720	"	1685-1720
Pigo	1720-1739	"	1720-1739
Ouabégo	1739-1754	"	1739-1754
Kango	1754-1787	"	1754-1787
Sagha	1787-1803	"	1787-1803

174 173 Kaogo	1803-1806	"	1803-1306
Tougouri	1806-1822	"	1806-1822
Kom	1822-1825	"	1822-1825
Ragongo	1825-1831	"	1825-1831
Ridimba	1831	"	1831
Diogoré	1831-1834	"	1831-1834
Totébalobo	1834-1850	"	1834-1850
Yemdé	1850-1877	"	1850-1877
Sanoum	1877-1879	"	1877-1879
Noboga	1879-1884	"	1879-1884
Pigo II	1884-1885	"	1884-1885
Baogo	1885-1895	"	1885-1894
Bagaré	1895-1899	"	1894-1899
Liguidi	1899-1902	"	1899-1902
Koboga	since 1902	"	1902-1914

174 [174] First of all, we can note that there is, I think, a slight confusion in the beginning /18/ of Delafosse's chronology. As a matter of fact, he counts (Vol. I, page 306) 40 years per generation, and, on the other hand (Vol. II, page 126), he places Oubri approximately from 1050 to 1090. But Oubri was the son of Zoungourana, himself the son of Ouidiraogo, himself the son of the princess Yennenga, himself the son of Nédéga, the king who ruled in Dagomba. There are, then, four generations from Nédéga to Oubri, which must make 160 years, according to Delafosse's calculations, and, if Oubri is to be placed between 1050 and 1090, that would put his great-great-grandfather Nédéga at about 890, that is, at the end of the ninth century A. D., or at least in 910, that is, at the beginning of the tenth century (1).

1. I have already noted this in my Noir du Yatenga, p. 673 (Appendix No. IV).

In this last case, the approximate dates would be the following:

[173]

Nédéga.....about 910
Yennenga.....about 950
Ouidiraogo.....about 990
Zoungourana.....about 1030
Oubri..... between 1050 and 1090

174 This would definitely place Nédéga, the king of Dagomba, his daughter, Yennenga, and his grandson, Ouidiraogo, in the tenth century, then Zoungourana (with his brothers Rawa and Diaba) and Oubri in the eleventh century.

This said, the fact remains that the Mossi chronology of the tenth to the fourteenth century is not settled, and it would be interesting to find some information that would make possible a true approximation.

As it happens, there is an existing text of the second appendix of the Tarikh-el-Fettach /History of Fettach/ which can throw light on this darkness. In the name of a certain Songhaï king, Baraï, it is said, in fact, that the king of the Mossi waged war against him (2).

2. Tarikh-el-Fettach, Houdas translation, p. 333.

We do not know, however, which Mossi king, since the Tarikh-el-Fettach does not give his name, but before looking into the long list of Mossi kings to find out who this aggressor might have been, one would have to fix, at least approximately, the date of that Baraï.

This then forces us to establish the whole chronology /19/ of the Sonraï /sic/, also a very approximative chronology which varies according to whether we consult the Tarikh-es-Soudan /History of Sudan/ or the Tarikh-el-Fettach.

Let us see first how one could establish, even in a schematic and grossly approximative fashion, the chronology of the Songhaï princes according to the Tarikh-es-Soudan.

This chronicle gives only one date up to the time of Sonni-Ali-Ber: that of Kosoï, who was converted to Islam in the year 400 of the Hegira, that is, in 1009-10 A.D. (1), but it gives the dates of Sonni-

1. Tarikh-es-Soudan, Houdas translation, p. 5.

Ali-Ber and the Askias who succeeded him from 1464-65 to 1591, the period of the Moroccan conquest.

We can first point out that, for the princes for whom we have the exact dates (Sonni-Ali and the Askias), 126 or 127 years are given for ten reigns, which makes each reign approximately 13 years. We can apply this average to all the Songhay princes: thus, since 174 we are counting from Za Alayaman to Issihak II, 58 Songhay princes, this dates the beginning of these princes at about the year 837 A. D.

On the other hand, we must be aware of the fact that we have the approximate date of Ali Kolon's reign (or Ali Kolen, or Ali Golom, or Ali Kilnou), who freed the Songhay from the Mali suzerainty a little after the reign of Kankan-Moussa and during that temporary period of weakness which enabled the Mossi to raid Timbuktu (1333). Delafosse (2) puts the flight of Ali Kolen from the court of the Mali

2. Haut-Sénégal-Niger /Upper Senegal and Niger/, Vol. II, p. 73.

king and his victorious defense against the pursuing Mali people in the year 1335. Before him, Binger (3) had dated this flight in the year

3. Du Niger au golfe de Guinée /From the Niger to the Gulf of Guinea/, Vol. II, p. 368. See also page 371.

1331, during the reign of the weak Magha I, successor of Kankan-Moussa who reigned from 1331 to 1335. We can take 1333 as an average date, and it is conceivable that the fall of Timbuktu to the Mossi, which occurred in that year, helped in the restoration of Songhaï independence.

174 /20/ On the basis of this data, we have:
173

1.	Za Alayaman	837-849
2.	Zakoï	849-861
3.	Takoï	861-873
4.	Akoï	873-885
5.	Kou	885-897
6.	Ali Faï	897-909
7.	Biyaï Komaï	909-921
8.	Biyaï	921-933
9.	Karaï	933-945
10.	Yama-Karaouï'a	945-957
11.	Yama	957-969
12.	Yama-Danka-Kibao	969-981

174
173

13.	Koukoraï	981-993
14.	Kenken	993-1005
15.	Kosoï (about 1009-1010)	1005-1025
16.	Kosaï-Dariyâ	1025-1044
17.	Hen-Kon-Ouanko-Dam	1044-1063
18.	Biyaï-Koï-Kimi	1063-1082
19.	Nintâsanaï	1082-1101
20.	Biyaï-Kaïna-Kimba	1101-1120
21.	Kaïna-Chinyounbo	1120-1139
22.	Tib	1139-1158
23.	Yama-Dao	1158-1177
24.	Fadazou	1177-1196
25.	Ali-Koro	1196-1215
26.	Bir-Foloko	1215-1235
27.	Yasiboï	1235-1255
28.	Douro	1255-1275
29.	Zenko-Bâro	1275-1295
30.	Bisi-Bâro	1295-1315
31.	Bada	1325-1332
32.	Ali-Kolon (about 1333)	1333-1340
33.	Selman-Nâri	1340-1347
34.	Ibrahim Kabaï	1347-1354
35.	Otsmân Kanafa	1354-1362
36.	Bar-Kaïna-Ankabi	1362-1370
37.	Mousa	1370-1378
38.	Bokar-Zonka	1378-1386
39.	Bokar-Dalla-Boyonbo	1386-1394
40.	Mar Kiraï	1394-1402
41.	Mohammed Dâo	1402-1410
42.	Mohammed Koukiya	1410-1418
43.	Mohammed Fâr	1418-1426
44.	Karbifô	1426-1434
45.	Mar-Fâï-Kolli-Djimo	1434-1442
46.	Mar Arkena	1442-1449
47.	Mar Arandan	1449-1456
48.	Selimân Dam	1456-1464

174
173

49.	Sonni Ali Ber	1464-1492
50.	Askia El-Hadj Mohammed	1493-1528
51.	Askia Moussa	1528-1531
52.	Askia Mohammed II	1531-1537
53.	Askia Ismaïl	1537-1539
54.	Askia Issihak I	1539-1549
55.	Askia Daoud	1549-1582
56.	Askia Mohammed III	1582-1586
57.	Askia Mohammed Bani	1586-1588
58.	Askia Issihak II	1588-1591

I underlined in this list the name of Bir Foloko (1215-1235), because he is the king of the Tarikh-es-Soudan list who corresponds to the Baraï' of the Tarikh-el-Fettach list.

174 Concerning the dates which one can get from the Tarikh-el-Fettach, they consist of three notations:

1) A giant, originally from Yemen, who lived toward the middle of the fourth century of the Hegira (1), that is, counting 350 years

1. Tarikh-el-Fettach, Houdas and Delafosse translation, p. 329.

from the Hegira, around 961 A. D.

2) The date of conversion to Islam of the people of Gao which took place, according to El-Motaouakkel Kâti, between 471 and 475 of the Hegira, that is, between 1079 and 1082 A. D. (2)

2. Ibid., pp. 332-333.

3) And the date of Mâkara-Komsoû, who was contemporary with Kankan-Moussa's pilgrimage to Mecca in the year 720 of the Hegira, or 1321-22 A. D. (3) This Mâkara-Komsoû was the 33rd king of

3. Ibid., p. 335.

Songhay, according to the list given by Mahmoud Kâti.

174 On the basis of these three notations, a chronological list of the Songhay princes can be established in accordance with the Tarikh-el-Fettach, making a note of the fact that 360 years (961 to 1321) are given for 33 princes, which makes an average of approximately 11 years per prince. On the other hand, one is led to think that the date of the conversion to Islam of the people of Gao gives the date of Kotso-Moslem (Kotso the Mussulman) and that, therefore, we can place this prince at about 1079-82, that is, at approximately 1080. /22/ True, the Tarikh says that it was not Kotso-Moslem who converted the people of Gao to Islam and that the widespread general opinion about this matter is false, but Mahmoûd Kâti seems to mumble strangely (may I be forgiven the word) about the subject (1), and one can, despite his authority and following the general opinion he rejects, admit the fact that it was Kotso who Islamized both Gao and the Songhay kingdom. We thus arrive at the year 1080 for his period, which gives his predecessors nine years on the average until the giant from Yemen. Moreover, there and now, we can indicate all our reservations about this far too recent beginning of the Songhay empire. The date one obtains from the Tarikh-es-Soudan (837 A. D.) seems preferable by far to the date of 961, obtained from the Tarikh-el-Fettach.

1. See the note of Houdas-Delafosse, p. 333.

174 173 Regardless of how the matter stands concerning this last topic, we have then:

1.	Giant from Yemen	961
2.	Ouaaï	970
3.	Kaïen	979
4.	Takaï	988
5.	Mata-Kaï	997
6.	Mali Biyaï	1006
7.	Bayaï Kima	1015
8.	Beï	1024
9.	Kiraï	1033
10.	Yama Kalaouaï	1042

174	11.	Yama-Dombo	1051
173	12.	Yama-Diamaa	1060
	13.	Diatakoré	1070
	14.	Koto-Moslem	1080
	15.	Kotso-Dariâ	1093
	16.	Hounabououa	1106
	17.	Yama-Kitsi	1119
	18.	Baraï	1132
	19.	Bibaï-Kaïna	1145
	20.	Sémanbao	1158
	21.	Fanda Diaoro	1171
	22.	Yama-Daa	1184
	23.	Arkour-Dioua	1197
	24.	Baraï (war with the Mossi)	1210
	25.	Yassi Bo'o	1223 /23/
	26.	Baro	1236
	27.	Douro	1249
	28.	Bitsi-Baro	1262
	29.	Ali Golom	1275
	30.	Silman Nari	1288
	31.	Ibrahim Kabayao	1301
	32.	Ousman Guifo	1311
	33.	Mâkara Komsôu	1321-1322
	34.	Boubakar	1335-1349
	35.	Ankada	1349-1363
	36.	Kimi-Yankoï	1363-1377
	37.	Baro del Yombo	1377-1390
	38.	Madao	1390-1405
	39.	Mohammed Koukiya	1405-1420
	40.	Mohammed Fari	1420-1435
	41.	Balam	1435-1450
	42.	Souleïman-Dama	1450-1465
	43.	Sonni-Ali-Ber	1465-1492

174 What is noticeable on this list (apart from the fact that this chronology brings the beginnings of the Songhaï kingdom much too close to our time and that, on this point, the chronology drawn from the Tarikh-es-Soudan is preferable) is that Kotso-Moslem is placed

174 here at about 1080, while the same king (called Kosoï, by Es'Sadi) is placed at about 1010 by the latter. On this point, the date of the Tarikh-el-Fettach seems preferable to us, for, if we think about the events of the eleventh century that might have brought about this conversion to Islam, we think, first of all, of the conquest of Ghana, at about 1076, by the Almoravide. We are, therefore, inclined to prefer the date drawn from the Tarikh-el-Fettach, without our reason being absolutely conclusive. For it is possible that either another cause besides the pressure of the Almoravide brought about the conversion to Islam by the Songhay king of that period, or even that that pressure made itself felt in the region at a period other than the precise time of the capture of Ghana. Yet it seems logical to think that it was this event which led the Songhaï toward Islam, and, therefore, Kotso-Moslem, or Kosoï the Mussulman, must be placed at about 1080, rather than at about 1010.

But there is yet a stronger contradiction than the above /24/ between the Tarikh-el-Fettach and the Tarikh-es-Soudan. The Tarikh-es-Soudan states explicitly that Kankan-Moussa was the first of the Mali kings to conquer Songhay. (1) From this the logical result is that Ali Kolon and his quest for liberation must be placed after Kankan-Moussa. According to the Tarikh-el-Fettach, Ali Kolon (called Ali Golom) did indeed free the Songhaï or, more precisely, "abandoned king of the Malli for reasons too long to give here and which do not enter into our plan," the author calmly states. (2) But, after him,

1. Houdas translation, pp. 12, 13.

2. Houdas and Delafosse translation, p. 334.

Silman-Nâri reigned, then Ibrahim-Kabayao, then Ousman-Guifo, then Mâkara-Komsoû, and it was in the latter's reign that Kankan-Moussa went into the Songhay country on a pilgrimage to Mecca. (3)

3. Ibid., p. 335.

We must thus acknowledge, according to this account, that Ali Golom or Ali Kolon precedes Kankan-Moussa, that he lived about the year

174 1275, and, if he freed the country from the Mali yoke, he did so under the direct successors of Soundiata, alias Mari-Diata. Then, at the time of Kankan-Moussa, the most famous of the Mali kings after Soundiata, the Songhaï country probably again fell under Mali suzerainty for an undeterminable length of time.

It is difficult to approach the question as to which is right, in that respect, the Tarikh-es-Soudan or the Tarikh-el-Fettach. Besides, for the question we are particularly interested in (the date of Baraï or Bir-Foloko), it is not essential to find a solution to it here. Let us simply point out that the chronology we took from the Tarikh-es-Soudan puts Bir-Foloko between 1215 and 1235, and the chronology of the Tarikh-el-Fettach puts him at about 1210. On the other hand, Binger places "Za-Birou or Bayarou Falaka" as corresponding to the reign of Mansa Wali I (1260-76) (4). Delafosse, in his study, (5) does not give the actual date for "Beïra-Foloko," but, according to the two outside dates he gives /25/ for the Dia in Gao (1010 to 1335), and considering the place of Beïra-Foloko between his predecessors and successors, he should be placed at about 1275-1300. In conclusion, I think that Baraï belongs to the first half of the thirteenth century and that the first war of the Songhaï and the Mossi took place at that time.

4. Binger, op. cit., Vol. II, pp. 368, 369.

5. Haut-Sénégal-Niger /Upper Senegal and Niger/, Vol. II, p. 65.

Here are the details given about this war in the Tarikh-el-Fettach (page 333): "Then /came/ the diaoua Baraï, against whom the king of the Mossi waged war. The campaign lasted four months, at the end of which time the king of the Mossi was beaten and his army routed and annihilated." The Mossi seem thus to have been the aggressors, but in the end they appear to have been beaten and pushed back.

The question now is to determine which king of the Mossi undertook this campaign, and, on this point, we must admit that we have no indication. We must naturally eliminate Nédéga, the king of Dagomba, his daughter Yennenga or Pokotoéga, and his grandson

174 Ouidiraogo, but one might hesitate between Rawa and Ouemtanango. If one chose the former, he would then have lived from 1200 to 1250 (which would indicate that my date of 1293 for this naba is too recent, and that Delafosse's date, the beginning of the eleventh century, is too early). If one chose Ouemtanango, the same would still apply: my date of 1333 for this naba would be a century too recent, and Delafosse's date would be some fifty years too early (1). In conclusion,

1. Delafosse places Ouemtanango at about 1170. One can deduce this from two passages of his Vol. II, pp. 126 and 139. In the last passage, he speaks of Ouemtanango himself and, in the first, of his father and uncles.

it is impossible for us to say exactly which naba was the first to wage war against the north, but, whether it was Rawa or Ouemtanango, it seems clear that since the beginning of the thirteenth century the Mossi were settled in their present territories, including Yatenga, and, therefore, we must conclude that they came there during the twelfth century. My 1917 Mossi chronology would, therefore, need some revision, since it brings the origins of Mossi history too close to our time. On the other hand, Delafosse's chronology also would seem to need some correction, since it exaggerates in the opposite direction. It would not be the first time that the truth should be found, as often happens, between two extreme opinions. /26/

Chapter 3

Mossi and Bambara

174 114 We know that the Bambara king, N'Golo, and the Mossi king, Kango, waged war against each other toward the end of the eighteenth century. Yatenga traditions preserve in detail the memory, embellished with somewhat burlesque variations, of the events that precipitated this war (see my Noir du Yatenga /Blacks of Yatenga/, 1917, pp. 88-91), but they say nothing of the war itself. Delafosse, in his

174 Haut-Sénégal-Niger /Upper Senegal and Niger/ (1912), starts out by 114 relating, according to Bambara traditions, the same stories of the causes that brought about the war (1), but he does not say much about

1. Vol. II, pp. 143, 144.

the war itself. After speaking of Kango's cruel extermination of the Bambara auxiliaries whom he had formerly needed and who had been lent to him, Delafosse adds (2): "It took place about 1760: Ngolo

2. Page 144.

Diara, then emperor of Ségou, wanted to avenge his compatriots and waged war against Yatenga, but he was driven back by Kango. Later, following a kind of civil war that broke out in Ségou, the Dioula merchants of the town fled and took refuge in Yatenga. Ngolo asked Kango to send them back to him and, upon his refusal, led for the third time an expedition against the Ouahigouya empire. This expedition had no more success than the preceding one, and Ngolo died during it, followed in death shortly thereafter by his opponent (1787)."

Further on, Delafosse says (3): "Ngolo led two expeditions against /27/

3. Same work, Vol. II, pp. 289, 290 (chapter on the history of the Bambara of Ségou).

the Mossi of Yatenga, whose emperor, Kango, had cruelly put to death some Banmana /Bambara/ warriors, who had been previously put at his disposal by Denkoro or by Ton-Mansa. Driven back after his first expedition (about 1760), Ngolo later returned to Yatenga in order to get back from Kango some Dioula merchants who had fled Ségou following a kind of civil war and whom the Yatenga emperor refused to send home. It would seem that this second expedition was no more successful than the first; in any case, in the course of this campaign, Ngolo contracted a disease from which he died before he could return to his capital (1787)."

All this is very scanty, and we would know little more about it (1) were it not for a very curious passage by Mungo-Park, which no

174
114

1. Monteil, in his recent book, Bambara de Ségou et du Kaarta /Bambara of Ségou and Kaarta/ (1924), says nothing about these wars. He only alludes to them in a short note on page 76.

one has yet pointed out to my knowledge and which tells us of a very important event in this war: the capture of the town of Dienné by Kango, a feat of arms worthy of the ancient Mossi conquerors, Rawa, Ouemtanango, Nassodoba, etc., which assured a conclusive victory of the Mossi naba over the Bambara fama.

174 I have copied the following passage word for word from Mungo-Park (translation by the Abbé of Voisin, 1800, Vol. II, pp. 45 and 46):

"In the south of Jimbala is the Negro kingdom of Gotto (2) that [114]

2. Djimbala (which in Mandé means country of the great water, from gui, "water," ba, "great," and la, a suffix indicating the country or region) is the region north of Lake Débo. As for "Gotto," a name that Mungo-Park gives here to all the countries of the southeast and south (Mossi, Kong, Bondoukou, etc.), it is undoubtedly the word "Gottogo," the Sudanese and Mandé name for Bondoukou, which is given in error to everything southeast and south of Djimbala or Guimbala.

is said to be very large. In the past, it was divided into a large number of small states, governed by different chiefs whose continual wars incited neighboring countries to invade the land. One of these chiefs, called Moossie, was politic and shrewd enough to get all the others to declare war on the king of Bambarra /sic/, and to have himself unanimously named generalissimo. /28/ From the shores of Lake Debbie (1), on the upper Niger, Moossie sent a large number of

1. This refers to Lake Débo.

boats filled with provisions toward Yenné; and with his entire army

174 he entered into Bambarra. The inhabitants of Yenné saw him on the opposite shore of the Niger (2) before they had been told of his march.

2. Djenné is not right on the Niger nor on the Bani, but at a certain distance between the two rivers.

His flotilla joined him that same day, and, after having unloaded his provisions, he crossed the river with one part of his army and took Yenné by assault during the night. This exploit so frightened the Bambarra king that he asked for peace. He agreed to pay the victor an annual tribute of a certain number of slaves and to give back to the Gotto inhabitants all that had been taken away from them. (3)

[521 648]

3. This passage would indicate that the Dyoula of Gottogo (or Bondoukou), having some grievances against the Bambara of the Ségou region (assaulted peddlers, unpaid debts, etc.), went to the king of the Mossi to obtain justice, and that this might have been one of the causes of the war. There doubtless existed reciprocal grievances between Bambara and Mossi or between their natural allies.

Moussee /sic/ returned to Gotto in triumph, and he was proclaimed king. He gave his name to the capital."

As one can see, the important and valuable fact that must be extracted from this thick forest is the capture of Dienné by the king of the northern Mossi, the king of Yatenga (who at that time was Kango), during his struggles with the Bambara, that is, with Ngolo who was his contemporary. Because of his informants, who obviously did not inform him with absolute precision and thus made him commit many small errors or miscalculations, Mungo-Park embellished the true fact with imaginary details. First of all, there is the name of Kango, Moossie, Moussie /sic/, which is the name of the conqueror's country and not his own name. Then, the name of Gotto is given to the Mossi country, undoubtedly because of a confusion, either in the minds of the Blacks who informed Mungo-Park or in the mind of the great

174 114

174 traveler himself, between the people of Gotto who were mixed in this 114 affair and the Mossi of Yatenga who made the expedition. Finally, Naba Kango, although he brought great glory /29/ in the eighteenth century to the Mossi dynasty of Yatenga, obviously did not find, at the beginning of his reign, an absolute fragmentation of small countries which he would have gathered under single authority. He doubtless limited himself to restoring a kingdom that had formerly been powerful and centralized, and which he made so again through his personal prestige. In any case, he did not give his name to the Mossi (it is, on the contrary, the Mossi who, in Mungo-Park's description, give him his name), any more than to the capital which he indeed founded and which he called Ouahigouya. All these details are thus false or imaginary, but the principal fact remains and is very interesting. Mungo-Park arrived in Ségou just in time, in 1796, to [153] record it before the weak memories of the Mossi and Bambara Negroes would have condemned it to hopeless oblivion. /30/

Chapter 4

The Cult of the Sun Among the Mossi

794 Do the Mossi adore the sun? And is their great god Ouendé partly or wholly a sun god?

Binger was the first to state that the Mossi adored the sun. "They are fetishists," he says (1), "but they have a cult of the sun, which

1. Du Niger au golfe de Guinée
/From the Niger to the Gulf of Guinea/,
Vol. I, p. 492.

still today bears the same name as God; they call it Wouidi."

In turn, Lieutenant Desplagnes, in his Plateau Central Nigérien /Central Nigerian Plateau/ (pp. 275, 276) said in 1907:

"The Hougho-Ouango of Mossi (these priests live in Mossi in the villages of Boujema, Mani, Kondogho, Yolo, Tio) make sacrifices to the sun in order to bind it to the earth, morning and evening, at 794 sunrise and at sunset, during the first week of the winter season, then, later, only every six days, in the morning at sunrise. They go to the [778] altars, formed by three conical stones, to offer sacrifices and libations, always surrounded by all the people, the heads of families, tom-tom players, and family masks (Ouango).

"During the entire year, in a highly decorated niche dug into a [372] wall of their houses, the priests watch the sacred fire with which, at the end of the rainy season, they must light the great purifying brush fires."

Lieutenant Desplagnes adds in a note:

"They make sacrifices at each new moon, and then have seven great feasts each year for the divinity. Finally, during the sun festivals, [287] they use a cow's tail to tie the sun to the earth and assure its fertilizing warmth." /31/

794 171 In my book Noir du Soudan, Pays Mossi et Gourounsi /Blacks of the Sudan, Country of the Mossi and Gourounsi/ (1912), I reproduced this page of Lieutenant Desplagnes without comment (page 590). In addition, I described the cult of the sun among the Gourounsi, who, like the Mossi, are part of the Voltaic family. Thus, on page 241, I wrote:

"The Kassonfra, like the Nounouma and the Menkiéra, say that they offer no sacrifice either to the moon or to the sun. However, I found an exception in the village of Nitiédougou (canton of Sia). It would seem that here, in the early mornings when the sun rises and begins to leave the horizon, people offer it a chicken or whatever else they wish to offer. Moreover, this sacrifice is only made when the voro (1) says it should be made.

1. Soothsayer.

"My informant claims that this same procedure is followed, not only in Nitiédougou and in the little canton of Sia, but also in all of the Kasouna (Kassonfra and Kassonboura) country. He must be mistaken (2) since my previous informants and my interpreter, who is

2. Today, on the other hand, I tend to think he was right.

Kassonboura, have neither seen nor heard of anything like it."

794 Later, in 1917, in my book Noir du Yatenga /Blacks of Yatenga/, since the few attempts that I had made in Yatenga to find this cult of the sun had given no results, I wrote (page 277):

"The sun is called ouindigho or ouindigha in Mossi (tili in Bambara). The word has a certain relationship with Ouendé, and the word Ouendé seems to be part of the construction of the word ouindigho. In any case, the Mossi and the Foulsé of Yatenga make no sacrifices to the sun. I interrogated in vain several important people about the details given by Lieutenant Desplagnes, pages 275 and 276 of his work, Plateau Central Nigérien about a cult of the sun in Mossi. It is true that these details concern the religious society of the Ouango and the villages where the members of this society would be operating: this would apply to villages of the Residency of Kaya (such as, Mané, Boujéma, etc.). One could thus pursue the studies in Kaya. /32/ In any case, the cult of the sun is totally unknown in Yatenga."

In my conclusion, I denied that there was a cult of the sun among the Mossi of Yatenga, while I admitted that one might be able to find this cult in other parts of Mossi country, particularly in the Residency (today, the circle) of Kaya.

794 114 The question was at that point when Father Eugène Mangin published a study on the Mossi in Anthropos ("Les Mossi. Essai sur les us et coutumes du Soudan Occidental" /The Mossi, an Essay on the Usages and Customs of Western Sudan/, Vienna, 1916), a study in which the author, who lived for a long time in Ouagadougou among the central Mossi, brought most of his effort to bear on a study of the religious life of his charges. It may well be that Father Mangin's observations touch upon the question of sun worship in that country in a definitive manner, better than Binger and Desplagnes had done.

794 The Mossi, says Father Mangin, in their sacrifices to Ouendé, offer water for his rising and pour it to the east, and offer water for his setting and pour it to the west. In an argument, the weakest will also say: "God (Ouendé) is my witness that I have done you no harm, God [796] will give it back to you," and he will point to the sun. Thus, Ouendé, the principal god of the Mossi, is indeed a sun god, and indeed the Mossi worship, in him, the sun.

Does this mean that Ouendé cannot also be a god of the sky or of the atmosphere, as I maintained in my Noir du Yatenga? Certainly not, and indeed Father Mangin mentions that Ouendé commands 794 lightning as well, which he can do only if he is the Sky-Atmosphere.

[82] "The natural phenomena," he says, "are sometimes attributed to God. Lightning kills those who have done evil, it kills the animal ill-gotten through fraud or theft, and it is God who sends lightning as a punishment..." Thus, Ouendé, while being the sun, is also the Sky-Atmosphere, and other things too, for he has characteristics that go [797] beyond the sun divinity and the sky divinity. We must not forget here that the Allah of the Moslems is well known among the Mossi and has his established representatives there (Yarsé of Mandé origin, Peul, etc.), or temporary ones (merchants who have come from the north or south, Soninnké /Soninke/, Songhay, Dyoula). Thus, for a long time, /33/ the Moslem conception of god could and has, in effect, rubbed off on the sun-atmosphere-god of the Mossi. The latter might have waged war on the Songhay sultans who led religious crusades against them, yet it is also true that they were content to bestow upon their most important god the remarkable characteristics that struck them and that they admired in the Moslem god. Thus, Ouendé gradually became more and more a supreme god, although it would seem that in the beginning, he was only a sun god and an atmosphere god, first separated, later fused with a predominance of the sun god element.

To summarize, it has been well established that one finds the cult of the sun among the Mossi, along with many other elements as [77] we have just shown. I have since found this cult among the Dorhosié (1922) and the Gouro (1923). However, among the Gouro, it is relegated to a few fetishists and does not interest the bulk of the population. Among the Dorhosié, on the contrary, it interests the vast multitude and occasions a solemn sacrifice made in the winter, at the end of the old year and the beginning of the new. Among these people, however, the sun divinity has not become a leading divinity as it has among the Mossi. It is one divinity among several and is rather subordinate to the cult of the Earth-brush and that of the Sky-atmosphere. Moreover, I am persuaded that more far-reaching studies among all the branches of the Voltaic population would uncover, here and there, the cult of the sun, as among the Mossi, the Gourounsi, the Dorhosié, etc.

[pp. 34 ff. not processed]

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

ÉTUDES SOUDANAISES

Nouvelles Notes

sur

le Mossi et le Gourounsi

PAR

L. TAUXIER
ADMINISTRATEUR DES COLONIES

[title page]

PARIS
ÉMILE LAROSE, LIBRAIRE-ÉDITEUR
11, RUE VICTOR-COUSIN, 11

1924

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

NOUVELLES NOTES

sur

LE MOSSI ET LE GOUROUNSI

[title page A]

[i]

PRÉFACE

L'auteur de ces notes a publié, jadis, deux volumes sur le Mossi et le Gourounsi, l'un, Le Noir du Soudan, Pays Mossi et Gourounsi (Paris, Larose, 1912), l'autre, Le Noir du Yatenga (Paris, Larose, 1917). Ayant eu l'occasion depuis (1) de rassembler de nouveaux documents sur ces populations peu connues, particulièrement sur la langue gourounsi, il les publie ici pour compléter ses précédents volumes et pour augmenter le petit trésor d'informations que nous nous trouvons déjà posséder sur ces races semi-primitives.

Cette contribution se divisera, naturellement, en deux parties :

Livre I : Mossi ;

Livre II : Gourounsi.

Les questions abordées seront, pour les Mossi :

Chapitre Ier : Les origines et l'anthropologie.

Chapitre II : La chronologie.

Chapitre III : Les guerres entre Mossi et Bambara.

Chapitre IV : Le culte du soleil au Mossi.

Pour les Gourounsi, ce sera :

Chapitre unique : La question Gourounsi.

De nombreux appendices, comprenant entre autres d'importants vocabulaires Nounouma, Tondioulé, Larhama et Kiansi, et des notices sur les Ko, les Lélésé, les Gourounmossi et les Boussansé, compléteront ce petit ouvrage.

Adamville, le 1er octobre 1924.

L. TAUXIER.

[p ii contains no text.- Analyst]

(1) A Bondoukou, en 1919.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

BIBLIOGRAPHIE MOSSI

JOAO DE BARROS. Asid. Lixboa, 2 volumes in-folio. 1552 1553

Idem. Même ouvrage, 2e édition. Lisboa, 24 volumes in-8°..... 1777-1788

MARMOL CARVAJAL. Descripcion genaral de Africa (primera parte), Granada, in-folio..... 1573

Idem. Tierra de Los Negros (segunda parte del Descripcion general de Africa). Malaga, in-folio..... 1599

Idem. L'Afrique. Traduction PERROT D'ABLANCOURT. Paris, 3 volumes in-4°..... 1667

ES-SADI. Tarikh-es-Soudân, composé vers..... 1655
Traduction HOUDAS. Paris, Leroux, 1 vol., 1900.

MAHMOUD KATI (et l'un de ses petits-fils). Tarikh-el-Fettach (Chronique du Cherchéur), composé de..... 1519 à 1665
Traduction HOUDAS et DELAFOSSE. 1 volume. Paris, Leroux, 1913.

DAPPER. Description de l'Afrique. Edition hollandaise en... 1668
Traduction française de 1686.....

BOWDICH. Mission from Cap Coast to Ashantee. London, 1 volume in-4°..... 1819

Idem. Voyage dans le pays d'Aschantie ou relation de l'ambassade envoyée dans ce royaume par les Anglais. 1 vol., traduit de l'anglais..... 1819

J. DUPUIS: Journal of a residence in Ashantee. London, 1 vol. in-4°..... 1824

DENHAM et CLAPPERTON. Voyages et découvertes dans le Nord et les parties centrales de l'Afrique. Traduction française par EYRIÈS et DE LA RENAUDIÈRE. Paris, 3 volumes in-8°..... 1826

K. RITTER. Géographie générale et comparée: l'Afrique. Traduction BURET et DEVOR..... 1836
(L'original allemand a paru en 1822).

COOLEY. The négroland of the Arabes. London, 1 vol. in-8°.. 1841

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

CLARKE. Spécimens of dialects. Short vocabularies of languages and notes of countries and customs in Africa. London, in-8° 1849
(Voir Mose n° 292, page 26, et Wirimose n° 285, page 32).

KOELLE. Polyglotta africana. London, grand in-folio..... 1854
(Voir vocabulaire Mose.)

BARTH. Travels and discoveries in north and central Africa (1849-1855). London, 5 volumes in-8°..... 1858

Idem. Voyages et découvertes dans l'Afrique septentrionale et centrale (1849-1855). Traduction ITHIER, Paris, 4 vol. 1863

Dr BECK. Eine neue Route nach dem Obern Niger und dem Sudan (Voyage des missionnaires David Ashante et Buss à Salaga, en 1877-1878). Jahresbericht der geographischen gesellschaft. In Bern..... 1880

R. CUST. The modern languages of Africa. London, 2 vol. in-8° (pp. 209, 210)..... 1883

BONNAT. Voyages, aventures et captivité de Joseph Bonnat chez les Achantis, par Jules Gros. Paris, 1 vol. in-18.... 1884

KIRBY. A travel to Kintampo. Proceedings of the Royal geographical Society (p. 447). London..... 1884

ELISÉE RECLUS. Nouvelle géographie universelle. Tome XII. L'Afrique occidentale. 1 vol. in-4°. Paris, Hachette..... 1887

Dr KRAUSE. Krause's Reise. Petermann's Mittheilungen. Pages 57, 92, 152 et 217..... 1887
Page 88..... 1888

Idem. Lettre à M. Duveyrier. Compte-rendu des séances de la Société de Géographie (p. 356)..... 1887

VAN FRANÇOIS. Voyage à Salaga et au Mossi. Mitt. aus deutschen Schutzgebieten (p. 148)..... 1888

Dr CROZAT. Rapport sur une mission au Mossi (1890). Journal officiel de la République Française (5-9 octobre).... 1891

BINGER. Du Niger au golfe de Guinée (1887-1889). Paris, Hachette, 2 vol. in-8..... 1892

MONTEIL. De Saint-Louis à Tripoli par le Tchad. Paris, Alcan, in-4° 1894

FÉLIX DUBOIS. Vocabulaire Mossi. Bulletin du Comité de l'Afrique Française (juin)..... 1898

BLUZET. Vocabulaire de la langue Mossi, précédé de notes grammaticales. Bulletin du Comité de l'Afrique Française (Supplément au numéro de mars)..... 1901

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

Dr Ruelle. Notes sur quelques populations noires du IIe Territoire militaire du Soudan, dans l'Anthropologie. Tome XV (pp. 519 et 687) 1904

M. Delafosse. Vocabulaires comparatifs de plus de 60 langues ou dialectes parlés à la Côte d'Ivoire ou dans les régions limitrophes. Paris, Leroux, 1 vol. in-8o 1904

Lieutenant Desplagnes. Le plateau central nigérien. Paris, Larose, 1 volume in-8o 1907

André Arcin. La Guinée Française. Paris, Challamel, 1 volume in-8o 1907

Capitaine Lambert. Le pays Mossi (dans le Bulletin de la Société de Géographie de l'Afrique occidentale française, nos 6, 7 et 8) 1908

Lieutenant Marc. Le pays Mossi. Paris, Larose, in-8o 1909

Vadier. Monographie du cercle de Ouahigouya (Archives inédites du Haut-Sénégal-Niger) 1909

Carrier-Moulins. Monographie du cercle de Ouagadougou, (Archives inédites du Haut-Sénégal-Niger) 1909

Maubert. Monographie du cercle de Fada N'Gourma (Archives inédites du Haut-Sénégal-Niger) 1909

Froger. Etude sur la langue des Mossi. Paris, Leroux, 1 vol. 1910

M. Delafosse. Les langues voltaïques, dans Mémoires de la Société de linguistique 1911

F.-W. Migeod. The languages of West-Africa. London, 2 vol. in-8o 1911-1913
(Dans le premier volume, numération et cent phrases en Moshi.)

P.-A. Benton. Notes on some languages of the Western Sudan. Oxford, in-18 1912
(pp. 297-298. Numération inédite de 1 à 1.000 en More, recueillie par Barth en 1854.)

M. Delafosse. Haut-Sénégal-Niger. Paris, Larose, 3 vol. .. 1912

L. Tauxier. Le Noir du Soudan. Pays Mossi et Gourounsi. Paris, Larose, 1 volume 1912

D. Westermann. Die Mossi-sprachen-gruppe in Westlichen Sudan 1913
(Dans Anthropos, VIII, pp. 467-504 et 811-829).

Père E. Mangin. Les Mossi. Essai sur les us et coutumes du Soudan occidental. Tirage à part d'Anthropos, Vienne.. 1916

L. Tauxier. Le Noir du Yatenga. Paris, Larose, 1 vol..... 1917

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

R.-S. Rattray. Au elementary Môle grammar (Gold-Coast), vvith a vocabulary. Oxford, petit in-8°..... 1918

Froger. Manuel pratique de la langue Môré (Mossi du cercle de Ouagadougou, colonie de la Haute-Volta). Paris, Fournier, 1 volume 1928

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

BIBLIOGRAPHIE GOUROUNSI

CLARKE. Specimens of dialects. Short vocabularies of languages and notes of countries aud customs in Africa. London, 1 volume 1849
(CLARKE donne du Gourounsi du Sud sous les appellations Tshamba et Nibulu.)

KOELLE. Polyglotta africana. London, grand vol. in-folio.... 1854
(KOELLE donne un ensemble de vocabulaires Gourounsi sous le nom de Yula (Nounouma), Kasm (Kassouna), Guresa, Koama, Bagbalan (Sissala, Gourounsi du Sud), Kiamba, Dselana, Gourma, etc.).

BINGER. Du Niger au golfe de Guinée (1887-1889), 2 volumes in-8°, Paris, Hachette..... 1892

LIEUTENANT CHANOINE. Le Gourounsi..... 1897
(Conférence de M. le Lieutenant CHANOINE, le 21 novembre 1897. Extrait du Bulletin de la Société de Géographie de Lille de février 1898. Lille, imprimerie Danel, 1898).

Dr RUELLE. Notes sur quelques populations noires du IIe Territoire militaire du Soudan. Anthropologie, tome XV, année 1904 (pp. 519 et 657)..... 1904
(Le Dr RUELLE a pris des mesures anthropométriques sur 58 Gourounsi et 21 Nourma ou Nounouma).

M. DELAFOSSE. Vocabulaires comparatifs de plus de 60 langues ou dialectes parlés à la Côte d'Ivoire ou dans les régions limitrophes. Paris, Leroux, 1 vol. in-8°..... 1904
(M. DELAFOSSE donne, pp. 280 et suivantes, un vocabulaire Nounouma sous le nom de Gourossi).

LIEUTENANT MARC. Le pays Mossi. Paris, Larose, in-8°.... 1909
(Quelques pages, de 122 à 127, sont consacrées aux Gourounsi).

M. DELAFOSSE. Les langues voltaïques, dans Mémoires de la Société de linguistique 1911

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

MIGEOD. The languages of West-Africa. London, 2 vol. in-8°..... 1911-1913 [1er vol., numération grunshi 3.
Ibidem, numération et 101 phrases en ajolo (Kyaló).
Ibidem, numération et 101 phrases en Isala (Sissala).]

M. DELAFOSSE. Haut-Sénégal-Niger. Paris, Larose, 3 vol... 1912

L. TAUXIER. Le Noir du Soudan. Pays Mossi et Gourounsi. Paris, Larose, 1 volume..... 1912

WESTERMANN. Die grussisprachen, dans Zeitschrift fur die Kolonialsprachen, IV (Isala)..... 1914

L. TAUXIER. Le Noir du Yatenga. Paris, Larose, 1 vol..... 1917

CARDINAL. The natives of the Northen Territoires of the Gold-Coast, 1 volume. London..... 1921
(La IIe partie renferme une notice grammaticale sur le Kasséna (ou Kassouna) et un court vocabulaire).

L. TAUXIER. Le Noir de Bondoukou. Paris, Leroux, 1 vol. 1921

Dr CREMER. Grammaire de la langue Kasséna. Paris, Geuthner 1924
(Il s'agit du Kassouna. Ouvrage posthume du Dr CREMER. Préface de M. DELAFOSSE).

LIVRE PREMIER

CHAPITRE Ier

LES ORIGINES MOSSI

La plupart des personnes qui se sont occupées de l'histoire Mossi disent que les Mossi viennent du sud-est, de la région de Gambakha ou Gambaga (Dagomba). C'est de là qu'ils auraient occupé successivement, se dirigeant vers le Nord, les régions de Fada-N'Gourma, Ouagadougou, Ouahigouya.

Mais d'où venaient-ils auparavant?

M. le capitaine Lambert, qui a commandé le cercle de Ouagadougou vers 1906-1907, a tenté de donner une réponse à cette question dans l'étude sur le pays Mossi qu'il a publiée dans le Bulletin de la Société de Géographie de l'Afrique Occidentale française, en 1908.

« Il existe encore au sud du Bornou, dit-il (op. cit., n° 7, page 166), dans le Cameroun allemand, une race qui porte le nom de Mossah et aurait été autrefois, selon la tradition locale, maîtresse du pays entier. Elle se trouve actuellement confinée en une portion de territoire assez restreinte (vallée du Logone-Cameroun).

Ses représentants actuels offrent avec les Mossi des ressemblances physiques tellement frappantes qu'il est impossible d'avoir vécu parmi eux sans les reconnaître dans ces derniers : le tatouage est identique, sauf en ce qui concerne l'accent circonflexe, d'acquisition plus récente, comme nous le montrerons. La similitude est presque complète et, d'autre part, l'organisation sociale des Mossi, avec toute sa hiérarchie si caractéristique, se retrouve chez les Mossahs. En un mot, l'identité d'origine des deux groupes ne fait pas de doute et nous pouvons affirmer que l'existence des Mossahs dans une partie du Bornou et la suprématie que la tradition leur attribue dans le pays à une époque reculée fixent d'une façon certaine l'habitat où a dû croître et se former la race qui nous occupe ; cela, bien entendu, au cours d'une période assurément fort antérieure aux événements qui fourniront aux chroniqueurs arabes l'occasion de nous révéler leur existence (1). »

Le capitaine Lambert ajoute en note :

« Ici, une nouvelle question se pose : les Mossis peuvent-ils être considérés comme autochtones du Bornou, ou bien leur long séjour dans cette contrée doit-il être regardé comme une étape dans le grand mouvement migrateur qui, par bonds successifs, les a amenés au cœur de la boucle du Niger?

En l'état actuel de nos connaissances, il serait imprudent de rien affirmer ; nous indiquerons simplement que le système féodal, qui caractérise la constitution politique du Mossi, peut être rapproché de celui dont l'Abyssinie nous donne le spectacle ; l'organisation hiérarchique paraît être, sous certains rapports, identique ; la désignation des chefs s'y fait dans des conditions analogues, l'élection du négus s'y accompagne d'une période d'anarchie que nous retrouvons ici et qui paraît se rattacher à des traditions anciennes.

Il se peut qu'il y ait là autre chose que de pures coïncidences. Tout en travaillant à la rédaction d'un petit dictionnaire de l'idiome Mossi, nous nous sommes préoccupé de savoir si les dialectes parlés en Abyssinie étaient susceptibles de nous donner sur ce point quelques indications ; nous devons cependant reconnaître que les vocabulaires des langues Galla, Ahmarique et Tigré, que nous avons consultés, ne nous ont pas fourni

(1) En réalité, ces chroniqueurs arabes, c'est Es-Sadi, l'auteur du Tarikh-es-Soudan, qui écrivait seulement au XVIIe siècle. — De fait, c'est l'auteur portugais, le grand historien et géographe Jean de Barros, l'auteur de l'Asia (1552-1553), qui a le premier révélé l'existence des Mossi, au XVIe siècle. Léon l'Africain ne les connaît pas, pas plus que les géographes et historiens arabes du moyen-âge. Disons de plus qu'il faudrait vérifier exactement sur place si les Mossahs ressemblent aux Mossi autrement que par le nom. La chose est devenue relativement facile depuis que les Français occupent le Cameroun.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

d'arguments probants. Mais il est aujourd'hui démontré qu'au point de vue des recherches ethnographiques, les similitudes texiques ne signifient pas grand'chose et que les idiomes que l'écriture n'a pas fixés peuvent, en quelques siècles, se déformer au point d'être rendus méconnaissables. La valeur des rapprochements grammaticaux est autrement importante, nous n'avons eu, malheureusement, ni le temps, ni les moyens de les rechercher. Nous nous contentons donc d'indiquer ce point de vue d'où pourraient sortir, à notre avis, des observations fécondes. Des missionnaires ont affirmé, d'autre part, que les Mossi auraient conservé traditionnellement la notion symbolique de la croix chrétienne, fait que nous n'avons pas pu vérifier et qui, sans être impossible a priori, paraît peu probable. »

Après cette parenthèse sur les origines éloignées des Mossi, le capitaine Lambert reprend :

« Il est, en effet, de toute probabilité, et là encore faute de documents écrits nous n'avons pour nous appuyer que les traditions orales, que le peuple Mossi, ébranlé par la poussée d'une invasion musulmane venue de l'Est, a dû, par oscillations successives et en perdant du terrain en sens opposé, s'étendre plus avant vers l'Occident, de telle sorte que les Mossi-bé (1) que l'on rencontre formant encore plusieurs agglomérations dans la partie occidentale du Sokoto et jusque dans le cercle de Dounzou, montrant, eux aussi, de frappantes analogies avec les Mossi proprement dits, peuvent, à leur tour, nous servir de repère. (Le capitaine Lambert ajoute en note : « Nous nous trouvons, avec les Mossi-bé, en présence de l'accent circonflexe qui devait compléter le tatouage ethnique des Mossi tel qu'il est aujourd'hui. Cette marque appartient en propre aux populations de la rive gauche du Niger jusqu'à l'angle du Dollol-Maouri »). Ces agglomérations indiquent, d'une façon très approximative, la position de l'empire Mossi à l'époque historique, époque qui marque évidemment l'apogée de puissance de cet empire : vers 1850, nous l'avons vu

(1) Mossi-bé est tout simplement le pluriel du mot Mossi en langue peuhle.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

dans le Tarikh, Tombouctou est conquise par le sultan du Mossi. »

L'événement auquel se réfère ici le capitaine Lambert est la prise de Tombouctou par les Mossi (en 1333 exactement, d'après les calculs les plus poussés) (1) dont parle Es-Sadi dans le Tarikh-es-Soudan; mais il est impossible d'admettre, suivant le système du capitaine Lambert, qu'au XIVe siècle, les Mossi étaient encore installés sur la rive orientale du Niger, dans le Djerma actuel, qu'ils n'étaient pas encore arrivés, à cette époque, dans le Mossi actuel, ni même dans le Dagomba, et que c'est du Djerma qu'ils dirigèrent leur razzia triomphante sur Tombouctou. Si vraiment les Mossi sont venus du Bornou pour aboutir dans le Dagomba et ont passé, comme c'est naturel alors, dans le Haoussa et le Djerma (2), ils l'ont fait à une époque très reculée puisqu'il faut placer Rawa, le premier conquérant du pays de Ouagadougou et de Ouahigouya (voir la suite de cette étude), au XIIe siècle de notre ère, et puisque ses parents venaient du Dagomba, où on doit admettre que les Mossi ont séjourné un certain temps. La traversée du Haoussa et du Djerma par les ancêtres des Mossi du Dagomba nous reporte donc à une époque qu'on ne peut fixer évidemment, mais qui est très antérieure au XIVe siècle (époque où les Mossi prirent Tombouctou) et on doit admettre, contre l'opinion du capitaine Lambert, que les Mossi qui prirent Tombouctou venaient du Sud (de Ouahigouya probablement) et non de l'Est (région de Say) et nous ferons remarquer, au

(1) Voir le lieutenant Marc: Le Pays Mossi, pp. 136 à 138. Celui-ci fixe à 1333 ou 1334 la prise de Tombouctou par les Mossi. M. Delafosse a adopté, dans son Haut-Sénégal-Niger, la date de 1333. Binger (op. cit., tome I, pp. 481, 482) donne la date de 1329, d'après le Tarikh, mais suppose qu'elle est fausse et que c'est en 1336 que les Mossi, faisant alors partie, dit-il, du royaume de Mali, s'emparèrent de Tombouctou pour le compte et sous la direction des rois de Mali. Nous savons maintenant que cette hypothèse est fausse, que les Mossi ne furent jamais sous la domination du Mali et qu'ils vinrent piller Tombouctou, pour leur propre compte, en 1333. Du reste, les Malinké reprirent assez vite Tombouctou et la possédèrent jusqu'en 1433, époque où le chef Targui Akil s'en empara. L'expédition des Mossi sur Tombouctou ne fut, en fin de compte, qu'une razzia qui réussit parfaitement, mais qui n'eut pas de suites.

(2) On peut, à la vérité, expliquer les colonies Mossi du Sokoto comme venues des pays de Ouagadougou, du Yatenga ou de Fada N'Gourma, à une époque relativement récente, XIIIe, XIVe ou XVe siècle.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

surplus, qu'ils étaient beaucoup plus proches de Tombouctou à Ouahigouya qu'à Say. Ce point élucidé et cette erreur dissipée, nous pourrons admettre que l'exposé de la route à suivre par les Mossi venus du Bornou (s'ils en viennent) et retracée par le capitaine Lambert est plausible.

Ces réflexions s'appliquent de même à la suite du récit du capitaine Lambert. Il dit que les guerres dirigées par le second empire Songhaï contre les Mossi (XVIe siècle) les obligèrent à quitter le pays Djerma pour se diriger, au Sud-Ouest, vers le Dagomba. Evidemment, ceci est tout à fait inexact, mais enlevant la cause que donne le capitaine Lambert et reportant l'émigration dans le passé, nous pouvons admettre la route qu'il trace.

« Ce mouvement, dit le capitaine Lambert, parlant de la marche du Djerma au Dagomba, s'est accompli dans la direction du Sud, et les Mossi, après avoir côtoyé le Niger, l'ont traversé en un point situé entre Say et Ilo, mais beaucoup plus près de ce dernier.

On retrouve encore, au nord de Ilo, la coutume qui consiste à raser la tête des femmes de chefs. Celles-ci portent en outre des houseaux (1) de métal, caractéristiques particulières à la race Mossi et que l'on rencontre occasionnellement chez les peuples qui ont été en contact avec elle.

De là, l'émigration, laissant sur la gauche le pays Bariba (2), s'est dirigée en ligne droite à travers le Gourma et la région de Pama, jusqu'à Gambakha, chef-lieu actuel des territoires

(1) Le capitaine Lambert désigne sans doute ainsi les belles jambières de cuivre, de 20 centimètres de haut environ, que portent les femmes mossi riches.

(2) On peut se demander si les Bariba n'auraient pas fait partie de cette émigration Mossi ou Proto-Mossi, car les Bariba ont des points de ressemblance certains, au point de vue sociologique, avec les Mossi : ce sont, comme eux, des cavaliers guerriers, pillards, courageux. D'autre part, M. Delafosse (Vocabulaires comparatifs) se demande, page 234, s'il ne faut pas rattacher, au point de vue linguistique, les Bariba aux Mossi-Gourounsi.

Notons aussi que le capitaine Lambert dit, en note, page 170 : « Le chef de Djougou (Dahomey) est d'origine mossi. La tradition veut que les habitants de ce village, divisés par des luttes intestines qu'entretenait la rivalité de plusieurs prétendants se disputant le pouvoir, aient offert celui-ci à un tisserand établi depuis longtemps à Djougou, où il s'était certainement tenu en dehors des discordes locales ; celui-ci refusa l'offre qui lui était faite. Mais les gens de Djougou n'en voulurent pas démordre et l'enfermèrent dans sa case. Ayant à choisir nord de la colonie anglaise de la Gold-Coast. C'est ce point que choisit pour sa résidence le chef qui avait dirigé l'exode. Nous n'avons aucun renseignement positif sur sa personnalité, mais il est certain que c'est de lui ou de ses successeurs immédiats que la création du royaume Mampoursi et Dagomba tire son origine ».

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

Le capitaine Lambert ajoute en note : « Selon le colonel M.-P. Northcott, le fondateur de la dynastie de Gambakha se nommerait Tosogo ; mais les renseignements qu'il fournit à son sujet paraissent difficilement conciliables avec la tradition sur laquelle nous nous appuyons ici. » (Cf. Report on the northern territories of the Gold-Coast, Londres, 1890).

Le capitaine Lambert continue ainsi :

« La formation de l'empire Mossi proprement dit est postérieure ; on est cependant fondé à affirmer que, dès cette époque, une partie d'entre les nouveaux occupants du Mampoursi entreprit de se frayer un passage vers le Nord et y parvint par deux voies différentes ; nous nous trouvons, en effet, en présence d'un courant qui, parti de Gambakha, rejeta les Boussangas dans la région que ceux-ci occupent actuellement, et atteignit le pays de Béloussa où il s'épanouit vers l'Ouest et le Nord, occupant une vaste périphérie de territoire, aujourd'hui presque exclusivement peuplée par des Mossi. L'autre courant, se frayant une voie en pays Nankana, se dirigea au nord de Tiébélé, refoula du côté opposé les Boussangas, enserrés ainsi comme dans un étau, et se développa dans le pays que limite la Volta rouge, vers Ouagadougou.

On n'a qu'à jeter les yeux sur une carte du pays Mossi pour reconnaître la direction de ces deux courants parallèles venant se rejoindre au nord du Boussangsé actuel, région presque inhabitée à l'époque de la grande migration Mossi et au sein de laquelle les autochtones Boussangas, qui occupaient alors entre les inconvénients du pouvoir et la captivité, le tisserand ne put faire moins que de se décider ; au bout du sixième jour, il consentit à prendre le commandement. Ses descendants lui ont succédé depuis sans interruption et, en souvenir de l'épisode que nous avons rapporté, une coutume s'est établie en vertu de laquelle le nouveau chef demeure enfermé dans sa case pendant les six jours qui suivent son élection. »

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

tout le pays de Tenkodogo, ont été contraints de chercher un refuge et végètent depuis, réfractaires à toute fusion avec l'élément envahisseur. »

Le capitaine Lambert passe ensuite à la légende des origines du véritable empire Mossi :

« Un naba de Gambakha (ces derniers, nous l'avons vu, descendaient en ligne directe du chef qui avait guidé jusqu'au Mampoursi la grande immigration), arrivé au déclin de la vie, sans progéniture, crut voir dans ce fait l'accomplissement d'un décret de la destinée. Rien n'est immuable ici-bas et, sans doute, sa glorieuse dynastie devait-elle faire place à une nouvelle lignée de chefs. A ceci il se résignait encore, mais ce qui l'affligeait par dessus tout, c'était sa vieillesse solitaire. Il supplia donc les génies de lui donner un enfant, prenant l'engagement solennel de le vouer — garçon ou fille — à la virginité. Comme par miracle, une fille lui naquit aussitôt. Il l'appela Pogotoenga (femme à l'arbre) (1), la considérant ainsi, dès sa naissance, comme étrangère à son sexe, et lui fit donner des vêtements masculins.

Pogotoenga se développa vite ; elle atteignit, dès l'âge de dix ans, un degré de beauté incomparable et, vers la même époque, travaillée par les ardeurs de la puberté, elle réussit — malgré la surveillance étroite dont l'entourait le vieillard, jaloux de demeurer fidèle à son serment — à s'enfuir de la maison paternelle.

Longtemps poursuivie, elle put se soustraire à toutes les

(1) Pogotoenga, ou mieux Pogotoéga, veut dire la « femme au baobab » exactement, de pogo = femme et toéga = baobab. On peut se demander quel rapport a ce surnom avec le fait, pour Pogotoenga, d'être vouée à la virginité, si on ignore les coutumes des Soudanais. Une femme vouée à un baobab (divinité végétale puissante) est censée être l'épouse de ce baobab. De là, impossibilité pour elle de contracter un mariage avec un homme, et célibat forcé. Il est vrai que certains noirs (par exemple les Diakonkés du cercle de Faranah, Guinée française) estiment qu'une femme mariée à un esprit ne lui doit que son esprit ou sa forme spirituelle, et que son corps matériel est libre. De là vient ce fait que chez ces nègres, et d'autres encore, les femmes-fétiches, les femmes mariées à des esprits ou divinités sont en fait des prostituées et se livrent à la prostitution. Elles sont très rares d'ailleurs. En définitive, il leur est permis de se prostituer, mais non pas de se marier. C'est la prostitution sacrée bien connue de toute l'antiquité orientale et gréco-romaine. Ainsi la virginité (sacrée) d'une part, la prostitution (sacrée) de l'autre, se trouvent dériver assez étrangement d'un même ordre d'idées.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

recherches jusqu'à ce qu'un jour, errant dans le pays actuel de Tenkodogo, elle rencontra, en pleine brousse, le chasseur d'éléphants Rialé, homme solitaire et violent, qui la séduisit. Elle eut de Rialé un fils, Widiraogo, et une fille, Wedaogo (1).

Afin de ne pas altérer par l'exogamie la vertu du sang royal, dont ces enfants étaient les héritiers, Rialé et Pogotoenga résolurent de les marier ensemble et, de ce mariage, naquirent aussi un garçon et une fille, Zunghrama (2) et Yuganemdo. Obéissant à la même préoccupation, Zunghrama épousa sa sœur (3) et, de cette union, naquirent trois fils : Oubri, Oubrogo et Yampango : Oubri devait fonder la dynastie de Ouagadougou ; Oubrogo, celle de Tenkodogo ; Yampango, celle du Gourma (4). La postérité d'Oubri fut la plus glorieuse et la plus puissante : les rapports des nabas de Ouagadougou avec ceux de Tenkodogo et du Gourma, leurs cousins, furent toujours des rapports de suzerain à vassal (5).

L'ancêtre commun, Zunghrama, mourut à Komtoéga, où l'on montre encore son tombeau. »

En résumé, le capitaine Lambert affirme :

1° Que les Mossi viennent du sud du Bornou, où il y aurait encore une race, les Mossah, qui leur ressemblerait fort ;

(1) Pogotoenga est appelée, dans d'autres légendes (voir mon Noir du Yatenga page 58), Yennenga, ou simplement Poko (la femme). Quant à Ouidiraogo ou Widiraogo, ce nom veut dire cheval mâle, étalon. Pour le nom de Wedaogo ou Ouédaogo, je ne sais ce qu'il veut dire exactement, mais il me semble mal convenir à une fille, puisqu'il contient le mot daogo ou raogo qui veut dire mâle en Mossi.

(2) C'est le Zoungourana des légendes Moulins-Carrier et Vadier. (Voir mon Noir du Yatenga, page 60).

(3) Les unions de sœurs et de frères ne sont pas indiquées dans les autres variantes de la légende.

(4) Les variantes Moulins-Carrier et Vadier présentent les choses un peu autrement. C'est Zoungourana lui-même qui aurait fondé la dynastie de Tenkodogo, son frère Diaba qui aurait fondé celle de Fada-N'Gourma, et Rawa, son frère aîné (Rawa veut dire le brave, le fort en Mossi), qui aurait fondé celle du Rawatenga, devenu depuis le Yatenga. Quant à celle de Ouagadougou, ce serait bien Oubri, fils de Zoungourana, qui l'aurait fondée : sur ce dernier point toutes les traditions, celle dont s'inspire ici le capitaine Lambert, comme celles de Moulins et de Vadier, sont d'accord.

(5) Il n'est pas probable qu'il en fût ainsi dès le commencement, l'autorité supérieure devant appartenir au naba de Tenkodogo. Mais le royaume Mossi de Ouagadougou étant devenu, par la suite, le plus puissant, la primauté lui revint sur les royaumes voisins, moins puissants, de Tenkodogo et de Fada-N'Gourma.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

2° Que les Mossi ont passé par le Haoussa et le Djerma pour venir dans le Dagomba ;

3° Que c'est du Dagomba que les Mossi sont venus dans le Mossi actuel.

Il affirme aussi, mais nous pouvons négliger cette assertion comme absolument contraire aux faits que nous connaissons actuellement, que la marche du Djerma au Dagomba s'est faite pendant ou après le XVIe siècle de notre ère et est due aux croisades dirigées par le second empire Songhaï contre les Mossi. En réalité, au XIVe siècle, les Mossi avaient déjà quitté le Dagomba depuis longtemps et ils occupaient leurs emplacements actuels, y compris le Yatenga.

Le Dr Ruelle admet, lui aussi, que les Mossi vinrent de l'Est avant de s'installer dans le Dagomba. « La même tradition, dit-il (1), raconte que des guerriers venus de l'Est battirent, à Gambakha, les Dagomba, maîtres du pays, et y installèrent leur chef. Sa fille, Ouiaraouga, s'éprit d'un chasseur d'éléphants avec lequel elle s'enfuit, et, comme son père la faisait rechercher, elle se réfugia à Tenkodogo ; elle y épousa le chef du pays, un Boussanga nommé Zangoumana, dont le tombeau est encore, à Komterga, un lieu de pèlerinage pour les Mossi. Leur fils, Bougoum, après plusieurs expéditions dans la région, s'empara de Koupéla. Il eut, à son tour, trois fils : Houbri, Nabakéré et Kouda, qui étendirent leurs conquêtes. Le premier, qui les poussa jusqu'à Yako, fit de Ouagadougou sa capitale et força ses deux frères à le reconnaître comme suzerain (2). »

Le lieutenant Marc place aussi l'origine des Mossi dans l'Est. « D'où venaient les Mossi lorsqu'ils arrivèrent dans le pays de Gambaga? dit-il (op. cit., page 184). Il est assez difficile de se

(1) L'Anthropologie, tome XV, année 1904, page 875. Il s'agit de la tradition des vieillards.

(2) Je cite cette version un peu différente des autres et qui contient du reste des erreurs puisque le nom de « Ouiaraouga » (Ouidiraogo, étalon, cheval mâle) est donné à la jeune fille, que les autres traditions appellent Poko, Pokotoéga, Yennenga, etc. Le nom revient de droit à son fils et non à elle. A remarquer que Zoungourana (ou Zangoumana) devient ici un Boussanga, second époux de l'ex-jeune fille, fille du roi du Dagomba.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

prononcer à ce sujet : probablement du Soudan centre-africain, de la région du Tchad. Toutes les traditions des Mossi sont unanimes à placer très loin dans l'Est leur pays d'origine... »

Le lieutenant Marc avait déjà dit, page 130 : « Les traditions locales rapportent que les Mossi viennent de très loin dans l'Est. Il y a fort longtemps, ils occupaient un pays situé au delà du Niger, dont la capitale s'appelait Aliaman. Ce pays serait actuellement occupé par des Songhaï. Puis les Mossi vinrent occuper le Dagomba, ils battirent les habitants de ce pays, et le chef des Mossi s'installa à Gambaga (1). »

Dans cette tradition que rapporte le lieutenant Marc, il y a évidemment une part de fantaisie musulmane : Aliaman est probablement le Yémen. Mais la notation que ce pays serait actuellement occupé par des Songhay désigne bien le Djerma ou Zaberma, un peu à l'est du Niger, dans la région de Say et de Dosso. En dissociant la légende musulmanique (créée sans doute par quelque Yarsé musulman du Mossi) du reste du récit, on en revient toujours à une occupation momentanée et lointaine du Djerma par les ancêtres des Mossi.

M. Delafosse, au contraire, à l'inverse du Dr Ruelle, du capitaine Lambert, du lieutenant Marc, fait bien venir comme tout le monde les Mossi du Dagomba dans leur habitat actuel (voir Haut-Sénégal-Niger, tome I, p. 305 à 310), mais se montre peu favorable à l'idée d'une origine orientale. Il dit (p. 310, en note) : « Le lieutenant Marc semble vouloir attribuer aux Mossi une origine orientale ; à l'appui de son hypothèse, il dit que l'organisation de la cour des Morho nâba (empereurs des Mossi) est unique en Afrique occidentale, tandis qu'elle a des

(1) Suit la légende de la fille du roi de Gambakha, qui est appelée à tort Ouidirsogo (étalon), comme dans la version du Dr Ruelle. Le lieutenant Marc commet en plus erreur sur erreur en disant que Ouidirsogo signifie « pied de cheval » (au lieu de cheval mâle). Enfin Zoungourana (que le lieutenant Marc appelle Zoungourouma ou Zougourouma) est présenté ici, de même que chez Ruelle, comme le second époux de la fille du roi de Gambakha et pour un roi Boussansé. Dans la version du lieutenant Marc, il « fit la guerre à son beau-père et conquit tout le pays de Gambaga à Koupéla ». Puis « Zougourouma eut trois fils : Séré, Oubri et Couda. Le premier devint naba de Boussouma ; le second, Naba Oubri, conquit le pays de Ouagadougou, y installa sa capitale et s'empara du Yatenga. C'est Naba Oubri qui est considéré par les Mossi comme le premier des Moronabas et le fondateur de la dynastie actuelle. Il eut pour successeurs son frère Couda, puis son fils Nigansenda ».

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

équivalents au Haoussa, au Bornou, etc. Je me permettrai de faire observer que cet argument a peu de valeur, précisément parce que, contrairement à ce qu'avance le lieutenant Marc, on retrouve dans tous les anciens états de l'Afrique occidentale (Ghana, Mali, Tekrour, Gao, Dahomey, Bénin, etc.) une organisation absolument analogue à celle de la cour du Mossi (voir la IVe partie de cet ouvrage et se reporter aux récits des géographes arabes et des vieux voyageurs européens). » Certes je crois, comme M. Delafosse lui-même, que l'argument du lieutenant Marc est peu probant (1), mais ce n'est pas sur cet argument seulement que se basent Ruelle, Lambert et Marc, c'est sur une tradition même des Mossi, et il serait sans doute imprudent de la rejeter sans autre examen. Un argument qu'on pourrait citer en faveur d'une très ancienne occupation du Djerma par les ancêtres des Mossi est cette notation de Binger : « Les Mossi ont dû rester assez longtemps (2)... en contact avec les Touareg, puisqu'ils ont adopté en partie leur costume et qu'ils se servent, comme eux, du sabre à poignée en croix. »

En fait, il faut avouer cependant que nous ne savons rien de certain sur les Mossi au delà du Dagomba. C'est ce que je

(1) Voici cet argument tel que le développe le lieutenant Marc (ouvrage cité, pages 134 et 135) :

« L'organisation féodale du pays mossi, la cour du Moro-Naba, ses pages, ses eunuques sont uniques en Afrique occidentale ; au contraire, les monarques noirs que l'on connaît en Afrique centrale paraissent vivre dans un cadre qui ressemble par beaucoup de points à celui qui entoure les Moronabas. Les sultans du Zinder, du Bornou, du Ouadaï ont, eux aussi, une cour, des eunuques et des pages. Le peu que nous savons de l'organisation de leurs empires nous paraît assez comparable à ce que nous avons vu au Mossi. Mais notre documentation sur cette question est trop peu de chose pour que nous puissions essayer une étude comparative. »

(2) J'ai supprimé, dans cette citation, le mot « après », car Binger suppose que les Mossi ayant pris, en 1326, Tombouctou, sur l'ordre du Mali, y sont restés jusqu'en 1433, donc un siècle en contact avec les Touareg. En réalité, les Mossi ne sont restés que fort peu de temps à Tombouctou et ce n'est pas lors de cette razzia qu'ils ont pu avoir un contact prolongé avec les Touareg, d'où les séparaient, avant qu'ils prissent Tombouctou et dès qu'ils quittèrent la ville, tout le pays songhaï étendu le long des bords du Niger. Au contraire, s'ils ont occupé le Djerma jadis, avant les Djermabé ou Songhaï, on s'explique aisément ce contact avec les Touareg et l'épée avec courte poignée en croix (Binger appelle à tort cette épée droite un sabre). Ajoutons que quand Binger parle du costume Targui, en partie adopté par les Mossi, il a sans doute en vue le lithâm (ou voile de bouche) porté alors par les cavaliers Mossi. Actuellement ceux-ci ne le portent plus et je ne l'ai jamais vu dans le Mossi, où j'ai résidé en 1908-1909.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

disais d'une façon nette dans mon Noir du Yatenga (1917) (1). Le passage dans le Djerma est hypothétique et la question des Mossah demanderait à être réglée par une enquête sur place dans le Cameroun. J'ai été tenté, à une époque, de rattacher les Mossi à des races du Sud, aux Agni-Achanti, et il est certain qu'il semble y avoir une étroite parenté (2) entre le vocabulaire numérique du groupe Voltaïque et celui du groupe Agni-Achanti. Mais peut-on baser un rapprochement linguistique sur le vocabulaire seul? Il faudrait qu'il fût aussi démontré que, grammaticalement parlant, le groupe linguistique Voltaïque est fort près du groupe Agni-Achanti (3). Et c'est ce qui n'a pas encore été fait.

Pour le moment, nous en sommes donc encore réduits aux hypothèses en ce qui concerne les origines Mossi. Nous savons que les Mossi viennent du Dagomba et qu'ils entrèrent même probablement dans ce pays en conquérants. Mais d'où venaient-ils alors? du Nord-Est? du Sud? de l'Est? Nous ne pouvons pas encore répondre d'une façon certaine, comme pour beaucoup d'autres questions historiques, scientifiques, philosophiques, hélas !

Grammatici certant et adhuc sub judice lis est.

(1) Voir pages 57 et 58.

(2) Voir Apepndice n° I. De même, c'est une femme Aoura-Poko qui joue le grand rôle dans la tradition historique Baoulé comme dans la tradition historique Mossi. Et quoique femme se dise oba, eba, bla en Achanti, en Abron, en Baoulé, l'héroïne Baoulé se nomme Poko, comme la Poko (femme) ou Pokotoéga (femme du baobab) de la tradition Mossi.

(3) M. Delafosse dit qu'il n'y a pas de rapport particulier entre ces deux groupes au point de vue grammatical. D'une façon plus générale, M. Delafosse est tenté de croire actuellement, en ce qui concerne les origines Mossi, que le séjour des Mossi dans leur pays actuel est bien antérieur au XIe siècle de notre ère. Ce ne serait qu'une bande de pillards, de soldats heureux, une dynastie princière qui serait venue de Gambakha, au XIe siècle, pour fonder de petits royaumes dans un pays déjà colonisé antérieurement par les Mossi. Cependant, il y a une difficulté à cette opinion : c'est l'existence dans le Mossi d'une race autochtone encore existante (Nioniossé ou Foulsé) qui est loin de s'être fondue toujours et partout dans la race Mossi. D'après mes observations faites sur place (je suis resté trois ans dans le Yatenga, de 1913 à 1916), il y a encore plus de Nioniossé que de Mossi dans le Yatenga, 100.000 contre 70.000. (Voir mon Noir du Yatenga, pages 665 et 666). L'existence de cette race antérieure prouve que la colonisation Mossi est relativement récente et, d'autre part, les Mossi n'ont pu pénétrer et se maintenir dans une région déjà occupée que comme formant de petites monarchies militaires conquérantes. Je pense donc que les Mossi sont venus, avec leurs chefs, du Dagomba, et qu'ils ne sont venus dans le Mossi actuel qu'au..... Mais nous retombons ici dans la question chronologique, que nous allons traiter tout à l'heure.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

***

Cette incertitude au sujet des origines Mossi ne doit pas nous empêcher de traiter la question anthropologique Mossi. Au contraire, car il est bien évident que, si la linguistique peut nous donner des renseignements précieux sur les origines et affinités Mossi, l'anthropologie peut nous en donner de plus précieux et de plus profonds encore, car il est plus facile, évidemment, pour un peuple, comme on l'a dit, de changer sa langue que la forme de son crâne. Adressons-nous donc à l'anthropologie et consultons le Dr Ruelle pour savoir ce que sont les Mossi au point de vue somatique.

Le Dr Ruelle, dans le travail cité (1), a travaillé sur 100 Mossi hommes (malheureusement, il n'a pas mensuré de femmes, ce qui est une lacune regrettable et peut vicier certaines moyennes, par exemple celles de la taille). Au point de vue de la coloration de la peau, qu'il trouve brun-foncé en général (non seulement pour les Mossi mais pour les autres races du IIe territoire militaire qu'il étudie en même temps qu'eux), il donne pour les Mossi les numéros suivants de l'échelle chromatique de Broca :

70 Mossi sur 100 ont le n° 42
14 Mossi sur 100 ont le n° 41
19 Mossi sur 100 ont le n° 37 (2)

Pour l'indice céphalique horizontal :

2 Mossi ont 65	15 Mossi ont 75
4 Mossi ont 68	11 Mossi ont 76
4 Mossi ont 69	7 Mossi ont 77
2 Mossi ont 70	8 Mossi ont 78
3 Mossi ont 71	6 Mossi ont 79
13 Mossi ont 72	1 Mossi a 80
17 Mossi ont 73	2 Mossi ont 81 (3)
5 Mossi ont 74

(1) L'Anthropologie, année 1904, tome XV, pp. 519-561 et 657 à 703.

(2) Page 522.

(3) Page 524. Il est probable que si le Dr Ruelle avait eu le soin de mensurer des femmes Mossi, l'indice céphalique se serait élevé, car on voit, par exemple, les femmes Lobi avoir 75,89 d'indice céphalique horizontal moyen, tandis que

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

On voit donc que 12 Mossi sur 100 sont ultra-dolichocéphales ou hyperdolichocéphales, 53 dolichocéphales proprement dits, 32 sous-dolichocéphales, 3 enfin sous-brachycéphales.

La moyenne est de 74,65, c'est-à-dire nettement dolichocéphale. Les indices extrêmes sont : maximum, 81,76 ; minimum, 65,62. L'écart est de 16,14.

Las races qui se rapprochent le plus des Mossi dans le tableau du Dr Ruelle sont :

Les Ouangarbé ou Yarsé	74.95	(moyenne)
Les Samo	74.90	—
Les Nounouma	74.40	—
Les Birifon	74.58	—
Les Lobi	74.36	—

L'indice nasal donne, pour les 100 Mossi :

1	dont l'indice nasal est compris	entre 80 et 84.9
2	—	entre 85 et 89.9
9	—	entre 90 et 94.9
14	—	entre 95 et 99.9
29	—	entre 100 et 104.9
17	—	entre 105 et 109.9
11	—	entre 110 et 114.9
15	—	entre 115 et 119.9
2	—	au-dessus de 120

La moyenne est de 104,60. Nous avons, en détail, un mésorhinien (jusqu'à 85), 28 platyrhiniens (de 85 à 100) et 74 hyperplatyrhiniens (de 100 à 120) (1).

Le Mossi est donc très franchement platyrhinien et même hyper-platyrhinien, quoi qu'il le soit moins que le Bambara.

Pour la taille, la moyenne de 94 Mossi hommes fait 1m,71 les hommes n'ont que 74,28 ; les femmes Birifon avoir 77,35, tandis que les hommes n'ont que 74,58 ; enfin les femmes Dagari avoir 72,22, tandis que les hommes n'ont que 72,09 Cela signifie que les femmes ont le crâne plus court que les hommes tout en ne l'ayant pas plus large, c'est-à-dire ont une moindre capacité cérébrale. Cela signifie sans doute aussi que des ancêtres de ces femmes ont probablement appartenu, plus ou moins, à la race pygmée ou négrille dont on trouve encore des traces non équivoques en Côte d'Ivoire, race dont le crâne est plus court que celui des grands nègres, sans être pour cela plus large, au contraire.

(1) Page 588.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

(exactement 1m,712). Mais cette moyenne serait bien abaissée si le Dr Ruelle avait pu mesurer des femmes (1).

En résumé, l'étude du Dr Ruelle nous apprend que les Mossi sont dolichocéphales, platyrhiniens et grands. Ce sont là les caractéristiques habituellement attribuées à la race noire en général (aux grands noirs, pas aux négrilles). Elles ne différencient pas sensiblement les Mossi des races qui les entourent. Pour arriver à des conclusions anthropologiques sur l'origine des Mossi, il faudra des études somatiques beaucoup plus poussées qu'il n'en existe actuellement sur les Mossi même et sur les centaines de peuplades nègres que renferme le Soudan entre l'Abyssinie et l'Atlantique et entre le Sahara et le golfe de Guinée.

---

(1) Les femmes Lobi ont en moyenne 1m,66, tandis que les hommes ont 1m,75 ; les femmes Birifon 1m,62, tandis que les hommes ont 1m,75 ; les femmes Dagari 1m,59, tandis que les hommes ont 1m,72 (p. 550).

[p.16]

CHAPITRE II

LA CHRONOLOGIE MOSSI

La chronologie Mossi est encore une construction hypothétique, du moins pour les débuts de l'histoire Mossi, car, dès le commencement du XVe siècle, on est à peu près d'accord, et tout à fait au XVIIIe siècle. M. Delafosse, dans son Haut-Sénégal-Niger (1912), a donné une chronologie complète du Mossi (pays de Ouagadougou, Yatenga, pays de Fada-N'Gourma) (1), tandis que j'en ébauchais une dans mon Noir du Soudan: Pays Mossi et Gourounsi (1912), pour les nabas de Ouagadougou (2). En 1917, j'ai repris cette question d'une façon plus poussée dans mon Noir du Yatenga (pp. 667 à 677). Je donne ici ces trois chronologies différentes en ce qui concerne le Yatenga, c'est-à-dire le royaume nord de tout le Mossi, qui est celui qui a eu affaire au Mali, au Songhaï et au Bambara au cours des âges — qui est celui, en conséquence, pour lequel nous avons quelques points de repère fournis par les chroniqueurs de Tombouctou ou par les Portugais. Une fois ces chronologies données, nous pourrons les discuter à nouveau à l'aide d'une indication importante que donne le Tarikh-el- Fettach :

Rois Mossi	Chronologie Delafosse	Tauxier 1912	Tauxier 1917
—	—	—	—
Nédéga (Dagomba) .	1000	»	1233
Riélé	»	»	1253
Ouidirsogo	mort en 1050	»	1273

(1) Voir tome Ier, pages 306 à 312, et tome II, pages 126, 139 à 140 et 149 à 150.

(2) Voir pages 458 à 462. A la vérité il n'y a pas dans ces pages de liste chronologique proprement dite, mais il y a des indications diverses d'où l'on peut déduire les dates du tableau concernant les rois de Ouagadougou que j'ai donné, page 674, de mon Noir du Yatenga, sous ce titre : « Chrono ogie du Mossi (région de Ouagadougou), d'après mon Noir du Soudan, 1912 » (Appendice n° V).

Rois Mossi	Chronologie Delafosse	Tauxier 1912	Tauxier 1917
—	—	—	—
Rawa	XIe siècle	»	1293
Oubri	1050-1090	1175-1199	1313
Ouemtanango	1130	»	1333
Yadega	1170	»	1353
Yaouloumfao	1200-1225	»	1360
Guéda	»	»	1360-1375
Tounougoum	»	»
Possinga	»	»	1375-1385
Nasségué	1320-1340	»
Somna	»	»	1385-1395
Vanté-Baragouan	1350-1380	»
Bonga	1380-1410	»	1395-1415
Sougounoum	1410-1430	»	1415-1430
Kissoum	1430-1435	»	1430
Zangayella	1435-1460	»	1430-1450
Lanlassé	1460-1475	»	1450-1475
Nassodoba	1475-1500	»	1475-1505
Yamba	1500-1530	»	1505-1535
Niago	1530 1560	»	1535-1565
Parima	1560-1590	»	1565-1595
Koumpaougoum	1590-1620	»	1595-1625
Nabasséré	1620-1660	»	1625-1655
Toussourou	1660-1690	»	1655-1685
Sini	1690-1720	»	1685-1720
Pigo	1720-1739	»	1720-1739
Ouabégo	1739-1754	»	1739-1754
Kango	1754-1787	»	1754-1787
Sagha	1787-1803	»	1787-1803
Kaogo	1803-1806	»	1803-1806
Tougouri	1806-1822	»	1806-1822
Kom	1822-1825	»	1822-1825
Ragongo	1825-1831	»	1825-1831
Ridimba	1831	»	1831
Diogoré	1831-1834	»	1831-1834
Totébalobo	1834-1850	»	1834-1850
Yemdé	1850-1877	»	1850-1877
Sanoum	1877-1879	»	1877-1879
Nobogo	1879-1884	»	1879-1884
Pigo II	1884-1885	»	1884-1885
Baogo	1885-1895	»	1885-1894
Bagaré	1895-1899	»	1894-1899
Liguidi	1899-1902	»	1899-1902
Kobogo	depuis 1902	»	1902-1914

Nous pouvons remarquer d'abord qu'il y a, je crois, une

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

légère confusion dans la chronologie de début de M. Delafosse. Il compte, en effet (tome Ier, page 306), 40 ans par génération, et, d'autre part (tome II, page 126), il place approximativement Oubri de 1050 à 1090. Or, Oubri était le fils de Zoungourana, fils lui-même de Ouidiraogo, fils lui-même de la princesse Yennenga, fils lui-même de Nédéga, le roi qui régnait dans le Dagomba. Il y a donc quatre générations de Nédéga à Oubri, ce qui doit faire 160 ans, d'après le calcul de M. Delafosse, et si Oubri doit être placé entre 1050 et 1090, cela reporte son trisaïeul Nédéga vers 890, c'est-à-dire à la fin du IXe siècle de notre ère ou, tout au moins, en 910, c'est-à-dire au commencement du Xe siècle (1). En ce dernier cas, les dates approximatives seraient les suivantes :

Nédéga	vers 910
Yennenga	vers 950
Ouidiraogo	vers 990
Zoungourana	vers 1030
Oubri	entre 1050 et 1090

Cela mettrait, en définitive, Nédéga, le roi Dagomba, sa fille, Yennenga, et son petit-fils, Ouidiraogo, au Xe siècle, puis Zoungourana (avec ses frères Rawa et Diaba) et Oubri, au XIe siècle.

Ceci dit, il reste que la chronologie Mossi du Xe au XIVe siècle n'est pas fixée et qu'il serait intéressant de trouver quelque indication qui permit une approximation sérieuse.

Justement, il existe un texte du deuxième appendice du Tarikh-el-Fettach qui peut jeter une lueur dans cette obscurité. Au nom d'un certain roi Songhaï appelé Baraï, il est dit, en effet, que le roi des Mossi guerroya contre lui (2). Nous ne savons pas quel roi Mossi, du reste, car le Tarikh-el-Fettach ne donne pas son nom, mais, avant de rechercher dans la longue liste des rois Mossi quel put être cet agresseur, il faudrait avoir fixé, au moins approximativement, la date de ce Baraï.

Mais cela nous force justement à établir toute la chronologie

(1) C'est ce que j'ai noté déjà dans mon Noir du Yatenga, page 673 (Appendice n° IV).

(2) Tarikh-el-Fettach, traduction Houdas, page 333.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

Sonraï, une chronologie très approximative aussi et qui varie suivant que nous consultons le Tarikh-es-Soudan ou le Tarikh-el-Fettach.

Voici d'abord comment on pourrait établir, d'une façon du reste schématique et grossièrement approximative, la chronologie des princes Songhaï d'après le Tarikh-es-Soudan.

Cette chronique ne donne qu'une date jusqu'à Sonni-Ali-Ber : celle de Kosoï, qui se convertit à l'islamisme en l'an 400 de l'hégire, donc en 1009-1010 de notre ère (1), mais elle donne les dates de Sonni-Ali-Ber et des Askias qui lui succèdèrent, de 1464-1465 à 1591, époque de la conquête marocaine.

Nous pouvons d'abord remarquer que, pour les princes pour lesquels nous avons des dates exactes (Sonni-Ali et les Askias), il y a 126 ou 127 ans pour dix règnes, ce qui donne environ 13 ans par règne. Nous pouvons appliquer cette moyenne à l'ensemble des princes Songhay : ainsi, puisque nous comptons, depuis Za Alayaman jusqu'à Issihak II, 58 princes Songhay, cela place le commencement de ces princes vers l'an 887 de notre ère.

D'autre part, il nous faut tenir compte de ce fait que nous avons la date approximative du règne de Ali Kolon (ou Ali Kolen, ou Ali Golom, ou Ali Kilnou), qui délivra le Songhay de la suzeraineté du Mali un peu après le règne de Kankan-Moussa et pendant cette époque momentanée de faiblesse qui permit aux Mossi de razzier Tombouctou (1333). M. Delafosse (2) place la fuite d'Ali Kolen de la cour du roi de Mali et sa défense victorieuse contre les gens de Mali qui le poursuivaient, en 1335. Avant lui, Binger (3) avait placé cette fuite en 1331, sous le règne du faible Magha Ier, successeur de Kankan-Moussa qui régna de 1331 à 1335. Nous pouvons prendre 1333 comme date moyenne et on pourrait penser que la prise de Tombouctou par les Mossi, qui se produisit cette année-là, ne fut pas sans favoriser la restauration de l'indépendance du Songhaï.

(1) Tarikh-es-Soudan, traduction Houdas, page 5.
(2) Haut-Sénégal-Niger, tome II, page 73.
(3) Du Niger au golfe de Guinée, tome II, page 368. Voir aussi page 371.

En se basant sur ces données, nous avons :

1.	Za Alayaman	837–849
2.	Zakoï	849–861
3.	Takoï	861–873
4.	Akoï	873–885
5.	Kou	885–897
6.	Ali Faï	897–909
7.	Biyaï Komaï	909–921
8.	Biyaï	921–933
9.	Karaï	933–945
10.	Yama-Karaouïa	945–957
11.	Yama	957–969
12.	Yama-Danka-Kibao	969–981
13.	Koukoraï	981-993
14.	Kenken	993–1005
15.	Kosoï (vers 1009-1010)	1005–1025
16.	Kosaï-Dariyâ	1025–1044
17.	Hen-Kon-Ouanko-Dam	1044–1063
18.	Biyaï-Koï-Kimi	1063–1082
19.	Nintâsanaï	1082–1101
20.	Biyaï-Kaïna-Kimba	1101–1120
21.	Kaïna-Chinyounbo	1120–1139
22.	Tib	1139–1158
23.	Yama-Dao	1158–1177
24.	Fadazou	1177–1196
25.	Ali-Koro	1196–1215
26.	Bir-Foloko	1215–1235
27.	Yasiboï	1235–1255
28.	Douro	1255–1275
29.	Zenko-Bâro	1275–1295
30.	Bisi-Bâro	1295–1315
31.	Bada	1325–1332
32.	Ali-Kolon (vers 1333)	1333–1340
33.	Selman-Nâri	1340–1347
34.	Ibrahim Kabaï	1347–1354
35.	Otamân Kanafa	1354–1362
36.	Bar-Kaïna-Ankabi	1362–1370
37.	Mousa	1370–1378
38.	Bokar-Zonko	1378–1386
39.	Bokar-Dalla-Boyonbo	1386-1394
40.	Mar Kiraï	1394–1402
41.	Mohammed Dâo	1402–1410
42.	Mohammed Koukiya	1410–1418
43.	Mohammed Fâr	1418–1426
44.	Karbifô	1426–1434
45.	Mar-Faï-Kolli-Djimo	1434–1442
46.	Mar Arkena	1442–1449

47.	Mar Arandan	1449–1456
48.	Selimân Dam	1456–1464
49.	Sonni Ali Ber	1464–1492
50.	Askia El-Hadj Mohammed	1493–1528
51.	Askia Moussa	1528–1531
52.	Askia Mohammed II	1531–1537
53.	Askia Ismaïl	1537–1539
54.	Askia Issihak I	1539–1549
55.	Askia Daoud	1549–1582
56.	Askia Mohammed III	1582–1586
57.	Askia Mohammed Bani	1586–1588
58.	Askia Issihak II	1588–1591

J'ai souligné dans cette liste le nom de Bir-Foloko (1215-1235) parce que c'est le roi de la liste du Tarikh-es-Soudan qui correspond au Baraï de la liste du Tarikh-el-Fettach.

Quant aux dates que l'on peut tirer du Tarikh-el-Fettach, elles consistent en trois notations :

1° Un géant venu du Yemen, qui vivait vers le milieu du IVe siècle de l'hégire (1), c'est-à-dire, en comptant 350 ans depuis l'hégire, vers 961 après Jésus-Christ ;

2° La date de l'islamisation des gens de Gao qui eut lieu, d'après El-Motaouakkel Kâti, entre 471 et 475 de l'hégire, c'est-à-dire entre 1079 et 1082 de notre ère (2) ;

3° Et la date de Mâkara-Komsoû, qui était contemporain du pèlerinage de Kankan-Moussa à La Mecque, en l'année 720 de l'hégire, soit 1321-1322 de notre ère (3). Ce Mâkara-Komsoû était le trente-troisième roi du Songhay, d'après la liste donnée par Mahmoud Kâti.

On peut, sur ces trois notations, établir une liste chronologique des princes du Songhay d'après le Tarikh-el-Fettach, en remarquant que 360 ans (961 à 1321) sont donnés pour trente-trois princes, ce qui fait une moyenne de 11 ans à peu près par prince. D'autre part, on peut penser que la date de l'islamisation des gens de Gao donne la date de Kotso-Moslem (Kotso le Musulman) et que, par conséquent, nous pouvons mettre ce prince vers 1079-1082, c'est-à-dire vers 1080 approxi-

(1) Tarikh-el-Fettach, traduction Houdas et Delafosse, page 329.
(2) Ibidem, pages 332, 333.
(3) Ibidem, page 335.

mativement. Le Tarikh, il est vrai, dit que ce ne fut pas Kotso-Moslem qui islamisa les gens de Gao et que l'opinion courante répandue à ce sujet est fausse, mais Mahmoûd Kâti semble bafouiller singulièrement (que l'on me passe le mot) à ce sujet (1) et l'on peut, malgré son autorité et en se basant sur l'opinion courante qu'il rejette, admettre que ce fut Kotso qui islamisa et Gao et le royaume Songhay. On a donc 1080 pour son époque, ce qui donne neuf ans en moyenne pour ses prédécesseurs jusqu'au géant venu du Yémen. Nous pouvons, du reste, d'ores et déjà, faire toutes nos réserves sur ce commencement, beaucoup trop rapproché, de l'empire Songhay. La date que l'on tire du Tarikh-es-Soudan (837 après Jésus-Christ) semble bien préférable à cette date de 961, tirée du Tarikh-el-Fettach.

Quoi qu'il en soit à ce dernier sujet, nous avons donc :

1. Géant venu du Yemen	961
2. Ouaaï	970
3. Kaïen	979
4. Takaï	988
5. Mata-Kaï	997
6. Mali Biyaï	1006
7. Bayaï Kima	1015
8. Beï	1024
9. Kiraï	1033
10. Yama Kalaouaï	1042
11. Yama-Dombo	1051
12. Yama-Diamaa	1060
13. Diatakoré	1070
14. Koto-Moslem	1080
15. Kotso-Dariâ	1093
16. Hounabououa	1106
17. Yama-Kitsi	1119
18. Baraï	1132
19. Bibaï-Kaïna	1145
20. Sémanbao	1158
21. Fanda Diaoro	1171
22. Yama-Daa	1184
23. Arkour-Diouna	1197
24. Baroï (guerre avec les Mossi)	1210
25. Yassi Bo'o	1223

(1) Voir la note de MM. Houdas-Delafosse, page 332.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

26. Baro	1236
27. Douro	1249
28. Bitsi-Baro	1262
29. Ali Golom	1275
30. Silman Nari	1288
31. Ibrahim Kabayao	1301
32. Ousman Guifo	1311
33. Mâkara Komsôu	1321–1322
34. Boubakar	1335–1340
35. Ankada	1349–1363
36. Kimi-Yankoï	1363–1377
37. Baro del Yombo	1377–1390
38. Madao	1390–1405
39. Mohammed Koukiya	1405–1420
40. Mohammed Fari	1420–1435
41. Balam	1435–1450
42. Souleïman-Dama	1450–1465
43. Sonni-Ali-Ber	1465–1492

Ce que l'on peut remarquer dans cette liste, c'est (à part le fait qu'elle rapproche beaucoup trop de nous les commencements du royaume Songhaï et que, sur ce point, la chronologie qu'on tire du Tarikh-es-Soudan lui est préférable) que Kotso-Moslem est placé ici vers 1080, tandis que le même (appelé Kosoï, par Es'Sadi) est placé vers 1010 par celui-ci. Sur ce point, la date du Tarikh-el-Fettach nous paraît préférable car, si nous réfléchissons aux événements du XIe siècle qui ont pu amener cette conversion à l'Islam, nous songeons, tout d'abord, à la prise de Ghana, vers 1076, par les Almoravides. Nous serions donc porté à préférer la date que l'on tire du Tarikh-el-Fettach, sans cependant que la raison soit absolument concluante, car il peut se faire ou bien que ce soit une autre cause que la pression des Almoravides qui ait amené la conversion à l'Islam du roi Songhay de l'époque, ou bien même que cette pression ait pu se faire sentir de ce côté à une autre époque qu'à l'époque même de la prise de Ghana. Cependant il est raisonnable de penser que c'est cet événement qui a amené les Songhaï à l'Islam, et donc Kotso-Moslem, ou Kosoï le Musulman, doit être placé vers 1080 plutôt que vers 1010.

Mais il y a une contradiction encore plus forte que celle-ci entre le Tarikh-el-Fettach et le Tarikh-es-Soudan. Le Tarikh-es-Soudan dit explicitement que ce fut Kankan-Moussa qui fut le premier des rois de Mali qui s'empara du Songhay (1). De là, il résulte logiquement que Ali Kolon et son aventure de libération doivent être placés après Kankan-Moussa. Or, d'après le Tarikh-el-Fettach, Ali Kolon (qu'il appelle Ali Golom) délivra bien le Songhaï ou, plus exactement, « abandonna le roi du Malli pour des causes qu'il serait trop long de rapporter ici et dont l'exposé ne rentre point dans notre cadre », déclare imperturbablement l'auteur (2). Mais, après lui, régna Silman-Nâri, puis Ibrahim-Kabayao, puis Ousman-Guifo, puis Mâkara-Komsoû, et ce fut sous ce dernier que Kankan-Moussa passa dans le pays Songhay, se rendant en pélerinage à La Mecque (3). Il faut donc admettre, d'après cet exposé, que Ali Golom ou Ali Kolon est antérieur à Kankan-Moussa, vécut vers 1275 et, s'il délivra le pays du joug du Mali, le fit sous les successeurs directs de Soundiata alias Mari-Diata. Puis, à l'époque de Kankan-Moussa, le plus célèbre des rois du Mali après Soundiata, le pays Songhaï serait retombé, pour un temps qu'il est impossible de fixer, sous la suzeraineté du Mali.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

Il est difficile de trancher la question de savoir qui a raison, sous ce rapport, du Tarikh-es-Soudan ou du Tarikh-el-Fettach. Du reste, pour la question qui nous occupe particulièrement (la date de Baraï ou Bir-Foloko), il n'est pas essentiel de lui donner ici une solution. Remarquons simplement que la chronologie que nous avons tirée du Tarikh-es-Soudan met Bir-Foloko entre 1215 et 1235 et que celle que nous avons tirée du Tarikh-el-Fettach le met vers 1210. D'autre part, Binger place « Za-Birou ou Bayarou Falaka » comme correspondant au règne de Mansa Wali Ier (1260-1276) (4). M. Delafosse, de son côté (5), ne donne pas la date propre à « Beïra-Foloko », mais, d'après les deux dates extrêmes qu'il donne

(1) Traduction Houdas, pages 12 et 13.
(2) Traduction Houdas et Delafosse, page 234.
(3) Ibidem, page 235.
(4) Binger, ouvrage cité, tome II, pages 358 et 359.
(5) Haut-Sénégal-Niger, tome II, page 65.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

pour les Dia à Gao (1010 à 1335) et d'après la place de Beïra-Foloko entre ses prédécesseurs et successeurs, il faudrait le placer vers 1275-1300 environ. En résumé, je pense que Baraï est de la première moitié du XIIIe siècle et que la première guerre des Songhaï et des Mossi se fit à cette époque.

Voici les détails que donne, sur cette guerre, le Tarikh-el-Fettach (page 333) : « Puis [vint] le diaoua Baraï, contre lequel guerroya le roi des Mossi ; la campagne dura quatre mois, à la suite desquels le roi des Mossi fut vaincu et son armée mise en déroute et anéantie ». Ainsi les Mossi auraient été les agresseurs, mais auraient été, finalement, vaincus et repoussés.

Il s'agit maintenant de rechercher quel est le roi Mossi qui entreprit cette campagne et, sur ce point, il faut l'avouer, nous n'avons aucune indication : il faut naturellement écarter Nédéga, le roi du Dagomba, sa fille Yennenga ou Pokotoéga, son petit-fils Ouidiraogo, mais on peut hésiter entre Rawa et Ouemtanango. Si l'on choisit le premier, il aurait donc vécu de 1200 à 1250 (ce qui montrerait que ma date de 1293, pour ce naba, est trop récente, et la date de M. Delafosse — début du XIe siècle — trop ancienne). Si l'on choisit Ouemtanango, il en est encore de même : ma date de 1333, pour ce naba, serait trop récente d'un siècle, et la date de M. Delafosse un peu trop ancienne d'un demi-siècle (1). En résumé, il nous est impossible de dire exactement quel est le naba qui porta le premier la guerre vers le Nord, mais que ce soit Rawa ou Ouemtanango, il semble bien que, dès le début du XIIIe siècle, les Mossi étaient installés dans leurs territoires actuels, y compris le Yatenga, et, par conséquent, il faut en déduire que ce fut au XIIe siècle qu'ils y vinrent. Ma chronologie Mossi de 1917 semble donc à réviser comme rapprochant trop de nous les origines de l'histoire Mossi, et, d'autre part, celle de M. Delafosse semble aussi à retoucher comme tombant dans l'excès contraire. Ce ne serait pas la première fois que la vérité serait placée, comme il arrive souvent, entre deux opinions extrêmes.

(1) M. Delafosse place Ouemtanango vers 1170 environ. On peut le déduire de deux passages de son tome II, pages 126 et 139. Dans le dernier, il parle de Ouemtanango lui-même et, dans le premier, de son père et de ses oncles.

[p. 26]

CHAPITRE III

MOSSI ET BAMBARA

On sait que le roi Bambara N'Golo et le roi Mossi Kango se firent la guerre vers la fin du XVIIIe siècle. Les traditions du Yatenga conservent bien le souvenir, brodé de variations plus ou moins burlesques, des événements qui amenèrent cette guerre (voir mon Noir du Yatenga, 1917, pages 88 à 91), mais ils ne disent rien sur la guerre elle-même. M. Delafosse, dans son Haut-Sénégal-Niger (1912), commence par rapporter, d'après des traditions Bambara, les mêmes récits sur les causes qui amenèrent la guerre (1), mais il ne dit pas grand'-chose sur la guerre elle-même. Après avoir parlé de l'extermination cruelle, par Kango, des auxiliaires Bambara dont il avait eu jadis besoin et qui lui avaient été prêtés, il ajoute (2) : « Cela se passait vers 1760 : Ngolo Diara, alors empereur de Ségou, voulut venger ses compatriotes et partit en guerre contre le Yatenga, mais il fut repoussé par Kango. Plus tard, à la suite d'une sorte de guerre civile qui éclata à Ségou, les commerçants dioula de cette ville s'enfuirent et se réfugièrent au Yatenga ; Ngolo demanda à Kango de les lui renvoyer et, sur son refus, dirigea, pour la troisième fois, une colonne contre l'empire de Ouahigouya ; cette colonne n'eut pas plus de succès que la précédente et Ngolo mourut pendant cette expédition, suivi de près dans la tombe par son adversaire (1787). »

M. Delafosse dit encore plus loin (3) : « Ngolo fit deux expé-

(1) Tome II, pages 143 et 144.
(2) Page 144.
(3) Même ouvrage, tome II, pages 289, 290 (chapitre sur l'histoire des Bambara de Ségou).

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

ditions contre les Mossi du Yatenga, dont l'empereur, Kango, avait fait périr cruellement des guerriers banmana mis à sa disposition précédemment par Denkoro ou par Ton-Mansa. Repoussé lors de la première expédition (vers 1760), Ngolo retourna plus tard au Yatenga, pour réclamer à Kango des commerçants dioula qui avaient fui de Ségou à la suite d'une sorte de guerre civile et que l'empereur du Yatenga refusait de renvoyer chez eux ; il semble que cette seconde expédition ne fut pas plus heureuse que la première ; en tout cas, Ngolo contracta, au cours de cette colonne, une maladie dont il mourut avant d'avoir pu rejoindre sa capitale (1787). »

Tout ceci est bien maigre et nous n'en saurions guère plus là-dessus (1) si un passage très curieux de Mungo-Park que personne encore n'a relevé, à ma connaissance, ne nous apprenait un événement très important de cette guerre : la prise d'assaut de la ville de Dienné par Kango, fait d'armes digne des anciens conquérants Mossi, Rawa, Ouemtanango, Nassodoba, etc., et qui assura la victoire définitive du naba Mossi sur le fama Bambara.

Voici ce passage, que je copie textuellement dans Mungo-Park (traduction de l'abbé du Voisin, 1800, tome II, pp. 45 et 46) :

« Au sud de Jimbala se trouve le royaume nègre de Gotto (2), que l'on dit très étendu. Il était divisé, autrefois, en un grand nombre de petits états gouvernés par différents chefs, dont les guerres continuelles incitaient les nations voisines à envahir le pays. Un de ces chefs, nommé Moossie, eut assez de politique et d'adresse pour engager tous les autres à déclarer la guerre au roi de Bambarra, et à se faire nommer généralissime d'une

(1) M. Monteil, dans son livre récent sur les Bambara de Ségou et du Kaarta (1924), ne dit rien de ces guerres. Il n'y fait allusion que dans une courte note de la page 78.

(2) Le Djimbala (qui veut dire en Mandé le pays de la grande eau, de gui = eau, ba = grand, grande et la = suffixe indiquant le pays ou la région) est la région située au nord du lac Débo. Quant au « Gotto », nom que Mungo-Park donne ici à tous les pays du Sud-Est et du Sud (Mossi, Kong, Bondoukou, etc.), c'est sans doute le mot de Gottogo qui est le nom soudanais et mandé de Bondoukou et qui est donné par confusion à tout ce qui est au sud-est et au sud du Djimbala ou Guimbala.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

commune voix. Des bords du lac Debbie (1), sur le Haut-Niger, Moossie envoya un grand nombre de canots chargés de provisions vers Yenné ; et, avec toute son armée, il entra dans le Bambarra. Les habitants de Yenné le virent sur le bord opposé du Niger (2) avant d'avoir été instruits de sa marche. Sa flotte le joignit le même jour et, après avoir débarqué ses provisions, il passa ce fleuve avec une partie de son armée et prit Yenné d'assaut dans la nuit. Cet exploit épouvanta tellement le roi de Bambarra qu'il envoya demander la paix. Il se soumit à payer au vainqueur un tribut annuel d'un certain nombre d'esclaves et à rendre aux habitants de Gotto tout ce qu'on aurait pu leur enlever (3). Moussee rentra en triomphe dans le Gotto, où il fut proclamé roi. Il a donné son nom à la capitale. »

Comme on le voit, le fait important et précieux qui est à dégager de cette gangue épaisse, est la prise de Dienné par le roi du Mossi nord, par le roi du Yatenga (qui était, à cette époque, Kango), au cours de ses luttes avec le Bambara, c'est-à-dire avec Ngolo, qui était son contemporain. Par la faute de ses interlocuteurs qui ne l'ont pas renseigné évidemment avec toute la précision désirable et lui ont fait commettre de nombreuses petites erreurs ou confusions, Mungo-Park a enguirlandé le fait vrai de détails fantaisistes : c'est d'abord le nom de Kango Moossie, Moussie, qui est le nom du pays du conquérant et non pas son nom propre. C'est, ensuite, le nom de Gotto donné au pays Mossi, sans doute par une confusion soit dans l'esprit des noirs qui renseignèrent Mungo-Park, soit dans l'esprit du grand voyageur lui-même, entre les gens de Gotto mêlés à cette affaire et les Mossi du Yatenga qui firent cette expédition. Enfin, naba Kango, quoi qu'il ait rendu un grand éclat, au

(1) Il s'agit du lac Débo.

(2) Djenné n'est pas tout à fait sur le Niger ni sur le Bani, mais à une certaine distance entre ces deux fleuves.

(3) Ce passage ferait supposer que les Dyoula de Gottogo (ou Bondoukou) ayant des griefs contre les Bambara de la région de Ségou (colporteurs pillés, dettes non payées, etc.) se seraient adressés au roi du Mossi pour obtenir justice et que c'est cela qui aurait été une des causes de la guerre. Il y avait sans doute des griefs réciproques entre Bambara et Mossi ou entre leurs alliés naturels.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

XVIIIe siècle, à la dynastie Mossi du Yatenga, n'a pas trouvé, évidemment, à son avènement un morcellement absolu de petits pays qu'il aurait rassemblés sous une autorité unique. Il se contenta de restaurer, sans doute, un royaume jadis puissant et centralisé qu'il refit tel par son prestige personnel. Enfin, il n'a pas donné son nom au Mossi (c'est, au contraire, le Mossi qui, dans le récit de Mungo-Park, lui donne son nom), pas plus qu'à la capitale, qu'il créa réellement, elle, et qu'il appela Ouahigouya. Tous ces détails sont donc faux ou fantaisistes, mais le fait principal reste, très intéressant, et Mungo-Park arriva juste à temps, en 1796, à Ségou, pour en recueillir le souvenir, avant que, de la mémoire oublieuse des nègres du Mossi et du Bambara, il retombât dans un irréparable oubli.

[p.30]

CHAPITRE IV

LE CULTE DU SOLEIL AU MOSSI

Les Mossi adorent-ils le soleil ? Et leur grand dieu Ouendé est-il, pour tout ou pour partie, un dieu soleil ?

C'est Binger, le premier, qui affirma que les Mossi adoraient le soleil. « Ils sont fétichistes, dit-il (1), mais ils ont pour culte le soleil, qui porte encore aujourd'hui le même nom que Dieu : ils l'appellent Wouidi. »

Le lieutenant Desplagnes, dans son Plateau Central Nigérien (p. 275, 276), dit, à son tour, en 1907 :

« Les Hougho-Ouango du Mossi (ces prêtres résident au Mossi dans les villages de Boujema, Mani, Kondogho, Yolo, Tio) sacrifient au soleil, pour l'attacher à la terre, matin et soir, à son lever et à son coucher, pendant la première semaine de l'hivernage, puis, dans la suite, seulement tous les six jours, le matin au soleil levant. Ils se rendent aux autels, formés des trois pierres coniques, pour offrir les sacrifices et les libations, toujours entourés de tout le peuple, des chefs de famille, des joueurs de tam-tam et des masques familiaux (Ouango).

« Ces prêtres gardent, pendant toute l'année, dans une petite niche très décorée, creusée dans un mur de leur maison, le feu sacré avec lequel, à la fin de la saison des pluies, ils devront allumer les grands feux de brousse purificateurs. »

Le lieutenant Desplagnes ajoute en note :

« Ils sacrifient à chaque lune nouvelle, puis ont sept grandes fêtes par an pour la divinité. Enfin, pendant les fêtes du soleil, ils se servent d'une queue de vache pour l'attacher à la terre et lier sa chaleur fécondante. »

(1) Du Niger au golfe de Guinée, tome I, page 402.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

Dans mon Noir du Soudan, Pays Mossi et Gourounsi (1912), je reproduisais, sans commentaires, cette page du lieutenant Desplagnes (page 590). De plus, je signalais le culte du soleil chez les Gourounsi qui font partie, comme les Mossi, de la famille Voltaïque. Ainsi, page 241, j'écrivais :

« Les Kassonfras, comme les Nounoumas et les Menkiéras, disent n'offrir aucun sacrifice à la lune, ni au soleil. Pourtant, j'ai trouvé une exception au village de Nitiédougou (canton de Sia). Il paraît qu'ici, le matin, de bonne heure, quand le soleil se lève et commence à se détacher sur l'horizon, les gens lui offrent un poulet ou ce qu'ils veulent. On ne fait, du reste, ce sacrifice que quand le voro (1) a dit de le faire.

« Mon interlocuteur prétend qu'on fait de même, non seulement à Nitiédougou et dans le petit canton de Sia, mais encore dans tout le pays Kasouna (Kassonfras et Kassonbouras). Il doit se tromper (2), car mes interlocuteurs précédents et mon interprète, qui est Kassonboura, n'ont jamais vu ni entendu parler de rien de tel. »

Plus tard, en 1917, dans mon Noir du Yatenga, les quelques tentatives que j'avais faites dans le Yatenga pour retrouver ce culte du soleil n'ayant pas donné de résultats, j'écrivais (page 277) :

« Soleil se dit ouindigho ou ouindigha en Mossi (tili en Bambara). Le mot a une parenté certaine avec Ouendé et le mot Ouendé semble entrer dans la composition du mot ouindigho. Les Mossis et Foulsés du Yatenga, en tout cas, ne font pas de sacrifices au soleil. J'ai interrogé en vain différents grands personnages sur les détails donnés par le lieutenant Desplagnes, pages 275 et 276 de son ouvrage sur le Plateau Central Nigérien, sur un culte du soleil dans le Mossi. Ces détails visent, il est vrai, la société religieuse des Ouangos et les villages où les membres de cette société opéreraient : ainsi seraient des villages de la Résidence de Kaya (ainsi Mané, Boujéma, etc.). On pourrait donc poursuivre les recherches à Kaya. En tout

(1) Devin.
(2) Je tendrais à penser aujourd'hui, au contraire, qu'il avait raison.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

cas, ce culte du soleil est totalement inconnu dans le Yatenga. »

En résumé je niais le culte du soleil chez les Mossi du Yatenga, en admettant qu'on pouvait retrouver ce culte dans d'autres endroits du pays Mossi, particulièrement dans la Résidence (aujourd'hui cercle) de Kaya.

La question en était là quand le Père Eugène Mangin publia, dans l'Anthropos, une étude sur les Mossi (Les Mossi. Essai sur les us et coutumes du Soudan Occidental, Vienne, 1916), étude dans laquelle l'auteur, qui a longtemps résidé à Ouagadougou, dans le Mossi central, a porté son principal effort sur l'étude de la vie religieuse de ses ouailles. Or il semble bien que les observations du Père Mangin tranchent d'une façon définitive, à l'avantage de Binger et de Desplagnes, la question du culte du soleil dans le pays. Les Mossi, dit le Père Mangin, dans leurs sacrifices, offrent à Ouendé de l'eau pour son lever et la versent à l'Est, offrent à Ouendé de l'eau pour son coucher et la versent à l'Ouest. Dans une dispute, le plus faible dira aussi : « Dieu (Ouendé) m'est témoin que je ne t'ai rien fait, Dieu te le rendra », et il montrera le soleil. Ainsi Ouendé, le dieu principal des Mossi, serait bien un dieu-soleil, et les Mossi adoreraient bien, en lui, le soleil.

Cela veut-il dire que Ouendé ne soit pas aussi un dieu-ciel ou atmosphère, comme je le soutenais dans mon Noir du Yatenga ? Certes non, et le Père Mangin note, en effet, aussi que Ouendé dispose de la foudre — ce qu'il ne peut faire que s'il est le Ciel-atmosphère. « Les phénomènes de la nature, dit-il, sont parfois attribués à Dieu. La foudre tue ceux qui ont fait le mal, tue l'animal mal acquis par fraude ou volé, et c'est Dieu qui l'envoie pour le punir... ». Ainsi Ouendé, tout en étant le soleil, est aussi le Ciel-atmosphère, et autre chose encore, car il a des caractéristiques qui dépassent la divinité-soleil et la divinité-ciel. Ici il ne faut pas oublier que l'Allah des musulmans est bien connu dans le Mossi et y a ses représentants établis (Yarsé d'origine Mandé, Peul, etc.) ou passagers (commerçants venus du Nord ou du Sud, Soninké, Songhay, Dyoula). Il y a donc bien longtemps que la conception musulmane de Dieu a pu déteindre et a déteint, en effet, sur le dieu-soleil-atmosphère des Mossi. Ceux-ci ont pu faire la guerre aux sultans Songhay qui dirigeaient contre eux des croisades religieuses, il n'en est pas moins vrai qu'ils ont été heureux de parer leur dieu le plus important des caractéristiques remarquables qui les frappaient et qu'ils admiraient chez le dieu musulman. C'est ainsi que, peu à peu, Ouendé est devenu de plus en plus un dieu suprême, quoi qu'il semble n'avoir été, au début, qu'un dieu-soleil et un dieu-atmosphère d'abord séparés, puis qui fusionnèrent, avec prédominance de l'élément divinité-soleil.

Pour nous résumer, il est bien acquis que l'on trouve chez les Mossi le culte du soleil, avec beaucoup d'autres éléments, comme on vient de le voir : ce culte, je l'ai retrouvé depuis chez les Dorhosié (1922) et chez les Gouro (1928). Mais, chez les Gouro, il est spécial à quelques féticheurs et n'intéresse pas la masse de la population. Chez les Dorhosié, au contraire, il intéresse toute cette masse et donne lieu à un sacrifice solennel fait en hiver, à la fin de l'ancienne année, au commencement de la nouvelle. Mais, chez ces gens, la divinité-soleil n'est pas devenue une divinité prépondérante comme chez les Mossi. Elle est une divinité entre plusieurs et est plutôt primée par le culte de la Terre-brousse et celui du Ciel-atmosphère. Je suis du reste persuadé que des recherches approfondies chez toutes les branches de la population voltaïque décéleraient, çà et là, le culte du soleil, comme chez les Mossi, les Gourounsi, les Dorhosié, etc.

[p. 34 contains no text]

LIVRE II

[p.35]

LA QUESTION GOUROUNSI

On sait que les Gourounsi sont une population nègre qui habite à moitié dans la Haute-Volta française et à moitié dans la Gold-Coast anglaise, vers les 10e, 11e et 12e degrés de latitude Nord et, environ, entre les 3e et 5e degrés de longitude Ouest. Les Kipirsi vont même du 12e au 12e degré 1/2 de latitude Nord et, si l'on rattache aux Gourounsi des parents un peu plus éloignés, comme les Nioniossé, les Ko, les Siti, les Dégha, etc., on a une extension dans l'espace encore bien plus vaste. Mais nous ne proposons pas, ici, de fixer les limites précises du territoire Gourounsi, ce qui est difficile à faire, surtout pour la Gold-Coast. Nous voudrions simplement donner une énumération et un classement aussi exacts que possible des différentes tribus que l'on désigne sous le nom de Gourounsi.

Comme ce classement est très délicat et très difficile à faire encore maintenant (et nous n'espérons pas, du reste, dans les pages qui suivent, procéder à un classement définitif et ne varietur, mais seulement mettre au point de nos connaissances actuelles le classement des Gourounsi), nous passerons d'abord en revue les différentes tentatives de nos devanciers pour donner un tableau plus ou moins complet des populations désignées sous ce nom. Nous dirons d'abord pour le mot « Gourounsi » lui-même, que ce n'est pas justement un mot Gourounsi. C'est un mot Mossi donnant Gourounga au singulier et Gourounsi au pluriel. Le lieutenant Marc suppose (1) que ce mot viendrait du mot Songhaï « Grounga », qui voudrait dire « incirconcis ». Malheureusement, il appert de recherches faites pour vérifier cette hypothèse, que le mot « Grounga » est inconnu en Songhay. De plus, le mot Gourounga-Gourounsi paraît fort ancien chez les Mossi (qui vivent en contact avec ces populations depuis le XIIe siècle sans doute). Et les Mossi n'ont pas attendu l'arrivée des pillards Zaberma dans le Gourounsi, qui ne s'est produite que dans la seconde moitié du XIXe siècle, pour donner un nom à ces populations. L'hypothèse du lieutenant Marc doit donc être rejetée. M. Delafosse croit que ce mot Gourounga pourrait venir du mot Kourouma (qu'on retrouve revendiqué par les Nioniossé du cercle du Yatenga), ou du mot Gourma (qu'on retrouve dans la région de Fada-N'Gourma, chez les Gourmantché, et, d'une façon plus générale, pour désigner l'intérieur de la boucle du Niger) (1). Ce mot Kourouma ou Gourma aurait donné, par corruption, et par juxtaposition des désinences Mossi qui désignent le singulier et le pluriel : Gourounga ou Gourounsi, mais ce n'est là qu'une hypothèse.

(1) Le Pays Mossi, page 122, in fine.

Les Gourounsi sont restés inconnus aux auteurs arabes du moyen-âge, depuis Masoudi et Ibn-Haukal jusqu'à Léon l'Africain (X^e au XVIe siècle). Ces auteurs ne connaissaient que le nord du Soudan, le cours moyen et inférieur du Sénégal, le cours moyen du Niger. Le Tarikh-el-Fettach et le Tarikh-es-Soudan (XVIIe siècle) n'ignorent pas le Gourma mais ignorent les Gourounsi. De même les voyageurs portugais, hollandais, français, anglais du XVe au XVIIe siècle ne disent mot de nos gens. On connaît le Mossi, mais non cette annexe insignifiante

(1) On sait que la rive droite du Niger est désignée sous le nom de Gourma par les riverains et la rive gauche sous le nom de Haoussa. Cela met tous les pays de la boucle du Niger dans le « Gourma » et tous les pays hors de la boucle du Niger dans le « Haoussa », qu'ils soient à l'ouest, au nord ou à l'est du Niger Il est inutile de faire remarquer que le pays proprement Haoussa ne coïncide pas ou du moins ne coïncide qu'en partie avec l'énorme extension géographique que prend ici le mot Haoussa désignant tous les pays de la rive gauche du Niger à quel que point que l'on se place sur le fleuve et englobant aussi bien le Sénégal ou le Sahara que le Haoussa proprement dit. On ne sait pas d'où proviennent ces expressions. D'autre part, on sait que les mots : « Gourmantché » et « Fada N'Gourma » sont des mots Haoussa pour désigner la population et la place principale du pays Gourma réduit à l'acception de pays « Gourmantché ».

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

du Mossi composée de populations sauvages situées au sud de celui-ci. Enfin les voyageurs anglais et français de la fin du XVIIIe siècle et du commencement du XIXe siècle, depuis Mungo-Park jusqu'à Caillié et aux frères Lander, ne les connaissent pas non plus. Ce sont deux Anglais, Clarke (1849) et Koelle (1854), qui les rencontrent enfin pour la première fois sur leur route, au milieu du XIXe siècle, en recueillant le plus possible de vocabulaires nègres en Sierra-Leone. Clarke, dans ses Spécimens de dialectes, courts vocabulaires de langues et notes sur les pays et coutumes d'Afrique (Londres, 1849, in-8°), donne des mots Kiansi sous les noms de Nibulu et de Tschamba (prononcer Kiamba). Koelle, dans ses « Polyglotta africana ou Vocabulaires comparatifs de près de trois cents mots et phrases en plus de cent langues africaines distinctes » (1854), donne tout un ensemble de vocabulaires Mossi-Gourounsi où dominent les vocabulaires Gourounsi. Il donne du Nounouma sous le nom de Yula (Kialo, Akulo, nom que donnent aux Nounouma les populations du Sud), du Kassouna ou Kasséna (sous le nom de Kasm ou Kasem ; c'est ce dernier nom qui figure dans sa carte), du Sissala ou Gourounsi du Sud sous les noms de Guresa, Koama et Bagbalan, enfin divers autres dialectes Gourounsi sous les noms de Dselana (ou Kielana), Gourma et Kiamba. De plus, il donne des indications géographiques sur la place de ces différents groupes nègres, indications où il y a évidemment de graves erreurs dues aux interlocuteurs de Koelle (ainsi le Gourounsi placé sous le nom de Yulaï, Bagbalan et Kasem, au nord du Mossi), mais où on peut aussi trouver quelques indications exactes, maintenant que le pays est occupé par les Européens (ainsi le Kasem placé au sud-est du Yulaï). Bref Koelle donne, sur les Gourounsi, un ensemble de notions linguistiques qui étaient merveilleuses pour l'époque. Nous renvoyons le lecteur aux Appendices XVI et suivants pour une étude plus approfondie des renseignements donnés par Koelle et aussi par Clarke.

De ces deux auteurs — Clarke et Koelle — qui ont été vraiment les découvreurs de l'existence d'un peuple et d'une langue Gourounsi, il faut sauter à Binger qui parcourut, lui premier des Européens, le pays Gourounsi. Il passa par deux fois dans la contrée, en allant de Boromo à Ouagadougou par le pays Nounouma, et en revenant de Ouagadougou à Oual-Oualé (mai à août 1888), et il donne des renseignements précieux de toutes sortes sur ces populations assez peu civilisées et sur l'établissement qu'étaient en train d'y faire les Songhaï Zaberma. Il faut lire tout le récit de son voyage, depuis Boromo jusqu'à Banéma, village mossi de Boukary-Naba (26 mai au 8 juin 1888, tome Ier, pages 427 à 448), et depuis ce même Banéma, quand il revient de Ouagadougou, jusqu'à Oual-Oualé (22 juillet au 10 août 1888, pages 476 à 506 du tome Ier et pages 1 à 37 du tome II). Binger termine ces notes de voyage chez les Gourounsi par un tableau général du Gourounsi (pages 34 à 37 du tome II), où certaines erreurs se mêlent forcément à des renseignements intéressants et précieux. Voici comment Binger classe les différentes tribus Gourounsi :

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

« La région nord-ouest du Gourounsi est habitée, dit-il, par un peuple qui nous a paru avoir beaucoup d'analogie avec les Niéniégué (1). Dans le Dafina, on le nomme Nonouma, mais, parmi les autres Gouroungа et dans le Mossi, on désigne les Nonouma par un autre nom qui nous a échappé. A propos de notre passage de Boromo à Bouganiéna, nous avons eu l'occasion de décrire la façon dont les Nonouma s'excisent les joues et se tatouent, nous n'y reviendrons pas dans ce chapitre. Leurs principaux centres sont : Baporo, Poura et Ladio.

A côté des Nonouma, mais plus à l'Est, vers Dallou, Sapouy, Baouér'a et Pouna et jusque vers le Kipirsi, habite une autre fraction des Gouroungа, celle des Youlsi, ou Tiollé. La majeure partie de cette fraction n'a pas de marques ni de tatouages, quelques-unes de leurs familles ont cependant les deux marques caractéristiques du Mossi (l'entaille partant de chaque côté du nez pour venir mourir à la hauteur de la deuxième molaire, et deux entailles partant de chaque côté de la bouche pour venir mourir près de l'oreille ; ces entailles sont semblables à celles des Mandé-Dyoula, mais au nombre de deux entailles seulement sur chaque joue).

(1) A comparer l'opinion récente de M. Chéron (Revue d'Ethnographie et des Traditions populaires, 3e trimestre 1923, page 241), qui classe les Niénégué parmi les populations Gourounsi et les apparente aux Lilié. Il faut dire cependant que les Niénégué ont une langue nettement Bobo.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

A l'ouest des Youlsi et entre eux et les Kassanga de Sati, habite la fraction des Talensi ; ils se distinguent de leurs voisins par un tatouage bien original. Sur chaque joue, à l'aide de toutes petites incisions disposées sur trois rangées parallèles, ils forment un Z majuscule vu à l'envers (1).

Plus au sud et à l'ouest de Oual-Oualé habite la fraction des Tiansi, ou Boulsi, qui se tatouent de trois façons différentes. Ils offrent cela de singulier que deux des tatouages ont la particularité suivante, que je n'avais pas remarquée : les yeux eux-mêmes sont environnés de six petites entailles.

Encore plus au Sud, on trouve les Nakaransi ; ils se distinguent des autres Gourounga par une incision qui part de la naissance des cheveux, fend le front et le nez en deux parties égales. Perpendiculairement à cette incision longitudinale, il en part, chez certains types, une de chaque côté du nez, ou bien encore chez les uns à droite du nez, chez les autres à gauche.

Entre les Tiansi et les Nakaransi et la Volta occidentale habitent les Lama, ou Lakhama, ou Nakhalakha, Nokhorissé, ou encore Nokhodossi. Ces tribus sont rarement tatouées. J'ai cependant vu quelques sujets ayant de chaque côté de la bouche deux incisions semblables à celles des Mandé-Dioula de Kong, mais moins longues.

De l'autre côté du fleuve, ils ont pour voisins les Dagari et Dagabakha, qui me paraissent être un seul et même peuple. J'en ai vu à plusieurs reprises : ils ne sont point tatoués. On rencontre chez eux des couleurs de peau très foncées, approchant du noir des Wolof ; ils se prolongent jusque sur la rive gauche de la Volta occidentale et forment une importante colonie, qui, mélangée avec des Mandé-Dioula, forme le fond de la population de Oua.

(1) Pour bien comprendre ce que Binger veut dire ici, il faut se reporter à son tableau des tatouages Gourounsi, page 409 de son tome II. (Voir le tatouage Talensi).

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

Les Oulé, autre fraction des Gourounga, semblent être apparentés aux Lakhama ; ils habitent au nord des Dagari et Dagabakha, et entre leur territoire et celui des Bougouri. Les gens du Dafina classent les Bougouri dans la famille des Niéniégué et des Nonouma. » (Op. cit., tome II, pages 35 et 36.)

Tel est le tableau que Binger donne de l'ensemble des populations Gourounsi (1).

Comme on le voit, notre auteur distingue parmi les Gourounsi :

1° Les Nounouma.

2° Les Youlsi, ou Tiollé, qui sont probablement les Lélésé, ou Lilsi du Kipirsi. Binger les identifie aux Kassanga, c'est-à-dire aux Kassouna, qu'il place à Sati d'après un renseignement faux. Il peut se faire qu'il y ait eu à Sati, à cette époque, et même qu'il y ait encore maintenant à Sati un groupe Kassouna, mais Sati est dans la zone Sissala et la masse des Kassouna habite, assez loin de là (au Nord-Est et à l'Est), un territoire étendu et important — puisqu'ils sont 30.000 — et non pas un simple village. Quant à l'identification des Youlsi, ou Tiollé, avec les Kassouna, ou Kassanga, elle reste un problème à résoudre dont la solution doit, sans doute, être cherchée dans le fait que les Gourounsi du Nord (Lélésé, Nounouma et Kassouna) sont très proches les uns des autres et presque identiques pour la langue, les mœurs et les traditions (2). Cependant, comme Lélésé (ou Lilsé, ou Youlsé, ou Tiollé), Nounouma et Kassouna portent trois noms différents et désignent des populations voisines et se touchant mais ne

(1) Avant de donner ce tableau, Binger dit : « Mon hôte El-Hadi Touré (El-Hadi veut dire dimanche) me fit faire connaissance avec trois jeunes gens de ses amis nommés Alfa Boukary Touré, Tahéri Touré et Kalifa Sissé. Les deux premiers sont Dagomba ; l'autre, d'origine mandé, est fixé ici depuis une vingtaine d'années. Après leur avoir fait quelques cadeaux et rendu de nombreuses visites, nous sommes arrivés à être d'excellents amis. C'est grâce à leur complaisance et en échange de renseignements sur l'Europe et les coutumes européennes, que j'ai obtenu quelques renseignements sur le Gourounsi, le Mampoursi et le Dagomba. » (Op. cit., tome II, page 34).

(2) « Les Lilsé, dit le lieutenant Marc (op. cit., pages 122 et 123), ne diffèrent en rien des Nounouma. Ils ont même langue, mêmes mœurs, mêmes traditions. Ils ne sont qu'une branche de la famille des Nounouma, et nous ne pensons pas qu'il y ait lieu de les en séparer. » se confondant ni au point de vue géographique, ni au point de vue du nom, nous les tiendrons nous-mêmes pour trois branches de Gourounsi, très voisines il est vrai, et formant un bloc que l'on peut opposer aux Gourounsi du Sud.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

3° Les Talensi, qui sont difficiles à identifier. Le plus probable est qu'ils sont un sous-groupe Kassouna, ou peut-être un sous-groupe plus général des Gourounsi du Nord. Je dois dire, en effet, que mes informateurs de Bondoukou (Gourounsi musulmanisés, anciens captifs de guerre gourounsi vendus dans le pays par les Zaberma) m'ont signalé un groupe Gourounsi dit « Taoulensé » dans le Kipirsi. Ce sont probablement les Talensi de Binger.

4° Les Tiansi, ou Boulsi. Ceux-ci sont bien connus : ce sont des Gourounsi du Sud, de Gold-Coast, habitant auprès de la Volta Blanche, entre la Volta Blanche et les Larhama à l'Ouest et Oual-Oualé à l'Est. Nous aurons l'occasion de revenir sur eux sous le nom de Kiansi.

5° Les Nakaransi. Ceux-ci, que Binger place au sud des Kiansi, sont-ils les Nankana? S'ils le sont, il y a une forte erreur de position, semble-t-il, commise par Binger ou par ses interlocuteurs, car les Nankana, groupe croisé, à ce qu'on peut penser, de Boura et de Mossi (ou Dagomba), qui habite à cheval sur le territoire français et sur le territoire anglais (11e degré de latitude Nord) est plus au Nord que les Kiansi. Il est vrai que les Nankana se continuent au Sud par les Boura, mais ceux-ci, que les cartes placent au-dessus du coude de la Volta Blanche, à l'ouest de la basse Volta Rouge, semblent bien encore être au nord des Kiansi. Peut-être envoient-ils quelques ramifications encore plus bas, dans la direction de Liarba et de Daboya, ce qui leur permettrait d'avoir quelques gens placés plus au Sud que les Kiansi et ce qui expliquerait l'affirmation de Binger, basée sur la notation d'un de ses interlocuteurs qui aurait rencontré « les Nakaransi » (ou quelques Nakaransi) dans une région qu'il situait plus au Sud que les Kiansi (plus ou moins exactement, sans doute).

6° Les Lama, ou Lakhama, qui sont les Larhama dont j'ai pris un vocabulaire qu'on trouvera plus loin, groupe Gourounsi du Sud, habitant en Gold-Coast, entre Oua, à l'Ouest, et les Tiansi, ou Kiansi, à l'Est.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

Cela forme six groupes Gourounsi, car il faut mettre de côté les Dagari qui, linguistiquement parlant, appartiennent au groupe Mossi et non au groupe Gourounsi, comme les Nankana. Il est vrai que, par leur mode d'habitation, ils appartiennent au groupe Gourounsi ou au groupe Lobi et, par leur sauvagerie anarchique, au groupe Lobi. De même, il faut écarter les Oulé, qui sont sans doute les Dagari-Oulé, et les Bougouri, ou Pougouli, groupe que l'on rattache généralement au groupe Lobi.

Comme on le voit, l'esquisse de nomenclature des peuplades Gourounsi tracée par Binger a la vigueur et la fermeté de touche qui sont une des caractéristiques du célèbre voyageur. De plus cette nomenclature, malgré ses imperfections, est poussée à un point de détail que l'on ne retrouvera plus que bien longtemps après lui. Le principal reproche qu'on puisse lui faire est de ne pas avoir nommé les Sissala, ou Hisala. En fait, Binger a énuméré les Lilsé (Youlsi, ou Tiollé), les Nounouma, les Kassouna (Kassanga), les Lakhama, les Kiansi. Un voyageur de passage ne pouvait faire mieux et porter la précision plus loin qu'il ne l'a fait.

Le lieutenant Voulet, dans sa conférence de 1897, à la Société de géographie de Lille, ne donne aucun renseignement sur les différentes peuplades Gourounsi.

En 1904, M. Delafosse, dans ses Vocabulaires comparatifs, reprenait la question Gourounsi au point de vue linguistique ou, plus exactement, dans son chapitre VII (Langues Mossi et Gourounsi, pages 218 et suivantes), traçait un tableau général du groupe Mossi-Gourounsi.

Ce tableau montre admirablement par quels tâtonnements on est souvent obligé de passer en ces matières ouest-africaines avant d'arriver à des données à peu près définitives (?).

M. Delafosse divise sa famille Mossi-Gourounsi en cinq groupes :

Le premier, c'est le groupe Mossi : M. Delafosse y place les Gourma (ou Gourmantché), les Mossi, les Dagari, les Dagari-

Oulé, les Birifon, les Gbanian, les Dagomba, les Samo, les Kipirsi et les Nounouma.

Evidemment, les Kipirsi et les Nounouma n'étaient pas à leur place dans ce groupe, pas plus du reste que les Samo.

Le deuxième, c'est le groupe Gourounsi : il se compose des Gourounsi, des Siti, des Dégha — peut-être, dit M. Delafosse, des Bariba, Kauri, Mampoursi, Kiansi, Boussansé et Kyalo, ou Akyulo.

Ce groupe contient, à juste raison, Siti, Dégha, Kia si, Akyulo (qui sont, en réalité, des Nonnouma) (1), mais il a en trop Boussansé, Kauri, Mampoursi et, en moins, Kipirsi et Nounouma, qui devraient être dans ce groupe au lieu d'être dans le groupe précédent.

Le troisième groupe est le groupe Lobi : M. Delafosse y range les Lobi proprement dits, les Pougouli ou Bougouri, les Dian, les Gan et — peut-être — les Myorou, les Tiéfo, les Dorhosié et les Karaboro (2).

Le quatrième groupe est celui des Bobo, le cinquième celui des Koulango. Ce dernier ne semble pas appartenir, en réalité, à la famille générale Mossi-Gourounsi ou Voltaïque.

Bref ce classement était peu satisfaisant. En particulier,

(1) Le mot Kyalo ou Akyulo est une expression qu'il faut faire disparaître de la nomenclature des populations Gourounsi. Je me suis, en effet, rendu compte, à Boudoukou (en 1919), que les gens de Boudoukou (Dyoula, Ahron, Koulango) ont trois noms pour désigner les Gourounsi : ils appellent les Gourounsi du Nord (Léléré, Nounouma, Kassouna, etc.) « Akulo », et ils appellent les Gourounsi du Sud-Ouest (Siessala, Tondioulé, Larhama) « Gouressi » (ce qui est le mot Mossi quelque peu défiguré). Ils connaissent, de plus, les Kyansi et les mettent à part des deux groupes précédents. Cela fait donc trois groupes : Gourounsi du Nord (Akulo), Gourounsi du Sud-Ouest (Gouressi) et, enfin, Gourounsi du Sud-Est (Kyansi). Il ne faut voir du reste dans cela aucune systématisation, aucune classification voulue. Le mot « Akulo » est sans doute d'origine Abron ou Agni-Achanti. Le mot « Gouressi » est le mot Mossi recueilli par les Dyoula et quelque peu défiguré. En fait, ces deux noms (Akulo et Gouressi) ont dû être synonymes à l'origine, pour les gens de Bondoukou, l'un employé par les Abron et Agni, l'autre par les Dyoula, pour désigner chacun la totalité des Gourounsi, puis, à force de les employer dans ce sens total et vague, on aura fini par accrocher plus particulièrement telle ou telle partie du Gourounsi à l'un de ces deux noms et telle ou telle autre partie à l'autre. En tout cas il faut rayer les Akulo, ou Akyulo, ou Kyalo de la terminologie des tribus Gourounsi : M. Delafosse place, page 234 de ses Vocabulaires comparatifs, des « Akyulo » près de Léo. Ce sont tout simplement des Nounouma, car ce sont des Nounouma qui habitent Léo (peut-être un clan des Nounouma qui s'appelle les Lé, d'où le nom de Léo).

(2) Les Karaboro sont, en réalité, des Sénoufo quelque peu métissés par les Gouin.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

pour les Gourounsi, il séparait des peuplades qui étaient à mettre ensemble et, d'autre part, introduisait des Gourounsi fictifs (Gouressi) comme tribu particulière du Gourounsi et des Akyulo non moins inexistants.

A la même époque, le Dr Ruelle (1904), dans son travail anthropologique sur le IIe Territoire militaire du Sud, distinguait des Gourounsi, mis d'un côté, des Nounouma (ou Nourma) mis de l'autre et placés dans le groupe Bobo. Bref, on tâtonnait encore d'une façon marquée en 1904 et, sous bien des rapports, on était plus loin de la vérité qu'au temps de Binger.

En 1909, le lieutenant Marc, dans une esquisse sur les Gourounsi (pages 122 à 127 de son Pays Mossi), distinguait les Lilsé ou Youlsé du Kipirsi, les Nounouma et les Sissala. Il faisait remarquer, comme nous l'avons vu plus haut, que les Youlsé, ou Lilsé, ne différaient en rien des Nounouma, et que la différence était entre les Gourounsi du Nord et les Sissala ou Gourounsi du Sud (pages 122, 128). Je crois bien que c'est le lieutenant Marc qui a prononcé le premier le nom des Sissala.

En 1912, dans son Haut-Sénégal-Niger, M. Delafosse avait à revenir sur la question du groupe Mossi-Gourounsi en général et du sous-groupe Gourounsi. Il applique au groupe Mossi-Gourounsi la qualification de famille Voltaïque et distingue dans cette famille :

1° Le groupe Tombo, divisé en Tombo proprement dits, Dogom et Déforo ;

2° Le groupe Mossi, divisé en Mossi, Yansi, Gourmantché, Nankana, Dagari, Birifo ;

3° Le groupe Gourounsi, divisé en Nioniossé, Nounouma, Sissala et Boussansé ;

4° Le groupe Bobo, divisé en Kian, Tara, Boua et Niénigué ;

5° Le groupe Lobi, divisé en Lobi, Dian, Pougouli et Gan ;

6° Le groupe Koulango, divisé en Lorho et Koulango ;

7° Le groupe Bariba, divisé en Bariba et Soumba.

Cette nouvelle classification constituait un grand progrès sur celle de 1904, mais elle était encore un peu simpliste pour le groupe Gourounsi, plus compliqué et plus riche en réalité que ne le laissait transparaître cette nomenclature quelque peu sommaire. De plus les Boussansé ne font pas partie, comme nous le verrons plus loin, du groupe Gourounsi.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

En même temps que paraissait le Haut-Sénégal-Niger de M. Delafosse, en 1912, l'auteur de ces lignes publiait son Noir du Soudan, Pays Mossi et Gourounsi, fruit d'un séjour de deux ans dans ces deux derniers pays (1909-1910).

Il y divisait les Gourounsi en quatre groupes principaux :

1° Nounouma (avec un sous-groupe appelé Menkiéra) ;

2° Kassouna (divisé en deux sous-groupes : Kassouna-Boura et Kassouna-Fra) ;

3° Sissala ;

4° Boura (en territoire anglais).

Cette classification n'était pas complète en ce qu'elle ne nommait pas les Kipirsi (sur lesquels j'avais pourtant recueilli des notes) et les populations Gourounsi de Gold-Coast (Larhama, Kiansi, etc.).

On ne peut pas tirer de classification des Gourounsi de l'ouvrage de Migeod sur les Langages de l'Ouest-Africain (1911-1913), L'auteur se contente de donner trois numérations, « Isala », « Ajolo », et indéterminée, et deux vocabulaires, « Isala » et « Ajolo ». La numération « Isala » (1) ressemble plus à du Bobo qu'à du Gourounsi, ou plutôt semble un mélange de Bobo et de Sissala où l'élément Bobo l'emporterait plutôt. Quant à « l'Ajolo », c'est sans doute de l'Akulo, c'est-à-dire du Nounouma pur.

Enfin, tout récemment, M. Delafosse, dans son introduction à la Grammaire de la langue Kasséna ou Kasséné, du Dr Cremer (2), divise les Gourounsi, en se plaçant du reste à un point de vue tout linguistique, en huit groupes, qui sont :

1° Les Nounouma ;

2° Les Fra ;

3° Les Kaséna (ou Kassouna) ;

(1) Tome I, page 144.

(2) Dr Jean Cremer. Matériaux d'ethnographie et de linguistique soudanaises, tome. II Grammaire de la langue Kasséna ou Kasséné parlée au pays des Gourounsi. Avec une introduction et des notes de M. Maurice Delafosse. Opuscule de 64 pages, chez Geuthner, Paris, 1924.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

4° Les Sissala (ou Sissala, ou Issala);
5° Les Kourouma (ou Nioniossé, ou Foulsé);
6° Les Ko;
7° Les Siti;
8° Les Dégha (ou Diamou) (1).

Actuellement, en tenant compte de toutes ces données, et avec les renseignements que j'ai recueillis à Bondoukou, en 1919, je crois qu'il est possible de donner un tableau plus complet des populations Gouroumsi qu'on ne l'a fait jusqu'à présent. Essayons donc cette classification qui n'est, je le répète, nullement définitive, mais qui aura l'avantage de mettre la question au point exact de nos connaissances actuelles.

Nous distinguerons, d'abord, parmi les Gourounsi, deux grands groupes : les Gourounsi proprement dits (Kipirsi, Noumouma, Kassouna, Sissala, etc., etc.), puis leurs parents un peu plus éloignés (Nioniossé, Ko, Siti, Dégha, etc.).

Dans le premier groupe, nous placerons :

1° Les « Kipirsi », ou habitant du Kipirsi, qui sont des Gourounsi. Kipirsi est le pluriel du mot mossi Kipirga et désigne, pour les Mossi, les habitants de cette contrée quelque peu montagneuse située dans l'ouest de la région de Ouagadougou, entre le village de Conkizitenga (en gros) et la Volta Noire. On peut se demander d'où vient ce mot Kipirga, et il ne serait pas impossible que ce soit le mot mossi « Kiperga », qui veut dire piment. Les Mossi auraient désigné de ce nom, ou plutôt de ce surnom, les Gourounsi du Kipirsi à cause de leurs mœurs sauvages, pillardes et anarchistes. De même, par exemple, la tribu Baoulé des Sa s'appelle les « Gingembre » ou « les Graines de gingembre », parce que, quand ils palabrent, ils en arrivent tout de suite aux coups (2). Quoi qu'il en soit de ce nom ou de ce surnom, il faut distinguer, parmi les Kipirsi eux-mêmes, trois éléments : 1° les Gourounmossi, qui habitent l'est de ce

(1) Les Fra sont ce groupe Gourounsi que j'ai désigné dans mon Noir du Soudan (1912), sous le nom de Kassouna-Fra. Par conséquent, les Kaséna ou Kassouna de M. Delafosse ne correspondent qu'à mes Kassouna-Boura, le groupe le plus important du reste des deux que j'avais réunis sous la dénomination générale de Kassouna.

(2) Voir M. Delafosse : Essai de manuel de la langue Agni, page 163.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

pays. Ils ont subi l'influence des Mossi et aussi la pénétration des cultivateurs Mossi eux-mêmes et sont en définitive, suivant les endroits, soit des Gourounsi mossisés, soit même des Gourounsi mélangés d'éléments Mossi. Nous leur consacrons, plus loin, une notice qu'on trouvera à l'Appendice XIII ; 2° les Lélésé, ou Lilsé (au singulier Lélégn, ou Lilga), qui habitent dans la région de Réo et qui sont les Youlsi ou Tiollé de Binger ; 3° quelques Nounouma du Nord qui habitent surtout le sud et l'ouest du Kipirsi. Comme on le voit, la population du Kipirsi n'est pas complètement une, ou, du moins, si elle est une en son fonds fondamental, en ce qu'elle se compose de Gourounsi, elle n'est plus une, en ce qu'elle se compose de diverses branches Gourounsi (Gourounmossi, Lélésé, Nounouma, etc.).

Il serait à souhaiter qu'une étude sérieuse du Kipirsi fut effectuée tant au point de vue ethnographique et sociologique qu'au point de vue linguistique, mais cette étude n'a pas encore été tentée.

2° Les Nounouma (appelés encore Nonouma, Nourouma, ou Nourma : on peut écrire leur nom de toutes ces façons). Comme nous venons de le voir, il y a des Nounouma dans le sud du Kipirsi. Ce sont les Nounouma du Nord-Ouest. Il y a aussi des Nounouma dans la Résidence de Boromo, à l'ouest de la Volta Noire. Ce sont les Nounouma de l'Ouest. Enfin la plus grande partie des Nounouma se trouve dans l'ouest de la Résidence de Léo, du Nord au Sud (ce sont, comparativement aux précédents, les Nounouma du Sud-Est).

M. Delafosse, dans son Haut-Sénégal-Niger (tome Ier, page 155), en compte 78.000 en tout, soit 58.000 dans la Résidence de Léo et 15.000 dans le Cercle de Koury (devenu, depuis, Cercle de Dédougou), d'où dépend la Résidence de Boromo où ils habitent, mais ces chiffres ne peuvent être tenus pour exacts, car : 1° les 58.000 Nounouma qui sont comptés pour la Résidence de Léo comprennent Nounouma et Kassouna mélangés et doivent, d'après les chiffres que j'ai pris sur place, en 1909-1910, être ramenés à 27.000 ; 2° parce que les Nounouma du Kipirsi, en revanche, ne sont pas comptés ou, plus exactement, sont englobés parmi les Mossi dans les statistiques que M. Delafosse a eues à sa disposition ; 3° parce que les Nounouma de Boromo sont comptés pour 15.000, alors que, comme nous aurons l'occasion de le voir tout à l'heure, ils ne sont que 5.000, les 10.000 autres étant des Ko, population probablement Gourounsi, mais non Nounouma, que des statistiques trop expéditives ont englobée parmi les Nounouma de Boromo.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

En fait il y a donc 27.000 Nounouma dans la Résidence de Léo, 5.000 Nounouma dans la Résidence de Boromo (1) et un nombre de Nounouma difficile à évaluer dans le Kipirsi.

Ajoutons que, parmi les Nounouma, il faut distinguer une sous-branche appelée Menkiéra à laquelle j'ai consacré un chapitre à part dans mon Noir du Soudan, Pays Mossi et Gourounsi (1912). La famille, en effet, semble y présenter certains détails d'intégration plus accentués que chez le reste des Nounouma.

3° Les Fra, ou Kassouna-Fra. J'ai englobé ce groupe, dans mon Noir du Soudan (1912), suivant en cela les renseignements qui m'étaient donnés par les indigènes, parmi les Kassouna en général, sous le nom de Kassouna-Fra, tout en constatant entre eux et les Kassouna-Boura certaines différences de mœurs : moins de bétail, famille plus intégrée, aspect sociologique les rapprochant plus des Nounouma que des Kassouna-Boura, etc. Actuellement, et en attendant que leurs rapports ethniques avec les Kassouna-Boura soient définitivement établis, j'en fais une branche Gourounsi à part pour ne rien préjuger des résultats des recherches qui pourront avoir lieu.

4° Les Kassouna proprement dits (appelés encore Kasm (2), Kasséna, ou Kassené, ou Kaséné, ou Kasem (3), Kassouma ou Kassanga). D'après M. Delafosse (4), les Mossi les appelleraient, lorsqu'ils veulent les distinguer des autres Gourounsi, Kâsomsé, au pluriel, Kâsomga, au singulier, ce qui donne une racine Kâsom. D'après le même, « il résulte de ce qu'expose le

(1) Ce sont là des chiffres de 1910, que je ne donne que parce que des évaluations plus récentes font défaut.
(2) Par Koelle.
(3) Par le Dr Cremer.
(4) Grammaire de la langue Kasséna ou Kassené. Introduction, page III.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

Dr Cremer, au sujet des noms de la cinquième classe (page 13), que l'on doit dire un Kaséné ou Kasem et des Kâsena » (1). Ils sont notés par Binger sous le nom de Kassanga et identifiés par lui aux Youlsi ou Tiollé du Kipirsi. Le même auteur les place à Sati, où, sans doute, on lui en aura signalé un groupe. Les Kassouna, en réalité, forment une puissante population située à l'est des Nounouma et ayant pour centre principal le gros village de Pô. Il y en a aussi dans la Gold-Coast, dans le district de Navaro. Laissant de côté les Kassouna-Fra, ou Fra, qui ne sont peut-être pas de vrais Kassouna (voir ce que je viens de dire plus haut au sujet de ces derniers), on comptait 22.000 Kassouna-Boura, en 1910, dans la Résidence de Léo, c'est-à-dire en territoire français. Actuellement, ils sont, sans doute, un peu plus nombreux (2).

5° Les Sissala, ou mieux, Hissala ou Hisala, avec un h aspiré. C'est ce qui explique que, dans les cercles administratifs français, on ait pris l'habitude d'orthographier leur nom avec un s : Sissala. Mais, en réalité, ils disent eux-mêmes Hissala ou Hisala, c'est ainsi que leur nom devrait être prononcé et écrit. Les Anglais écrivent : Isala (3). Ils habitent au sud-ouest des Nounouma, à l'ouest de Léo, dans la partie de la Résidence de Léo qui va en gros de Léo à la Volta Noire. Mais ils ne touchent pas, à l'Est, à Léo même, ni, à l'Ouest, à la Volta Noire. Du côté de cette grande rivière, ils sont séparés d'elle par un groupe de 4.000 Dagari (chiffres de 1910) qui tiennent l'extrême coin sud-ouest de la Résidence de Léo et ont pour village principal Ouassa. En revanche les Sissala se prolongent dans le Sud en Gold-Coast, à une profondeur que nous ne pouvons déterminer exactement.

Au point de vue sociologique, l'on trouve, chez les Sissala,

(1) Ibidem, page III.

(2) M. Delafosse dit (Ibidem, page I) qu'il y a 38.000 Kassouna à l'heure actuelle d'après des renseignements fournis par M. Hesling, lieutenant-gouverneur de la Haute-Volta, et M. Boussae, chef de subdivision de Léo, mais ce chiffre de 38.000 (cantons de Koumbili, Guiara, Sia, d'une part, et Kampala, Pô, Tiébélé, de l'autre), semble s'appliquer au total des Kassouna-Fra et des Kassouna-Boura qui étaient 30.000 en 1910. Il faudrait compter approximativement, à l'heure actuelle, 28.000 Kassouna-Boura et 10.000 Kassouna-Fra, soit en tout 38.000.

(3) Ainsi Migeod, op. cit., page 144.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

une influence matriarcale assez légère, du reste, mais qui fait d'eux des communautaires teintés de matriarcalisme, ce qui la différencie nettement des Lélésé, des Nounouma et des Kassouna qui sont, eux, des communautaires patriarcaux plus ou moins intégrés.

M. Delafosse (op. cit., p. 155) compte 7.000 Sissala en territoire français. D'après des renseignements pris sur place, j'en comptais 5.000 à la même époque pour ce territoire (Résidence de Léo). La différence est insignifiante.

Au point de vue linguistique, le dialecte Sissala est nettement distinct du dialecte Nounouma. « Ils paraissent, dit le lieutenant Marc en parlant des Sissala, par leurs coutumes, être assez proches parents des Nounouma, mais leur langue est assez différente pour qu'un Sissala et un Nounouma ne puissent se comprendre » (1). En fait un problème se pose au sujet de la langue Sissala. On verra plus loin, en lisant les vocabulaires et fragments de vocabulaires (voir surtout l'Appendice VI), qu'il semble y avoir deux dialectes bien distincts chez les Sissala. Quelle est la vraie langue Sissala? C'est ce que nous ne pouvons dire dans l'état de nos renseignements actuels.

6° Les Larhama. Ces derniers, qui habitent dans le nord de la Gold-Coast, au sud des Sissala, sont certainement le groupe que Binger, dans son tableau général des tribus Gourounsi (2), désigne sous le nom de « Lama, ou Lakhama, ou Nakhalakha, ou Nokhorissé, ou encore Nokhodossi ». C'est un groupe Gourounsi dont il faut rapprocher les Tondioulé dont j'ai pris un vocabulaire que l'on parcourra plus loin. Les deux vocabulaires Larhama et Tondioulé sont, pour ainsi dire, identiques et, par conséquent, nous pouvons penser que les Tondioulé sont une sous-branche des Larhama. Quant à savoir quel rapport ces Gourounsi du Sud soutiennent avec les Sissala, qui sont également des Gouroumsi du Sud, cette question ne pourra être tranchée que quand la langue Sissala sera parfai-

(1) Op. cit., page 123.

(2) Ouvrage cité, tome II, page 86. Voir aussi la planche des tatouages Gourounsi, tome II, page 400.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

tement connue et cela ne pourra être fait que quand on en aura plusieurs vocabulaires complets, à cause de la dualité linguistique qui existe actuellement dans les numérations qu'on possède du Sissala.

7° Les Kiansi ou Kyansi (1), de leur vrai nom Kanguia, ou Kandia (au pluriel Kandiarasi ou Kanguiarasi), race Gourounsi très primitive, habitent à l'ouest de Oual-Oualé, en Gold-Coast, auprès de la Volta Blanche. Ils sont donc situés entre les Larhama, à l'ouest et Oual-Oualé à l'Est. Bingêr le nomme Tiansi ou Boulsi. Les Boulsi sont, sans doute, une fraction des Kiansi, peut-être les habitants d'un village important du pays. De même les Tiapalasi ou Kiapalasi sont, ou quelque fraction des Kiansi, ou les Kiansi eux-mêmes dont le nom se trouve prononcé un peu autrement.

Nous limiterons ici la liste des tribus Gourounsi proprement dites (2). Mais à ces populations proprement Gourounsi, il faut joindre, d'une façon un peu plus générale :

1° Les Nioniossé ou Foulsé, anciens habitants du Mossi, frères de race des Gourounsi. Il y a une ressemblance frappante, du reste, entre le mot Youlsé (ou Lilsé, ou Lélésé) et le mot Foulsé. La langue Foulsé, dont j'ai donné un vocabulaire

(1) Le mot Kiansi, ou Kyansi, ou Tiansi est probablement le nom que les Dagomba leur ont donné (au singulier Kiamba, ou Kyamba, ou Tiamba, au pluriel Kiansi, ou Kyansi, ou Tiansi). C'est sous le nom de Kiansi qu'on les connaît à Bondoukou et dans les environs, où il y en a beaucoup actuellement, anciens esclaves vendus par les Zaberma dans la région et devenus aujourd'hui de parfaits Dyoula à ne regarder que l'extérieur, l'habillement, le langage, le musulmanisme, etc.

(2) La question se pose de savoir s'il ne faudrait pas joindre à cette liste d'autres populations : ainsi les « Tampoulouma », qui semblent une population Gourounsi située au sud des Larhama et au sud-ouest des Kyansi. D'après des renseignements que l'on m'a donnés à Bondoukou, il faudrait traverser le pays des Tampoulouma pour aller de Bondoukou chez les Kiansi. Je n'ai pas d'autres renseignements sur ces Gourounsi (???) de l'extrême-sud qui toucheraient au pays Gondja.

De même, les Boura sont-ils des Gourounsi? D'après la numération de 1 à 10 des Boura que j'ai donnée, page 464 de mon Noir du Soudan, pays Mossi et Gourounsi, la langue Boura appartiendrait au groupe des langues Mossi et non pas au groupe des langues Gourounsi. Mais il faudrait avoir davantage sur cette langue pour la classer définitivement dans le groupe Mossi et, par exemple, le Dégha, que M. Delafosse classe dans le groupe Gourounsi, a bien une numération qui le classerait nettement — si nous l'avions seule — dans le groupe Mossi-Dagari. Il faut donc attendre des renseignements plus approfondis sur les Boura pour savoir ce qu'ils sont réellement.

De même les Frafra. Que sont d'abord, au juste, les Frafra? Se confondent-ils étendu dans mon Noir du Yatenga (1917) (1), est une langue Gourounsi au fond (2), quoique la numération en soit empruntée au Mossi ou au groupe Mossi (3). Les Nioniossé ou Foulsé ont continué à vivre à côté et sous la coupe des Mossi conquérants du pays. M. Delafosse, en 1912 (4), en comptait 78.886, se répartissant ainsi :

Cercle de Ouagadougou	34.266
Cercle de Ouahigouya	33.425
Cercle de Koury	10.335
TOTAL	78.386

En réalité, il y en a beaucoup plus dans le cercle de Ouahigouya ou du Yatenga, environ 100.000 (5). Des recherches approfondies dans le cercle de Ouagadougou en augmenteraient sans doute aussi le nombre. En tout cas, l'on peut compter au moins 145.000 Nioniossé ou Foulsé dans le pays Mossi en général. Les Nioniossé sont aussi appelés « Nimsi » (Monographie de Ouagadougou), ou « Menessi » par le docteur Ruelle (6). Ces mots : Nimsi, Menessi, ne sont que des façons autres de prononcer (ou plutôt d'entendre et de reproduire) le mot Nioniossé.

2° Les Ko ou Koo. Ceux-ci sont une petite population d'environ 10.000 âmes appartenant à la Résidence de Boromo (cercle de Koury ou Dédougou). Comme j'ai eu l'occasion de avec les Boura ou forment-ils, comme c'est plus probable, une population distincte mais voisine de ceux-ci? M. Migeod donne, page 145 de son tome Ier, une numération Fra-Fra de 1 à 10, qui classe le Fra-Fra dans le groupe des langues Mossi. Mais les réflexions faites plus haut sur la langue Boura s'appliquent aussi au Fra-Fra. Il faut donc attendre, pour classer définitivement les Fra-Fra en dehors des Gourounsi, des renseignements que nous n'avons pas encore. Les Anglais semblent placer vaguement les Fra-Fra parmi les populations Gourounsi. D'autre part, quel rapport les Fra-Fra soutiennent-ils avec les Kassouna-Fra ou Kassonfra que nous connaissons? Peut-être le même rapport que les Boura de Gold-Coast soutiennent avec les Kassouna-Boura? Toutes ces questions demanderaient à être tranchées définitivement par une enquête approfondie, menée sur place, en territoire français et en territoire anglais, par une personne connaissant à fond la question Gourounsi.

(1) Pages 746 à 782.
(2) D'après M. Delafosse.
(3) Ibidem, pages 782, 783.
(4) Haut-Sénégal-Niger, page 155.
(5) Voir dans mon Noir du Yatenga, pages 665 et 666.
(6) Op. cit., page 675.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

le dire plus haut, ils ont été englobés dans les statistiques utilisées par M. Delafosse (1), dans les Nounouma de la région. En réalité il y a 10.000 Ko et 5.000 Nounouma seulement dans la Résidence de Boromo, d'après les statistiques mêmes de la Résidence (2) que j'ai pu consulter sur place en 1910. Les Ko ou Koo, appelés « Kona » par les Nounouma, « Koko », par les Peuls, sont probablement une population Gourounsi, du moins au point de vue linguistique, comme on peut le conjecturer d'après un court vocabulaire que j'ai pris à mon passage dans le poste de Boromo et que je donne dans la Notice consacrée, plus loin, à cette petite race. Ils disent, d'ailleurs, être venus du pays occupé maintenant par les Nounouma, dans le Nord de la Résidence de Léo. Je donne également, dans la notice qui leur est consacrée, une courte esquisse de leurs mœurs, d'après les notes prises à mon passage dans le poste de Boromo, en février 1909.

3° Les Dégha ou Diammou. Ceux-ci sont une petite population d'environ 800 âmes (3), éclaboussure extrême-sud des Gourounsi, habitant à l'est de Bondoukou, en territoire français et en territoire anglais. Leur langue est, en gros, une langue Gourounsi, sauf pour la numération qui est empruntée au groupe Mossi, sans doute aux Dagari qui habitent non loin des Dégha.

4° Les Siti. Ceux-ci sont une population encore plus petite que les Dégha, puisqu'ils n'habitent plus actuellement que dans un seul village, celui de Vonkoro, situé sur les bords de la Volta Noire (Résidence de Bouna) et qui ne compte que

(1) Haut-Sénégal-Niger, tome I, page 155.

(2) Voici cette statistique complète des populations de la résidence de Boromo, en 1910, d'après les derniers recensements effectués à cette époque :

Bobo	17.615	habitants
Ko	10.412	—
Marka	6.900	—
Nounouma	5.000	—
Peul	2.800	—
Mossi	1.600	—
Dagari	1.000	—
TOTAL	45.327	habitants

(3) Du moins dans le cercle de Bondoukou, car il y en a encore quelques-uns en territoire anglais.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

90 habitants. Leur vrai nom serait Kira et ce seraient les Koulango qui les désigneraient sous le nom de Siti (1). La langue Siti offre surtout des ressemblances avec le Gourounsi, excepté pour les noms de nombre où la ressemblance est avec le Dagari. Comme les Dégha, les Siti ont donc été influencés linguistiquement par le groupe Mossi.

Voilà le tableau systématique que l'on peut donner actuellement des populations Gourounsi et des populations qui se rattachent étroitement aux Gourounsi. Je ne doute pas que l'on ne puisse y apporter des remaniements et des compléments quand un homme compétent aura étudié sur place les populations Gourounsi du territoire français et du territoire anglais. Car, justement, le partage des Gourounsi entre Français et Anglais est l'une des causes qui s'oppose à ce qu'ils soient étudiés en entier, complètement et, par conséquent, bien. Une étude définitive de cette population demanderait une enquête menée à la fois dans les deux territoires par un homme bien préparé à cette tâche, ce qui est assez difficile à réaliser. Les Pères établis à Navaro seraient sans doute à même, eux qui sont établis à cheval sur le territoire français et sur le territoire anglais, de nous donner cette étude, aidés par les Pères de Réo (Kipirsi) en ce qui concerne les Lélésé et les Gourounsi du Nord. J'ai fait de mon mieux ici pour mettre la question à son point actuel de développement et préparer cette étude définitive (2).

---

(1) Voir mon Noir de Bendoukou, pages 410 à 415.

(2) Quelques lecteurs, au courant de ces questions, seront peut-être étonnés de ne pas voir figurer ici, parmi le groupe Gourounsi pris au sens large, les Boussansé du sud de Tenkodogo, qui habitent aussi à l'extrême nord-est de la Gold-Coast, vers Sapelinga, et au nord du Togo. Mais les Boussansé, justement, comme on le verra plus loin, parlent une langue Dan-Gouro, ou si l'on veut Mandé-Bou, et cette langue se prolonge encore plus loin, jusque chez les gens de Bousse (Boko de Koelle). Les Boussansé appartiennent donc aux Mandé du Sud et donc aux Mandé en général (linguistiquement parlant), et non à la branche Voltaïque ou Mossi-Gourounsi dont font partie les Gourounsi. (Voir, pour les détails, la notice sur les Boussansé et aussi l'Appendice concernant l'ouvrage de Clarke).

APPENDICE I

Comparaison des langues Agni-Achanti et Voltaïque par le vocabulaire numérique

NOMS DE NOMBRE

Français	Baoulé	Abron	Béri	Ntà (Gondja)	Gbanyé (Salaga)	Dagari	Dagomba	Mossi
—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
1	Kô	Ekon	Eko (ou kako)	Koko	Ouli	Yéni	Yé	Yémeri
2	Nyo	Enyo	Anion	Anyou	Anyou	Ayi	Ayi	Yibou
3	Nsa	Éson	Asa	Asa	Asa	Ata	Ata	Tabo
4	Na	Éna	Ana	Ana	Ana	Anaré	Anahé	Nasé
5	Nou	Énou	Anou	Anou	Anou	Anou	Anou	Nou
6	N'yi	Ensyi	Asié	Asi	Atjé	Ayoué	Ayobou	Ayobé
7	N'so	Ensô	Asounou	Asouno	Atjino	Ayopoué	Apoué	Yopoi
8	Mokué	Moqué	Abourouga	Adoubroua	Abroua	Ani	Ani	Ani
9	Ogoro	Enkounou	Akono	Akounou	Okpana	Awaé	Awéi	Aoué
10	Bourou	Édou	Koudou	Koudou	Koudou	Pié	Piya	Pigo

[p. 56]

APPENDICE II

Vocabulaire Nounouma (1)

NOMS DE NOMBRE

Français	Nounouma	Pris par moi en 1909-1910	Autre renseignement (2)
1	Nodo	Nodo	N'do
2	Bèlè	Bellè	Bèlè
3	Batua	Bato	Bato
4	Banien	Banien	Bana
5	Bènou	Bènou	Bènou
6	Bardo	Bardo	Bardo
7	Barpa	Barpè	Barpè
8	Nana	Nana	Nana
9	Noro	Noko	Nogo
10	Fo[illegible]	Fouga	Fouga

Français	Nounouma	Français	Nounouma
11	Foua-nè-nodo	22	Sapoua-di-bellè
12	Foua-di-bèlè	23	Sapoua-di-batua
13	Foua-di-batua	24	Sapoua-di-bennè
14	Foua-di-bennè	25	Sapoua-di-bennou
15	Foua-di-bennou	26	Sapoua-di-bardo
16	Foua-di-bardo	27	Sapoua-di-barpa
17	Foua-di-barpa	28	Sapoua-di-nana
18	Foua-di-nana	29	Sapoua-di-noro
19	Foua-di-noro	30	Sapoua-nou-foua
20	Sapoua	31	Sapoua-nou-foua-di-nodo
21	Sapoua-m'nodo	32	Sapoua-nou-foua-di-bellè

(1) Ce vocabulaire de 760 mots, ou expressions environ, a été pris, en 1919, à Bondoukou, auprès d'un nommé Vabaraga Ouatara (de son nom Dyoula, de son vrai nom Bamô ou Bamou). Cet homme était du village de Kasso, à trois jours de marche de Léo. Ayant quitté son pays il y a vingt ans, au moment de l'occupation française, il n'y est jamais retourné. Il est devenu, extérieurement parlant, un parfait Dyoula.

(2) Pris en 1919

Français	Nounouma
33	Sapoua-nou-foua-di-batua
34	Sapoua-nou-foua-di-bennè
35	Sapoua-nou-foua-di-bènou
36	Sapoua-nou-foua-di-bardo
37	Sapoua-nou-foua-di-barpa
38	Sapoua-nou-foua-di-nana
39	Sapoua-nou-foua-di-noro
40	Sapou-sila
41	Sapou-sila-di-nodo
42	Sapou-sila-di-bellè
43	Sapou-sila-di-batua
44	Sapou-sila-di-banain
45	Sapou-sila-di-bènou
46	Sapou-sila-di-bardo
47	Sapou-sila-di-barpa
48	Sapou-sila-di-nana
49	Sapou-sila-di-noro
50	Finou
51	Finou-di-nodo
52	Finou-di-bellè
53	Finou-di-batua
54	Finou-di-banè
55	Finou-di-bènou
56	Finou-di-bardo
57	Finou-di-barpa
58	Finou-di-nana
59	Finou-di-noro
60	Sapositua
61	Sapositua-di-nodo
62	Sapositua-di-bellè
63	Sapositua-di-batua
64	Sapositua-di-banè
65	Sapositua-di-bènou
66	Sapositua-di-bardo
67	Sapositua-di-barpa
68	Sapositua-di-nana
69	Sapositua-di-noro
70	Sapositua-di-foua
71	Sapositua-di-foua-di-nodo
72	Sapositua-di-foua-di-bellè
73	Sapositua-di-foua-di-batua
74	Sapositua-di-foua-di-banien
75	Sapositua-di-foua-di-bènou
76	Sapositua-di-foua-di-bardo
77	Sapositua-di-foua-di-barpa
78	Sapositua-di-foua-di-nana
79	Sapositua-di-foua-di-nogo
80	Saposinè
81	Saposinè-di-nodo
82	Saposinè-di-bellè
83	Saposinè-di-batua
84	Saposinè-di-banien
85	Saposinè-di-bennou
86	Saposinè-di-bardo
87	Saposinè-di-barpa
88	Saposinè-di-nana
89	Saposiné-di-nogo
90	Saposinè-di-foua
91	Saposinè-di-foua-di-nodo
92	Saposinè-di-foua-di-bellè
93	Saposinè-di-foua-di-batua
94	Saposinè-di-foua-di-banien
95	Saposinè-di-foua-di-bennou
96	Saposinè-di-foua-di-bardo
97	Saposinè-di-foua-di-barpa
98	Saposinè-di-foua-di-nana
99	Saposinè-di-foua-di-noro
100	Bi
200	Bielè (pour Bi-Bellè)
1000	Moro
2000	Moro-bellè

CULTURE

Arachide	Siè	Haricot	Soné (ou sné)
Champ	Kara	Houe	Varo
Coton	Gounou	Igname	Pia
Cotonnier	Gounou-dao (ou gounoudo)	Ignamier	Pia-dao
		Indigo	Garé
Gombo	Pori	Maïs	Pamina
Hache	Doro	Manioc	Pafofoua

Français	Nounouma	Français	Nounouma
Sorgho blanc	Ninnso	Piment	Namouridio
Sorgho rouge	Kada	Pois souterrain	Sié
Millet	Mina	Riz	Moui
Oseille	Bio	Tabac	Sara
Oignon	(Inconnu)	Taro	(Inconnu)
Patate	Nagviri	Tomate	Tambia

ANIMAUX DOMESTIQUES

Ane	Béna	— Chevreau	Bonbio
Bœuf	No (ou Nao)	Chien	Koura (ou Kourou)
— Taureau	Nabia	— Mâle	Kouroubia
— Vache	Nakain	— Femelle	Kouroukain
— Veau	Naobio	Mouton	Pio
Chat	Kélio	— Bélier	Piobia
Cheval	Nésan	— Brebis	Piokain
— Etalon	Nésanbara	— Agneau	Piobio
— Jument	Nésankain	Poulet	Tiro
— Poulain	Nésanbio	— Coq	Tiabia
Chèvre	Bon	— Poule	Tiakain
— Bouc	Bétolo	— Poussin	Tiabio
— Chèvre	Bonkain

ANIMAUX SAUVAGES

Abeille	N'tué (ou N'tua ou N'tui)	Lièvre	N'zonngo
		Lion	Gaonion (2)
Aigle	Zambou	Magnan	Banikala
Araignée	Nénain	Margouillat	Kilo (ou Killo)
Buffle	Gaondo	Mouche	Nandoua
Biche rayée	Kouon (ou Kouain ou Ourou)	Moustique	Bouna
		Oiseau	N'zinngo
Criquet	Kahira	Papillon	Sissara
Crocodile	Niao	Perdrix	Leuô
Eléphant	Tou	Phacochère	Tô
Escargot	Kokolo	Potamochère	Tésion
Grenouille	Kiari	Pigeon (sauvage)	Kamponi
Hibou	M'vio	Pigeon vert	Kamposonou
Hippopotame	Bouano (1)	Pintade	Sou
Hyène	Bihirou	Poisson	Filé ou Fili
Iule	Demmbakolo	Poisson-chien	Kourofili
Koba	Siga (ou Ksiga)	Porc-épic	Séné (ou Senngué)
Léopard	Kilio	Rat (de Gambie)	Hyé

(1) C'est-à-dire : bœuf de marigot.
(2) C'est-à-dire : propriétaire de la brousse.

Français	Nounouma	Français	Nounouma
Rat (aulacode)	Niani	Singe vert	Kalagatui
Scorpion	Nô	Singe cynocéphale	Kô
Sénégali	N'zammisinnga	Singe noir	Kalazoni
Serpent	Dain	Souris	Totouè
Serpent cracheur	Doudourou	Termite	Kyou
Serpent python	Dibio (ou Dibion)	Termitière	Kyoudyo
Serpent d'eau	Dibiséli	Tortue	Katemmboua
Silure	Kagbamina	Tourterelle	Kampokané
Singe	Kilia (ou Kilio ou Kalà)	Varan (ou iguane)	Boa
		Vautour	Doulou
Singe rouge	Kalasion	Ver (de terre)	Kantinntanwo

FLORE SAUVAGE

Arbre	Dao (ou Do)	Herbe	Gao (1)
Bambou	M'biho (ou Ti-hou)	Karité	Dao (2)
Baobab	Kounou	Karité (beurre de)	Noua
Branche	Dova (ou Doba)	Kola	Ouolo
Brousse	Gao (ou Go)		N'gouré
Champignon	Dyalé	Kolatier	Ouolo-dao
Ecorce	Daovoro	Néré	Seingo
Epine	So	Néré (farine de)	Simô
Feuille	Voro	Palmier à huile	Gouan
Fleur	Pôn		Koura
Fromager	Gou	Racine	Daona
Fruit	Daobiè	Tamarinier	Dao (3)

PARTIES DU CORPS

Barbe	Pain	Dent	Yéli
Bouche	Ni	Derrière	Demm
Boyaux	Loro	Doigt	Guianbiè
Bras	Van (ou N'van)	Dos	Tan
Cervelle	Youkonoua	Épaule	Van (ou Gaignavan)
Cheveux	Koumvi
Cœur	Kénio (ou Kenndio)	Face	Ya
		Front	Tiri
Corps	Hira	Jambe	Ma
Cou	Bien	Joue	Zépan
Crâne	Nyoutan (ou Youtano)	Langue	Didali
		Larme	Yénya
Cuisse	Ki	Lèvre	Ni

(1) Comme brousse.
(2) Arbre.
(3) Arbre.

Français	Nounouma	Français	Nounouma
Main	Guina	Poitrine	Niouné
Menton	Toni	Pouce	Diéfoubio
Nez	Mi	Salive	Ninia
Nombril	Ouri	Sang	Diana
Œil	Yil	Sein	Yélé
Ongle	Guiéporo	Sueur	Télon
Oreille	N'zi	Tempe	Zébô
Os	Kou	Testicule	Mainkiala
Peau	Hiratano	Vagin	Mani
Pied	Naï	Ventre	Fouo
Poil	Hirakoro
Poing	Youbili (ou Guibouli)	Verge	Péni

FAMILLE ET VILLAGE

Ancêtre	Kirou	Héritier	Didirou
Canton	Lo	Hôte (qui reçoit)	Diatyo
Case (à toit en terre)	Diyo	Hôte (qui est reçu)	M'véro
		Mari	Kassounoubalé
Célibataire	Bédénou	Mariage	Katarou
Chef	Pyo	Mère	Anou (ou Nou)
Chef de village	Tiéotio	Neveu (fils de sœur)	Anakombio
Chef de famille	Santyo
Chef de canton	Pyokoualia	Neveu (fils de frère)	Aniombio
Dot	Nétérou
Enfant	Byo	Noble	Piéobio
Épouse	Kasoungo	Notable	Liritohirina
Femme	Kain	Oncle (frère de père)	Anyéna-niann
Homme	Bara, Baro
Esclave	Hyo	Oncle (frère de mère)	Anébaï
Esclave de case	Yombyo
Famille	Ninabya	Pays	Lo
Fille	Bisimakain	Père	Anyna
Fille (jeune fille)	Kabyo	Quartier	Sanntien
Fils	Bisimmbara	Race	Dui
Frère (grand)	Asounou	Toit (plat, en terre)	Dio
Frère (petit)	Nyanou
Frère (de père)	Nouhio	Toit (en paille)	Gaoudio
Frère (de mère)	Ninabio	Veuve	Kédennou
Garçon	Bisimmbara	Vieillard	Basouna
Grand'père	Anyabè	Village	Tyo
Grand'mère	Aniké	Voisin	Adiokouolia
Gendre	Atemmbè

Français	Noumouma	Français	Nounouma

NOURRITURE, BOISSON

Bière de mil	Nyousosana	Œuf	Kiali (ou Kialé)
Bière de maïs	Paminasana	Œuf de poule	Kiéroukialé (ou Tirotialé)
Farine	Mou
Farine de baobab	Kounou-mou	Sauce	N'duè
Graisse	Noua	Sel	Nikouan
Hydromel	Torosana	Soumbara	Kna
Lait	Nahila	Tô	Mié (ou M'bie)
Miel	Toro	Viande	Non (ou Naon)

MOBILIER ET HABILLEMENT

Allumette	Folémi	Javelot	Fi
Arc	Tuin	Lampe (indigène)	Kyanon
Bague (en fer)	Dinngavalé	Lance	Fi (ou Finn)
Bâton	Dabia	Livre	Yérétanou
Boubou	Gannzio	Manche	Dao
Bracelet	Dinnganouhou	Manche (de houe)	Waridao
Criquet	Konngo	Métier (à tisser)	Ganndè
Caisse	Kounndou	Mortier	N'zo
Calebasse	N'zouin	Natte	Sara
Caleçon	Diao	Oreiller	Gammpouri
Canari, pot, vase	Nikana	Pagne	Nahyo (ou nahi-ouon)
Carquois	Kienndyo
Cauri	Sibia	Pagne (de femme)	Kainganou
Chaîne	Lourou	Pilon	N'zoleyo
Chaise	Dyo	Pipe	N'zoua
Charbon de bois	Kassinmini	Pirogue	Bourou
Collier (en verroterie)	Biennzôn	Poignard	N'zanou
		Rasoir	Nyifina
Corbeille	Fihyo	Sabre	Sila
Corde, ficelle	Mouana	Sandale	Natoura
Couteau	Sio	Sandale (pour femme)	Kain-natoura
Cravache	Dammpéré	— Chausson	Natourollya
Culotte	Namann	Savon	Safini
Fagot	Davoué	Selle	Nisaindo
Filet (de pêche)	Gagnon	Tambour (tam-tam)	Goulou
Panier (de pêche)	Nzi		Goulounfaro
Flèche	Tyen	Tambour (de chef)	Gourègourè
Flûte	Houo
Fourreau, gaine	Pio	Tambour (calebasse)	Nammkoli
Fronde	Kapadoro
Fusil	Pinn ou Pého	Tambour (sablier)	Oubain
Hameçon	Fikiènn

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

Français	Nounouma	Français	Nounouma
Tabatière	Kounkoli	Trompe	Nabono
Tabouret	Kanguion (ou Kann'guion)

MÉTIERS

Chasseur	Gaotano	Griot (musicien)	Bouara
Colporteur	Yolou	Maçon	Lioutou-luiégui
Cultivateur	Vala	Palfrenier	Sisénouna
Cordonnier-peaussier	Liétonian-natoura	Pêcheur	Fidiana
Forgeron	Hiaro	Porteur	Liètou-nannzan-zila
Bijoutier	Hiaro	Tisserand	Gannsoro
Fossoyeur	Boukoura	Tailleur	Ganyenno

NOMS DE RACES

Blanc	Fola	Sissala	Nisao
Nègre	Lèzuin	Boussanga	Boussanga
Musulman	Yaré (ou Yara)	Kyansi	Kyansi
Lobi	Kuré	Mossi	Mossi
Dyoula	Yaré (ou Yara)	Achanti	Kamboë
Dagari	Dagari	Bambara	Filapoun
Nounouma	Nonoma

MÉTAUX

Or	Sanimm (1)	Cire	Maro
Argent	Waro (2)	Ivoire	Touyéli
Cuivre	Nala	Plomb	Kommbo
Fer	Lou	Cuir	Tanou
Argile	Nakananntéré	Poudre (à fusil)	Liro Marfaliro

NATURE

Arc-en-ciel	Ouésyo	Colline, montagne	Pân
Brousse	Gao	Eau	Nien
Caillou	Kafini	Eclair	Douatimmba
Caverne	Bouan	Etoile	Siamakuè
Ciel-atmosphère	Oué (ou Yii)	Feu	Niémm
Ciel (voûte bleue)	Ouédion (ou Yii-dion, ou Ouétanou)	Fleuve	Mo
		Foudre	Ouibio (3) Dakouyo

(1) Emprunté au Mandé.
(2) Idem.
(3) Fils du Ciel-Atmosphère.

Français	Nounouma	Français	Nounouma
Grêle	Didangawèlé	Soleil	Oué
Lune	Kiana	Terre	Tya
Marigot	Bouô	Tonnerre	Douabara
Monde	Lô	Tornade, orage	Davoû
Nuage	Dammakolo	Tourbillon (de vent)	M'vô
Pierre	Kapain	Trou	Gouan / M'bô
Pierre (de la foudre)	Kori	Vent	M'vô
Pluie	Dyoua	Est	Ouédè (1)
Poussière	Pourou	Ouest	Ouézi (2)
Rocher	Kepandafaro	Nord	Vankota (3)
Route	Tionnéfaro	Sud	Guézan (4)
Sable	Kafono
Sentier	Tion

TEMPS

Jour	Di	Hier	Diéna (ou Dyina)
Semaine	Yônidou	Demain	Duin
Mois	Kiana	Maintenant	Sinnkota
Année	Béni	Jadis	Dya (ou Diha)
Siècle	Bi	Plus tard	Guilado
Jour	Ikiaro	Quelquefois	Makado
Nuit	Néti	Souvent	Akélélala
Matin	Nédyou	Toujours	Diama
Soir	Midérina	Jamais	Aouasè
Midi	Ikiaro	Longtemps	Adia
Minuit	Tyakoun	Rapidement	Vélala
Aujourd'hui	N'zan

RELIGION

Ame (ombre) (5)	Yora	— Nain (de la brousse)	Tougouro (ou Tougoura)
Souffle	Kirou	Fête	Binifaré
Cadavre	Téré	Fétiche (grand) (6)	Tyounoufaro
Ciel (dieu du)	Oué	Fétiche (petit) (7)	Tyounimmba
Devin	Voro	Fétiche	Tyou
Esprit de la brousse	Kilio (Kikirou au pluriel) / Gaokilio (Gaokikirou au pluriel)	Féticheur	Lésumanenn-tyou
		Féticheur (pour la pluie)	Litoumbanvoui / Litounlorovoué

(1) Le soleil se lève.
(2) Le soleil se couche.
(3) A gauche.
(4) A droite.
(5) Dia en Mandé.
(6) Dio-ba en Mandé.
(7) Dio-fitini en Mandé.

3: Tauxier FA28 Mossi

Français	Nounouma	Français	Nounouma
Féticheur (fabricant de gris-gris)	Litoukouanenntimm	Médicament	Tiéou (ou tyo ou tyou)
		Médecin	Tiritiou
Fossoyeur	Békanatiga	Mosquée, makam	Iguionndio
Funérailles	Bakèluo	Poison	Potyo
Gris-gris	Tyo (ou tyou)	Poison volatil	Doula (ou Dira)
Gris-gris (fab. de)	Tyéotyo	Sacrifice	Bangwouani
Gris-gris (contre la pluie)	Dakona		Bawouinngué
			Tiéoutiou
Gris-gris (qui attache)	M'volo (ou M'vôni)	Sacrificateur	Kiengwani-tiéoutiou
Gris-gris (contre les serpents)	Denntyo	Terre	Tia
		Tombe	Téguébo
Gris-gris (contre les sorciers malfaisants)	Kiétyo	Sorcier malfaisant	Tiéro
		— Loup-garou	Ko
Marabout	Voro

VERBES

Acheter	Yo	Jeter	Doulo
Attraper	Dia	Jouer	Bouana
Boire	Nio	Jurer	Adoua
Chanter	Nouan	Lancer	Doulo
Chasser	Daguiné	Laver	Si
Cueillir	Koua	Laver (se)	Suè (ou Soè)
Danser	Sio	Lutter	Dian
Demander	M'boï	Manger	Adivouadio
Dire	Sué	Marcher	Vèli
Disputer (se)	Toutouna	Marier (se)	Koïbaro
Donner	Dion	Mener	Nouin
Dormir	Duann (ou Duain)	Mentir	Okouna
Écouter	Nì	Moquer (se)	Bekvévoua
Empoisonner	Foro	Moucher (se)	Fimî
Faire l'amour	Dékain (ou Dikain)	Mourir	Tian
		Nager	Hyé (ou Hyénou)
Frapper	M'ba	Noyer (se)	Bouagui
Fuir	Dourou	Obéir	Diowa
Gratter (se)	N'za	Oublier	Asué
Grimper	Dè	Parler	Yatara
Habiller (s')	N'zo		So
Hennir	Koïri	Partir	Mvè
Imiter	Akouéliou	Pêcher	Diékélé (ou diéfélé)
Incendier	Menndi
Insulter	Toro	Piler	N'zoua
Interroger	Boï	Pleurer	Koui

Français	Nounouma	Français	Nounouma
Porter (sur la tête)	Nzan	Rire	Môn
		Sauver (se)	Douro
Porter (avec les bras)	Diannzivoua	Taire (se)	Yéné
		Tisser	Badoula
Poser	Nzégué	Travailler	Tountouna
Poursuivre	Badani	Tuer	Tien
Prendre	Koï	Vaincre	Dantyo
Promener (se)	Guinou	Vendre	Nioulou
Questionner	M'boï	venger (se)	Diétibana
Raconter	M'boï	Venir	Ba
Réfléchir	Abouin	Voir	Ana
Répondre	Aseï	Voler	Mouiro
Reposer (se)	Diési	Voler (dans l'air)	N'zan
Rêver	Douhè	Voyager	Yolou

ADJECTIFS

Beau	Kouzè	Jaune	Houro
Bête	Okniôn	Jeune	Nimmba
Bleu (foncé)	Nisôno	Joli	Kouzè
Blanc	Ouloupon / Nipôn	Joyeux	Apoïga
		Lâche	Diafôn
Bon	Kouzè	Laid	Koubazien
Brave	Babia	Large	Koua
Chaud	Kyé / Lôn	Lépreux	Nayaro (ou Nadiaro)
Circoncis	M'bouémpéni	Lourd	Dô
Faible	M'bona	Maigre	Bouani
Fort	Bien	Malade	Ovoué
Fou	Nignion	Malheureux	Awouanntioro
Froid	Ouoro	Mauvais	Oubazien (ou Oubazé ou Koubazien)
Galeux	Nizara
Gourmand	Oudinnfaro
Grand	Nidarou	Méchant	Oubazien
Gros	Nifaro	Menteur	Kouloupon
Heureux	Afoïra	Mince	Nimmba
Imbécile	Lévouon	Mort	Tyen (ou Tyan)
Impoli	Ousônntien (ou Oussotyen)	Neuf	Nidôn
		Noir	Nisono (ou Nisônou ou Ouazounou)
Impossible	Kouda
Incirconcis	Papanantiou
Indigent	Nilôn	Nu	Lèvoli
Insensé	Niniôn (ou nignion)	Orgueilleux	Oudiotibaba
		Paresseux	Yaséné
Intelligent	Dyasuin	Pauvre	Nâlon
Ivre, ivrogne	San-nyoro	Petit	Oukouo

Français	Noumouma	Français	Noumouma
Peureux	Oudyâfon	Sourd	Obésoonè
Poli	Lézanngou	Stupide	Oukiôn / Laokiôn
Profond	Kozoua
Puissant	Dâ	Travailleur	Totonon
Riche	Sobiètyô	Vaillant	Labia
Rond	Ouakékila	Vert	Ouasounou (1)
Rouge	Nisain	Vieux	Kokoui
Savant	Oûyè (ou Ouyèn-nala)	Vivant	Mi (ou Oudyami)
		Voleur	Mounien
Sec	Koukoua	Vrai	Yabien

SUBSTANTIFS DIVERS

Ami	Adibè	Incendie	Minndio
Cadeau	Pina	Gale	Nizara
Camarade	Adibè	Lèpre	Nayaro
Chanson	Nouen	Maladie	Yaouyo
Chanteur	Go	Milieu	Niteï
Conte, fable	Sissaré	Moitié	Poeï
Coutume	Fouin	Mot	Nésui / So
Dette	Dui
Débiteur	Duintyou	Mur	Bouro
Créancier	Sibyétiou	Nid	Zimmpolé
Faim, famine	Nyen	Parole	Yô
fumée	Nui (ou Nué)	Variole	Yapara
Guerre	Kouo	Vérole	Sangkoro

ADVERBES, PRÉPOSITIONS, etc.

Doucement	Nimmbanimmba	Dehors	Karawa
Vite	Akinalala	Auprès	Oukouo
Ici	Yo	Loin	Koudara
Là-bas	Yombè	Tout près	Nelda
Partout	Bolima	Pourquoi?	Bakoum?
Nulle part	Bolidado	Encore	Sina

PETITES PHRASES

Français	Noumouma
Comment t'appelles-tu?	Hirimimm bakon?
De quel village es-tu?	Atioumou bakon? (ou Téyouhiri bakon?)

(1) C'est-à-dire : noir.

Français	Nounouma
D'où viens-tu?	Nayé?
Où vas-tu?	M'véléyé? (ou M'vèya?)
De quelle race es-tu?	Nédiou kouatyo?
Es-tu Sissala?	Nissao nigaman? Niénessao? Ninésao?
Es-tu Nounouma?	Ménnouno?
Es-tu content?	Asuè?
Es-tu fatigué?	Agori? — Agora? — Aga?
Comment vas-tu?	I n'zain-ain?
Je te donne un cadeau.	Abépèmoro.
Es-tu musulman?	Ayéyara? — Yaraléyamon?
Es-tu fétichiste?	Aboyouïbina? — M'binawé?
Moi, je vais au village.	Abétioontévoua.
Toi, tu vas au village.	Amorobésannvoua.
Ce n'est pas fini.	Kouazuoï.
C'est fini.	Kouazouei (ou Kozuei).

FORMATION DU PLURIEL

Français	Nounouma	Français	Nounouma
Chien	Kouro	Champignon	Dyalé
